Mr. Sol. Gen. It ſeems they would have an Anſwer to their Objections, but will not ſuffer us to give it; they would firſt examine whether my Lords the Biſhops have been duly committed, that (we ſay) is not to be done by the Court as yet; your Lordſhip ſees they are actually in Cuſtody, by a Commitment of the Lords of the Council, that appears by the Return before your Lordſhip, and for what they were Committed; what do we now pray for the King? Firſt, we move for a Habeas Corpus, then that this Information may be read, and all is in Order to bring this Fact, (for which they were Committed) to a Trial; 'tis ſaid upon the Return, they were ſent to the Tower, for Contriving, Writing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt the Kings Perſon and Government, which (I think) is Crime enough for a Man to deſerve to be committed for; they would have you to diſcharge theſe Lords from this Commitment, (the Return as they ſay, being not Legal) before the Information be read: But we think their Motion is Irregular, for here is a Crime charged in the Commitment, and upon that Commitment they are here now as Criminals before your Lordſhip; and Mr. Attorney has exhibited an Information for the King, which is in the Nature of a Declaration at the Kings Suit; and that in this Court, which is the Supreme Court now in being for the Trial of Matters of this Nature. We will come to that Queſtion, whether they were legally committed, when there is a proper time for it; but now we find my Lords the Biſhops in Court, upon a Commitment for a great Crime; I repeat it again, it is for Contriving, Writing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt the Kings Perſon, and againſt the Kings Government; and whether the Kings Council ſhall not have leave to make out this Charge by an Information, ſure can be no Queſtion at all in this Court; I hear them mention the Statute of Edward the Third. But that is not at all to the purpoſe, that is but what was offered in another Caſe that may be remembred, and offered by way of Plea, and preſſed with a great deal of Earneſtneſs, but Rejected by the Court; and now what could not be receiv'd then by way of Plea, theſe Gentlemen would by their Importunity, have you receive by way of Parole at the Bar; I ſuppoſe the Deſign is to entertain this great Auditory with an Harrangue, and to perſwade the weak Men of the World, (for the Wiſe are not to be impoſed upon) that they are in the Right, and we in the wrong; under Favour my Lord, we are

are in the Right for the King, we desire this Information may be read, and let them plead what by Law they can to it, according to the course of the Court; but that which they now urge, is untimely, and out of Course.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we offer this to your Lordship ——

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Gentlemen, you have been heard before your time already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to answer what the Kings Council have objected.

L. C. J. The Kings Council have answered your Objections, and we must not permit Vying and Re-vying upon one another; if you have no more to say, but only as to the Matters that have been urged, you have been heard to it on both sides already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would, if you please, answer what has been objected by the Kings Council, and state the Case aright.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, I do not apprehend that the Objection you make against this Commitment has any weight in it. The Objection (as I take it) is this, that these Lords were not legally committed, because they were committed (says the Return) by such and such Lords of the Council particularly named, and it does not specifie them to be united in the Privy Council; now truly, with me that seems to have no weight at all; and I will tell you why. If my Lord Chief Justice do commit any Person and set his Name to the Warrant, he does not use to add to his Name, Lord Chief Justice, but he is known to be so, without that Addition; and would you have a different Return from the Lieutenant of the Tower to a Habeas Corpus, than the Warrant it self will justifie? the Lords do not use to write themselves Privy Counsellors, they are known to be so; as well as a Judge, who only writes his Name, and does not use to make the addition of his Office.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to be heard to this, I think truly it is a weighty Objection, for, under Favour, we say, it must upon the Return here appear, that they were legally committed, before you can charge them with an Information; I do not take Exceptions to the Warrant, because it is subscribed by such Lords, and they do not write themselves Lords of the Council, they need not do that; and the Return has averred that they are so; but the Return ought to have been, that it was by the Order of the Privy Council, and so it must be, if they would shew my Lords to be legally committed, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, and not by such and such particular Persons, Lords of the Privy Council; so in the Case put by Mr. Justice Allybone, of a Commitment by your Lordship, or any of the Judges; it must be returned to be by such a Warrant, by such a One Chief Justice, for that shews the Authority of the Person committing, and then your Lordships Name to it indeed is enough, without the Addition; But if it does not appear by the Return that there was sufficient Authority in the Person to commit, your Lordship cannot take it to be a Legal Commitment; but now in this Case, they could have no Authority to commit but in Council; and this Return seems to make it done by them as particular Persons, and that's not a good Return (with your Lordships Favour) upon which these Reverend and Noble Lords can be detained in Prison; But what do they on the other side say to this? Why, we shall be heard to it anon: but, my Lord, they very well know, it would be too late for that Effect which we desire of our Motion, and therefore we lay the Objections before you now in its proper time (say we) you ought not to read any Information against us, because we are not legally here before the Court; and sure, that which was said by the Kings Council, that your Lordship may charge any One that you find here in Court, which way soever he comes in, cannot be legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ever said so?

Sir Robert Sawyer. I apprehend you said so, Mr. Attorney, or else you said nothing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, You of that side have a way of letting your selves in to say the same things over again, and of making us to say what you please.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Truly I did apprehend you laid down that for Doctrine, which I thought a very strange One; for we say, with your Lordships favour, he that is in Court without a Legal Process, is not in Court so as to be charged with an Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, It is not the Body being found here that intitles the Court to proceed upon it, but the Person accused is to be brought in by Legal Process: Then if we be not here by legal Process, the Information cannot be charged upon us; and if we suffer it to be read, it will be too late for us to make this Objection.

L. C. J. That you have all said over and over, and they have given it an Answer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr Serjeant, will you make an end; you have repeated your Objection over and over, I know not how often, and will never be contented with our Answer.

Mr. J. Allybone. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you said in answer to the Case I put, methinks does not answer it: For if the Return be as good, that it was by a Warrant from such an one, Lord Chief Justice; as if my Lord Chief Justice had added the Title of his Office to his own Name, when he subscribed the Warrant: Then this Return, That this was done by such and such Lords of the Council, must be as good, as if they had added that to their own Names.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not our Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Objection has been heard, and answered; we pray the Information may be read.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. No, we are not come to that yet.

Mr. J. Allybone. Pray, would you have an Averment by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in his Return to an Habeas Corpus, that it was done by them in the Council Chamber?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, The Difference is this, with Submission; a Commitment by Sir Robert Wright, Ch. Justice, is a good Commitment, and a Return of that Nature, were a good Return, because he is Chief Justice all over England, and hath Authority to commit wherever he is; but a Commitment by such an one, or such and such Lords of the Privy Council, cannot be a good Return of a Commitment; because, though they be Lords of the Council, yet neither single, or apart, nor all together, have Authority to do such an Act, unless they be assembled in the Privy Council; there their Authority is circumscribed; ſcribed; ſo that that muſt needs be a great difference between a Commitment made by a Judge, who is always ſo, and a Commitment by a Lord, or ſo many Lords, by the Name of Lords of the Privy Council, who carry not their Authority about with them, but are limited to their Aſſembly in Council.

Mr. J. Allybone. Mr. Finch, Indeed your Objection is worth ſomething, if my Lord Chief Juſtice could not act but as under the character of Chief Juſtice; for you are now arguing, that theſe Lords could not do this Act, but as Lords of the Council, in Council; the ſame (ſay I) may be ſaid of a Commitment by the Lord Chief Juſtice; he cannot do it but under the formality of his Authority, as he is Chief Juſtice, unleſs you will make it impoſſible for him to do any thing, but as Chief Juſtice, or unleſs you make it impoſſible to ſeparate his Perſon from his Authority.

Mr. Finch. Sir, the difference lies here; the Authority of the one is general and univerſal, and goeth with him wherever he goes; the other's Authority is limited to a particular ſphere.

Mr. J. Allyb. Why, would you have it averred, That they did it being aſſembled in Council?

Mr. Finch. Under favour, they cannot juſtifie any thing that was done by them as Lords of the Council, but in the Privy Council.

Mr. J. Powel. Truly, my Lord, for my part, I think there is no ſuch great neceſſity of haſt in this matter; Here are Exceptions taken to this Return; and the matter tranſacted now before us, appears to me to be of very great weight, peradventure a greater, or a weightier, has not been agitated in this place in any Age; it concerns theſe Noble and Reverend Lords, in point of Liberty: it comes ſuddenly upon us, and therefore, my Lord, I think it very fit we ſhould conſider a little of this matter, and conſult the Precedents of Returns, how they are; for there are multitudes of Returns of Writs of Habeas Corpus in this Court; therefore it were requiſite, that we did conſult the Forms of other Returns, and how the Precedents, as to this matter, have always been: if they are according as this is, then all is well, but if they be otherwiſe, it is fit we ſhould keep to the uſual Forms.

L. C. J. What's your Opinion of it, Brother Allybone?

Mr. J. Allybone. I am ſtill of the ſame mind I was, my Lord, That he could make no Return, but this Return he has made; and if his Warrant was inſufficient upon this Account, that theſe particular perſons, Lords of the Privy-Council, did this Act without ſaying, that they did it in Privy Council, then 'tis not his Return that could mend it; and truly I do not know that there does need any Precedent for this; for every one knows where the Lords of the Council are; and 'tis a ſufficient Averment, this, that is in the Return.

Mr. Pollexfen. They are Lords of the Council every where, but they do not act as Lords of the Council any where but in Council.

Mr. J. Allybone. So my Lord Chief Juſtice is Chief Juſtice every where.

Mr. Finch. And he can do Judicial Acts, as ſuch, every where; but the Lords of the Council, cannot act but in the Council.

Mr. J. Allyb. Nor is it to be preſumed that they did do it.

Mr. Finch. It is not a preſumption that is to make any thing in this caſe, but the Queſtion is, whether here be a legal Return of a legal Commitment?

Mr. J. Allyb. Such publick Perſons, in ſuch publick Acts, can never be preſumed to act in their ſeparate private capacities.

Mr. Finch. But, with ſubmiſſion, your Lordſhips can judge only what is before you in this Return, whether it be a good Return, and whether here be a good Authority aſſerted in the Perſons that did commit my Lords the Biſhops.

L. C. J. Truly, as to this Objection and Exception that has been made by them, I have conſidered of it, and what has been ſaid on all ſides, and I think 'tis the uſual way of Commitment; I never ſaw any other; all the Warrants that ever I ſaw, are of this Form; if there were any Precedents, they ſhould be ſhewn of that ſide.

Sir Robert Sawyer. There are multitudes of Precedents otherwiſe, and none of this Form.

L. C. J. I confeſs, 'tis a Caſe of great Weight, and the Perſons concerned are of great Honour and Value; and I would be as willing as any body to teſtifie my Reſpects and Regards to my Lords the Biſhops, if I could ſee any thing in it worth conſidering of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There's no colour for it, if they do but look upon the Statute of the 16*th* and 17*th* of the late King, which arraigns the Proceedings of his Privy Council; that tells you what things belong to the cognizance of the Privy Council, and what not; and there you have all the Diſtinctions about Commitments by the King and Council, and by the Lords of the Council: And that Act will ſhew, that this is a Commitment according to the uſual Form: they know very well what the common Style of the Orders and Commitments of Council is, as in other places, and other Commitments; By ſuch an one, Chief Juſtice, that is the Style that is very well known for ſuch Warrants: So a Commitment by ſuch and ſuch, naming them particularly, Lords of the Council, that's an Order made by the Lords in Council; and that Statute diſtinguiſhes between Commitments of one ſort and the other; and it does it, becauſe ſometimes Warrants run in one Form, and ſometimes in another; but they all come within the Direction of that Statute. My Lord, we are in a plain Caſe, my Lords the Biſhops come Regularly before you, upon a Commitment by the Council; and therefore we pray they may be charged with this Information.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, will your Lordſhip give us leave to have that Statute lookt into, which Mr. Sollicitor ſpeaks of; and then we ſhall ſee whether it be to his purpoſe.

L. C. J. Let the Statute be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If it be Keeble's Book, it is the 16*th* of Charles the Firſt; if it be the Old Book, it is the 16*th* and 17*th* of Car. towards the end.

Clerk reads. Provided always, and be it enacted, that this Act, and the ſeveral Clauſes therein contained, ſhall be taken and expounded, to extend only to the Court of Star-Chamber; and to the ſaid Court holden before the Preſident and Council in the Marches of Wales, and before the Preſident and Council in the Northern parts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is the Paragraph before that.

Clerk reads. And be it alſo provided and enacted, That if any perſon ſhall hereafter be Committed,

Committed, Reſtrained of his Liberty, or ſuffer Impriſonment, by the Order and Decree of any ſuch Court of Star-Chamber, or other Court aforeſaid, now, or at any time hereafter, having, or pretending to have the ſame, or like Juriſdiction, Power, or Authority to commit, or impriſon, as aforeſaid; or by the Command or Warrant of the King's Majeſty, His Heirs or Succeſſors, in their own Perſons, or by the Command or Warrant of the Council-Board, or of any of the Lords, or others of his Majeſties Privy-Council, that in every ſuch Caſe, every perſon ſo Committed, Reſtrained of his Liberty, or ſuffering Impriſonment, upon demand ——

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is all: Your Lordſhip ſees theſe ſeveral Diſtinctions of the Style of Commitment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray favour us a little: My Lord, I think theſe Gentlemen will not deny, but that the Lords of the Council can commit; I muſt confeſs, they ask that which was pretty reaſonable, if the Caſe was as they would make it; They would have my Lords the Biſhops diſcharged, becauſe there is not a Return of a good Commitment, and that ſtands upon this preſumption, that what is here ſaid to be done by all theſe Lords, at the end of whoſe Names this is added, Lords of the Privy Council, was done by them out of Council, which, I ſuppoſe, your Lordſhip will not preſume, but will take it, that they did this as Lords of the Council in Council; And no Man can ſay, but the Lords in Council can Commit.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may as well preſume upon a Warrant made by my Lord Chief Juſtice, becauſe it is not ſaid where he did it, and therefore he did it in Scotland.

Mr Att. Gen. I ſay again, unleſs your Lordſhip will preſume that which is not to be preſumed, this muſt needs be a very good Return.

Mr. J. Allyb. Truly (as Mr. Sollicitor ſays) you may as well deſire us to preſume, that my Lord Chief Juſtice would commit a Man in Ireland or Scotland; I can ſee no imaginable difference.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which we pray, is, not that your Lordſhip would preſume, but that you would not preſume, but take the Return as 'tis before you; and then ſee whether it can be thought to be a Commitment by the Lords in Council?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us a little in this matter: Here has been the Clauſe of a Statute read to you, from whence Mr. Sollicitor would conclude, that all Commitments by ſeveral ſorts of Perſons there named, are legal; or elſe the Enumeration of the ſeveral ſorts of Commitments, ſignifies nothing to this purpoſe. But I pray your Lordſhip would conſider this, that the very ſcope and end of that Act of Parliament is, to relieve againſt illegal Commitments and Oppreſſions; then the ſeveral Commitments therein named, can never all be called legal; ſo that this ſignifies nothing to our purpoſe; My Lord, they tell us we ſtand upon Preſumption, no, we do not ſo; we ſay your Lordſhip ought not to preſume the One or the other, but to judge upon what is before you, but here is nothing before you but this Return of a Commitment of theſe Noble Perſons, my Lord the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of the Biſhops which is ſaid to be by theſe particular Lords. Now if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give us time to look into it, (for this is an Exception we take at the Bar upon hearing the Return read) we would ſhew the conſtant way has been quite otherwiſe than this Return makes it; therefore we deſire leave to ſatisfie your Lordſhip concerning the uſual Form of Precedents, and thereby it will appear, that it ought to have been, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, and then he ſhould have ſet forth the Warrant it ſelf, which would have ſhewn the Names of the Privy-Councellors, and he needed not to have put their Names in the Return as the particular Perſons that committed them; but now, my Lord, this does not appear to be an Order made in Council, as it ought to be, and the Return is that which is before you, and you are to judge only upon what is before you.

L. C. J. So we do.

Mr. Juſtice Allybone. Pray Sir Robert Sawyer, would the ſaying of a Governour of the Tower in his Return to a Writ of Habeas Corpus alter the Nature of the Commitment?

Mr. Att Gen. My Lord, we are in your Lordſhips Judgment.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. I ſay, Brother Pemberton, would any collateral Saying of the Lieutenant of the Tower alter the Nature of the thing, his Return in this Caſe is only an inducement to the Warrant of Commitment, and his Saying one way or t'other would neither vitiate nor mend the Commitment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordſhip cannot take notice of the Commitment but from the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Return is the Fact upon which you are to judge.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Certainly we muſt judge of the Record, and nothing elſe, and the Return is the Record now, being filed.

L. C. J. The Return is as certain, I think, as can be.

Mr. Soll. Gen. By the Return it appears, the Biſhops were Committed by the Warrant of ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council, and that which is before you now is, whether you will not intend it to be done by them in Council.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. We can intend nothing, but muſt take the Return as 'tis.

L. C. J. The Warrant is good enough, I think truly, and ſo is the Return.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think in all the Habeas Corpus's that have been ſince the King's Return, of Perſons committed by the Council, the Returns have been quite otherwiſe than this Return is; We do all pretty well agree (for ought I can perceive) in theſe two things; We do not deny but the Council Board has Power to commit, they on the other ſide do not affirm, that the Lords of the Council can commit out of Council.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, they may, as Juſtices of the Peace.

Mr. Pollexfen. This is not pretended to be ſo here.

L. Ch. Juſt. No, no, that is not the Caſe.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, my Lord, with ſubmiſſion, I will compare it to any thing elſe of this nature. I deny not but that the Council may commit, but the Queſtion is, whether this Return of their Commitment be right; Suppoſe there ſhould be a Return to a Habeas Corpus, that ſuch a one was committed by Sir Robert Wright, and three others by Name, Juſtices of this Court, for a Contempt, without ſaying, that it was done in Court, this would be an ill Return; although they had Power in Court to commit for a Contempt, yet it muſt appear, that it was done in Court, or it cannot be a good Return: If I had thought or foreſeen that ſuch a Return would have been made, I could eaſily have made out our Objection, but we could not foretel what they would return, and therefore we can only make this Objection now upon the hearing of it read. In all the Debates that have been heretofore in the great Caſe of the Habeas Corpus concerning my Lord Hollis, and thoſe other Gentlemen who were in Priſon upon Commitments by the Privy Council, the Returns are, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, as near as I can remember; I will not take it upon me to be poſitive in it, but I believe, if your Lordſhips thought fit to give us a ſhort time to look into it, we ſhould be plainly able to ſhew you, that all the Returns of Commitments of this nature, are ſaid to be by Order of the Council Board, and never any of them naming the Lords, for that may be true, and yet not a legal Commitment.

for

L. C. J. I have ſeen ſeveral Precedents of Commitments in this Form, and if you make no Exception to the Warrant, you can make no Exception to the Return, becauſe that only ſets forth the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Commitment you are to judge of, is upon the Return, with Submiſſion, and ſuppoſing the Warrant to be right and good, yet the Return is not Legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſay, in common Underſtanding, it cannot be but a Commitment in Council.

Mr. S Pemberton. But common Underſtanding and legal Underſtanding are two things, and we pray the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And ſo do we, my Lord, and pray your Rule in it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. You may by the ſame reaſon ſay, That upon all Commitments by Warrant from Juſtices of the Peace, that the Commitment was out of the County, if the Party does not alledge in the Warrant or Return, that the Commitment was in the County. 'Tis an Objection that would put us upon preſuming, what we have no reaſon to preſume.

L. Ch. J. If you would have our Opinions, let my Brothers declare theirs, I will ſoon tell you my mind.

Mr. J. Holloway. Pray let the Return be read again. (which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. So that the Return ſays, they were committed by vertue of a Warrant of ſuch and ſuch by Name, Lords of the Council, and whether this be a Warrant of the Council is the Queſtion, and we think it is plain enough, that 'tis a good Return.

Mr. J. Powell. I have given you my Thoughts already, I think we ought to conſult Precedents in a Caſe of this Weight and Nature; and truly I will not take upon me to ſay, whether it be a good Return or not a good Return, without looking into Precedents.

Mr. J. Allybone. For my own part, it does not ſtick at all with me, for the Reaſons I gave before; when any Man that has an Authority to commit, does commit a Perſon to an inferior Officer, and that Officer has an Habeas Corpus brought to him, it is enough for him to return his Warrant, by which the Party was committed, and whatſoever he ſays by the Bye, cannot have any Influence one way or other, to alter the nature of the thing; now unleſs you would make every Man that is a Juſtice of the Peace write his Name and ſtile himſelf Juſtice of the Peace, this muſt be a good Commitment. Every Commitment ſhall be preſumed to be purſuant to the Power of the Perſon committing, and I am ſure, take theſe Lords ſeparately, and they had no Power to commit, and conſequently ſuch a Warrant would be no Authority to the Lieutenant of the Tower to receive them; But when they ſend ſuch a Warrant as this, we ſhall preſume it to be according to the Power they have, and not according to the Power they have not; this Warrant is returned by the Officer, and I cannot but preſume that it is all very well.

Mr. J. Holloway. My Lords, I am very deſirous and willing your Lordſhips ſhould have all the Right and Juſtice done you that can be, and by the Grace of God, I will endeavour it all I can: I ſee in this Caſe it is agreed on both ſides, that the Council have a Power to commit, and the Commitment is here certified in the words of the Warrant, and the Lieutenant has made his Return, that they were committed by vertue of this Warrant; if the Lieutenant of the Tower had returned any other Commitment, you would have blamed him for a falſe Return; but now you find fault with his Return, becauſe he does not ſay, the Warrant was made by the Lords of the Council, and in Council; That is a thing ſo notoriouſly known to all the Kingdom, that my Lords were ſent to the Tower by the Council, that no body doubts it; and being thus ſent by this Warrant, I do not ſee but that this is a very good Return, and my Judgment is, that the Information ought to be read.

L C. J. I told you in the beginning, after you had made your Objections, that I thought it was as all other Returns are, and I am of the ſame Opinion ſtill, I find no fault with the Warrant, nor with the Return.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is no Objection to the Warrant at preſent upon this Queſtion.

L. C. J. Neither do I take upon me to ſay any thing, nor is there any thing now to be ſpoken of touching the Fact for which theſe Noble Lords were committed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray, my Lord, the Information may be read.

Mr. J. Holloway. There is no queſtion about the Fact, but whether this be a good Return which is here made, that they were committed by ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council.

L. C. J. I would do as much to give my Lords the Biſhops eaſe, and ſet them at liberty, as I could poſſibly by Law, but we muſt not break the Rules of Law for any one.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray read the Information.

Mr. Finch. No my Lord, we oppoſe the reading of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why! Will not you be ſatisfied with the Opinion of the Court?

Mr. Finch. We have another thing to offer, which we muſt have the Opinion of the Court in, before this Information can be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let us hear it what it is?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we did humbly offer one Objection more to your Lordſhip againſt the reading of the Information, the former Objection was concerning the Perſons committing, in in that it does not ſufficiently appear upon the Return, that they were committed by the Lords in Council; the Court have given their Opinion in that. But the other Objection ſtill remains, whether they ought to have been committed at all, and therefore when they now appear upon this Habeas Corpus, we ſay they were not legally committed to Priſon, becauſe a Peer ought not to be committed to Priſon in the firſt inſtance for Miſdemeanour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you pleaſe you may ſpeak to that by and by, but that is not proper now for you to offer, or for the Court to determine, whether a Peer may be committed upon an Accuſation for a Miſdemeanour?

Mr. Finch. With Submiſſion, that is ſuch a difficulty that lyes in the way againſt the reading of the Information, that you muſt get over it, before you can come at the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will have your time for all this matter by and by, but certainly you cannot be admitted to it yet.

L. C. J. Truly I think you are too early with that Exception.

Mr. Finch. With Submiſſion, we think this is the proper time, and I will tell your Lordſhip the reaſon why.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, certainly every thing in the World that can be ſaid, you will ſay for your Client, and you ſhall be heard; for we are very willing to deliver theſe Noble Lords, if we can by Law, and if the Exceptions you make be legal.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we do not doubt your Juſtice, and therefore we deſire to offer what we have to ſay in this Point; the only Queſtion (now it ſeems) is about our time of making our Exception. Mr. Attorney, (we apprehend) did ſay one thing which was certainly a little too large; that however any Man comes into Court, if the Court find him here, they may charge him with an Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſays ſo? I ſaid no ſuch thing.

Mr. Finch. Then I acquit Mr. Attorney of it, he did not ſay ſo: Then both he and I agree the Law to be, That a Man that does come into Court, if he does not come in by legal Proceſs, he is not to be charg'd with an Information; then ſince we do agree in that Propoſition, certainly we muſt be heard to this Point, whether we are here upon legal Proceſs, before you can charge us with this Information?

Mr. Att. Gen. You think you have ſaid a fine thing now, and take upon you an Authority to make me agree to what you pleaſe.

Mr. Finch. Certainly the Conſequence is plain upon your own Premiſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you undertake to ſpeak for me?

Mr. Finch. I am in the Judgment of the Court, and to them I leave it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know you thought you had got an extraordinary Advantage, by making me ſay what you pleaſe; but there has been very little ſaid, but what has been grounded upon Miſtakes all along: This is that I do ſay, if a Man comes in voluntarily upon any Recognizance, though he be not in Cuſtody; or if he comes in upon any Proceſs, if the Court find him here, though that Proceſs be not for the thing charged in the Information, yet the Court is ſo much in Poſſeſſion of the Perſon, that he ſhall plead to any Information, and that I do ſay, and will ſtand by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are here in a very great Auditory, and this Court is always a very great Court, (but here is a greater and nobler Aſſembly, than uſually we have here) and theſe Gentlemen to ſhew their Eloquence and Oratory, would, by converting Propoſitions otherwiſe than they are delivered, put another meaning upon them, and ſo draw ſtrange Inferences from them; but theſe Arts we are ſure will not prevail here; we ſay plainly, and we are ſure the Law is ſo, (let them apprehend what they will) that your Lordſhip cannot exhibit an Information to any Man that you find accidentally here in Court; then ſays Mr. Finch, we are agreed; but withal (ſay I) take my other Propoſition, If a Perſon be brought into Court by legal Proceſs, or upon any Contempt whatſoever, by an Attachment or Warrant, or upon a Habeas Corpus after a Commitment, being thus found in Court, your Lordſhip may certainly charge him with an Information; when theſe Gentlemen who are ſo eager on the other ſide, did preſide here, and ſtood in the places where Mr. Attorney and I now are; I can name them abundance of Caſes of the like nature with this, when men have been compelled to appear to Informations, and plead preſently; they are the Perſons that made the Precedents; they made the Law for ought I know: I'm ſure I find the Court in Poſſeſſion of this as Law, and we pray the uſual Courſe may be followed.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord ſpare us a word in this matter: I do agree with Mr. Attorney in this matter, but I do not agree with Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not agree with your ſelf.

Mr. Finch. I hope I do, and always ſhall agree with my ſelf, but I do not agree with you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not in 1688. agree with what you were in 1680.

Mr. Finch. Says Mr. Attorney, a Man that comes voluntarily in, cannot be charged with an Information; with him I agree. Says Mr. Sollicitor, a Man that comes in, and is found in Court by any Proceſs, may be charg'd with an Information: I ſay no, if the Proceſs be wholly illegal, for he cannot be ſaid to be legally in Court: Suppoſe a Peer of the Realm be taken upon a Capias, and is committed to the Marſhalſea, and is brought up upon a Habeas Corpus, I would fain know whether you could declare againſt him.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we cannot.

Mr. Finch. And why is that, but becauſe the Proceſs is illegal, and he is not truly in Court: Then is it a proper time now to make this a Queſtion, Whether my Lords here were legally committed, before you can lay any thing to their charge by way of Information; for if the Commitment be illegal, it is a void Commitment, and if the Commitment be void, the Proceſs is void, and then my Lords are not legally in Court.

L. C. J. That ſure is but returning again to the ſame Queſtion that has been determined already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordſhip will permit them to go over and over the ſame things, we ſhall never have an end.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we pray theſe Gentlemen of the King's Council may be a little cool with us, and then they will find, we do not talk the ſame things over and over again, nor meddle with that which the Court have given their Judgment in.

L. C. J. Well, go on Sir.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we ſay it is the Privilege of the Peers of England, that none of them ſhall be committed to Priſon for a Miſdemeanour, eſpecially in the firſt Inſtance, and before Judgment; this (we ſay) is the right of my Lords the Biſhops, and that which they claim as Lords of Parliament. Now it appears upon this Return and the Warrant, that the Council-Table hath committed them, (for your Lordſhip and the Court hath rul'd it, that this Commitment muſt be taken to be by Order of the Privy Council, and we meddle not with that further) but we ſay that the Council Table may commit a Man unjuſtly, that is certain: There has been relief often given in this Court againſt Commitments by the Council Table: And that they were unjuſtly committed, depends upon that point of their Privilege as Peers.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we ſay, that the Lords of the Council have illegally committed theſe Noble Perſons, who are Peers of the Realm, and ought to have the privilege of their Peerage, which is not to be committed for a Miſdemeanour; that the Council ought not to have done: For the Peers of England ought no more to be committed for a Miſdemeanour, and to be impriſoned, eſpecially upon the firſt Proceſs, than they may be in a Caſe of Debt. It is true, in the Caſe of Treaſon, Felony or the Breach of the Peace, the Peers have not ſuch a Privilege; they may be committed; but for a Miſdemeanour (as this does appear to be in the Warrant of Commitment) they ought not to be committed; but they were committed by the Lords of the Council, and we now complain of this to your Lordſhip as illegal, and therefore pray my Lords may be diſcharged.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to favour me a Word on the ſame ſide for my Lords the Biſhops. It muſt be agreed to me, that if a Peer be brought into Court, as taken by a Capias, he cannot be charged with a Declaration; and the reaſon is, becauſe the Proceſs is Illegal: Then, my Lord, with ſubmiſſion, When a Peer comes upon a Foreign Commitment, and is brought in Cuſtody upon a Habeas Corpus, this is either in the nature of a Proceſs, or a final Commitment, as a Judgment; they will not ſay, that this is a good Commitment ſo as to amount to a Judgment; for the Council-Board could not give a Judgment in the caſe; beſides, the Commitment is Illegal becauſe it is not a Commitment till they find ſecurity to anſwer an Information here, but 'tis a Warrant to keep them for a Miſdemeanour; beſides, there is another thing we have to ſay to this Warrant, (for I am making Objections againſt the Validity of this Commitmitment) it does not appear that there was any Oath made, and therefore the Court muſt adjudge that there was no Oath made, and then no man ought without an Oath to be Committed, much leſs a Peer; but that which we chiefly rely upon, is, That my Lords ought not to have been Committed for this, which is but a Miſdemeanour at moſt: And if they uſe it, as Proceſs to bring my Lords the Biſhops to anſwer an Information, we ſay, By Law no ſuch Proceſs can be taken out againſt the Perſons of Peers for bare miſdemeanours. I do agree, that for Felony, Treaſon, or Surety of the Peace, the Perſons of Peers may be Committed; and that which is called Surety of the Peace in our Books, Mr. Sollicitor knows very well, in ſome of the Rolls of Parliament, is called Breach of the Peace, but it is all one; and the meaning, in ſhort, is, That it is ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as for which a Man by Law may be obliged to find Sureties for the Peace. If it ſhould mean a Breach of the Peace by implication, as all Treſpaſſes and Miſdemeanours are ſaid to be Contra Pacem in the Indict. ment or Information, then it were a ſimple thing to enumerate the Caſes wherein Priviledges did not lie; for there could be no Information whatſoever, but muſt be Contra Pacem, and ſo there could be no ſuch thing as Priviledge at all: And beſides, we ſay, the very Courſe of this Court is contrary to what they would have; for in the Caſe of a Peer, for a Miſdeameanour, you go firſt by Summons, and then you do not take out a Capias as againſt a common Perſon, but the next Proceſs is a Diſtringas, and ſo ad Infinitum; And I do appeal to them on the other ſide, and Challenge them to ſhew any one Preſident, when a Peer was brought thus into Court, to be charged with an Information, without it were in the Caſe of an apparent Breach of the Peace, for he muſt be Charged in Cuſtody, and there muſt be a Committitur to the Marſhal, to intitle the Court to proceed; your Lordſhip will find very few Preſidents of Caſes of this Nature about common Perſons, for till within theſe 14 or 15 years there was no ſuch thing ever done againſt a common Perſon; But this was the Rule; firſt there went out a Subpœna, and then an Attachment, and when the Party was taken upon the Attachment, he is taken to come in upon Proceſs, and then the Court would Charge him preſently, but if he did appear upon the Summons, they would not Charge him, but he had time to take a Copy of the Information, and an Imparlance of Courſe, till the next Term, before he could be compelled to Plead. But in the Caſe of a Peer, there never was any ſuch Preſident, as the Attaching his Perſon, but only a Summons and Diſtreſs; and I would be glad the KING's Council would ſhew that ever there was any ſuch proceſs taken out againſt the Perſon of a Peer, for a meer Miſdemeanour. My Lord, 'tis plain, what Breach of the Peace means in every Information, and I only ſpeak this to acquaint the Court how the conſtant Proceedings in all theſe caſes have been. Theſe Informations were anciently more frequent in the Star-Chamber; and what was the Proceſs there? Not the common Proceſs of a Subpœna, that was not the courſe there; but the Proceſs was a Letter from the Chancellor, that if the Party upon that Letter did not appear, in a Common Caſe, there went out an Attachment; but in a Peers Caſe, never; and ſo it appears by Cromptons Juriſdiction of Courts. Tit. Star-Chamber 33. This appears likewiſe by the Proceedings in Chancery againſt the Peers, till the Queens time, they did not ſo much as take out an Attachment after default upon a Subpœna, but they would then in the Queens time, be ſo bold as to take out an Attachment againſt a Lord for not appearing; but that Courſe was condemned as illegal; ſo we find in my Lord Dyer.

Mr. Attor. Gen. That was at a common Perſons Suit.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But the proceedings in the Star-

Star-Chamber were at the King's Suit, and I am sure Mr. Sollicitor knows that the Peers Priviledges reach to Informations, but as I was saying, it was so adjudged as to the Chancery in my Lord Cromwel's Case. xiiii Eliz. Dyer, 315.

Ld. Ch. Just. You take a great compass, Sir Robert Sawyer, but pray remember what you laid down at first, for the Ground of your discourse, That there was never any Commitment of a Peer for a bare Misdemeanour, you must keep to that, that is the Point you are to look after.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I will so, I do not Cite these Cases but for this purpose, to shew, that in all Courts the Peers have particular Priviledges, and I am sure they can produce you no Precedents for any such proceedings against a Peer; in my experience of these matters, I never knew any such; nay, I knew it always to be otherwise, That in Informations for Misdemeanours, there did never issue out a Capias against a Peer; and Mr. Attorney knows very well, it was so in the late Case of my Lord Lovelace; for that Case of my Lord Devonshire, that was an express Breach of the Peace, tho' it was debated and disputed then; so that I take it, these Noble Lords cannot be charged with this Information, because they do not come in by Legal Process; and unless they can shew me any Cases, where a Peer did ever come in upon such a Commitment, and answered to an Information upon that Commitment, it must certainly be allowed not to be the Legal Course; though if such a Precedent could be shewn, that past Sub Silentio, without debate or solemn determination, that would not do, nor could bind the rest of the Peers; If one man would lose a particular Benefit he has, all the whole Body must not lose it; and the benefit is not small, of Time to make his Defence; of Imparling; of taking a Copy of the Indictment, and preparing himself to plead as his Case will bear; and indeed a common person has used to have these priviledges, tho in some Cases of late, they have taken the other Course; and if a Capias went out (which We say, cannot go against a Lord) and the Party were brought in, he was to answer immediately: Now, my Lord, I take it, That the Priviledges of Peers is in all times the same with the Parliamentary Priviledge in Parliament time, which reacheth to Informations, as well as other Actions. (My Lord Coke is express in this point) in the 4 Instit. 25. If that Objection should hold good, that every Information being Contra Pacem, that should be a Breach of the Peace, then (as I said before) Priviledge will hold in no Information, which is contrary to that and all our other Books; 'tis only such a Breach of the Peace, as for which Security of the Peace may be required. But further, that this a Priviledge enjoyed by the Peers Spiritual as well as Temporal, I suppose will not be denied, for I think they will not question, but that the Bishops, and Abbots that were Lords of Parliament were Peers, and we find in our Books when the Court has been moved for a Capias against an Abbot, if he were a Mitred Abbot, and sat in the Lords House, it was always said, that no such Process ought to go, and so it is in the case of Bishops; but indeed for other Noblemen, the difference is this, Where it does not appear upon Record, that they are Lords in Parliament, there the Courts have put them to bring their Writs of Privilege, but where it does appear upon Record, that they are Peers the Court is to allow and take notice of their priviledge, and there needs no such Writ. Now that the Parliament priviledge, and the priviledge of Peers (as to their persons) is the same, appears by the form of the Writ in the Register fol. 287. Fitz. Herb. Nat. Brev. 247. The Words of the Writ are these, That if such a one be Sued at the Suit of another, the Writ commands, that a Peer out of Parliament time should have the same priviledge with those summoned by the King to the Parliament; and I know not any difference that can be put between them, and it cannot be denied, that all Informations whatsoever, unless such as are for Breaches of the Peace, for which Surety of the Peace may be required, are under the Controul of the Parliament priviledge; so that upon these grounds, I do press that my Lords the Bishops may be discharged: If there be any Information against us, we are ready to enter our Appearance to answer it according to the course of the Court; but if the Information be for no other thing than what is contained in the Warrant of Commitment, then their Persons ought to be priviledged from Commitment.

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordship please to take it altogether, you will find it a case very well worth your consideration, it being the case of all the Peerage of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, these Gentlemen have taken a great deal of Liberty, and spent much of your time in making long Arguments, and after all, truly I do not know where to have them, nor can understand what they would be at; it seems they agree that for Treason, Felony, and Breach of the Peace, a Peer may be Committed.

L. C. J. That is (say they) such a Breach of the Peace, as for which Surety of the Peace may be required.

Mr. Att Gen. Then all the Learning they have been pleased to favour us with, is at an end, for if here be any thing charged upon the Bishops, for which Sureties of the Peace may be required, then this is a good Commitment.

L. C. J. That they must agree upon their own Arguments.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can then any Man in the World say, that a Libel does not require Sureties of the Peace? for we must now take it as it is here upon this Return. How my Lords the Bishops will clear themselves of it, is a Question for another time; but the Warrant says they were committed for Contriving, Framing, and Publishing a Seditious Libel against His Majesty, and his Government; is there a greater Misdemeanour? Or is there any thing on this side a capital Crime that is a greater Offence? Is there any thing that does so tread upon the Heels of a capital Offence, and comes so near the greatest of Crimes that can be committed against the Government? Not to enlarge at this time upon what the consequences of such things may be, is there a greater Breach of the Peace than such Seditious Practices? No doubt, any Man may be committed for it, and may be bound to find Sureties for his good Behaviour.

Sir Robert Sawyer. I say Sureties of the Peace, not of the good Behaviour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray my Lord, would you consider where we are, we are going towards France, I think, or some farther Country; they have set us out to Sea, and I do not see after this rate, when we shall come to Land; certainly, these Gentlemen are mightily out of the way, and would fain have us so too; we are here upon a single ſingle Queſtion, as this Caſe ſtands before your Lordſhip, upon the Return; here is a Libel, a Seditious Libel, ſaid to be contrived, made and publiſhed againſt the King and his Government, by theſe Noble Lords the Priſoners; this is the Accuſation; ſuppoſe this be true, (that is to be proved hereafter) (I hope they are innocent, and will prove themſelves ſo) but ſuppoſe it to be true, that they have made a Seditious Libel againſt the King and His Government, will any Man ſay, that this is not done Vi & Armis? This is a Libel with a Witneſs; nay, two or three degrees more will carry it to High Treaſon, and all the Informations that were exhibited by Sir Robert Sawyer, when he was Attorney General, (and he exhibited a great many for Libels) conſtantly theſe Words were in, Vi & Armis & contra Pacem.

Biſhop of Peterborough. Was it ſo in your own Caſe, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, it was ſo in my Caſe, and you were one of them that Proſecuted me, for ought I know; or if you did not proſecute me you Preached againſt me; or if you did not, ſome of your Tribe did: But ſo, my Lord, it was in many other Caſes, within time of Memory. Sir Robert Sawyer has paſt a Complement upon me, of my great Skill in Parliament matters; but truly there needs no great Skill in matters where the Law is ſo plain; a Peer they agree may be in Priſon for Treaſon, Felony, or Breach of the Peace; but that Breach of the Peace (ſay they) is where the Law requires Sureties of the Peace; but is there any certainty where Sureties of the Peace ſhall be required, and where not? Then I would put this Caſe, Theſe Lords have contrived and publiſhed a Seditious Libel againſt the King and His Government; and whether this be not ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as will require Sureties of the Peace, is the Queſtion before you: And it plainly appears to be ſo, in Sir Baptiſt Hick's Caſe, in Hobbart. If a Man write a private Letter, provoking another to Fight, although there be no Fighting, this is a Breach of the Peace; now a Letter can do no Wrong in that kind, but as it incites and ſtirs up to Fighting, which may occaſion Blood-ſhed, and I think there cannot be a greater Breach of the Peace, than for a Man to come to the King's Face, and publiſh a Libel againſt Him, and yet according to their Doctrine, this Man ſhall go away, and you ſhall not take him up, but take a Subpœna againſt him, and wait for the delay of all the ordinary Proceſs; and they tell you another thing, that a Capias does not lie upon an Information againſt the Perſon of a Peer, and that there is no precedent of any ſuch thing, but I would pray them to remember the Caſe of my Lord Lovelace, about ſome three Years ago for breaking a Foot-man's Head. It ſeems, if a Man libels the King in his own preſence, that is not ſo great a matter, as a little Correction to an inſolent Foot-man; but there he was bound in a Recognizance to appear here in this Court, and accordingly he did appear, and was charged with an Information, and as to that precedent I do believe Sir Robert Sawyer and Mr. Finch won't contradict me; this was in the firſt Year of this King: There was likewiſe my Lord of Pembrooke's Caſe, who went to a diſorderly Houſe, and there frighted ſome People, we moved the Court, and had an Attachment againſt him, for a Miſdemeanour, and he was glad to Compound the thing, or it had not ended ſo ſoon as it did; and yet if a Lord comes to the King's Perſon, and affronts Him to his very Face, will not an Attachment lie againſt him for it? Certainly it will. My Lord, we have gone out of the way too much already, and theſe Gentlemen will lead us farther, but we hope your Lordſhips will reduce us to the methods of the Law: Here is an Information which we deſire may be read, if they have any thing to plead to it, their time for that will come after it is read; if they think they have been illegally impriſon'd, it appears plainly upon this Return, who they were that did Commit them; here are a great many Noble Lords to Anſwer an Action of falſe Impriſonment, if theſe Lords think fit, and may have theſe Learned Gentlemen, that are very well able to adviſe them what they ſhould do in it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray your Lordſhips Judgment, whether the Caſes put by Mr. Sollicitor are like our Caſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They are as like, as Sir Robert Sawyer is to Mr. Attorney that was.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Thoſe Caſes are of apparent Breaches of the Peace, ſo likewiſe was my Lord of Devonſhire's Caſe, but certainly that was not at all like this.

Mr. Finch. With your Lordſhips Favour I would add but one Word, and I would repeat nothing of what has been ſaid; all that I ſhall ſay is this, There is a great deal of difference between an Actual Breach of the Peace, and that which in the bare Form of an Information is a Breach of the Peace, by Conſtruction of Law, it being contra pacem: Suppoſe it be laid that a Man did Vi & Armis ſpeak Words, will that make the Words a Breach of the Peace?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It muſt be Vi & Armis, and certainly is a Breach of the Peace.

Mr. Finch. If a Man write a Petition, are the Pen and Ink that he uſes, the Arms?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I hope Mr. Finch remembers what I heard him ſay in Algernoon Sidney's Caſe ſcribere eſt agere.

Mr. Finch. I think it is ſo, Mr. Sollicitor, but every Action is not a Breach of the Peace.

L. C. J. Well, let my Brothers deliver their Opinions, I will give you mine.

Mr. Juſt. Allyb. The ſingle Queſtion now is, Whether or no that which Mr. Sollicitor was pleaſed to name as the Crime, and lay it to the charge of my Lords the Biſhops, that is a Seditious Libel, be a Breach of the Peace: I do confeſs that there is little of Argument to be drawn from Forms of Indictments; and I ſhall put no great ſtreſs upon the Words vi & armis, where the Fact will not come near it, but if a Commitment may enſue, (as they ſeem to agree) whereever Surety of the Peace may be required, nothing ſeems more important to me, than that Surety of the Peace ſhould be required, where there is any thing of Sedition in the Caſe; and wherever there is a Seditious Act, I cannot tell how to make any other Conſtruction of it, but that it is an Actual Breach of the Peace, that is my Opinion.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. I am of the ſame opinion in this point too, as I was in the other point before, it was a matter of great conſequence (I thought) upon the former point, but now it appears to me, to be of far greater conſequence than it did at firſt; for here, all the Great, High, and Noble ble Peers of England are concerned in it, as to their Priviledge. Our Predeceſſours in this Court heretofore would not determine the Priviledges of the Peers, but left them to themſelves to make what Judgment they pleaſed of them: I think truly 'tis a thing of that weight, that it may be very fit for the Court to take time to conſider of it, and I declare for my own part, I will not take upon me to deliver any Opinion in a matter of this Conſequence, before I have conſulted all the Books, that can give me any Light in the Caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Powell, I am not determining, limiting, or cramping the Priviledge of Peers, but I am only conſidering whether or no a Seditious Libel be a Breach of the Peace; 'tis agreed to be on all hands a Breach of the Peace. Is there any thing that will require Sureties of the Peace to be given upon the doing of it? For there Sir Robert Sawyer has laid the Foundation of his diſtinction, and if that ſhall draw any Perſon under a Commitment, then, ſay I, in my Judgment, wherever there is a Seditious Libel, there is that which is an actual breach of the Peace; for I am ſure, there is that, which is ſufficient to require Sureties of the Peace; I controvert not the right of the Peers one way or other, but only declare my opinion, That this is a fact that comes within the Rule laid down by them, that what will require Sureties of the Peace, is a breach of the Peace.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. God forbid that in a Caſe of this Nature, any one ſhould take upon him here to ſay, that every Miſdemeanour were a breach of the Peace, I ſay not ſo; but certainly there are ſome ſuch Miſdemeanours as are breaches of the Peace; and if here be ſuch a Miſdemeanour before us, then it is acknowledged that even in Parliament time, a priviledged Perſon might be Committed for it: For in Treaſon, Felony, and breach of the Peace, Priviledge does not hold. I will not take upon me (as my Brother ſaid) to determine concerning the Priviledge of the Peers; it is not of our Cognizance, nor have we any thing to do, either to enlarge or confine priviledge, nor do we determine whether this be ſuch a Libel as is charged in the Information, that will come in queſtion another time, but certainly as this Caſe is, the Information ought to be read, and my Lords ought to appear and plead to it.

L. C. J. Certainly we are all of us here as tender of the priviledges of the Peers, as any in the World can be, and as tender as we would be, and ought to be in trying any Man's right; it becomes us to do it with great reſpect and regard to my Lords the Biſhops; and therefore I would be as careful (if that were the queſtion before me) to conſider very well, before I give my Opinion, as ever I was in my Life. But when I ſee there can come no miſchief at all to the Priviledges of the Peers, by what is agreed on all hands; I think I may very juſtly give my Opinion; for here is the Queſtion, Whether the fact charged in the Warrant, be ſuch a Miſdemeanour as is a breach of the Peace, and the Words of the Warrant (which is now upon the Record) being ſuch as have been recited, I cannot but think it is ſuch a Miſdemeanour as would have required Sureties of the Peace, and if Sureties were not given, a Commitment might follow, and therefore I think the Information muſt be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray the Clerk may read it.

Clerk reads. Middleſex, ſs. JAMES R.

IT having pleaſed Almighty God, not only to bring Us to the Imperial Crowns of theſe Kingdoms through the greateſt difficulties, but to preſerve Us by a more than ordinary Providence upon the Throne of our Royal Anceſtors, There is nothing now that We ſo earneſtly deſire as to Eſtabliſh Our Government on ſuch a Foundation as may make Our Subjects happy, and Unite them to Us, by Inclination as well as Duty, which We think can be done by no means ſo effectually, as by Granting to them the Free Exerciſe of their Religion for the time to come, and add that to the perfect enjoyment of their Property; which has never been in any caſe invaded by Us ſince our coming to the Crown, which being the two things Men value moſt, ſhall ever be preſerved in theſe Kingdoms during Our Reign over them, as the trueſt methods of Our Peace, and Our Glory. We cannot but heartily wiſh, as it will eaſily be believed, that the People of Our Dominions were Members of the Catholick Church, yet We humbly thank Almighty God, it is, and hath long time been Our conſtant Senſe and Opinion (which upon diverſe occaſions We have declared) that Conſcience ought not to be conſtrained, nor People forced in matters of meer Religion. It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination, as We think it is to the Intereſt of Government which it deſtroys by ſpoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and diſcouraging Strangers, and finally, that it never obtained the end for which it was imployed. And in this we are the more Confirmed by the Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of the four last Reigns. For after all the frequent and pressing endeavours that were used in each of them, to reduce these Kingdoms to an exact Conformity in Religion, it is visible, the Success has not answered the design: And that the difficulty is invincible. We therefore, out of our Princely Care and Affection unto all our Loving Subjects, that they may live at ease and quiet, and for the increase of Trade, and encouragement to Strangers, have thought fit by Virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to issue forth this Our Declaration of Indulgence, making no doubt of the Concurrence of Our two Houses of Parliament, when we shall think it convenient for them to meet. In the first place we do Declare, that we will Protect and Maintain Our Arch-bishops, Bishops, and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects of the Church of England, in the Free Exercise of their Religion as by Law Established, and in the quiet and full enjoyment of all their Possessions without any molestation or disturbance whatsoever. We do likewise Declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that from henceforth the execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in matters Ecclesiastical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion Established, or for or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any manner whatsoever, be immediately Suspended, and the further Execution of the said Penal Laws and every of them is hereby Suspended. And to the end, that by the Liberty hereby granted the Peace and Security of Our Government in the practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby streightly Charge and Command all Our Loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them leave to meet and serve God after their own way and manner, be it in Private Houses, or places purposely hired or built for that use, so that they take special care that nothing be preach'd or taught amongst them which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Assemblies be Peaceably, Openly and Publickly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them; and that they do signifie and make known to some one or more of the next Justices of the Peace, what place or places they set apart for those uses: And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such their Religious Assemblies with greater Assurance and Protection, We have thought it requisite, and do hereby Command, that no Disturbance of any kind be made or given unto them, under pain of Our Displeasure, and to be further proceeded against with the uttermost Severity. And forasmuch as We are desirous to have the benefit of the Service of all our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inseparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Person, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Discouragement or Disability (who are otherwise well inclined and fit to serve Us) by reason of some Oaths or Tests that have been usually administred on such Occasions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and also the several Tests and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25*th* and 30*th* Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, shall not at any time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or subscribed by any Person or Persons whatsoever, who is or shall be employed in any Office or Place of Trust, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleasure and Intention from time to time hereafter to grant Our Royal Dispensations under Our Great Seal to all Our loving Subjects so to be employed, who shall not take the said Oaths, or subscribe or declare the said Tests or Declarations in the above mentioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all our Loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full benefit and advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and discharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Disabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they shall or may at any time hereafter be liable to, for or by reason of their Nonconformity, or the Exercise of their Religion, and from all Suits, Troubles or Disturbances for the same, We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformists, Recusants, and other Our Loving Subjects for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profession or Exercise thereof, hereby declaring that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity shall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purposes, as if every individual Person had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewise declare shall from time to time be granted unto any Person or Persons desiring the same, willing and requiring Our Judges, Justices, and other Officers, to take notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleasure herein before declared. And although the Freedom and Assurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be sufficient to remove from the Minds of Our Loving Subjects all Fears and Jealousies in relation to either; Yet We have thought fit further to declare, That we will maintain them in all their Properties and Possessions, as well of Church and Abby-Lands, as in any other their Lands and Property whatsoever.

His Majeſties Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience.

James Rex.

IT having pleaſed Almighty God, not only to bring Us to the Imperial Crowns of theſe Kingdoms through the greateſt difficulties, but to preſerve Us by a more than ordinary Providence upon the Throne of our Royal Anceſtors, There is nothing now that We ſo earneſtly deſire as to Eſtabliſh Our Government on ſuch a Foundation as may make Our Subjects happy, and Unite them to Us, by Inclination as well as Duty, which We think can be done by no means ſo effectually, as by Granting to them the Free Exerciſe of their Religion for the time to come, and add that to the perfect enjoyment of their Property; which has never been in any caſe invaded by Us ſince our coming to the Crown, which being the two things Men value moſt, ſhall ever be preſerved in theſe Kingdoms during Our Reign over them, as the trueſt methods of their Peace, and Our Glory. We cannot but heartily wiſh, as it will eaſily be believed, that the People of Our Dominions were Members of the Catholick Church, yet We humbly thank Almighty God, it is, and hath long time been Our conſtant Senſe and Opinion (which upon diverſe occaſions We have declared) that Conſcience ought not to be conſtrained, nor People forced in matters of meer Religion. It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination, as We think it is to the Intereſt of Government which it deſtroys by ſpoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and diſcouraging Strangers, and finally, that it never obtained the end for which it was imployed. And in this we are the more Confirmed by the Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of the four laſt Reigns. For after all the frequent and preſſing endeavours that were uſed in each of them, to reduce theſe Kingdoms to an exact Conformity in Religion, it is viſible, the Succeſs has not anſwered the deſign: And that the difficulty is invincible. We therefore, out of our Princely Care and Affection unto all our Loving Subjects, that they may live at eaſe and quiet, and for the increaſe of Trade, and encouragement to Strangers, have thought fit by Virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to iſſue forth this Our Declaration of Indulgence, making no doubt of the Concurrence of Our two Houſes of Parliament, when we ſhall think it convenient for them to meet. In the firſt place we do Declare, that we will Protect and Maintain Our Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects of the Church of England, in the Free Exerciſe of their Religion as by Law Eſtabliſhed, and in the quiet and full enjoyment of all their Poſſeſſions without any moleſtation or diſturbance whatſoever. We do likewiſe Declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure, that from henceforth the execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in matters Eccleſiaſtical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion Eſtabliſhed, or for or by reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any manner whatſoever, be immediately Suſpended, and the further Execution of the ſaid Penal Laws and every of them is hereby Suſpended. And to the end, that by the Liberty hereby granted the Peace and Security of Our Government in the practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby ſtreightly Charge and Command all Our Loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them leave to meet and ſerve God after their own way and manner, be it in Private Houſes, or places purpoſely hired or built for that uſe, ſo that they take ſpecial care that nothing be preach'd or taught amongſt them which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Aſſemblies be Peaceably, Openly and Publickly held, and all Perſons freely admitted to them; and that they do ſignifie and make known to ſome one or more of the next Juſtices of the Peace, what place or places they ſet apart for thoſe uſes: And that all Our Subjects may enjoy ſuch their Religious Aſſemblies with greater Aſſurance and Protection, We have thought it requiſite, and do hereby Command, that no Diſturbance of any kind be made or given unto them, under pain of Our Diſpleaſure, and to be further proceeded againſt with the uttermoſt Severity. And foraſmuch as We are deſirous to have the benefit of the Service of all our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inſeparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Perſon, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Diſcouragement or Diſability (who are otherwiſe well inclined and fit to ſerve Us) by reaſon of ſome Oaths or Teſts that have been uſually adminiſtred on ſuch Occaſions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and alſo the ſeveral Teſts and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25*th* and 30*th* Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, ſhall not at any time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or ſubſcribed by any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, who is or ſhall be employed in any Office or Place of Truſt, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleaſure and Intention from time to time hereafter to grant Our Royal Diſpenſations under Our Great Seal to all Our loving Subjects ſo to be employed, who ſhall not take the ſaid Oaths, or ſubſcribe or declare the ſaid Teſts or Declarations in the above mentioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all our Loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full benefit and advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and diſcharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Diſabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they ſhall or may at any time hereafter be liable to, for or by reaſon of their Nonconformity, or the Exerciſe of their Religion, and from all Suits, Troubles or Diſturbances for the ſame, We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformiſts, Recuſants, and other Our Loving Subjects for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profeſſion or Exerciſe thereof, hereby declaring that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity ſhall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if every individual Perſon had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewiſe declare ſhall from time to time be granted unto any Perſon or Perſons deſiring the ſame, willing and requiring requiring Our Judges, Juſtices, and other Officers, to take notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleaſure herein before declared. And although the Freedom and Aſſurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be ſufficient to remove from the Minds of Our Loving Subjects all Fears and Jealouſies in relation to either; Yet We have thought fit further to declare, That We will maintain them in all their Properties and Poſſeſſions, as well of Church and Abby Lands, as in any other their Lands and Properties whatſoever.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall the 4th day of April, 1687. in the Third Year of Our Reign.

Ever ſince We granted this Indulgence, We have made it Our Principal Care to ſee it preſerved without Diſtinction, as We are encouraged to do daily by Multitudes of Addreſſes, and many other Aſſurances We received from Our Subjects of all Perſwaſions, as Teſtimonies of their Satisfaction and Duty, the Effects of which We doubt not but the next Parliament will plainly ſhew, and that it will not be in vain that We have reſolved to uſe Our uttermoſt Endeavours to eſtabliſh Liberty of Conſcience on ſuch juſt and equal Foundations, as will render it unalterable, and ſecure to all People the free Exerciſe of their Religion for ever, by which future Ages may reap the benefit of what is ſo undoubtedly for the general good of the whole Kingdom. It is ſuch a Security We deſire, without the burden and conſtraint of Oaths and Teſts, which have been unhappily made by ſome Governments, but could never ſupport any; nor ſhould Men be advanced by ſuch means to Offices and Employments, which ought to be the Reward of Services, Fidelity and Merit. We muſt conclude, that not only good Chriſtians will join in this, but whoever is concerned for the increaſe of the Wealth and Power of the Nation. It would perhaps prejudice ſome of our Neighbours, who might loſe part of thoſe vaſt Advantages they now enjoy, if Liberty of Conſcience were ſettled in theſe Kingdoms, which are above all others moſt capable of Improvements, and of commanding the Trade of the World. In Purſuance of this great Work we have been forced to make many Changes both of Civil and Military Officers throughout Our Dominions, not thinking any ought to be employed in Our Service, who will not contribute towards the eſtabliſhing the Peace and Greatneſs of their Country, which We moſt earneſtly deſire, as unbiaſſed Men may ſee by the whole Conduct of Our Government, and by the Condition of Our Fleet, and of Our Armies, which with good Management ſhall be conſtantly the ſame, and greater, if the Safety or Honour of the Nation require it. We recommend theſe Conſiderations to all Our Subjects, and that they will reflect on their preſent Eaſe and Happineſs, how for above three Years, that it hath pleaſed God to permit Us to Reign over theſe Kingdoms, We have not appear'd to be that Prince Our Enemies would have made the World afraid of, Our chief Aim having been not to be the Oppreſſor, but the Father of Our People, of which We can give no better Evidence than by conjuring them to lay aſide all private Animoſities as well as groundleſs Jealouſies, and to chooſe ſuch Members of Parliament, as may do their part to finiſh what We have begun for the Advantage of the Monarchy over which Almighty God hath placed Us, being reſolved to call a Parliament, that ſhall meet in November next at fartheſt.

Quam quidem Regalem Declarationem dicti Domini Regis nunc ultimo mentionatam idem Dominus Rex nunc poſtea ſcilicet tricesimo die Aprilis Anno Regni ſui quarto ſupra dicto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto, imprimi & per totam Angliam publicari cauſavit, & pro magis ſolemni demonſtratione, notificatione, & manifeſtatione gratiæ ſuæ Regiæ benignitatis & benevolentiæ ſuæ ad omnes ligeos ſuos in eadem Declaratione ultimò mentionata ſpecificatos, poſtea ſcilicet quarto die Maii Anno Regni ſui quarto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto idem Dominus Rex debito modo ordinavit prout ſequitur.

At the Court at Whitehall, the 4th of May, 1688. It is this Day ordered by His Majeſty in Council, That His Majeſty's late Gracious Declaration, bearing date the 27th of April laſt, be read at the uſual time of Divine Service, upon the 20th and 27th of this Month in all Churches and Chappels within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and Ten Miles thereabout; and upon the 3*d* and 10th of June next in all other Churches and Chappels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further ordered, That the Right Reverend the Biſhops cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent and diſtributed throughout their ſeveral and reſpective Dioceſſes, to be read accordingly.

The Humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province (now preſent with him) in behalf of themſelves and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſſes,

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT the great Averſeneſs they find in themſelves to the diſtributing and publiſhing in all their Churches, Your Majeſties late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to Your Majeſty; our Holy Mother the Church of England being both in her Principles and in her conſtant Practice unqueſtionably Loyal, and having, to her great Honour, been more than once publickly acknowledged to be ſo by Your Gracious Majeſty; nor yet from any want of due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit when that matter ſhall be conſidered and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation. But among many other Conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a diſpenſing Power, as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662. and 1672. and the beginning of Your Majeſties Reign; and is a matter of ſo great Moment and Conſequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves Parties to it, as the Diſtribution of it all over the Nation, and the ſolemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's Houſe, and in the time of his Divine Service, muſt amount to, in common and reaſonable Conſtruction.

——In contemptum dicti Domini Regis nunc, & Legum hujus regni Angliæ, manifeſtum, in malum exemplum omnium aliorum in tali caſu delinquentium, ac contra pacem dicti Domini Regis nunc, Coronam & Dignitatem ſuas, &c. Unde idem Attornatus dicti Domini Regis nunc generalis pro eodem Domino Rege petit adviſamentum Curiæ hic in præmiſſis, & debitum legis proceſſum verſus præfatos Willielmum Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem, Willielmum Epiſcopum Aſaphenſem, Franciſcum Epiſcopum Elienſem, Johannem Epiſcopum Ciceſtrenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Bathonenſem & Wellenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Petriburgenſem, & Jonathanum Epiſcopum Briſtollenſem fieri; ad reſpondendum dicto Domino Regi de & in præmiſſis, &c.

T. Powys.
W. Williams.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we humbly pray, that according to the Rules of the Court in ſuch Caſes, my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and my Lords the Biſhops may plead to the Information.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords the Biſhops are here in Cuſtody in the Court, upon the higheſt Commitment that can be in this Kingdom, to wit, That of the King in Council; and we pray, that according to the courſe of the Court they may plead to the Information preſently.

L. C. J. What does his Grace and my Lords the Biſhops ſay to it?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Will your Lordſhip give us leave who are of Council for his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, to ſpeak a word in this Matter?

L. C. J. Ay Brother, go on.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. That which we have to deſire of your Lordſhip and the Court is this, We have now heard this Information read, and 'tis plain we could know nothing of this before, the Warrant of Commitment being only in general for a Libel; and this being a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence, peradventure, that ever was in Weſtminſter-Hall, (that I think I may boldly ſay, it is a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence that ever was in this Court) and it being a matter of this Nature, that theſe Great and Noble Perſons my Lords the Biſhops are here taxed with, that is, For making a Seditious Libel, contained in ſuch a Petition (as though it was a Libel to Petition the King) we do beg this of your Lordſhip, that (it being of this great Importance) to the end we may come prepared to ſay what we have againſt it, we may have an Imparlanec till the next Term.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord favour me with a Word on the ſame ſide, for my Lords the Biſhops. Your Lordſhip ſees now, how neceſſary the trouble we gave you before, in making our Objections againſt the reading of the Information was, and what the drift and aim of the King's Council was, in the deſiring the Information to be read firſt; for now it is read, What is it that they deſire of your Lordſhips? They deſire that my Lord Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops being in Cuſtody, and brought here in Cuſtody, they may be now ſo charged with this Information, as to plead preſently: This my Lord we oppoſe, and with humble Submiſſion we ought to have time to Imparle, and a Copy of the Information, that we may conſider what we have to plead to it; for however we come here into Court, whether legally or not legally, yet ought we in the one and in the other Caſe, to have time to conſider of our Defence. And, my Lord, till of later time this Practice which the King's Council now calls the Courſe of the Court, was never uſed, nor was any Man required to plead immediately; and my Lord, if the Practice of the Court has not been anciently ſo (as I do believe they will ſcarce ſhew it to be ancienter than a few Years laſt paſt) then with humble Submiſſion, though the Courſe of the Court have been ſo for ſome little time paſt, yet it is not in the power of the Court (as we humbly conceive) to make a Courſe in prejudice of all the Privileges that the King's Subjects are by the ancient Rules of Law intituled to; they cannot make a new Law in prejudice of any Right or Privilege which the Subject hath, and call it the Courſe of the Court: Now that this which we deſire for my Lords the Biſhops, is the Right and Privilege of the Subject, is moſt manifeſt; for there might be many Defences that a Man may have to make to an Accuſation of this Nature, which it is impoſſible for him to know at the firſt hearing of an Information read, and yet which would be neceſſary for him to make uſe of, or at leaſt it would be impoſſible for him to make uſe of in ſuch a manner as the Law doth allow of and require. It may be the Pleas which he has to plead may be ſuch as that he has not time to put into form; there may be Matters upon the hearing the Information read, that it would be neceſſary for him to give anſwer to, which he knew not of before, and therefore may neither have Materials ready, nor be capable of putting them (if he had them ready) into ſuch Form as the Law requires. They tell you on the other ſide, that if a Man be brought into Court by legal Proceſs, he may be charged with any Information whatſoever, that they are not tied to the Fact alledged in the Commitment, but finding the Party under a legal Impriſonment, they can exhibit an Information againſt him for any other Offence. Then, my Lord, would I fain know, which way any Man alive can be prepared to make his juſt and legal Defence, for he knows not his Accuſation; for tho' he think it may be for that for which he was committed, yet it may prove otherwiſe, and then he can be no way provided with Materials for his Defence, but he muſt loſe all Advantages which the Law gives him for his Defence. My Lord, if this be the courſe of latter times, yet you will not take that to be ſuch a Law, as is binding to all future times; and we are ſure the King's Council cannot ſhew, that this was the ancient Practice, for that was quite otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, you were not here, I ſuppoſe when this Queſtion came in debate in this Court lately, in the Caſe of a very great Perſon; 'twas urged very earneſtly and very learnedly by one that ſtands by you; we upon that Debate asked Sir Samuel Aſtrey, what the Courſe of the Court was, and he told us, that the Courſe of the Court (of his own Knowlege for all the time that he had ſat as Clerk of the Crown in this Court) was, that when any one was brought in Cuſtody, or upon a Recognizance, they were to plead preſently.

Mr. Finch. Sir Samuel Aſtry has not been here ſo very long, as to make the Practice of his time the courſe of the Court.

L. C. J. But I will tell you what he ſaid further, if you will hear me; he ſaid, he had enquired of Mr. Waterhouſe, whom we all know to have been an old Clerk in the Crown Office, and he told him, that that had been the practice all his time.

Mr. S. Pemb. My Lord, I hope the courſe of the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall ſhall not depend upon the Certificate of ſuch a one as Mr. Waterhouſe, who is a Man (we all know) is ſuperannuated, and very defective in his Memory.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Certainly what they deſire for the Defendant is very reaſonable, for I take the Point to be only this; whether a Man may be compelled, being in Cuſtody, to plead to an Information preſently.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Pray Brother Powell ſpare me a word in this Matter; Mr. Finch, I ſuppoſe you labour that, the Court will not deny you, that you may have time to plead according to the courſe of the Court: We are not making Courſes for particular Facts, that by my conſent we will never do; but if you ſay ſuch a thing is not the courſe of the Court, and the King's Council affirm it is, how ſhall this be determined? and from whom can we take our Information to determine what is the courſe? I am ſure there is none of us that are here now, can pretend to tell what the ancient courſe was, for my part I declare it I cannot; and I know no reaſon there ſhould be any Novelty introduced into the Court upon any ground or reaſon whatſoever, nor will I conſent to any while I ſit here. Therefore I deſire to know what is the Ancient Courſe, and how we ſhall come to the knowledge of that Courſe, if not by the Certificate of thoſe who have been Ancient Officers of the Court?

L. C. J. Nay, that is certain, the Court will bring in nothing new in any ſuch Caſe as this.

Mr. Juſt. Allibone. If that hath not been the Antient Courſe without exception, I am againſt it; I know no Reaſon my Lords the Biſhops ſhould have any thing new put upon them; on the other ſide, they muſt not expect to have the Ancient Courſe of the Court declined in their Caſe.

Mr. Pollixf. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little in this matter; 'tis not my deſire that any Law ſhould be alter'd for any particular Caſe, and the Courſe of the Court I know is the Law of the Court; but I humbly crave leave to ſay, That I take the Ancient Courſe of the Court to be quite otherwiſe, than what the King's Council would have it; there may be particular things done now and then, perhaps in particular Caſes, and upon particular Occaſions, which will not make what is ſo done to be the Courſe of the Court, nor be a binding Rule to you. Now as to this matter, of time or no time, to plead to an Information, I remember the time very well, when I and ſome others that ſtood at the Bar, and wondred when we ſaw this practice coming in, and thought it a very hard and miſchievous thing, for (in truth) the ſeveral Plots that have been, and the heats of men about thoſe things, have brought in this Courſe; for certain I am, and I dare affirm there never was any ſuch Courſe here before, neither upon Warrant from the Chief Juſtice, nor upon Recognizance, or any other Proceſs, was a Man compelled to plead inſtantly, without having a Capias in the regular form after a Contempt for not appearing upon Summons: Truly, my Lord, we had no Intereſt in the matter one way or other, to make us ſcruple it any otherwiſe than as we were concerned that the Law and Juſtice of the Nation ſhould have its true and ancient Current. And this I can aſſure your Lordſhips, that here was both my Lord Chief Juſtice Saunders, and Mr. Serj. Holt and my ſelf, who taking notice when this was firſt offered at, to make a man plead immediately without giving him time to conſider what he ſhould plead, could not but ſay among our ſelves, that it was an unreaſonable thing; and we were inclined to ſpeak to the Court to inform them of the Conſequence of it, which needs muſt be very miſchievous. Sir Samuel Aſtry, we know, came to be Clerk of the Crown in my Ld Scroggs's time; we know 'tis uſual and cuſtomary for the Court to ask what is the Courſe of the Court in doubtful Caſes, and to receive the Information from the Officers of the Court on both ſides. If it be on the Plea ſide, from Mr. Aſton, if on the Crown ſide, from Sir Samuel Aſtry, concerning things of Practice, but I did never think that what they reported was final and concluſive to the Court: But to make this matter clear, I humbly pray, that you would pleaſe to give order for the ſearch of old Precedents, how the old Practice really hath been; every thing that has been done in hot times, is not to be made a ſtanding Rule: If there do any ſuch thing appear to have been done and practiſed antiently, truly, my Lord, I will ſubmit, and ſay I am under a mighty miſtake; ſtake; but if this which is now urged for the Courſe of the Court, is nothing but what the Zeal of the Times, and Heat of Perſecutions hath introduced; ſurely that is not fit to be a conſtant Rule for the Court to go by; for every one knows, that the Zeal of one time may bring in that by ſurprize upon one Man, which when things are cooll, or at another time will appear to be plain Injuſtice. We have indeed ſeen ſtrange things of this kind done before, but I hope to God they are now at an end, and we ſhall never ſee any ſuch thing done hereafter; and as for this particular Point, I think it is a wonderful thing in the Conſequence of it, if the Law ſhould be as they would have it: Here is a long Information juſt read over to a Man (but whether long or ſhort, as to the main Point, 'tis the ſame) and you ſay the Courſe of the Court is, he muſt plead to it immediately; ſurely matters of Crime that require Puniſhment to be inflicted on men, are of as much conſequence and concern, as any Civil matter whatſoever; and Men are to have their Rights in thoſe matters preſerved, as well as in other matters, which is all I preſs; for ſuppoſe a man has a ſpecial matter to plead, as particularly ſuppoſe it be the King's Pardon, I cannot give this in Evidence upon a Tryal after not guilty pleaded, then I ought to plead it; but what if I have it not ready? 'tis not telling the Court of it, without ſhewing of it, that will do; and it may be a man that is taken up, and brought hither in Cuſtody, cannot have it ready to ſhew; but yet then by this Rule a man ſhall loſe the benefit of his Plea, by being compelled to anſwer immediately: But they ſay, the Court will do right, I ſuppoſe they will; and my Lords the Biſhops in this caſe I believe do not diſtruſt, but that the Court will do right; but I never thought the Law was brought to that paſs, that ſuch things as theſe were left wholly in the diſcretion of the Court; certainly Imparlances, time to plead, and juſt Preparations for a man's defence are things that the Law has ſetled, and not left in the diſcretion of the Court; and truly to me it ſeems all one utterly to take away a man's Defence, as to hinder him of the means to prepare for it. My Lord, here is an Information before you againſt theſe Noble Lords, it is a matter of great moment, and tho', I hope in God, there is no great cauſe for it, yet however ſince ſuch Perſons are concerned, and 'tis a matter of ſuch great weight, I hope you will give us ſuch an Imparlance, as if we had this day appeared upon the ordinary Proceſs, which is an Imparlance until the next Term.

L. Ch. Juſt. There is a difference between this and that other Caſe, if my Lords the Biſhops had appeared upon the Summons, they would have had an Imparlance of Courſe; but when they are brought up hither in Cuſtody, that mightily alters the Caſe, but that we may not be too haſty in a thing of this nature, let the Clerk of the Court be conſulted with, that we may know what the true Courſe is.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray Sir Samuel Aſtry may be examined a little about it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Mr. Pollixfen, I believe the Court is unanimous in their Reſolutions of making nothing new in this Caſe; but pray give me leave to tell you, this is not the firſt time that this Queſtion has come to be agitated in this Court ſince I came hither. Now from whence can the Court take their meaſures to be rightly informed what the Practice of the Court is, but from the Information of the Officers of the Court? who by their conſtant Imployment, are moſt capable of knowing what the Courſe is. Now if you come to offer any thing that may be matter of doubt to the Court, concerning the Practice of the Court, you having known that this thing was controverted before (for ſo it has been) ſhould have provided your ſelf with ſomething that muſt be a reaſonable motive for us to doubt; for this has not been only once, but often moved, and our Officers have been conſulted with concerning this Queſtion, which took its riſe from ſuch Objections as you have made now: Now for you to tell us, That you deſire that we would look into Preſidents, is, methinks, pretty odd; if you had brought us any Precedents, it had been ſomething: And withall I muſt tell you, that you muſt not reckon the favour of the Court in any particular Caſe, to be the ſtanding Rules for the Practice and Courſe of the Court; but inſtead of bringing Precedents, you only offer your own Thoughts, and thoſe would create no doubt in us, but what has been before ſatisfied upon Examination of the Officers of the Court.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Sir, will you give me leave to anſwer one Word.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly I have not obſerved that ever this Point was ſtarted ſo, as to beget a Queſtion ſince I came hither, but only in the Caſes of the Quo Warranto's; and truly in that Caſe I thought it hard they ſhould be denied time to plead, eſpecially the Conſequence being ſo fatal.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, Brother, it has been ſeveral times.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly, my Lord, I have not obſerved it, nor do I remember it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I have always taken the diſtinction, as to theſe Matters, to be this——

Mr. Juſt. Powel. But, my Lord, if the ancient Courſe of the Court hath been to grant an Imparlance, and a Copy of the Information before they plead, I ſee no reaſon why my Lords the Biſhops ſhould not have the benefit of that ancient Courſe; for if a Man that is Sued at Law for a Two-penny Treſpaſs, ſhall have that advantage as to receive a Declaration, and have time to plead what he can to it, why ſhould not my Lords the Biſhops in a matter of ſo great weight, have the ſame advantage too? But indeed, if the Courſe of the Court had been anciently otherwiſe, I can ſay nothing to it; for the Courſe of the Court is certainly the Law of the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Powell, you ſay well, if they did produce any one Precedent to give us occaſion to doubt in the matter.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, will you give me leave——

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Sir Robert Sawyer, will you never have done?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are ſo zealous, and eager in this Caſe, that they wont permit either the Court, or any body elſe to ſpeak a word but themſelves.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Good Mr. Sollicitor, give us leave to anſwer the Objection that the Court hath made to us; we would ſatisfie your Lordſhip where the Diſtinction really lieth, where there has been an Opportunity for the party to come in, as by Summons or Subpœna, or the like, like, and he has ſlipped that opportunity, and ſo the King is delayed, in that Caſe they always uſed to put the Party upon Pleading preſently, when he was taken up upon a Capias, and brought in Cuſtody; but when there was never any Subpœna taken out (as the Caſe is here,) ſo that the Party never had an opportunity to come in and render himſelf, and appear to Anſwer it according to the due Courſe of Law, an Imparlance was never yet denyed, nor time to Plead; and that is the Caſe here.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant has given you the true diſtinction, where Proceſs has gone out to ſummon any one to appear to an Information, and he hath failed to appear according to the Summons, and the Proſecutor for the King takes out a Capias, if he be brought in upon that Capias, the ancient Courſe has been ſo as they ſay: But for that other matter, where a Man comes in upon a Commitment at the firſt Inſtance, and an Information is put in juſt as this is, the ſame Morning and not before; if they can ſhew any one Precedent of this kind Fifteen Years ago, I would be contented to yield that they are in the right, but I am ſure they are not able to do it: In Sir Mathew Hales's time when this was moved, it was refuſed; and he was clear of another Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope now my Lord we ſhall be heard a little for the King, and I cannot forbear obſerving in the firſt Place ſomewhat that theſe Gentlemen have offered at, who are now inveighing againſt the heat of the Times, when a great part of that heat, we know who were the Inflamers of; but what is all this to the purpoſe? The Queſtion is barely this, Whether when a Man is brought in Cuſtody into this Court, and charged with an Information, he ſhall not by the courſe of the Court be compelled to plead preſently.

Sir Robert Sawyer. To Indictments for Treaſon and Felony, he ſhall be compelled to Plead preſently, but not to an Information for Miſdemeanours.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. It ſeems to me very hard he ſhould.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, there are many things that ſeem hard in Law, but yet when all is done, the Judges cannot alter the Law; 'tis a hard Caſe that that a Man is tryed for his Life for Treaſon or Felony cannot have a Copy of his Indictment, cannot have Council, cannot have his Witneſſes ſworn, but this has been long practiced, and the uſage is grown to a Law, and from time to time it hath been ſo taken for Law, it cannot be altered without a new Law made, as it hath been heretofore, ſo it muſt be now, till a greater Authority alter it; and ſo, as to the Caſe here at preſent, if it were a new Caſe, and it was the firſt Inſtance, I muſt confeſs I think I ſhould not preſs it, but if this be the conſtant practice of the Court, and if theſe Gentlemen that now oppoſe it, ſome of them Miniſterially, ſome of them Judicially, have themſelves Eſtabliſhed this Practice, they have no reaſon to wonder, that we follow them in it; we do not blame them for what they do now, for Men when they are of Council may be permitted to argue for their Client contrary to their former Opinions, but if theſe things by their procurement have been done thus before, ſurely without Offence we may pray the like may be done now. 'Tis our duty on behalf of the King to deſire that he may have Right done him, as well as they on behalf of my Lords the Biſhops, and for the uſage to cite Precedents were endleſs, eſpecially of late times, and theſe Gentlemen know them all very well, for they were ſome of them Parties to them themſelves, and we can do no more, nor need, than to put them in mind of their own doings, whether it was ſo before their time or not, it concerns them to make out and retract their own Errors; but in our Obſervation, if ever this was preſſed or inſiſted upon on the Kings behalf, this courſe has always been purſued.

Sir Robert Sawyer. For a Precedent my Lord there is the Caſe of my Lord Hollis, where there was given time after time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was only time to argue the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, have you ever known it conteſted, and upon Debate ſo Ruled, in an Information for a Miſdemeanour, as this Caſe is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you pleaſe to ask Sir Samuel Aſtry, he will inform you how the Courſe has been.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Sir Samuel Aſtry My Lord, when I came into this Place, there was an Ancient Gentleman that had been long a Clerk in the Office.

L. C. J. How many Years is it ſince you came into this Office?

Sir Samuel Aſtry About a dozen Years, I think, my Lord; and he ſat in this place where Mr. Harcourt does now, he was always accounted a Loyal, Honeſt, and Intelligent Man, that is Mr. Waterhouſe, who is now alive; and when I came into my Office, I took my Inſtructions in a great meaſure from him, and asked him, what the courſe of the Court was, in ſuch Caſes which I my ſelf did not underſtand; for tho' I had been an Attorney Twenty Years, yet it was on the other ſide, the Civil ſide; and tho' I knew ſome things of my own knowledge, yet I did not ſo well know the whole practice of the Court, and particularly I asked him, what was the courſe of the Court in this Caſe that is now in Queſtion, and he told me, that in all his time and Experience, if a Man appears upon a Recognizance, or was a Perſon in Cuſtody, or appeared in propria perſona, as a perſon Priviledged, he ought to plead at the firſt inſtance, and according to that practice, when Sir Robert Sawyer was Attorney General it was the conſtant practice, and I am ſure he knows it is no new thing.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But upon what Informations, Sir Samuel Aſtry, were they Informations upon Miſdemeanours?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Yes, ſeveral.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But was there no Proceſs taken out firſt to call the Party in?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Yes, where Proceſs was never taken out.

Mr. Att. Gen. For how long time is that you ſpeak of your own knowledge, Sir Samuel?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. About a dozen Years.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It was never done till very lately, but after the Party was in Contempt for not appearing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would ask you, Sir Samuel Aſtry, one Queſtion: Was the uſual Proceſs of Subpœna firſt taken out? for Mr. Serjeant Pemberton ſays it was, do you find any Warrant for ſuch a difference as that?

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Do you find any ſuch Caſe as this is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, pray Mr. Serjeant, give us your favour, and let us ask our Queſtions according to your own Doctrine. How do you find the Practice to have been as to that diſtinction they have made?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Sir, I would be very loath to inlarge the Precedents of the Crown Office further than the truth is; I tell you whence I took my Inſtructions, from Mr. Waterhouſe, who was an Ancient Clerk in the Office, he has been in that Office Sixty Years, and the Inſtructions I took from him, were, that this was the Practice all his time, and it has been aſſerted all my time; it has been often conteſted, I confeſs, and Mr. Pollexfen has always oppoſed it, and moved againſt it, but it has been always ruled againſt him: I know it was againſt his Judgment, but the Court always over-ruled it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir Samuel Aſtry, can you give any one Precedent before you came into this Office?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Sir, I can go no farther than this that I have told you, what Information I received from him.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What is all this but a Certificate from Mr. Waterhouſe?

L. C. J. We can be informed no otherways than by Certificate from the old Clerks of the Office.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Alas, he is a Child, and not fit to do any thing.

Mr. Pollexfen. We all know Mr. Waterhouſe very well, he is a very weak Man, and always was ſo, and there is no depending upon any thing that he ſays.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you hear us a little for the King.

The Biſhop of Peterborough whiſpering with Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Sollicitor ſaid to him, My Lord, you had better look another way, and look towards the Court, for there your buſineſs lies.

L. C. J. Well Mr. Sollicitor, What ſay you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it appears plainly, that the King is in poſſeſſion of this Priviledge, and has been ſo for theſe dozen Years, for ſo long the Juſtice of the Kingdom towards all the Subjects, hath run in all the inſtances of it in this Channel; and tho' it hath been conteſted as often as Mr. Pollexfen has been of Council for the Defendant, in ſuch Caſes it has always been ruled againſt him; he indeed has made his continual Claims (Sir Samuel Aſtry ſays) he has raiſed the Duſt, and made a Hue and Cry, but it has always gone againſt him. And I would ask the reſt of you Gentlemen that are of Council for my Lords the Biſhops, (for ſome, or one of you I am ſure, has been concerned in every Information that has been exhibited in this Court for this nine or ten Years laſt paſt, I would ask you) whether in any Information that you have been concerned in, if the Party being brought in by Proceſs, inſiſted to have time and an Imparlance, it was ever granted him. I know you will not ſay, it ever was; why then ſhould there be more done in this Caſe, than has been done in all other Caſes this ten Years? Tis not ſufficient to make Declarations againſt the unreaſonableneſs of the Practice, for it is but what you have done your ſelves, and inſiſted upon for Law; and all thoſe Men that upon Informations have been compelled to plead, have had Injury done them; or elſe theſe Lords will have no Injury by the Court's taking the ſame Courſe. It is true, my Lords, the Biſhops are Peers, and here are Seven of them, and Seven Lords go a great way; they make a Committee, I think, in the Houſe of Peers, and a mighty matter is made of it, that this is the Caſe of ſo many Lords: But will you alter the courſe of the Court, becauſe Seven of my Lords the Biſhops are concerned in it, and they make a mighty ſtir about the Reaſonableneſs of the thing? How can it be believed that the Law will not give a Man time to make his Defence? They agree themſelves, that if it were in the Caſe of Life and Death, they muſt plead preſently; and doth not the ſame Reaſon hold? and may not an Argument be drawn à fortiori, in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanour? If I am not to have time when I plead for my Life, there is leſs Reaſon I ſhould have time to anſwer a Treſpaſs: But, my Lord, 'tis not Reaſon that weighs in the Caſe, 'tis the courſe of the Court, which is the Law of the Court that we are contending for: and what is there in the Caſe that ſhould require ſo much time for my Lords the Biſhops to plead to it? It is charged in the Information, that theſe Noble Prelates did make a Libel which was produced by them, and publiſhed in the Kings preſence, they can eaſily tell whether they have done this, or not done it: what can they plead, but the general Iſſue? They talk of ſpecial matter to be pleaded, but can they ſhew any more that they can ſay, than what any poor ordinary Country-man, if he were here to plead to an Information, could ſay? that is, whether he was Guilty or not Guilty. Theſe Lords can tell whether it be true, that they did publiſh the Paper laid in the Information, and then your Lordſhip will tell them what will be the Conſequences of that Publication in point of Law. We ſay all this was done at Weſtminſter, there the Scene is laid, and it is not an Information for an old ſtale thing done a great while ago, but a thing that was done Yeſterday, and a thing notorious enough, their conteſting with the King about his Declaration of Indulgence. And as to what Mr. Finch has ſaid, That this is a Novel Invention, and a Trick to rob a Man of his juſt Defence; ſure he forgets who it is that taught us the Trick, if it be a Trick, we have learnt it from thoſe that trick'd before us; and what is it that theſe Lords do deſire? they would have an Imparlance till Michaelmas Term: does or can your Lordſhip think they ask that which is reaſonable? to have ſix Months time to plead not Guilty to an Information for a Libel; and when ſo many Men have been denied it formerly upon the inſtigation of thoſe very Gentlemen, that now preſs ſo very hard to have it granted; ſure they muſt expect to be denyed it too; and all this while theſe Lords lye under this Accuſation, which is not ſo trivial a matter as ſome would make it, I believe my Lords the Biſhops have a deſire to be cleared, I ſuppoſe it is only their Council that deſire to delay it, upon what ground I know not, I believe they themſelves would be glad to remove the Imputation, which would be beſt done by a Tryal, and the ſooner the better: If they have a mind to juſtifie themſelves, that is the readieſt courſe for it, and they may do it preſently, by Pleading Not Guilty; My Lord, I know I am in a great Auditory, and abundance of your

Lord-

Lordſhips time has been taken up already, I preſs it therefore for the ſake of the King, and for the ſake of my Lords the Biſhops, we ſhall elſe have all hang in ſuſpence, and hang in the Air for ſix Months longer, therefore let the matter be put upon a fair Iſſue, ſo as it may come to a ſpeedy Determination; I am ſure if theſe Lords be Innocent to Day, they will be Innocent to Morrow, and if it were my own Caſe, I would deſire to have it Tryed as ſpeedily as I could, and therefore I pray they may plead immediately.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, what do you ſay to the Difference that was taken between a Perſon that was brought in Cuſtody at the firſt inſtance where there is no contempt to the Proceſs of the Court, and one that comes here by Capias, upon default of appearing at the Summons?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, If I apprehend them aright, they give us more than we did ask, for Mr. Sollicitor has laid it down as a Rule, that if a Man is taken upon a Capias in a Mean Proceſs, he ſhall have no Imparlance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you are greatly miſtaken, Sir, and I pray don't lay down Rules for me.

Mr. Finch. If I am Sir, I beg your pardon, but this I am ſure of, if a Venire Fac goes out, which is in the nature of a Subpœna, and the party appear to it, that being the firſt time he could come into Court, you cannot force him to plead to an Information, but he has an Imparlance of Courſe.

Mr. J. Powell. Methinks it ſeems very reaſonable, that this forcing a Man to plead preſently ſhould be only a puniſhment for a Contempt of the Court, and pray, were my Lords the Biſhops in contempt to the Court when they came here to Day? Certainly they were not, for no Man is in contempt, but he that being ſerved with Proceſs, diſobeys that Proceſs, and if my Lords the Biſhops had been ſerved with a Subpœna and had not appeared, then there would have gone out a Capias to bring them in, and then they would have come in upon a Contempt, and then they would have come within the Rule.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you have a mind to it, you may ask Sir Samuel Aſtry again.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they come in upon Bail, they ought to plead preſently.

Mr. J. Allybone. Mr. Finch, I'll tell you what ſticks with me, truly you could not but be aware that this would be required of you; for this very thing was in debate laſt Term, and you know what Rules the Officer ſaid was the Courſe of the Court, why did you not therefore come prepared with ſome Preſidents, to ſhew us what the courſe of the Court is?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly my Lord, at this rate, we ſhall keep your Lordſhip here all this Afternoon, if theſe Gentlemen will not be ſatisfied with the Rule of the Court; and for an Anſwer to what Mr. Juſtice Powel ſays, if any Riot be committed in the Countrey, and the Parties are bound by Recognizance to appear here, that is no proceſs of this Court, and ſo conſequently there can be no contempt, and yet they muſt plead preſently.

Mr. J. Powell. There is a particular reaſon for that, becauſe they are bound by Recognizance, Sir Samuel Aſtry and others ſay, that if they come in by Recognizance they muſt plead preſently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But for the thing it ſelf, (that the people that hear us may not imagine that this Court puts a hardſhip upon my Lords the Biſhops, more than is done in other Caſes) it is beſt to keep the ſame Rule as in all other Caſes; for when all is done, when Juſtice goes with an equal Current, without any regard to one Perſon or other, then every body is ſafe, and all perſons concerned do their Duty; ſo in this caſe, here be no Preſidents produced, wherein it has been otherwiſe, then can no perſon complain but that things go in this Caſe, as they do in all other Caſes; perhaps ſuch a Caſe (as to the Fact of it) never hapned before, but for the Law of it, that is plain, and the ſame is in all other Caſes; for that there may be an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops, as well as other People, if they make Libels, ſure it is no doubt at all; and if an Information lies againſt them for it, they are under the ſame Rules as others are: but theſe Gentlemen talk of being ſurprized, and that this is the firſt time they have heard of this Information, but have we told any News in this Information? Was not all that is contained in it, notoriouſly enough known before? Was not the Kings firſt Declaration very well known? Was not his ſecond Declaration very well known? Was not his Order of Council for Reading of the Declaration very well known? Is not your own Petition a thing very well known to your ſelves and all the World? Then theſe being the particular Facts, of which this Information is made up, and we only ſay you did this Fact, and we ask you, did you do it, or did you not? Can there be any great ſurprize in this? My Lord, I cannot ſee any thing that alters this from the common Caſe, but only their being Peers, and ſince this queſtion has been heretofore under conteſt, theſe Gentlemen have had time enough to have prepared Precedents, to differ this from the common Rule, if they could; but ſince they cannot, we deſire they may have the ſame Rule, that is in all other Caſes, and then to be ſure, all will go right.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray will you tell us, whether ever the Court uſed to grant an Imparlance where a Perſon comes in in Cuſtody; or did you ever know, when a Perſon comes in upon a Commitment, time was given him to Plead?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Have you ever known it diſputed, and denyed?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. My Lord, I have known that 'tis in the diſcretion of the Court to grant what time they pleaſe.

L. C. J. Is it the courſe of the Court to give an Imparlance?

Sir Sam. Aſtry. No, 'tis the favour of the Court, and if the Defendants have at any time ſhewed a reaſonable Cauſe, that they have a ſpecial Matter to plead, or any other cauſe allowed by the Court, the Court has ſometimes Indulged them ſo far, as to give them time.

L. C. J. But how is the ordinary courſe, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Ay, for as I ſaid before, things done in particular Caſes in favour, are not Precedents.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. I have told your Lordſhip the Courſe is this, that any Perſon that appears upon a Recognizance, or is taken up by your Lordſhips Warrant, or by a Warrant from a Juſtice Juſtice of Peace, or any other way in Cuſtody, or any Officer of the Court that is a privileged Perſon, and that muſt appear in propria perſonâ, muſt plead preſently; if the Court upon particular Reaſons do not give him time; and this I received Information of, as the practice of the Court, from Mr. Waterhouſe, who had been a Clerk in the Office ſixty Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He ſaid ſo before, but theſe Gentlemen will never be contented, unleſs they have a new Law made for them.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, I would not unneceſſarily trouble your Lordſhip; but truly this is a Caſe of great Concern. And firſt of all, I think we ſhall all agree, that what has been uſed for ten or twelve Years paſt will not make the courſe of the Court, and next I perceive they do not bring any one inſtance for any proceeding of this ſort above ten or twelve Years old, but then (ſay they) on the other ſide, Why do not you bring Preſidents, that it has gone otherwiſe heretofore? My Lord, that cannot be done, for it is a Negative on our ſide, that this which they deſire is not the Courſe of the Court; but then (as it is impoſſible) to prove a Negative, ſo the Proofs ſhould come on the other ſide, that this has been done: they ought to ſhew it, if there has been any ſuch thing as a ſtanding Rule, or elſe it ſhall be preſumed an Innovation, as being contrary to all Reaſon; But my Lord, becauſe they put it upon us, there is this Proof on our ſide, as much as a Negative can afford: In thoſe Proceedings, that were in the great Caſe of the Habeas Corpus, there was an Information againſt Elliot and others, they had time given them to plead over and over, ſo that there is one Precedent: And as many of theſe Caſes in former times as can be found, will ſhew that this was always the courſe; but pray (ſay they) produce us one inſtance, that ever there was a Man that came in upon a Recognizance, that had time to plead; truly my Lord, I cannot juſt now tell whether any ſuch inſtance can be produced, but I verily believe there may be a great many, but I turn it upon them, and that with great Reaſon, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, Shew me any Man (if you can) above a dozen Years ago, that had not time allowed him to plead; Ay but (ſay they) Mr. Waterhouſe an ancient Clerk of the Crown Office, that has been there theſe ſixty Years, hath certified that this hath been the practice of all his time: My Lord, we that have been Converſant in the buſineſs of this Court, did all very well know Mr. Waterhouſe when he was here, and ſat in Court in the place of Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Sir S. Aſtry. No, Sir, it was in Mr. Harcourt's place.

Mr. Pollixfen. Well, he executed a place here, and 'tis no matter whether he were Maſter of the Office or no; but I think we all knew him very well, he was a Man as lame in his Buſineſs as could be, for there are ſome Men that will never do buſineſs well, let them be never ſo long at it; and he was as weak in the practice of the Court, and every thing elſe, as 'tis poſſible for one that has been bred in an Office can be; and at this time he is grown ſo decrepit and ſuperannuated, that you may as well depend upon the Certificate of an old Woman, as any thing that he ſhall ſay in ſuch a Matter as this; he is now almoſt fourſcore years of Age, and has loſt that little Memory and Underſtanding he had, but if his Certificate muſt be depended upon, becauſe of his ſtanding in the Office; pray my Lord, let him come hither, and do you ask him what he has to ſay in this Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Aye, that is very well indeed.

Mr. Pollixfen. Good Mr. Sollicitor ſpare us, certainly there needs not ſuch great haſt in this Matter, we are upon a buſineſs of very great Weight and Concernment, for you are now making a Law for the whole Kingdom in point of Practice, in Caſes of this Nature. We do ſay indeed, that by the Reaſon of the Heat and Zeal of theſe laſt ten years, ſuch a Uſage has been introduced, but Sir Samuel Aſtry tells you, it was oppoſed, and I hope that neither I, nor the thing will be the worſe thought of, becauſe I oppoſed what I thought an unreaſonable and new Invention; my Lord, I know in the Caſe of the City of London, we had time to plead a whole Vacation after an Imparlance, and were not at all hurried on, as the King's Council would do in this Caſe; my Lord, if they can produce any ancient Precedent for it, I will ſay no more, but there is no Caſe in Print in any of our Books that ever I read or can remember, that countenances ſuch an Opinion; a Man by this means may loſe his juſt Defence, and he has no Remedy, nor will it ever be in his Power to retrieve it, for he may be brought on a ſudden into Court upon a Warrant, and when he is here he ſhall be charged with an Information, and preſently he muſt plead not Guilty, becauſe he has not time to prepare a Plea of any other Nature, let him have never ſo much other ſpecial Matter, or occaſion for it; if you pleaſe to let this Matter be examined what the Precedents are, and what Age thoſe Precedents are, then perhaps your Lordſhip will get ſome Satisfaction; but otherwiſe, if the bare Certificate of the Maſter of the Office is to be a Guide to the Court what is Law, and what is not, we ſhall be in a very uncertain Condition, eſpecially when the Matter carries in the very face of it, a great deal of Unreaſonableneſs and Injuſtice. They on the other ſide will argue that is not more unreaſonable than the practice in the Caſe of Treaſon and Felony, where Perſons are compelled to plead inſtantly. But under favour my Lord, there is no Compariſon between this Caſe and that, though I know it was always thought a hardſhip and defect in our Law, that a perſon ſhould be denied time to plead in Caſe of Life and Death, except he can ſhew ſome ſpecial Matter of Law that he has to plead, and then he has always time allowed him to put it into Form; and I could never think there was any Reaſon to be given for it, but becauſe the common Defences of Felons would be little Shifts and Arts, which would deſtroy Proceedings, and make them tedious, and that would be an Encouragement to People to commit Felony; and beſide there is a Truſt which the Law repoſes in the Court in Capital Caſes, to take care that theſe Men ſhould not ſuffer upon any little Tricks in Law; but if you come below Treaſon and Felony, the Law puts no ſuch hardſhip upon the Defendant, nor repoſes ſuch a ſpecial Truſt in the Court; but a Man may plead any thing he has to plead; and can any Man plead before he ſees what he is to plead to? and ſhall the Law allow him Council to prepare his Plea, and not allow him time to conſult with that Council about it? Theſe are things

my

my Lord, that truly to me ſeem unreaſonable: But as to the Practice and courſe of the Court, I pray your Lordſhip to give Order, that the Precedents may be ſearched, that you may know what the ancient Practice was.

Mr. Finch. Whether you will grant an Imparlance now or no, yet I hope however, you will think fit to give my Lords the Biſhops time to plead.

L. C. J. But Mr. Finch, we have had a Certificate from Sir Samuel Aſtry, which truly weighs a great deal with me, he tells you the Practice has been ſo ever ſince he came here, and that Mr. Waterhouſe told him, that it had been ſo all his time, which is ſixty Years.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, there are Perſons here that will upon their Oaths declare, That Mr. Waterhouſe has often told them the Practice was otherwiſe; even in his time, and afterwards a long time before this new way of Proceeding came in.

Mr. Ince. My Lord, if I might have liberty to ſpeak, I can ſay Mr. Waterhouſe has told me.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet Mr. Ince.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. But pray Mr. Pollixfen give me leave to mind you, how the Evidence ſtands againſt you, the Objections are, that this has been a Practice but for twelve years laſt paſt: if that be true, I think it goes a great way, for the Practice of twelve years is Precedent enough, Primâ Facie, that ſuch is the practice, for how ſhall we come to the Knowledge of the practice, but from our Officer Sir Samuel Aſtry, who has been here examined? and he tells you, that upon his coming into the Office, when it could not be ſo doubtful as now (it ſeems) it is, he took Inſtructions from Mr. Waterhouſe; I allow you 'tis but his Certificate, but that muſt go a great way with the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Such a practice as this has been always very rare in Informations for Miſdemeanours; and they bring you nothing of any Precedent older than Sir Samuel Aſtry's time.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord, give me leave to vary the Queſtion, I do not now make it a Queſtion, whether your Lordſhips ſhould grant my Lords the Biſhops an Imparlance, but whether you would think fit to look into the courſe of the Court before that time, that Sir Samuel Aſtry ſpeaks of, and take time to conſider, and ſearch into Precedents.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Do you Mr. Finch give us any one Reaſon or Precedent, that may make us doubt, whether this be the courſe of the Court or no? And you could not but be aware of this before, and therefore ſhould have come prepared to make out your Objection.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Pollixfen and the reſt of the Practicers in my Lord Hales's time will tell you, that the courſe was otherwiſe in his time; Sir Samuel Aſtry indeed tells you, it has been ſo ſince his time; but this was one of the Points (it ſeems) that he was ignorant of, which made him inquire of Mr. Waterhouſe, ſo doubtful was this Practice.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. I was an Attender upon this Court before I came into this Office, but it was in another place on the other ſide of the Court; and therefore was not concerned ſo much to know what was the courſe on this ſide, till I came into this Office.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen differ among themſelves, one would have an Imparlance, the other only time to plead, I believe truly they cannot tell well what they would have, I pray the Rules of the Court may be kept to.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Here are two Clerks that ſit by me, that have been a long time in the Office, Mr. Harcourt my Secondary, and the Clerk of the Rules; I pray they may be asked their Knowledge of this matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly theſe Gentlemen think they have a Privilege above all other People, that they muſt not be ſubject to the ſame Rules as others are, we on our parts have taken all the Methods that we could to make this matter manifeſt, and what is it that theſe Gentlemen now propoſe? They pray you to take time to conſider, but have they uſed the right means of creating a jealouſie or ſuſpicion in the Court, that the courſe is otherwiſe, they can give no inſtance of it, and all they ſay is, 'tis a Negative, that this is not the courſe of the Court, but the Imparlance that they beg is in the Affirmative, ſurely that they can find proof of, if it be ſo: As for my Lord Hollis's Caſe, that is with us, and not againſt us; let Mr. Pollixfen ſhew that ever any one of the Men that were brought into Court in Cuſtody either had time to plead, or an Imparlance.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Aſtry ſays he has given you his Opinion, and here are two other Clerks of the Office that he refers himſelf to, are you willing that they ſhould be asked?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Yes my Lord, with all our hearts.

L. C. J. Mr. Harcourt, How long have you been a Clerk in the Crown-Office?

Mr. Harcourt. About ſeventeen or eighteen Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you known the practice of the Court in this matter, and what is it?

Mr. Harcourt. I cannot charge my ſelf ſo with Particulars from the time of my coming into the Office, but for theſe ten or twelve Years paſt (I remember) it has been as the King's Council preſſed, and as Sir Samuel Aſtry has declared.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Sillyard, how long have you known the Crown Office?

Mr. Sillyard. I have been a Clerk here about thirty Years.

L. C. J. Well, and how has the practice been all your time?

Mr. Sillyard. I have not ſat here as Clerk of the Rules but a little while, but ſince I have ſat here, I have always obſerved it to be the Practice, that one that comes in Cuſtody ſhould plead immediately, it was a thing heretofore that did not ſo often happen, as it hath done here of late, therefore I cannot ſo well ſpeak to it; but it hath fallen out frequently within ſome Years laſt paſt, and that hath been the conſtant courſe.

Sir Samuel Aſtry. When you firſt came to be Attorney General, Sir Robert Sawyer, I am ſure it was ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let me ask you Mr. Sillyard, you ſay, you have known the Office thirty Years, when you firſt came to the Office, were Informations as frequent as they are now, and have been of late?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was ſo in the Caſe of Mr. Hampden, when you were Attorney General, Sir Robert Sawyer, he was forced to plead immediately to an Indictment, for a Crime that perhaps you will ſay was near upon Treaſon.

Sir Rob.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes truly, it wanted but one Witneſs, that was all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But yet the Indictment was only for a Miſdemeanour, and there we ſtrugled and debated the Matter, but were forced to give it over, becauſe the courſe of the Court was againſt us, ſo it has been by the unqueſtionable Teſtimony of Sir Samuel Aſtry for theſe twelve Years laſt paſt, and in thoſe twelve Years we have had many changes, perhaps there may have been twelve Chief Juſtices, and they have all affirmed it, and if I then make it out, that in all theſe Judges times that are within our Remembrance it has gone thus, then there are enough Precedents in the Matter.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But my Lord, I deſire to know, whether that were the ancient Courſe, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. They that make the Objection ought to prove it; but I will name Sir Rob. Sawyer another Caſe, and that is the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, which was the Caſe of a Libel too, he was forced to plead immediately, and it coſt him 10000 l. Fine.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, have you done on either ſide?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. If your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give us time till to morrow Morning, we will come hither by Rule of Court, and bring you ſome Certificates and Affidavits, or elſe ſome Precedents that we hope will ſatisfie your Lordſhip in this Matter.

L. C. J. No Brother, we cannot do that, the Queſtion is what the Courſe of the Court is, we have an account of that from Sir Samuel Aſtry, for twelve Years of his own Knowledge, and from Mr. Waterhouſe by him for ſixty Years; but for Mr. Waterhouſe they except againſt him, and ſay he was a Perſon that was always lazy and did not ſo well underſtand his Buſineſs, and now is ſuperannuated, that is ſaid, but is but gratis dictum, perhaps it may be ſo, perhaps not; and they have offered to Examine Mr. Ince about ſome Opinion that he has had from this Mr. Waterhouſe; it may be he may have asked him ſome Queſtion that may lead to it, and he may have given ſome ſlight Anſwer, but then here are theſe two Perſons Mr. Harcourt, and Mr. Sillyard, and the one has been a Clerk theſe ſixteen or ſeventeen Years, and the other has known the Office thirty Years; though there were not heretofore ſo many Informations of this nature and kind as now of late, but ſtill they ſay, that a Perſon that comes in upon a Commitment, or a Recognizance, ſhall never have any Imparlance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can they give any one Inſtance that has any the leaſt ſhadow to the contrary?

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, if we had time, we hope we ſhould be able to ſatisfie you in this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had time enough to prepare your ſelves for this Queſtion, if you had thought you could do any good in it.

L. C. J. Would the courſe of the Court be otherwiſe to Morrow than it is to Day, we have taken all the Care we can to be ſatisfied in this Matter, and we will take care that the Lords the Biſhops ſhall have all Juſtice done them, nay, they ſhall have all the Favour by my conſent that can be ſhewn them, without doing wrong to my Maſter the King, but truly I cannot depart from the courſe of the Court in this Matter, if the King's Council preſs it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we muſt pray your Judgment in it, and your Direction, that they may plead.

L. C. J. Truly I think they muſt Plead to the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray ask my Lords whether they be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Then his Grace the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſtood up, and offered a Paper to the Court.

Archbiſh. of Cant. My Lord, I tender here a ſhort Plea, (a very ſhort one,) on behalf of my ſelf and my Brethren the other Defendants; and I humbly deſire the Court will admit of this Plea.

L. C. J. If it pleaſe your Grace, it ſhould have been in Parchment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that my Lord offers to the Court?

L. C. J. We will ſee what it is preſently, Mr. Sollicitor.

Biſh. of Peter. I pray, my Lord, that the Plea may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But not received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we deſire to know what it is firſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, if they will plead, the Court ſure is obliged to receive it.

L. C. J. If it is a Plea, your Grace will ſtand by it.

L. Archbiſh. of Cant. We will all ſtand by it, my Lord, it is ſubſcribed by our Council, and we pray it may be admitted by the Court.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I hope the Court will not deny to receive a ſpecial Plea, if we offer one.

L. C. J. Brother, let us hear what it is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it if you pleaſe, but not receive it.

Clerk Reads the Plea; which in Engliſh is thus:

The Biſhops PLEA.

AND the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, being preſent here in Court in their own Perſons, pray Oyer of the Information aforeſaid; and it is Read to them, which being Read and heard by them the ſaid Archbiſhop, and Biſhops: The ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops ſay, that they are Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, and each of them is one of the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and a Lord of the Parliament, and that they being (as before is manifeſt) Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, ought not to be compelled to anſwer inſtantly for the Miſdemeanour aforeſaid, mentioned in the ſaid Information exhibited here againſt them in this Court; but they ought to be required to appear by due Proceſs in Law iſſuing out of this Court here upon the Information aforeſaid, and upon their Appearance to have a Copy of the ſaid Information exhibited againſt them, and reaſonable time to imparl thereupon, and to adviſe with Council Learned in the Law, concerning their Defence in that behalf, before they be compelled to anſwer the ſaid Information; Whereupon, for that the ſaid Archbiſhop, and Biſhops were Impriſoned, and by Writ of our Lord the King, of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, are now brought here in Cuſtody, without any Proceſs upon the Information aforeſaid iſſued againſt them, and without having any Copy of the ſaid Information, or any time given them to imparl, or be adviſed; They pray Judgment, and the Priviledge of Peers of this Kingdom, in this Caſe to be allowed them; and that They the ſaid Archbiſhop, and Biſhops, may not be compelled inſtantly to anſwer the Information aforeſaid, &c.

Rob. Sawyer.
Hen. Finch.
Hen. Pollixfen.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's favour, this, in an ordinary Perſon's Caſe, would perhaps be thought not fair dealing, or that which (it being in the Caſe of theſe Reverend Prelates) I ſhall not now name; to make all this Debate and Stir in a Point of this nature, to take the Judgement of the Court after three or four hours arguing, and when the Opinion of the Court has been delivered, then to put in a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court,——

Sir Rob. Sawyer, It is no ſuch Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is ſo in effect, but certainly it is ſuch an Irregularity, and ſuch an unfair way of Proceeding, as would not be endured in an ordinary Caſe, and I hope you will give ſo little countenance to it, as to reject it, and make them plead according to the uſual courſe and way of proceedings; certainly a Plea of this nature, after ſo long an Argument, would be reckoned nothing but a trick.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. We hope the Court and you are not of one mind Mr. Attorney in this matter, we deſire the Court to receive the Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, the Court is not bound to receive Pleas, that are put in purely for delay, as this is; for the Judgment of the Court has been already given in the very matter of this Plea; and for rejecting a Plea, it is done every day, if a Man puts in a mere trifling dilatory Plea, the Court may reject it; Does this Plea contain any thing in it, but what has been argued and debated pro & con and ſetled by the Court already? If they will put in any Plea in chief they may, but ſuch a Plea as this, I hope ſhall not have ſo much countenance, as to be receiv'd by the Court.

Mr. Pollixfen. Do you Demur to it, if you pleaſe Mr. Attorney, we will joyn in Demurrer with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, there will be no need of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Surely the Court will never give ſo much Countenance to it, as to receive it.

Mr. Finch. If you will pleaſe either to Reply or Demur, Mr. Sollicitor, we are here to maintain the Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you were here you would ſay the ſame thing that we do; My Lord, this Plea is, That my Lords the Biſhops are not bound to Plead inſtantly; ſo that 'tis not a Queſtion, Whether they ought to Anſwer, or not to Anſwer, but whether they ought to Anſwer immediately, and what do they ſay more? They would have an Imparlance, and time to conſult with their Council what they ſhall Plead, which is all but one and the ſame thing; and what is the reaſon they give for this? They induce it thus, Theſe Noble Perſons are Peers of the Realm, and ſo ought not to be compelled to Plead immediately; this, if I miſtake not, is the ſum of their Plea. Now pray my Lord, what ſort of Plea is this? It is not a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, tho it do in a ſort decline the Juſtice of the Court? Is it a Plea in Abatement? No, it is not, for it is only to gain time, and do they now offer any thing more for themſelves, than what was ſaid by their Council before? Only, That we are Peers of the Realm, and that ſuch is the Priviledge of Peers, that they ought to have an Imparlance, and time to Plead, and that they ought not to anſwer preſently: My Lord, this Matter hath been long agitated in the Court already, your Lordſhip, and the Court have given your Judgments, and we know your Lordſhip, and the Court will not admit of Tricks to delay the Kings Cauſes, we all know the Term is a ſhort Term, and what I ſaid in the beginning upon this matter, I ſay again, it is the Intereſt, and for the Honour of my Lords the Biſhops (if they underſtand their own Intereſt, and value their Honour) to have this Cauſe tryed as ſoon as may be; but this trifling and tricking is only for delay: For what iſſue can be taken upon this Plea? Certainly none; And if we ſhould Demurr, what will be the end of that? But only to get time to ſlip over the Term. If there were any thing worth the conſidering in this Plea, and that had not been already debated and ſetled, then it might concern us to give ſome Anſwer to it; but we have ſpent three hours (by my Watch) in the Diſpute, and the Matter having been over-ruled alreay, it is time to have an end of it; ſure the Court will never be ſo treated by theſe Perſons, that are of Council for my Lords the Biſhops, for it cannot be thought that my Lords the Biſhops do it of themſelves; and whether the Court will be ſo ſerved, we ſubmit to your Lordſhip. Certainly you will not receive ſuch a Plea as this, eſpecially it being in Paper, you will never countenance ſuch a Practice ſo far as to give theſe Lords time to trifle with the Court; if any ſuch thing as a Plea be tender'd to the Court, it ought to be in Parchment, and if they would have an Imparlance, there ought to have been an entry of a Petit Licentiam interloquendi upon the Roll, but not ſuch a Plea as this, for this in effect is no more than deſiring an Imparlance, which if it be granted of courſe, upon ſuch a Prayer entred upon the Roll, you take it of courſe; but if it be not of courſe, you cannot come in by way of Plea, it muſt be by ſuggeſtion upon the Roll, and a Conceditur entred, if this be admitted as a Precedent, every Man hereafter that comes in upon any Information, will take advantage of it, and plead ſuch a Plea as this, and if you grant an Imparlance in this Caſe upon this Plea, you muſt grant an Imparlance in every Caſe; certainly the Law is not to be altered, the Methods of Proceedings ought to be the ſame in every Caſe: And I hope you will not make a particular Rule in the Caſe of my Lords the Biſhops, without a ſpecial Reaſon for it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb We put in this Plea, my Lord, and are ready to abide by it, and we ſay, that according to the courſe of the Court, it ought to be received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, but good Mr. Serjeant, 'tis in the diſcretion of the Court, whether they will receive it or not, for the matter has been in debate already, and has receiv'd a determination, the Court has over-ruled them in this very Point already, and there is no more in this Plea, than was in the Argument before, and therefore it ought to be rejected as a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here is a Plea offered in Writing, and and in Paper, the Court ſees what it is, and I hope you will give no countenance to it.

Mr. Pollexfen. I do hope my Lord, you will not judge this as a frivolous Plea, I think our Caſe is ſuch, that you will not do that, if you think fit you may over-rule it, but I hope you will not refuſe it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court will certainly reject a frivolous Plea, and they may do it.

Mr. Pollexfen. But Mr. Sollicitor, I hope the Court will conſider of it, whether it be a frivolous Plea or not. It is true, there has been a Debate about the courſe of the Court, and there has been an Examination of the Clerk of the Office, and the Court has gone upon his Certificate, but yet ſtill perhaps it may remain in doubt, and it being a Queſtion of ſuch a conſequence as this, it may very well deſerve the Court's Conſideration; there never was a Judicial Settlement of it (that I know of yet) nor do I know any way of having it ſatisfactorily ſetled, but by the Judgment of the Court entred upon Record; here we offer a Plea that contains the matter in debate, and this Plea will appear upon Record, and if upon conſideration of the Plea your Lordſhip ſhall think fit to over-rule it, and be of Opinion againſt the Plea, then will you by your Reſolution in a Judicial way, ſettle the Queſtion that has hitherto been in Controverſy.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I would ask you whether the Council have dealt ingenuouſly with the Court or no in this matter; after four Hours debate, and the Opinion of the Court delivered, to come and ſum up all the Arguments in ſuch a Plea as this, and ſo put us upon debating it over again.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, certainly this has been done before, without Offence; after we had moved for a thing which was denied upon Motion, it is no ſuch great diſreſpect to the Court (with ſubmiſſion) to put the ſame Matter into a Plea, for the Judicial Opinion of the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. That without all Queſtion has been done a great many times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many times have you been accuſed of playing Tricks, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Not ſo many as you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I don't ask it as if I queſtioned it, for I aſſure you I don't doubt it of your part at all.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen don't fall out with one another at the Bar, we have had time enough ſpent already.

Mr. Pollexfen. Truly, My Lord, I would not trick with the Court in any Caſe, nor on the other ſide would I be wanting to Adviſe and do for my Client, what I am able and lawfully may; we have laboured all we could to get time for my Lords the Biſhops to Imparle to this Information, and we have been the more earneſt in it, becauſe it concerns us, who attend this Bar, to take what Care we can, that the Courſe of the Court may be obſerved; but as for this matter, we ſuppoſe this Practice of the Court is not in Law a good Practice; Now what way in the World has any Man to bring this ſo in queſtion, as to have a Judicial Reſolution of the Court about it, but by ſuch a Plea? We take it, that it is uſual and legal for us to have an Imparlance, and a Man would Imparle, but the Court upon Motion refuſed to give him an Imparlance; Is it not (think you) very fit for the Party to have this Judicially entered upon Record? where all this Matter will appear, and the Party may be relieved by Writ of Error, if the Judgment of the Court ſhould be wrong; but truly I cannot ſee how the Court can refuſe the Plea, for if ſo be a Plea be pleaded, they have their liberty to Anſwer it on the other ſide by a Replication, or elſe to Demur, and the Judgment of the Court may be had upon it one way or other, but the Court will never go about to hinder any Man from pleading where he may plead by Law; here is a Plea put in, and the Court ſure will take no notice what is the Matter of the Plea, till the other party have either replied or demurred; the ſame thing may happen in any other Plea that is pleaded, and the Party will be without Remedy upon a Writ of Error, becauſe the Plea being rejected, there does nothing appear upon Record; truly for the Court to reject and refuſe the Plea, would be as hard as the refuſing of the Imparlance, and we know no way we have to help our ſelves.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You might have entered your Suggeſtion for an Imparlance upon the Roll, and then it would have appeared upon Record, and if the Court had unjuſtly denied it you, you would have had the benefit of that Suggeſtion elſewhere: Truly, My Lord, I think if any thing be tricking, this is, for it is plainly ill pleading.

Mr. Finch. Then pray demur to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No Sir, 'tis Fencing with the Court, and that the Court won't ſuffer, it is only to delay, and if we ſhould demur, then there muſt be time for Arguing; and what is the Queſtion after all, but whether you would be of the ſame Opinion to Morrow, that you are to Day?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I would put Mr. Sollicitor in mind of Fitz Harris's Caſe, which he knows very well, he put it in a Plea, and we for the King deſired it might not be received, but the Court gave him time to put it into Form, and I was fain to joyn in Demurrer preſently, and ſo may theſe Gentlemen do if they pleaſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, Sir Robert Sawyer, I do know the Caſe of Fitz Harris very well, I was aſſigned of Council by the Court for him, we were four of us, and there was a Plea put in, but no ſuch Plea as this, there was an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt him, in which Caſe it is agreed on all hands, that the party muſt anſwer preſently, but becauſe he ſuggeſted here at the Bar, (ſays he) I have Matter to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and ſhewed what it was, I was Impeached before the Lords in Parliament for Treaſon, for the ſame Matter of which I am here Accuſed: The Court did give him time to put this into Form, and we were aſſigned his Council to draw it up for him, and accordingly we did put that Matter into a Plea, that we were here Indicted for one and the ſame Treaſon, for which we were Impeached in Parliament, and that that Impeachment was ſtill depending, and ſo we reſted in the Judgment of the Court, whether we ſhould be put to Anſwer it here; this was a Plea that carried ſomething of weight in it, and not ſuch a trifling one as this. It is true, Sir Robert Sawyer who was then Attorney General did preſs the Court to over-rule it immediately, but it being a matter of ſome Importance, the Court would not do that, but had it argued ſolemnly by Council on both ſides, and at laſt there was the Opinion of three Judges againſt one that the Plea was no good Plea. But what is that to ſuch a trifling Plea as this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord favour me a few words about that Caſe of Mr. Fitz Harris, it is true, there was a Plea put in, and it is true alſo, that that which brought that Plea to be argued, was the Demurrer that was put in by Sir Robert Sawyer, who was ſo zealous and haſty in the matter, that becauſe the Court did not preſently over-rule the Plea, as he deſired, he immediately Demurred, before the reſt of the King's Council could offer at any thing about it; and thereupon it was put to the Judgment of the Court, and no doubt muſt be argued, and ſpoke to on both ſides; but where Pleas are really in abuſe of the Court, the Court never gives any Countenance to them: Nay, truly I have known another Courſe taken, I am unwilling to mention a Caſe that hapned much about that time too in this Court, becauſe of that regard I have to my Lords the Biſhops, but Sir Robert Sawyer remembers it very well, I am ſure: it was the Caſe of one Whitaker, who for a thing like this, putting in a trifling Plea, not only had his Plea rejected, but ſomething elſe was ordered, I could ſhew the Precedent, but that I am more tender than to preſs it in this Caſe, becauſe there the Court order'd an Attachment to go againſt him, but I will put theſe Gentlemen in mind of another Caſe, and that is the Caſe of a Peer too, it is the Caſe of my Lord Delamere, which they cannot but remember, it being in the higheſt Caſe, a Caſe of Treaſon, when my Lord Delamere was Arraigned and to be Tryed for High Treaſon, he put in a Plea before my Lord Chancellour, who was then High Steward, and Sir Robert Sawyer who was then Attorney General, prayed the Lord Steward and the Peers to reject it, and the Court did reject it, (as we hope the Court will do this) and would never ſo far delay Juſtice as to admit of a Plea that carried no Colour in it, and there was no Demurrer put into the Plea, but it was abſolutely refuſed: My Lord, in this Caſe we have had the Judgment of the Court already, and therefore we muſt now deſire that this Plea may be rejected.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have now gone out of the way far enough already; it is time for us to return, and bring the Caſe into its due methods. We pray your Lordſhip to reject this Plea.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, we are in your Judgment, whether you will receive this Plea or not.

L. C. J. You ſhall have my Judgment preſently; but my Brothers are to ſpeak firſt.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Mr. Pollexfen makes it a Queſtion, whether this Plea may be rejected or not, or whether it ought to be received, and the Court give their Judgment upon it.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly I do not know whether the Court can reject this, as a frivolous Plea.

L. C. J. Surely we may and frequently do.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do it every day, 'tis a frequent Motion; if a frivolous Plea be put in, before it be entred upon Record as a Plea, the Court may refuſe it, if they ſee cauſe.

Mr. J. Allybone. Truly if it may be, this appears to me a frivolous Plea.

Mr. J. Powell. I do not know how the Court can reject any Plea that the Party will put in, if he will ſtand by it, as they ſay they will here; and I cannot think this a frivolous Plea, it concerning the priviledge of Peers, and Lords of Parliament.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother Powell, I would be as tender of the Priviledges of Parliament, and ſpeak with as much reſpect of the Priviledges of the Peerage, as any body elſe; but for the matter of the Plea, truly it appears to me, that the Peers are named in it only for faſhion ſake, and it is frivolous.

Mr. J. Powell. The matter of the Plea, except only their being ſaid to be Peers and Lords of Parliament, was ſpoke to before, but it was only obiter, and by way of motion; but now it may come before us for our Judicial Determination.

Mr. J. Allybone. Pray let the Plea be read again.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. This Plea is no more but that which has been denied already upon ſolemn debate, and if it be in the power of the Court to reject any Plea, ſurely we ought to reject this. Indeed I know not what power we have to reject a Plea; but if we have power, this ought to be rejected.

Mr. J. Powell. I declare my Opinion, I am for receiving the Plea, and conſidering of it.

Mr. J. Holloway. I think as this caſe is, this Plea ought not to be received, but rejected, becauſe 'tis no more than what has been denied already. I am not aſhamed to ſay, That I ſhould be very glad and ready to do all things that are conſiſtent with my Duty, to ſhew reſpects to my Lords the Biſhops, ſome of whom are my particular Friends; but I am upon my Oath, and muſt go according to the courſe of Law.

L. C. J. We have asked and informed our ſelves from the Bar, whether we may or can reject a Plea, and truly what they have ſaid, hath ſatisfied me that we may, if the Plea be frivolous; and this being a Plea that contains no more than what has been over-ruled already, after hearing what could be ſaid on both ſides, I think the Court is not bound to receive the Plea, but may reject it, and my Lords the Biſhops muſt plead over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may plead in chief.

Clerk. My Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is your Grace guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

A. B. C. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of St. Aſaph. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Ely, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of Ely. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information or not guilty?

Biſh. of Chicheſter. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh.

Biſh. of Bath and Wells. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Peterborough, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of Peterborough. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of Briſtol, is your Lordſhip guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Biſh. of Briſtol. Not Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may join Iſſue on the behalf of the King, that ſo we may come to Tryal; and we would have theſe Gentlemen take notice, that we intend to try this Cauſe on this day fortnight, and we pray liberty of the Court, that we may try it at Bar.

L. C. J. Are you not too haſty in that Motion, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhould indeed make it the Motion of another day; but we do now tell them this ex abundanti, becauſe my Lords the Biſhops are now here, and will I ſuppoſe take notice that we do intend to move it another Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We now give them notice, that we intend to move.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. For that you need not trouble your ſelves; we are very deſirous it ſhould be tryed at Bar, and that as ſoon as you pleaſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then you take notice it will be tryed this day fortnight.

L. C. J. Well, what ſhall we do with my Lords the Biſhops?

Mr. Att. Gen. They are baylable, no queſtion of it, my Lord, if they pleaſe.

L. C. J. Then, my Lords, we are ready to bail you, if you pleaſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to take their own Recognizance.

L. C. J. What ſay you Mr. Attorney? I think that may do well enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with all my heart, we will do it.

L. C. J. In what Penalty ſhall we take it?

Mr. Att. Gen. A 1000 l. I think my Lord his Grace, and 500 l. apiece the reſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What neceſſity is there for ſo much?

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, Sir Robert Sawyer, to ſhew you that we do inſiſt upon nothing that ſhall look like hardſhip, what my Lords have been pleaſed to offer, concerning taking their own Recognizance, we agree to, and what Sums the Court pleaſes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is all one to us, we leave it wholly to the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Only I have one thing more to beg of your Lordſhip on the behalf of my Lords the Biſhops, that you will pleaſe to order, that in the Return of the Jury there may be forty eight returned.

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you what we will do, Sir Samuel Aſtry ſhall have the Freeholders Book, if you pleaſe, and ſhall return twenty four.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Eight and forty has been always the courſe, when the Jury is returned by Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Officer may return the Jury, according as is uſual in Caſes of this nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do admit of a Tryal at Bar, Gentlemen?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, and try it when you will.

L. C. J. They ſay it ſhall be this day fortnight, and let there be a Jury according to the uſual courſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray it may be in the preſence of the Attorneys or Sollicitors on both ſides.

L. C. J. What is the uſual courſe, Sir Samuel Aſtry? Do you uſe to return twenty four, or forty eight, and then ſtrike out twelve a piece, which I perceive they deſire for the Defendants?

Sir Samuel Aſtry. My Lord, the courſe is both ways, and then it may be, as your Lordſhip and the Court will pleaſe to order it.

L. C. J. Then take forty eight, that is the faireſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. We agree to it; we deſire nothing but a fair Jury.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Nor we neither, try it when you will.

L. C. J. Take a Recognizance of his Grace my Lord of Canterbury in 200 l. and the reſt of my Lords in 100 l. a piece.

Mr. Att. Gen. What your Lordſhip pleaſes for that, we ſubmit to it.

Clerk. My Lord of Canterbury, your Grace acknowledges to owe unto our Soveraign Lord the King, the Sum of 200 l. upon condition that your Grace ſhall appear in this Court on this day fortnight, and ſo from day to day, till you ſhall be diſcharged by the Court, and not to depart without leave of the Court. Is your Grace contented?

A. B. C. I do acknowledge it.

Clerk. My Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, you acknowledge to owe unto our Soveraign Lord the King, the Sum of 100 l. upon condition that your Lordſhip ſhall appear in this Court on this day fortnight, and ſo from day to day, untill you ſhall be diſcharged by the Court, and not to depart without leave of the Court. Is your Lordſhip contented?

Biſhop of Aſaph. I do acknowledge it.

The like Recognizances were taken of all the reſt of the Biſhops, and then the Court aroſe.

Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury who are ſworn, hearken to the Record; Sir Thomas Powys, Knight, His Majeſty's Attorney-General, has exhibited an Information, which does ſet forth as followeth.

MEmorandum, That Sir Thomas Powys, Knt. Attorney-General of our Lord the King, who for our ſaid Lord the King in this behalf proſecutes, came here in his own Perſon into the Court of our ſaid Lord the King, before the King himſelf at Weſtminſter, on Friday next after the morrow of the Holy Trinity in this Term; and on the behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, giveth the Court here to underſtand and be informed, That our ſaid Lord the King, out of his ſignal Clemency, and gracious intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, on the fourth day of April, in the third Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, at Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex, did publiſh his Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience, bearing date the ſame Day and Year, ſealed with the Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. prout in the firſt Declaration before recited.

And the ſaid Attorney-General of our ſaid Lord the King, on behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, further giveth the Court here to underſtand and be informed, That afterwards, to wit, on the twenty ſeventh day of April, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, our ſaid Lord the King, out of his like Clemency, and gracious intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, did publiſh his other Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration, bearing date the ſame day and year laſt mentioned, ſealed with his Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. Our Conduct has been ſuch, &c. prout in the ſecond Declaration before recited.

Which ſaid Royal Declaration of our ſaid Lord the King laſt mentioned, our ſaid Lord the King afterwards, to wit, on the thirtieth day of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign aforeſaid, at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, did cauſe to be printed and publiſhed throughout all England; and for the more ſolemn Declaring, Notification, and Manifeſtation of his Royal Grace, Favour, and Bounty towards all his Liege-people, ſpecified in the Declaration laſt mentioned, afterwards, to wit, on the fourth day of May, in the fourth year of his Reign, at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, our ſaid Lord the King in due manner did order as followeth:

At the Court at Whitehall the Fourth of May, 1688.

By the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, and the Lords of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council.

IT is this day Ordered by His Majeſty in Council, That His Majeſties Gracious Declaration bearing date the Twenty Seventh of April laſt, be read at the uſual time of Divine Service upon the Twentieth and Twenty Seventh of this Month, in all Churches and Chappels within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and Ten Miles thereabout: And upon the Third and Tenth of June next in all other Churches and Chappels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further Ordered, That the Right Reverend the Biſhops cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent and diſtributed throughout their ſeveral reſpective Dioceſſes, to be read accordingly.

Wm. Bridgman.

And further, the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King, on behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, giveth the Court here to underſtand ſtand and be informed; That after the making of the ſaid Order, to wit, on the eighteenth day of May, in the fourth year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of Lambeth in the County of Surry; William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, of St. Aſaph in the County of Flynt; Francis Biſhop of Ely, of the Pariſh of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middleſex; John Biſhop of Chicheſter, of Chicheſter in the County of Suſſex; Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, of the City of Wells in the County of Somerſet; Thomas Biſhop of Peterburgh, of the Pariſh of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middleſex; and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, of the City of Briſtol, did conſult and conſpire among themſelves to diminiſh the Regal Authority and Royal Prerogative, Power and Government of our ſaid Lord the King in the premiſes, and to infringe and elude the ſaid Order; and in proſecution and execution of the Conſpiracy aforeſaid, They the ſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, on the ſaid eighteenth day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, ſeditiouſly, and ſcandalouſly, did frame, compoſe, and write, and cauſed to be framed, compoſed, and written, a certain falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious, and ſeditious Libel in writing, concerning our ſaid Lord the King, and his Royal Declaration and Order aforeſaid, (under pretence of a Petition) and the ſame falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious, and ſeditious Libel, by them the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, with their own Hands reſpectively being ſubſcribed, on the day and year and in the place laſt mentioned, in the preſence of our ſaid Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. did publiſh, and cauſe to be publiſhed; in which ſaid falſe, feigned, malicious, pernicious and ſeditious Libel is contained, The humble Petition, &c. prout before in the Petition, to theſe words [reaſonable conſtruction,] in manifeſt contempt of our ſaid Lord the King, and of the Laws of this Kingdom, to the evil example of all others in the like caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King, on behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, prays the Advice of the Court here in the premiſes, and due Proceſs of Law to be made out againſt the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Francis Biſhop of Ely, John Biſhop of Chicheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Biſhop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Biſhop of Briſtol, in this behalf, to anſwer our ſaid Lord the King in and concerning the premiſes, &c.

T. Powys.
W. Williams.

To this Information the Defendents have pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themſelves upon their Country, and His Majeſty's Attorney General likewiſe, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendents, or any of them, are guilty of the matter contained in this Information that hath been read unto you, or Not Guilty: If you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to ſay ſo; and if you find them, or any of them not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo; and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King againſt the Defendents of the matters whereof they are impeached, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard.

Mr. Wright. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information exhibited by His Majeſty's Attorney-General againſt the moſt Reverend my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſix other Honourable and Noble Biſhops in the Information mentioned. And the Information ſets forth, That the King, out of his Clemency and benign intention towards his Subjects of this Kingdom, did put forth his Royal Declaration, bearing date the fourth day of April in the third year of his Reign, entituled, His Majeſty's Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience; and that afterwards, the twenty ſeventh of April, in the fourth year of his Reign, he publiſhed another Declaration, both which have been read to you; and for the further Manifeſtation and Notification of his Grace in the ſaid Declaration, bearing date the twenty ſeventh of April laſt, His Majeſty did order, That the ſaid Declaration ſhould be read on the twentieth and twenty ſeventh of the ſame Month in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and ten miles about, and on the third and tenth of June throughout the whole Kingdom; and that the Right Reverend the Biſhops ſhould ſend the ſaid Declaration to be diſtributed throughout their reſpective Dioceſſes, to be read accordingly. But that the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops the eighteenth of May, in the ſaid fourth Year of His ſaid Majeſty's Reign, having conſpired and conſulted among themſelves to diminiſh the King's Power and Prerogative, did falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, make, compoſe and write, a falſe, ſcandalous, malicious and ſeditious Libel, under pretence of a Petition; which Libel they did publiſh in the preſence of the ſaid King; the Contents of which Libel you have likewiſe heard read. To this they have pleaded not Guilty: You, Gentlemen, are Judges of the Fact; if we prove this Fact, you are to find them Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Information read by the Clerk, and it has been likewiſe opened to you at the Bar, but before we go to our Evidence, perhaps it may not be amiſs for us, that are of Council for the King, now in the beginning of this Cauſe, to ſettle the Queſtion right before you, as well to tell you what my Lords the Biſhops are not proſecuted for, as what they are; Firſt, I am to tell you, and I believe you cannot your ſelves but obſerve, that my Lords are not proſecuted as Biſhops, nor much leſs are they proſecuted for any point or matter of Religion, but they are proſecuted as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a temporal Crime, as thoſe that have injured and affronted the King to his very Face; for it is ſaid to be done in his own Preſence: In the next place, they are not proſecuted for any Nonfeaſance, or not doing or omitting to do do any thing, but as they are Actors, for cenſuring of His Majeſty and his Government, and for giving their Opinion in Matters wholly relating to Law and Government; and I cannot omit here to take notice, that there is not any one thing which the Law is more jealous of, or does more carefully provide for the Prevention and Puniſhment of, than all Accuſations and Arraignments of the Government; no Man is allowed to accuſe even the moſt inferior Magiſtrate of any misbehaviour in his Office, unleſs it be in a legal courſe, though the Fact is true; no Man may ſay of a Juſtice of Peace to his Face, that he is unjuſt in his Office; no Man may come to a Judge, either by Word or Petition, you have given an unjuſt, or an ill Judgment, and I will not obey it, it is againſt the Rules and Law of the Kingdom, or the like; no Man may ſay of the great Men of the Nation, much leſs of the great Officers of the Kingdom, that they do act unreaſonably or unjuſtly, or the like; leaſt of all may any Man ſay any ſuch thing of the King, for theſe matters tend to poſſeſs the People, that the Government is ill adminiſtred, and the Conſequence of that is, to ſet them upon deſiring a Reformation, and what that tends to, and will end in, we have all had a ſad and too dear bought Experience; the laſt Age will abundantly ſatisfie us, whither ſuch a thing does tend: Men are to take their proper Remedies for redreſs of any Grievances they lye under, and the Law has provided ſufficiently for that:-Theſe things are ſo very well known to all Men of the Law, and indeed to all the People of England of any Underſtanding, that I need not, nor will not, ſtand any longer upon it, but come to the matter that is now before you Gentlemen, to be Tryed. The Fact that we have laid, we muſt prove, rather to keep to the formality of a Tryal, than to pretend to inform you, or tell you what you do not know, it is publickly notorious to the whole World; but becauſe we muſt go on in the regular methods of Law, we ſhall prove the Facts in the order they are laid in the Information. Firſt, we take notice, that His Majeſty, of his great Clemency and Goodneſs to his People, and out of his deſire that all his Subjects might live eaſily under him (of which I think never Prince gave greater or more plain Evidence of his Intentions that way) the fourth of April, 1687. He did iſſue forth his Royal Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience; this matter, without all queſtion, was welcome to all his People that ſtood in need of it, and thoſe that did not, could not but ſay, the thing in the nature of it was very Juſt, and Gracious; but preſently it muſt be ſurmiſed, that the King was not in Earneſt, and would not, nor could not make good his Promiſe; but to take away all Surmiſes, his Majeſty was pleaſed by his Declaration of the twenty ſeventh of April laſt, not only to repeat his former Declaration, but likewiſe to renew his former Promiſes to his People, and to aſſure them that he ſtill was, and yet is, of the ſame Opinion, that he had at firſt declared himſelf to be of; nay, we further ſhew you, that to the end that this thing might be known to all his People, even to the meaneſt Men, who it may be were not willing or able to buy the Declaration, and that the King himſelf might be under higher Obligations, if it were poſſible, than his own Word, he was deſirous it ſhould be repeated in the Churches, and read in that Sacred Place, that all his People might hear what he had promiſed, and given his own Sacred Word for; and he himſelf might be under that Solemn Tye and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembring that his Promiſes had, by his own Command, been Publiſhed in the time of Divine Service, in the Houſe of God; and thereupon was the Order of Council made, that has been likewiſe read to you, which does direct, that it ſhould be read in all the Churches and Chappels in the Kingdom; and you have heard, and we ſhall prove, what a return His Majeſty has had for this Grace and Kindneſs of his; you'l find when we come to read that which they call a Petition, all their Thanks his Majeſty had for his Favour and Goodneſs to his People, 'tis only hard Words, and a heavy Accuſation, ſuch as a private Perſon would be little able to bear, I will not aggravate the matter, but only ſay thus much, that his Majeſty, who was always a Prince of as great Clemency as ever this Kingdom had, and who was repreſented for all that, as a Prince of the greateſt Cruelty before his Acceſſion to the Crown, by his Enemies, is now accuſed by his Friends for this Effect of his Mercy; My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, His Majeſty reſented this ill uſage ſo far, that he has ordered and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour in this matter, by this Tryal; and we ſhall go on to our Proofs, and we do not doubt but you will do his Majeſty (as you do all other Perſons) Right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will go on to prove the Parts of this Information, and we will proceed according to the Method which Mr. Attorney has opened, and which is purſuant to the order of the Facts laid in the Information. Give us the firſt Declaration under the Great Seal, the Declaration of the 4th of April, 1687.

The Declaration was delivered into the Court.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read the Date of it firſt.

Clerk Reads. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the 4th day of April, 1687, and in the third Year of our Reign.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read the Title of it, Sir.

Clerk. It is Entituled, His Majeſties Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conſcience.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is it under Seal? Is the Great Seal to it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give it down to Sir Robert Sawyer, that he may ſee it, for I would have every thing as clear as poſſible. —— Sir Robert Sawyer, will you have it Read?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, we would ſave as much of the time of the Court, as may be.

Mr. Sol. Gen Then pray put in the Second Declaration of the 27th of April laſt.

Clerk Reads. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the 27th day of April, 1688. in the fourth Year of our Reign, and it is Entituled, His Majeſties Gracious Declaration.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that under the Great Seal too?

Clerk. Yes it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver that down likewiſe, that they may ſee it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We are ſatisfied, you need not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then where is the Order of Council for the Reading of it?

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Sir John Nicholas.—There he is.

Sir John Nicholas Sworn.

L. C. J. Come Mr. Attorney, what do you ask Sir John Nicholas?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hand the Order to Sir John Nicholas. ——— Is that the Order of Council, Sir John?

Sir John Nicholas. The Book, Sir, is not in my Cuſtody ——— there is the Regiſter that keeps it, he has it here to produce.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Gantlett.

Mr. Gantlett Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that the Council Book?

Mr. Gantlett. Yes, this is the Council Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then turn to the Order of the fourth of May, the King's Order of Council, for the Reading the Declaration.

Mr. Gantlett. There it is, Sir.

The Book delivered into Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it I pray.

Clerk Reads. At the Court at Whitehall, the fourth of May, 1688. —— and ſo reads the Order of Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have one thing that is mentioned in the Information, that this Declaration was Printed; if that be denied, we will call Henry Hills, His Majeſties Printer, becauſe we would prove all our Information as it is laid.

L. C. J. You muſt do ſo, Mr Sollicitor, you muſt prove the whole Declaration.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cryer, call Henry Hills.

He was called, but did not preſently appear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Bridgeman —— though theſe Declarations prove themſelves, we have them here Printed —— but Swear Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Bridgeman Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew Mr. Bridgeman the two Declarations.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ask you, Sir, if the two Declarations were Printed.

Mr. Bridgman. What Declarations do you mean, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know what Declarations I mean well enough, but we'l ask you particularly; you know the Declaration that was made the 4th of April, in the third year of the King. —— was it Printed?

Mr. Bridgeman. Yes, it was Printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that of the 27th of April, in the 4th Year of the King Printed?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were both Printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next thing in courſe, is the Biſhops Paper.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Bridgeman, pray let me ask you one Queſtion; Did you ever compare the Print with that under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. I did not compare them Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does Swear they were Printed by the King's Order.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Good Mr. Sollicitor give me leave to ask him a Queſtion —— Can you Swear then that they are the ſame?

Mr. Bridgeman. I was not asked that Queſtion, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come then Mr. Bridgeman, I'll ask you —— Do you believe they are the ſame?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that an Anſwer to my Queſtion?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We muſt ask him Queſtions as well as you, Sir Robert —— what ſay you? Do you believe it to be the ſame?

L. C. J. You hear Mr. Sollicitor's Queſtion, anſwer it Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgeman. Yes my Lord, I do believe it.

L. C. J. Well, that's enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there were occaſion, we have them here compared, and they are the ſame.

Sir Robert Sawyer. With Submiſſion, my Lord, in all theſe Caſes, if they will prove any Fact that is laid in an Information, they muſt prove it by thoſe that know it of their own Knowledge. ——— Do you know it to be the ſame?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's very well, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Ay, ſo it is, Mr. Sollicitor, It is a wonderful thing, my Lord, that we cannot be permitted to ask a Queſtion. — Do you know it to be the ſame, Mr. Bridgeman, I ask you again?

Mr. Bridgman. I have not compared them I tell you, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then that is no Proof.

L. C. J. Would you have a Man Swear above his Belief, he tells you he believes it is the ſame.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that Proof of an Information?

L. C. J. Well, you'l have your time to make your Objections by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then Swear Sir John Nicholas.

Sir John Nicholas. I am Sworn already.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſee you have a Paper in your Hand, Sir John Nicholas, pray who had you that Paper from?

Sir John Nicholas. I will give you an Account of it, as well as I can.

Mr. Pollexfen. Before they go to another thing, my Lord, we think they have failed in their Proof of their Information, about the Printing this Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mr. Hills.

Mr. Juſt. Allyb. They have laid, That it was printed by the King's Order; and it is ſuch a matter, Mr. Sollicitor, as you may clear, if you will, ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Hills, now I ſee him.

L. C. J. I was going to give Order that you ſhould ſend to the Printing-houſe for him.

Mr. Juſt. Allyb. They may put this matter out of doubt too, if they will, on the other ſide; for I ſee they have a Copy in Print, and there's the Original, they may compare them if they pleaſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am very glad to hear ſuch a ſtrong Objection.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We would clear the way for you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you put Straws in our way; we ſhall be able enough to clear it without your help. Swear Mr. Hills and young Mr. Graham here.

Hills and Graham ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Graham, did you compare any of theſe Printed Declarations with the Original?

Graham. Yes, I did compare ſome of them, and did make Amendments as I went along.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew one that you have compar'd with the Original.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hills is here himſelf, we'll ask him. Are you ſworn, Sir?

Cryer. He is ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray were the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conſcience printed both of them?

Hills. Ay, an't pleaſe you, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You printed them, I think.

Hills. Yes, I did print them.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Hills, you ſay they were printed: Upon your Oath, after they were printed, did you examine them with the Original under Seal?

Hills. They were examined before they were printed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Did you examine them?

Hills. I did not, here's one that did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who is that?

Hills. It is Mr. Williams here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear him.

Williams ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you hear, Williams? Do you know that the King's Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, two of them, one of the 4th of April, and the other of the 27th of April, were printed?

Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine them after they were printed, by the Copy they were printed by?

Williams. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where had you the Copy; who had you it from?

Williams. I had it from Mr. Hills.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Williams, did you examine them with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. The Firſt Declaration I did.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The Second Declaration is the main.

Williams. The Second was Compos'd by the Firſt.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Why, is there no more in Second Declaration than there was in the Firſt?

Williams. Yes, there is, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Did you examine That with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can any one tell who did examine it under the Great Seal?

Mr. Finch. Pray what did you examine it by, Mr. Williams?

Williams. By a Copy that I receiv'd from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will go on; and we deſire Sir John Nicholas to give an account where he had that Paper that he has in his hand.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, it does not appear that the Copy that was printed is the true Copy of the Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays he had it from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Finch. Pray, Mr Hills, what did you examine that Copy by, which you gave to Mr. Williams?

Hills. I had the Copy from Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Finch. Did you examine it with the Original under the Great Seal?

Hills. I did not examine it, I had it from Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Finch. What, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgeman. It was the Original ſigned by the King.

Mr. Finch. But I ask you, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgeman. Not under the Great Seal it was not, it was the very Declaration the King ſigned.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But it ought to be compared with the Original, or it is no good proof that it is the ſame.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, you underſtand Collation better ſure, you ſhould be aſham'd of ſuch a weak Objection as this.

Williams. We never bring our Proof to the Great Seal.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But if you will have it Proof at Law, you muſt have it compared with the Original.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think there is any great ſtreſs to be laid upon that? we only ſay it was printed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But you have made it part of your Information, and therefore you muſt prove it.

L. C. J. I think there's proof enough of that; there need no ſuch nicety.

Mr. Pollixfen. Well, my Lord, we muſt ſubmit, let them go on, we won't ſtand upon this.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray let me go on. Where had you that Paper, Sir John Nicholas?

Sir John Nicholas. I had this Paper from the King's Hand.

L. C. J. Put it in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you it from, do you ſay?

Sir J. Nich. From the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what time had you it from the King, Sir?

Sir J. Nich. I had it twice from the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the firſt time, Sir?

Sir J. Nich. The firſt time was in Council the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of it afterwards?

Sir J. Nich. The King had it from me the 12th, and the 13th I had it from the King again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray deliver it this way into the Court: We will now go on, and prove the Biſhops hands to it. This is the Paper upon which we bring this Information; Gentlemen, it is all the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbiſhop, and ſigned by Him and the reſt of the Biſhops.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſuppoſe my Lords the Biſhops will not put us to prove it, they will own their Hands.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, their Council will put you to prove it; I perceive your beſt way is to ask nothing of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will deſire nothing of them, we will go on to our Proofs. Call Sir Thomas Exton, Sir Richard Raynes, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Recorder, and Mr. William Middleton.

Sir Thomas Exton appeared, and was ſworn.

L. C. J. What do you ask Sir Thomas Exton?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray convey that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton. —— Sir Thomas, I would ask you one Queſtion: Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury?

Sir Thomas Exton. I'll give your Lordſhip what account I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, anſwer my Queſtion; Do you know his Hand-writing?

Sir

Sir Tho. Exton. never ſaw him write five times in my life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you, upon your Oath, do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I do believe this may be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe all the Body of it to be of his Hand-writing, or only part of it?

Sir Tho. Exton. I muſt believe it to be ſo, for I have ſeen ſome of his Hand-writing, and this is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you to the Name? do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any of the reſt of the Names that are upon that Paper?

Sir Tho. Exton. No, I do not.

L. C. Juſt. Do you for the Defendants ask Sir Tho. Exton any Queſtion?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Sir Richard Raynes.

Sir Tho. Exton. My Lord, Sir Richard Raynes has been ſick this month, and has not been at the Commons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need of him. Call Mr. Brooks.

Mr. Brooks ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ſhew Mr. Brooks that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Brooks, I ask you this Queſtion, Do you know my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper; do you take that to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it to be my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What ſay you to the whole Body of the Paper?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe it to be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you ſay to his Name there?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe this Name is his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. William Middleton.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Brooks don't go away, but look upon the Names of the Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and my Lord of Ely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. I have ſeen my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing, and I do believe this is his hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord, I am not ſo well acquainted with my Lord of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But have you ſeen his Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, I have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Writing do you think?

Mr. Brooks. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Truly I do believe it.

Sir Geo. Treby. Did you ever ſee him write?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he has ſeen his Writing.

Sir Geo. Treby. How do you know that it was his Hand-writing that you ſaw?

Mr. Brooks. Becauſe he own'd it.

L. C. Juſt. How do you know it, do you ſay?

Mr. Brooks. I know it, I ſay, becauſe I have ſeen a Letter that he writ to another perſon, which he afterwards own'd.

L. C. Juſt. What did he own, Mr. Brooks?

Mr. Brooks. That he wrote a Letter to another perſon, which I ſaw.

Sir Geo. Treby. To whom, Sir?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you the Letter here Sir?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir, the Letter was writ to my Lord Biſhop of Oxford.

Sir Geo. Treby. Can you tell what was in that Letter?

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that to this Queſtion? You ask him, how he knows his Hand-writing: and, ſays he, I did not ſee him write, but I have ſeen a Letter of his to the Lord Biſhop of Oxford.

L. C. Juſt. And he does ſay, my Lord of Ely own'd it to be his Hand that is there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord, that's a miſtake, he own'd a Letter that he had writ to the Biſhop of Oxford to be his Hand-writing, and by compariſon of this with that (ſays he) I take this to be his Hand-writing.

Mr. Brooks. That is my meaning, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſpeak out, and tell us what are the reaſons that makes you ſay you believe this to be the Biſhop of Ely's Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Becauſe it reſembles a Letter that I have by me of his writing to the Biſhop of Oxford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you ſay he own'd that Letter to be his?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord Biſhop of Oxford did anſwer it, and I waited upon the Biſhop of Ely with the Anſwer, and he did own it.

Sir Geo. Treby. How did he own it, Sir?

Mr. Brooks. I had ſome Communication with my Lord of Ely about the ſubſtance of that Letter, and therefore I apprehended he own'd it.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. That's a ſtrange Inference, Mr. Sollicitor, to prove a man's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have more Evidence; but let this go as far as it can.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Certainly, my Lord, you will never ſuffer ſuch a Witneſs as this.

L. C. Juſt. Brother Pemberton, I ſuppoſe they can prove it otherwiſe, or elſe this is not Evidence.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. So they had need, for it is a ſtrange Inference of Mr. Sollicitor, that this is a Proof of my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. The Biſhop of Oxon was dead before any of this matter came in agitation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will bring other Proofs.--Call Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith.

Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith ſworn.

Mr Sol. Gen. Mr. Chetwood, we would know of you if you know my Lord Biſhop of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's not an Anſwer to my Queſtion: Do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do not certainly know it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you ſeen any of it?

Mr. Chetwood. I have ſeen my Lord of Ely's Writing, that has been ſaid to be his.

L. C. Juſt. But ſurely you had better take a Witneſs that has ſeen him write.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I think 'tis hardly poſſible for a man to prove his Hand, that has not ſeen him write.

L. C. J. I think 'tis better proof indeed, to bring ſome that has ſeen him write.

Mr. Chetwood. My Lord, 'tis a long time ſince I ſaw my Lord of Ely's Writing.

L. C. J. Pray bring ſome other Proof, if you have it.

Bp. of Peterburgh. My Lord, we are here as Criminals before your Lordſhip, and we are proſecuted with great Zeal: I beg your Lordſhip that you will not be of Council againſt us, to direct 'em what Evidence they ſhall give.

L. C. Juſt. My Lord of Peterburgh, I hope I have not behaved my ſelf any otherwiſe hitherto than as becomes me: I was ſaying this (and I think I ſaid it for your Lordſhips advantage) That this was not ſufficient Proof; and I think, if your Lordſhip obſerved what I ſaid, it was for you, and not againſt you.

Bp. of Peterb. It was to direct them againſt us, how they ſhould give Evidence.

Mr. Serj Pemberton. Pray, my Lord of Peterburgh, ſit down, you'll have no wrong done you.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We that are of Council will take care of that; and pray, my Lord, will you pleaſe to paſs it by.

L. C. Juſt. We are not uſed to be ſo ſerv'd, and I will not be uſed ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to paſs that by, for what your Lordſhip ſaid was in favour of my Lords the Biſhops, but I ſee they do not take it ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Chetwood, do you look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do believe it is.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's very well, when he ſays he never ſaw him write.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. What is the reaſon of that belief of his, I would feign know?

Mr. Chetwood. I have formerly ſeen his Hand, I think it was his; but I never ſaw my Lord of Ely write his Hand.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then the Queſtion is, Whether this be Evidence?

Mr. Finch. How do you know that that which you ſaw formerly was my Lord of Ely's Hand?

Mr. Chetwood. I have no ſuch Certainty, as poſitively to ſwear that that was his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will go on to other Proofs; and if we want better Evidence at the end, we will argue with them.

Mr. Chetwood. I am not certain that what I ſaw was my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, becauſe I never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well to ſhew your good affection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, I would ask you this Queſtion, Do you know my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Smith. I have ſeen it often.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely in that Paper; Do you believe it to be my Lord's Hand-writing, or no?

Mr. Smith. I did not ſee him write it, Sir; I cannot tell whether it is or no.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ever ſee his Name?

Mr. Smith. Yes, but it was a great while ago, and here are but ſeven Letters, and I cannot judge by that: I was better acquainted with his Hand writing heretofore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, anſwer me; Do you believe it to be his writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, for I did not ſee him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But my Queſtion is, Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I ſay, I was better acquainted with it heretofore than I am now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray anſwer my Queſtion: Do you believe that to be my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why do you believe it?

Mr. Smith. I have no other reaſon to believe it, but becauſe I have ſeen ſomething like it.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. How long ago is it ſince you ſaw him write?

Mr. Smith. I have not ſeen him write, ſo as to take notice of it, for ſome years: I could better judge of it when he writ his Name Turner, than now it is Ely, becauſe there was more Letters to judge by.

Mr. Middleton ſworn.

L. C. Juſt. Here's Mr. Middleton; what do you call him for?

Mr. Sol. Gen. To prove many of their Hands.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ſhew him that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt, Mr. Middleton, do you know my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I have ſeen his Grace's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. It is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I never ſaw it as I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you ſay to my Lord of Ely? his Name is next.

Mr. Middleton. It is like his Lordſhip's hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, that's all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cannot you tell whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it is his hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever ſee him write? for I would clear this matter beyond exception.

Mr. Middleton. I have ſeen his Lordſhip write, but I never ſtood by him ſo near as to ſee him make his Letters.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, I believe it is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You did not guide his Hand I believe---Do you know my Lord of Chicheſter's Hand writing?

Mr. Middleton. Sir, I am acquainted with none of their Hands but with my Lord of Canterbury's and my Lord of Ely's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Peterburgh's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I had my Lord of Peterburgh's Writing two years ago for ſome money, but I cannot ſay this is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. I never took notice of it ſo much, as to ſay, I believe it to be like it, I never ſaw it but once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any other of the Names there? What ſay you to the Biſhop of Briſtol's Name?

Mr. Middleton. I ſaw once my Lord of Briſtol's Hand writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you to that Writing there?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his or no?

Mr.

Mr. Middleton. Truly, that I cannot ſay, for I never ſaw it but once.

L. C. J. You never ſaw him write, did you?

Mr. Middleton. No, my Lord, I never did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Sir Thomas Pinfold, and Mr. Clavel——Sir Thomas Pinfold is there, ſwear him.

Sir Thomas Pinfold ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Thomas Pinfold, do you know my Lord Biſhop of Peterburgh's hand-writing?

Sir Thomas Pinfold. Truly, not very well, I never ſaw but one Letter from him in my Life; ſhew me his Hand, and I will tell you——Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well Sir, what ſay you to it?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Then upon my Oath I ſay, I cannot well tell upon my own Knowledge that it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you, do you believe it to be his Hand?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, upon the Oath that I have taken I will anſwer you, that upon this account, that I have heard there was a Paper delivered by my Lords the Biſhops to the King, and this Paper that you offer me, I ſuppoſe to be the ſame, upon that Score I do believe it, but upon any other Score I cannot tell what to ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath, Sir, do you believe it is his Hand writing or no?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, I have anſwered you already, that upon my own Knowledge I cannot ſay it is his Hand writing; but becauſe I have heard of ſuch a Paper, I do believe it may be his.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee my Lord Biſhop write?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I have been in his Chamber ſeveral times when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look upon what he writ.

L. C. J. Did you never ſee him write his Name?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I do not know that I ever ſaw him write his Name, but I have ſeen him writing I ſay, and ſo my Lord Biſhop may have ſeen me writing, but I believe he does not know my Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have ſeen him write you ſay.

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, I have been in his Chamber when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look over him.

Mr. J. Powell. Then you did never ſee any of that writing?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I cannot ſay I did, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you never ſee any of his writing but that Letter you ſpeak of?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. No, not that I remember.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, you muſt call other Witneſſes, for this does not prove any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will go on——Swear Mr. Clavel.

Mr. Clavel ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of Peterburgh's Hand writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I have ſeen it many times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know it when you ſee it?

Mr. Clavel. I believe I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper, and upon your Oath tell us, do you believe that Name to be his writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I do believe it is, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon the reſt of the Hands there, do you know any of the other Names?

Mr. Clavel. No, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever ſeen any of their Writing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is probable I may have ſeen ſome, but do not now remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think you are a Bookſeller, Mr. Clavel?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I am ſo, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſuppoſe you have had ſome Dealings with them in the way of your Trade. Did you never ſee any of their Writing?

Mr. Clavel. I have ſeen the Names of ſome of them, but it is ſo long ſince that I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee my Lord of Peterborough Write?

Mr. Clavel I cannot tell whether I ever ſaw him Write his Name or no; but I have had ſeveral Letters from my Lord of Peterborough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot ſay it is, I believe it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had Letters from him you ſay?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, and it ſeems to be like his Hand.

Mr. Pollixfen. But you never ſaw him Write his Hand you ſay?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot ſay I ever did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Theſe Letters that you have received from my Lord of Peterborough, did he own them? Do you think they were Counterfeit, or of his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I ſuppoſe he has owned them, Sir.

Mr. J. Powel. But you muſt anſwer directly, Sir, did he own them?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did thoſe Letters concern? were they about Books, or what?

Mr. Clavel. They were ſometimes about one buſineſs, ſometimes about another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the ſubject matter of any of theſe Letters about Money; and was it paid you? Did you receive, or did you give any account of it?

Mr. Clavel. They were about ſeveral Buſineſſes.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Clavel, you muſt give us as particular account as you can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon thoſe Letters were the things done that thoſe Letters required?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you do your part?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now I would ask you, Do you believe that Name of my Lord Biſhop of Peterborough to be the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop?

Mr. Clavel. I believe it is.

Mr. J. Powel. Do you know that thoſe Letters that you ſay you received from my Lord, were of my Lords own Hand-writing, Do you Swear that?

Mr. Clavel. My Lord, I cannot Swear that.

Mr. Finch. Do you know whether the Letters that you received, as you ſay, were written by my Lord himſelf, or by his Secretary?

Mr.

Mr. Clavel. I have received Letters from him, and his Secretary too.

Sir G. Treby. But were you preſent with him when he writ any Letters with his own Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not mean a Letter to your ſelf ſure, Sir George?

Sir G. Treby. No, Sir, I ſay any Letters.

Mr. Clavel. I have been preſent with my Lord often, but I cannot ſay I have ſeen my Lord write.

L. C. J. He has here told you, he has had ſeveral Letters of my Lords own Hand, and from his Secretary too.

Mr. J. Powel. He has ſaid it, but you ſee he ſays he never ſaw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence againſt my Lord Arch-biſhop, Lord Biſhop of Ely, St. Aſaph, Peterborough, and Briſtol.

Mr. J. Powel. Certainly Mr. Sollicitor you miſtake —— But go on ——

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence I ſay againſt them, Sir, but whether it be ſufficient Evidence, we ſhall Argue by and by.——Call Mr. Hooper and Mr. Chetwood again.

Mr. Chetwood appeared.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Chetwood. I have ſeen it Twice or Thrice, but it is a conſiderable time ſince I did ſee it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe that is his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never ſaw him write his Name in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon the Name, and tell us what you believe of it?

Mr. Chetwood. I believe it may, but I do not certainly know it to be his Hand, I rather believe it is my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Hand, than I believe that other to be my Lord of Peterboroughs.

Sir G. Treby. Do you believe that to be my Lord of Peterborough's Hand or no?

Mr. Chetwood. I ſay, I rather believe that this is the Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Writing, than that which is above it or below it, to be their Writing; but truly I do not diſtinctly know my Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Hooper.

L. C. J. You are very lame in this matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Witneſſes are unwilling, and we muſt find out the Truth as well as we can.

Mr. Hooper did not appear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. James and Mr. Powell.

Mr. James appeared and was Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Biſhop of Briſtol's Writing, Mr. James?

Mr. James. Yes, I believe I do, but I am not ſo certain, becauſe my Lord writes ſeveral times ſeveral Hands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew him the Paper: Is that my Lord of Briſtol's Hand?

Mr. James. I cannot ſay it is or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. It looks like his Hand, and that's all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray hearken, and Anſwer to what I ask you; you are prepared for one Queſtion it may be, and I ſhall ask you another: Upon your Oath, do you believe it to be the Hand-writing of my Lord of Briſtol?

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I can only ſay it looks like it, that's all.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him write?

Mr. James. Yes, my Lord, I have ſeen his Hand-writing ſeveral times, and it is like his Hand-writing, that is all I can ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, remember you are upon your Oath, and anſwer my Queſtion.

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I know no more than that, Sir William Williams.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you Sir, whether you believe it to be his Hand or not?

Mr. James. My Lord, it looks like his Hand, and it may be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you do think and believe one way or other: What do you believe?

Mr. James. It may be his Hand, for what I know, and it may not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It may be your Hand.

Mr. James. No, Sir, it cannot be mine, I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. I believe it may be his Hand, or it may not be his Hand, that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Come, Sir, you muſt Anſwer fairly, Do you believe it to be his Hand, or do you not?

Mr. James. Yes, I do believe it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are very hard to believe methinks.

Mr. James. No, I am not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well now, Mr. James; when you do well, we'll commend you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Powell was Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let's know what's your Name?

Mr. Powell. My Name is Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter?

Mr. Powell. I have not ſeen the Paper, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know his Hand writing?

Mr. Powell. Yes, I believe I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look upon that Name of his.

Mr. Powell. I did not ſee my Lord write that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who ſays you did: no Body asks that of you; how you Anſwer! Pray Sir, remember your Oath, and Anſwer ſeriouſly, Do you believe it to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Powell. I believe it is like my Lords Hand-writing, but I never did ſee him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No Body ſays you did.

Mr. Powell. Therefore I cannot Swear poſitively it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do not ask that neither.

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell whether it be his Hand or no.

L. C. J. Sir, you muſt Anſwer the Queſtion directly, and ſeriouſly: Do you believe it, or do you not believe it?

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell what to believe in the Caſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I ask you another Queſtion, upon your Oath, Do you believe it is not his Hand?

Mr. Powell. I cannot ſay that neither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Once again, I ask you, upon your Oath, Do you believe it to be his Hand? I ask you plainly, and let Mankind Judge of you.

Mr. Powell. I tell you, Sir, I cannot tell what to believe.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if theſe things be endured, there will be an end of all Teſtimony, if Witneſſes do not anſwer fairly to the Queſtions that are asked them.

Mr. J. Powell. Truly to me, for a Man to Swear his Belief in ſuch a matter, is an extraordinary thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is obliged to anſwer Queſtions, when they are fairly put to him.

Mr. Pollixfen. I think that is a hard Queſtion, not to be Anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Make your Exceptions to the Evidence if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Firſt, he ſays, He knows his Hand; then he ſays, He has ſeen him write; and then he ſays, He did not ſee him write this; but he ſhuffles, he won't anſwer whether he believes it or not.

Mr. Pollixfen. The Queſtion is, Whether belief in any caſe be Evidence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they have a mind to a Bill of Exceptions upon that point, let them Seal their Bill, and we'll Argue it with them when they will; in the mean time, we'll go on, and that which we now pray, my Lord, is, That this Paper may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have given ſufficient Evidence ſure to have it Read, therefore we deſire it may be Read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, before this Paper be Read, we hope you will let us be heard to it: we think that what they deſire (to have this Paper Read) ought not to be: for what is all the proof that they have given of this Paper? they have a proof by Compariſon of Hands, which in a Criminal Caſe ought not to be received: and beſides, my Lord, what is that Compariſon of Hands, that they have offered? Some perſons come here and ſay, they cannot tell whether it be their Hands, they believe it may or may not, for ought they know; How ſhall we Convict any Man upon ſuch a Teſtimony as this? can we have our Remedy againſt him for Perjury, for ſaying, He believes it to be our Hand? therefore here is not any Evidence to Charge us. For firſt, It is only a Compariſon of Hands; And ſecondly, That Compariſon is proved in ſuch an uncertain manner: Some of them tell you, They do not know what to believe; another tells you, I believe 'tis rather ſuch a Lord's Hand, than the others are ſuch a Lord's Hands, I believe 'tis rather his Hand than that above it, or that below it; what ſort of proof is all this? Therefore we pray it may not be read, till they prove it better.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a word or two in this matter for Evidence ſake, there is a great deal of reaſon we ſhould take Exceptions to the Evidence that has been given: for truly I think I never heard ſuch a ſort of Evidence given before; It is a Caſe of as great Concernment as ever was in Weſtminſter-Hall; and for them to come to prove Hands only by thoſe that ſaw Letters, but never ſaw the perſons Write; this I hope will not amount to ſo much as a Compariſon of Hands. Your Lordſhip knows, that in every petty Cauſe, where it depends upon the Compariſon of Hands, they uſe to bring ſome of the Parties Hand-writing, which may be Sworn to, to be the Parties own Hand, and then it is to be compared in Court with what is endeavoured to be proved, and upon comparing them together in Court, the Jury may look upon it, and ſee if it be right; and never was there any ſuch a thing as this admitted in any poor petty Cauſe, that is but of the value of Forty Shillings. And therefore as to this Evidence, Firſt, We ſay Compariſon of Hands ought not to be given at all in the Caſes of Criminals; And I believe it was never heard of that it ſhould. In the next place, if it be admitted to be Evidence, yet it is not ſuch an Evidence, as that by Compariſon of Hands the Jury can take notice of it; for in ſuch manner of proofs by Compariſon of Hands, the uſage is, That the Witneſs is firſt asked, concerning the Writing he produces, Did you ſee this Writ by the Defendant, whoſe Hand they would prove? If he anſwers yes, I did, then ſhould the Jury upon Compariſon of what the Witneſs Swears to, with the Paper that is to be proved, judge whether thoſe Hands be ſo like as to induce them to believe, that the ſame perſon Writ both; and not that the Witneſs ſhould ſay, I had a Letter from ſuch a perſon, and that is like the Hand of that Letter, therefore I believe it to be his Hand: My Lord, I hope this ſhall never be admitted for Evidence in this Court.

L. C. J. I do take it, that the Witneſs himſelf is Judge of the Compariſon; for if he does know the Parties Hand, and a Paper be offered him to prove the Parties Hand, he is to compare it in his own mind.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It never was admitted to be ſo, that I know of, my Lord, or ever Read of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may remember ſeveral Caſes about that, particularly Sidney's Caſe.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray, my Lord hear me a little as to that: it is a Point of very great moment, whether in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanour either in an Indictment or Information, it be good Evidence to offer Compariſon of Hands; and that this Court did adjudge quite contrary upon an Indictment of Forgery againſt my Lady Carr, appears in Syderfin's Reports; they went to prove her Letters Written by her to Cox, the Court rejected it, and gave their judgement here, That it was no Evidence; and that for this Reaſon, Becauſe of the evil conſequences of it. For ſaid they, It is an eaſie matter for any Man's Hand to be Counterfeited; that they ſure will agree, for frequent daily experience ſhews how eaſily that may be done: is it not eaſie then to cut any Man down in the World, by proving it like his Hand? and proving that likeneſs by comparing it with ſomething that he hath formerly ſeen? this ſtrikes mighty deep; the honeſteſt Man in the World and the moſt Innocent may be deſtroyed, and yet no fault to be found in the Jury or in the Judges; if the Law were ſo, it would be an unreaſonable Law. Next, my Lord, for the Caſe of Sidney, that was a Caſe of Treaſon. Now in the Caſe of Treaſon there is always other Evidence brought; and this Evidence comes in but as a Collateral Evidence, to ſtrengthen the other; but in this Caſe it is the ſingle Evidence, for ought that appears, for there is nothing more (for ought I can ſee) in the Caſe, but whether this were their Hands, and proved only by what another believes: Now ſhall any be condemned by anothers belief without proof? ſurely, my Lord, that was never Evidence yet to Convict any one; ſo that their proof fails in both Points; For firſt, it ought to be conſidered whether Compariſon of Hands be Evidence in a Caſe of of Miſdemeanour; And next if it be Evidence, whether you will take it, that the belief of a Man that brings nothing to compare with it, or never ſaw the Party Write, but has received Letters, and ſays, This is like it, and therefore he believes it to be his Hand, be good Evidence as a Compariſon of Hands.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, they are pleaſed to mention —

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serj. you have been heard already, and you are not to reply upon us; or if you would, we muſt be heard firſt.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I would only ſpeak to that Caſe of Sidney: my Lord, that Caſe differs from this toto Cœlo, the Writing was found in his poſſeſſion, in his Study; there was the proof that nailed him.

Mr Sol. Gen. You ſhall ſee how we'll apply it by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a word in this matter: that there is ſtronger and weaker Evidence no Man doubts; but that which theſe Gentlemen ſay, that in this Caſe there is no Evidence, muſt needs be a miſtake: if they mean, that it is not ſo ſtrong an Evidence as is poſſible to be given, I agree with them, it is not: For if we had brought three or four Men that had ſeen them Write this very Paper, and put their Names to it, that had been a ſtronger Evidence than this, that we have given; but whether we do not give ſuch a ſort of Evidence as may induce the Jury to believe, that this is their Paper, and their Hands to it, we ſubmit: they ſay, This is ſuch a method as never was taken; but I admire that that ſhould be ſaid by Men of their Experience and Knowledge in the Law; for is there any thing more uſual, or any other courſe taken for the proof of Hands, than for a Witneſs to ſay, He knows the Hand of the Party very well, for he has often ſeen his Hand-writing, or received Letters from him? and if you ſhew him the thing that you would prove to be his Hand, and he ſays, I do believe this to be his Hand, for this reaſon, becauſe I have had other things of his Writing: Certainly in the Experience of any Man that has practiſed, this is an Evidence that is given every day, and allowed for Evidence. For the Caſe of Mr. Sidney, which your Lordſhip has heard mentioned, it is certainly very appoſite to this purpoſe; it is inſiſted upon and pretended, That that was Evidence, becauſe it was found in his Study: but without all doubt, that would not be the reaſon: for may not a Book of another Man's Writing be found in my Study? and he inſiſted upon it in his own Defence: but the Anſwer was, That it ſhould be left as the Queſtion, Whether the Jury would believe it upon the Evidence that was given, of its being his own Hand-writing: And ſo in this Caſe, though it be not ſo ſtrong Evidence, as if we had brought thoſe that had ſeen them Write it; yet Evidence it is, and whether it be ſufficient to ſatisfie the Jury, may be a Queſtion; but no Queſtion, it is good Evidence in Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is a wonderful thing, they ſay, That ſuch Evidence ſhould be offered: but truly, my Lord, it is a much ſtranger thing to hear Mr. Serj. Pemberton ſay, It was never done before; and then to make that Remark to your Lordſhip upon the Caſe of Sidney, which I'll put to your Lordſhip and the Court as a Caſe, and let him contradict me if he can; and then we ſhall ſee how far it goes. Sidney was Indicted for High Treaſon; and the Treaſon inſiſted upon was, A Writing ſuppoſed to be his, it being found in his Study; the Queſtion was, Whether it was his Hand-writing or no? there was no poſitive Evidence that it was his Hand-writing; there was no Evidence produc'd, that prov'd it to be his Hand-writing; for there was no one that Swore, that they ſaw him Write it; there was nothing proved, but the ſimilitude of Hands. Ay, but ſays Mr. Serj. Pemberton, It was found in his Study: will Mr. Serj. Pemberton be content, that all the Libels that are found in his Study, ſhall for that reaſon, be adjudged to be Libels, to be his Hand-writing, and he to be a Libeller for them? I think he will make a ſevere Declamation againſt that, and he would have very good reaſon for it: Certainly that which was Evidence in one Man's Caſe, will be Evidence in another. God forbid there ſhould be any ſuch diſtinction in Law; and therefore I conclude that this is good Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. The Court went upon this, That it was found in his Study, and compared with Letters and Bills of Exchange produced in Court; which were Sworn to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I was by all the time; for I was ordered to attend him in the Tower; and therefore I can tell what paſſed as well as any Body. My Lord, they proved no more as to that Libel, but only by Compariſon of Hands; they had no other proof in that Caſe, but by comparing the Hand-writing; and that was inſiſted upon to be a mighty fallible thing: That which they would have for us to compare, Paper with Paper, it is true, would make the proof ſomewhat ſtronger, if we could, in ſuch a Caſe as this, be able to produce ſuch Evidence: but I appeal to your Lordſhip, and ſhall leave it to the Jury, to conſider which is better Evidence; theſe Men, that have been produced, that have been Converſant with theſe Lords, and acquainted with their Hand-writing, and who (as your Lordſhip ſees) are not willing Men to give Evidence, they avoid it as much as they can; and they Swear it all to be the Hand writing of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as they believe; which is as far as any Man can Swear. One ſays the whole Body of the Paper is my Lord of Canterbury's Hand, and he knows it very well; ſo that we are not upon a ſingle Name, but a whole Paper that contains many Lines; and this is as much as can be proved by any one, that did not ſee the thing Written. Then, my Lord, for the reſt of the Company, the Evidence is not ſo ſtrong againſt every one of them, as it is againſt my Lord Archbiſhop; but is ſtrong enough certainly to Convict them of what we accuſe them of: and pray, my Lord, what was the Objection in Sidney's Caſe, but what has been mentioned here? That any Man's Hand might be Counterfeited. I remember in that Caſe, there was one Mr. Wharton, a young Gentleman, then in the Court, that undertook to the Court, That he would Counterfeit that Hand preſently; and he that was to Swear the Compariſon, ſhould not know, which was the one, and which was the other; which certainly was a ſtronger Caſe than this. And I ſee ſome of the Gentlemen that are now ſtanding at the Bar, who preſſed this matter very hard againſt Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Sidney loſt his Life upon that Compariſon of Hands; though Mr. Wharton did Teſtifie how eaſie a matter it was to have a Man's Hand Counterfeited; and we all know was a Man of Value and Quality;

ſo there is a Preſident for Mr. Serj. Pemberton, that never heard of this Law before. They ſay the proving of Similitude of Hands is no Evidence, unleſs you prove the actual Writing; what a Condition then will England be in, when Witneſſes are dead? Is it not the moſt common Practice that can be, to produce Witneſſes to prove ſuch Men are dead, whoſe Names are ſet as Witneſſes to Deeds; and they ſwear, They believe it to be the Hand writing of thoſe Witneſſes? Can there be any greater Evidence of ſuch a Caſe, unleſs it be the Confeſſion of the Party himſelf? My Lord, we are now only upon reading this Paper. We have been heard, and they have been heard; now we pray the Paper may be read.

Mr. Recorder. We pray it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. If your Lordſhip pleaſe——

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be replied upon, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. You have ſpoke Brother Levinz, and you have ſpoke Brother Pemberton, and I would willingly hear you what you have to ſay; but we muſt not have vying and revying, for then we ſhall have no end.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I would offer your Lordſhip ſome new matter which has not been touched upon yet; why it is not to be read.

L. C. J. What's that Brother?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. All the proof that has been given whatſoever it amounts to, has been only of its being Written, but no proof has been given of its being Written in the County of Middleſex, where the Information is laid, and the matter is local.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt read it, and then make your Objection.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, as to the Evidence that has been given, I would only put your Lordſhip in mind of one Caſe; and that was the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton: and the great Evidence there, was the proof of its being his Hand writing; and that being proved, was ſufficient to convict him of a Libel: for they could not believe Sir Samuel Barnardiſton was guilty of making Libels, unleſs they were proved to be his Hand writing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He owned them to be his Hand writing.

L. C. J. If you do expect my Opinion in it, whether this be good Evidence, and whether this Paper be proved or no; I am ready to give it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I deſire to be heard before the Opinion of the Court be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be not proof enough to induce the Jury to believe this is their Paper; yet ſure there is enough to read it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we have not been heard to this yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, is this fit to be ſuffered?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor I am always willing to hear Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I hope your Lordſhip, and the Court, are not to be Complemented into an unuſual thing.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It is not a Complement, but Right and Juſtice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly it is Right and Juſtice, that there ſhould be ſome Limits put to Men's ſpeaking, that we may know when to have an end.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Sollicitor does miſtake the Right my Lord, for we deſire to be heard to this Point; as not having ſpoke to it yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me make my Objection to your being heard: for I believe you and I have been chid ſeveral times, for ſpeaking over and over the ſame thing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This that we now offer, is not to the ſame Point, that we have ſpoken to already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are now ſpeaking to the reading of the Paper, and you have ſpoken to it already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If the Court will pleaſe to hear us, we have that to offer againſt the reading of the Paper, which has not been offered yet.

L. C. J. Sir Rob. Sawyer, I take it, it is in the Breaſt of the Court to hear when they will, and as much as they will, and whom they will; for if three or four have been heard of a ſide to ſpeak what they will, the Court may very well depend upon the Learning of thoſe three or four, that they ſay what can be ſaid upon the Point, and that's enough; but if ſix or ſeven deſire to be heard over and over to the ſame thing, certainly the Court may ſtop at three or four, if they will.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is a new Objection that none of us have been heard to yet.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I offer is not contrary to the Rules of Law, nor contrary to the Practice of the Court; nor was I going any way to invade that Privilege which Mr. Sollicitor claims of making Objections, and not receiving an Anſwer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What a fine Declamation you have now made! I never claimed any ſuch right; but I oppoſe your being heard over and over to the ſame thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let's come to ſome iſſue in this matter.

L. C. J. I will hear you; but I would not have you introduce it with a Reflection upon the King's Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you impoſe that upon him, you ſtop his Mouth; for ſome Men cannot ſpeak without Reflection.

L. C. J. On the other ſide, pray Mr. Sollicitor, give us leave to hear fairly what they have to ſay; for I perceive he cannot offer to ſpeak, but you preſently ſtop his Mouth.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I was going to ſay, is another matter than any thing that has been yet offered: We ſay, that this Paper ought not to be read; for that they are obliged by Law to prove their Information; and conſequently, having laid a particular place where the thing was done, in the Information, they ought to prove that this was done in that place. The Evidence that they have given, is of my Lords the Biſhops writing this Paper; and they have laid it to be done in Middleſex: and this, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, is local; and they muſt prove it to be written in Middleſex, where they have laid it, or elſe they fail in their Proof. This is another Objection, which as yet hath not been ſpoken to: That if there be a Proof of their Hand writing, yet there is no Proof where that Hand was written; and therefore they are not yet got ſo far, as to have it read againſt my Lords.

Mr. Att. Gen. For that Point, my Lord, we ſay, This would have been as properly ſaid after the Paper had been read, when they come to make Objections againſt our Proof, by way of Defence: and with Submiſſion, it had been more proper then, than it is now: For what are we now doing? My Lord, we are proving that ſuch a Paper was ſubſcribed by my Lords the Biſhops; and Sir John Nicholas gives you an account, that he had it from His Majeſty at the Council: and that certainly is in the County of Middleſex; and it will concern you to prove that it was written elſewhere.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That's very well Mr. Attorney; ſure you do not think as you ſpeak.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Paper compoſed and written by you, that Sir John Nicholas ſays he had from His Majeſty: how he came by it, I ſuppoſe you will tell us by and by: this is your Hand writing, that I think we have proved ſufficiently; this is found in the County of Middleſex: and you come and tell us, that we muſt prove that it was written in the County of Middleſex; and it is taken to be written where it was found, unleſs you prove the contrary.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That's pretty Doctrine indeed, and very new.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, here's an Objection made too timely: we are now upon reading of this Paper: and the Queſtion is, Whether it ſhall be read or not be read. Surely we have given Evidence enough to induce the Court to read it: and it is another Queſtion, that will come time enough afterwards; where it was writen?

L. C. J. Truly, I do not think it was proper for you to ſtand upon the Place where it was written as yet.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. When we are upon an Information of a Fact in Middleſex, will you hear them give Evidence of a Fact in Yorkſhire?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be driven by theſe Gentlemen; we are to be directed by the Court.

L. C. J. I think truly it is yet too early to make this Objection.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Surely, my Lord, this is our time to oppoſe the reading of it, as not proved.

Mr. J. Powell. Mr. Sollicitor, I think you have not ſufficiently proved this Paper to be ſubſcribed by my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not to read it, Sir?

Mr. J. Powell. No, not to read it, it is too ſlender a Proof for ſuch a Caſe: I grant you, in Civil Actions a ſlender proof is ſufficient, to make out a Man's Hand, by a Letter to a Tradeſman, or a Correſpondent, or the like; but in criminal Cauſes (ſuch as this) if ſuch a Proof be allowed, where is the ſafety of your Life or any Man's Life here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We tell you a Caſe where it was allowed; and that is Mr. Sidney's Caſe; a Caſe of Treaſon, and printed by Authority: We tell you nothing, but what was done t'other day.

L. C. J. I tell you what I ſay to it; I think truly there is proof enough to have it read: and I am not aſhamed nor afraid to ſay it; for I know I ſpeak with the Law: ſay what you will of criminal Caſes, and the danger of Peoples Lives; there were more danger to the Government, if ſuch proof were not allowed to be good.

Mr. J. Powel. I think there is no danger to the Government at all, in requiring good proof againſt Offenders.

L. C. J. Here's my Lord Archbiſhop and the Biſhop of St. Aſaph and my Lord of Ely, their Hands are proved; it is proved to be my Lord Archbiſhop's writing by Mr. Brookes, and he proves my Lord of Ely's Hand by Compariſon, and ſo my Lord of St. Aſaph's. Now Brother Pemberton, there's an anſwer to your Objection; it being proved that it is all my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand: then they come and ſay, we'll prove the Hands of the others by Compariſon: and for that they bring you Witneſſes that ſay, They have received Letters from them, and ſeen their Hand writing ſeveral times: and comparing what they have ſeen with this very Paper; ſays the Witneſs, I do believe it to be his Hand. Can there be a greater Evidence or a fuller?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Admit it be a full Evidence again my Lord Archbiſhop: What's that to the reſt? There's no Evidence againſt thm.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, as to the Objection you make of comparing of Hands; it is an Objection indeed, I do agree: but then conſider the inconvenience which you and Mr. Pollixfen do ſo much inſiſt upon: If a Man ſhould be accuſed by Compariſon of Hands, Where is he? He is in a lamentable Caſe; for his Hand may be ſo Counterfeited, that he himſelf may not be able to diſtinguiſh it. But then you do not conſider where you are on the other ſide: that may be an Objection in matters of Fact, that will have very little weight, if compared and ſet altogether. For on the other ſide, where ſhall the Government be, if I will make Libels, and traduce the Government with Prudence and Diſcretion, and all the ſecrecy imaginable? I'll write my Libel by my ſelf, prove it as you can; that's a fatal blot to the Government; and therefore the Caſe is not the ſame; nor is your Doctrine to paſs for current here; becauſe every Caſe depends upon its own Fact. If I take upon me to ſwear I know your Hand, the Inducements are to my ſelf, how I came to know it, ſo as to ſwear it: Knowledge depends on Circumſtances; I ſwear that I know you, but yet I may be under a miſtake, for I can have my knowledge of you no other way but from the viſibility of you, and another Man may be ſo like you, that there is a poſſibility of my being miſtaken; but certainly, that is Evidence, good Evidence: Now here are ſeveral Gentlemen that ſwear as to my Lord Archbiſhop's Handwriting; I do agree, as to ſome of the others, that the Evidence is not ſo ſtrong; for what that Man ſaid, that he did believe it was rather ſuch a Lord's Hand, than that which went before, or that which came after, it is of no weight at all, and ſo ſome of the others; but it is poſitively proved againſt my Lord Archbiſhop and one or two more; ſo that that's enough to induce the reading of this writing.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Good my Lord, let me give my opinion.

L. C. Juſt. Ay, with all my heart, Brother.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. My Lord, I think as this Caſe is, there ought to be a more ſtrong proof, for certainly the proof ought to be ſtronger and more certain in Criminal matters than in Civil matters; in Civil matters, we do go upon ſlight proof, ſuch as the compariſon of Hands, for proving a Deed, or a Witneſſes Name, and a very ſmall proof will induce us to read it; but in Criminal matters we ought to be more ſtrict, and require poſitive and ſubſtantial proof, that is fitting for us to have in ſuch a Caſe, and without better proof, I think it ought not to be read.

L. C. J.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt go on to ſome other proof, Mr. Sollicitour, for the Court is divided in their Opinions about this proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we will come to the Confeſſions of my Lords the Biſhops, and I hope that will be believed by all Mankind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we did forbear that Evidence, and would not have proceeded this way, if we had had fair play on the other ſide.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, give us leave to defend our Clients all the ways we can; I think we do nothing but what is fair; the Court you ſee is divided, therefore we did not without reaſon inſiſt upon it.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt go on as you can, for they will put you upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray hand the writing to him.

The writing ſhown to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you ſeen that Writing formerly Sir?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you hear my Lord Arch-Biſhop ſay about that Paper?

Mr. Att. Gen. And the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt we'll ask as to my Lord Arch-Biſhop; did he own it to be his Hand writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I believe this to be the Paper that my Lord Arch-biſhop did own to be ſubſcribed by him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When was it owned by him?

Mr. Blathwayt. On the Council day, the Eighth of this Month.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where was it owned, becauſe we would obviate that Objection of the County?

Mr. Blathwayt. It was at the Council Table at Whitehall.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What ſay you to the Biſhop of St. Aſaph? Did he own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes; All my Lords the Biſhops did own it?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Name them particularly; what ſay you of the Biſhop of Ely?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the ſame manner, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Biſhop of Chicheſter?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the ſame manner.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Biſhop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Biſhop of Peterborough?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen And the Biſhop of Briſtol?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. So; We have proved they all owned it.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Could not this have been done at firſt, and ſaved all this trouble?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Have you done with Mr. Blathwayt, Mr. Attorney, that we may ask him ſome queſtions?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him what you will.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, upon what occaſion did they own it, you are ſworn to tell the whole truth; pray tell all your Knowlege, and the whole Confeſſion that they made.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am called here by a Subpœna to anſwer on behalf of the King; my Lord, I am ready to do my duty, and I beg of your Lordſhip that you would pleaſe to tell me what is my duty; for whatſoever I ſhall anſwer, I ſhall ſpeak the truth in.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. There is nothing deſired, but that you would ſpeak the truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord I am eaſily guided by your Lordſhip what I ought to anſwer to.

L. C. Juſt. What is it you ask him, Brother Pemberton?

Mr. S. Pemb. We deſire Mr. Blathwayt to tell the whole diſcourſe that paſſed at the Council, when he ſays my Lords the Biſhops owned this Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. That's a very pretty thing indeed.

L. C. Juſt. Look you, Mr. Blathwayt, you muſt anſwer them what they ask you, unleſs it be an inſnaring Queſtion, and that the Court will take care of.

Mr. Blathwayt. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to ask me any Queſtion, I ſhall readily anſwer it.

L. C. Juſt. You muſt anſwer them.

Mr. S. Pemb. We ask you upon what occaſion they came to own their Hands? What diſcourſe was made to them, and what they anſwered?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's directions.

L. C. Juſt. Come, tell it, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, the occaſion was this: This Paper was read in Council, and I had the honour to read it before the King, and it having been read before his Grace the Arch-Biſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, they were asked whether they did own that Paper, and my Lord, they did own it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, was that the firſt time that my Lords the Biſhops came in?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I was not asked that Queſtion.

L. C. Juſt. What would you have, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We would have an account what paſſed at the Council.

L. C. Juſt. Would you have all the Diſcourſe betwixt the Council and my Lords the Biſhops?

Mr. Ser. Pemb. All that relates to their Accuſation, my Lord, their whole Confeſſion, and what was ſaid to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think, Mr. Serjeant, that when we call a Witneſs, you are at liberty to examine him to every impertinent thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire they may only ask reaſonable and proper Queſtions.

Mr. S. Pemb. Mr. Sollicitor he is ſworn to anſwer and tell the whole truth, and that's all we ask of him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir, I will ask you a plain Queſtion upon your Oath, did not my Lord Arch Biſhop, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, at firſt refuſe to own it, or to anſwer whether it were their Hands or not?

Mr. Soll. Gen. That is not a fair Queſtion Sir Robert Sawyer; 'tis a leading Queſtion.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Then I ask you in ſhort, what did they refuſe? I am ſure that is a fair Queſtion, for God forbid that any ſhould hinder the King's Evidence from telling truth.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And God forbid that half Evidence ſhould condemn any man.

L. C. Juſt. God forbid the Truth ſhould be concealed any way.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Pray, Sir, when they were firſt asked, whether that was their Hands or not, what anſwer did they give?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have beg'd the favour of my Lords the Judges to tell me what I am to anſwer, and what Queſtions are proper for me to anſwer to.

L. C. J. You muſt anſwer any Queſtions that are not enſnaring Queſtions.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, you are upon your Oath to teſtifie the Truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I am not acquainted with the Methods of Law, I deſire my Lords the Judges would inſtruct me.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Anſwer to the Queſtion that they ask you.

L. C. J. We obſerve what they ask you; we'll take care that they ask you nothing but what they ſhould.

Mr. Blathwayt. I deſire the Queſtion may be repeated.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they were firſt asked if it were their Hands, what anſwer did they give the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. His Grace the Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, at firſt did not immediately anſwer whether the Paper were theirs or no.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. What did they ſay?

Mr. Blathwayt. They ſaid they did humbly hope, if they were put to anſwer, no advantage ſhould be taken againſt them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. What did they ſay farther at that time concerning His Majeſties Pleaſure?

Mr. Soll. Gen. That's a leading Queſtion, Mr. Serj. Pemberton; you cannot leave your way of leading Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. It is a very ſtrange thing; if we ask a Queſtion that's general, that's excepted to; if we ask any Queſtion in particular, then they find fault with us, that it is a leading Queſtion; ſo that we can never ask a Queſtion that will pleaſe them. Pray Mr. Blathwayt, what did they ſay concerning the King's Pleaſure, whether they would anſwer if the King commanded them?

Mr. S. Trinder. How can it be material what they ſaid?

L. C. J. It is material that it ſhould be asked, and that it ſhould be anſwered.

Mr. S. Levinz. You are to tell the whole Truth, Sir. Pray tell us what did my Lords the Biſhops ſay about ſubmitting to the King's Pleaſure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that to the purpoſe?

Mr. Pollixfen. Mr. Sollicitor, his Oath is to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, and therefore he muſt anſwer my Queſtion.

Mr. S. Pemb. You are mighty loth Mr. Sollicitor, to let us hear the Truth; I would not willingly lead him in any thing, and I cannot ſee that this is any leading Queſtion, unleſs his Oath be againſt Law, which ſays he is to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do beg your Lordſhip's favour of a Word in this thing: It is certain, if they ask any thing that ſhall take off the Evidence that was firſt given, that it is not true, I cannot oppoſe it; but if they ask Queſtions only to enflame, and to poſſeſs people with fooliſh Notions, and ſtrange Conceits, that is not to the Fact that we are now trying——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. 'Tis only to have the Truth out that we do it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. There is no body here that will be enflamed, Mr. Attorney; I have asked a fair Queſtion, the Court has ruled it ſo.

Mr. Blathwayt. I ſhall readily anſwer any Queſtion that the Court thinks fit.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Sir, by the Oath you have taken you are to tell the whole Truth.

L. C. J. Is he to tell you all that was done at the Council Board that Day?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, my Lord; only what paſſed there about my Lords the Biſhops Confeſſion, the whole of that matter.

Mr. Blathwayt. There has been ſo much ſaid between the asking of the Queſtion and this time, that I deſire it may be repeated, that I may know what to anſwer to.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I ask you in ſhort, Sir, What did my Lords the Biſhops ſay at the time of their appearing in Council concerning the King's Pleaſure, whether they ſhould anſwer or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. The firſt time my Lords the Biſhops came into the Council, they were asked the Queſtion whether they did own that Paper; they did immediately anſwer, They humbly hoped, as they ſtood there Criminals, His Majeſty would not take advantage againſt them, but however they would obey His Majeſties Command.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Were they commanded to withdraw?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, thereupon they were commanded to withdraw, which they did.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they came in again what Queſtions were asked them?

Mr. Blathwayt. They came in ſeveral times, more than twice, I have reaſon to remark this, that they did ſo; do you mean the ſecond time, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. The ſecond time they ſeemed unwilling to own the Paper.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what did they do the third time?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. But firſt let us know what more was done the ſecond time.

Sir George Treby. How was that unwillingneſs of theirs overcome?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they expreſt their unwillingneſs what did they ſay farther?

Mr. Blathwayt. If I remember right, they ſaid as they did the firſt time, they humbly hoped His Majeſty would not take advantage againſt them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Then what did they ſay the third time?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, were they asked whether they publiſhed it?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the publiſhing it, it was laid before them, and I think they were asked the Queſtion whether they publiſhed it?

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what anſwer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. I remember his Grace, and my Lords the Biſhops, did not own they had publiſhed it, but they denied it.

Sir George Treby. After they diſcovered their unwillingneſs the ſecond time, what followed next?

Mr. Blathwayt. They did withdraw after the ſecond Attendance.

Mr. S. Levins. But what was ſaid to them? Was that all that was ſaid to them the ſecond time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I have ſaid two things already, that they were unwilling to anſwer, and that they denied the publiſhing.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. This is a ſtrange uſage of a Witneſs, to put him to tell every thing that was ſaid.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I would ask you this Queſtion, Sir. When they came in the ſecond time, whether they did deſire to know if it were His Majeſties Command that they ſhould own it?

L. C. J. That I muſt not permit you to ask, Brother, that is to lead the Witneſs.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, he will not anſwer general Queſtions; I have asked him all along general Queſtions, and I cannot yet get an anſwer from him to them.

Mr. Blathwayt. I am ready to anſwer any Queſtions that the Court thinks I ſhould anſwer; I am not backward to anſwer acccording to my duty.

L. C. J. Let one of you ask a Queſtion at a time, and not chop in one upon another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In all the Tryals that ever I have been in, in all the Caſes of Criminals, the King's Witneſſes uſed to be treated with reſpect, and not to be fallen upon in this manner.

L. C. J. He ſhall be ſure to have all reſpect paid him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is in Office under the King.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. I do not think Mr. Blathwayt does believe I would ſhew him any diſreſpect, more than he would ſhew me.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg one word, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, What do you ſay?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I ſay I do oppoſe the asking of this Queſtion, not but that every Man has a right to croſs-examine a Witneſs, but if they ask ſuch a Queſtion, let them tell us what uſe they would make of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney General, for that matter——

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, if you pleaſe I'll give Mr. Attorney an anſwer.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I was ſpeaking to Mr. Attorney, and pray hear me, I will not ask you what uſe you'll make of the Queſtion you ask, but do you ask fair and regular Queſtions, and I'll take care you ſhall have an anſwer to them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. I will deal plainly with the Court, and tell you what Uſe we intend to make of our Queſtion; if they anſwered under a Promiſe from His Majeſty, that it ſhould not be given in Evidence againſt them, I hope they ſhall not take advantage of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſay that is a very unmannerly Queſtion, but however it ſhall be anſwered.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Why ſo, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, it is to put ſomething upon the King which I dare hardly name.

L. C. J. We do not know what Anſwer will be made to it yet, but it does look like an odd kind of Queſtion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If men will be ſo preſſing, I, for the King, deſire the Queſtion may be entred.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What do you mean, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know very well what I mean, Sir; I deſire the Queſtion may be recorded in Court.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Record what you will, I am not afraid of you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you afraid of the Law?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, nor of you neither.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet, Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, anſwer whether there was any promiſe made to my Lords the Biſhops from the King.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I take the Queſtion to be, whether the King was pleaſed to make my Lords the Biſhops any promiſe of not taking advantage of what anſwer they made.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Queſtion.

Mr. Blathwayt. As that Queſtion is ſtated there was no ſuch made.

L. C. J. Look you, he tells you there was no ſuch promiſe made; there is an Anſwer to your Queſtion, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We made no ſuch Queſtion; but the Queſtion I would ask is this, ——

Mr. Sol. Gen. For the Satisfaction of the Court repeat what you ſaid juſt now, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. I take the Queſtion to be, whether the King made any promiſe to my Lords the Biſhops, that no advantage ſhould be taken of what they ſaid, and I ſay the King made no ſuch promiſe.

Mr Serj. Pemb. We did not ask you the Queſtion, but we only told you what uſe we would have made of another Queſtion.

Mr. Pollixfen. Mr. Blathwayt, I ſee you can very well diſtinguiſh what Queſtions are to be anſwered; I ask you in ſhort upon your Oath, when they were firſt called in, what was ſaid to them, and what was anſwered by them?

L. C. J. Here has been a great deal of wrangling, but this is a fair Queſtion, and may reduce us to order again; tell us over again from the beginning what paſſed when my Noble Lords the Biſhops came in the firſt, ſecond and third time, when they were examined about this Paper?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I ſhall comply with your Lordſhip's Directions, I apprehend I am to anſwer together concerning the firſt, ſecond, and third comings in of my Lords the Biſhops into the Council. The firſt time, (as I ſaid before,) my Lords the Biſhops were unwilling to own the Paper, and did ſay they humbly hoped His Majeſty would not take advantage againſt them, but that they were ready to obey his Command. The ſecond time they were called in they did repeat it again, that they hoped His Majeſty would not take advantage againſt them; after that there was mention made of the Paper being publiſhed, I remember my Lords the Biſhops ſaid they had not publiſhed it.——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have no mind to hear all, I think.

L. C. J. How do you expect to be anſwered your Queſtions, if you interrupt them? Go on, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I ſaid laſt, that they having prayed the King that no advantage might be taken againſt them for what they ſhould ſay, there was mention made of the Paper its being publiſhed, and my Lords the Biſhops did ſay they had not publiſhed it; and his Grace my Lord Archbiſhop ſaid it was written with his own Hand, and that he had not made uſe of his Clerk.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all you can remember that paſſed at that time?

Mr. Blathwayt. This is the ſubſtance of what I remember.

L. C. J. Was this the third time?

Mr. Blathwayt. No; that was the ſecond time, my Lord.

Mr. Pollixfen.

Mr. Pollixfen. If there be not ſome order in this Evidence, my Lord, we ſhall not be able to obſerve any thing upon it.—Pray what was done afterwards?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellour, upon their coming in, did require them to anſwer whether they did own that Paper or not; my Lords the Biſhops did own the Paper.

Mr. Pollixfen. Do you remember in what words or expreſſions (as near as you can) they did own it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a practice to be endured?

Mr. Finch. Why, he may apprehend and take that to be an owning of it which was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has not he ſworn the manner of it, and almoſt the very words?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We deſire nothing of him but that he will tell us what words they ſaid when they owned it.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was the third time that they came in, that they owned it.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Why, what did they ſay?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellour required them to anſwer, whether they owned the Paper or no.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. What did they ſay then?

Mr. Blathwayt. As near as I can remember, His Grace and my Lords the Biſhops did own the Paper.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. What words did they own it in? tell the manner of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's this to the purpoſe?

Mr. Finch. Mr. Blathwayt, Did you take notes of what paſſed there?

Mr. Blathwayt. I anſwer, Sir, I did not take notes, for I attended the King at his Elbow, and did not take notes; Mr. Finch, you know the manner of the Council in ſuch caſes very well.

Mr. Att Gen. Then we ask you for the King, becauſe they ſhall not enflame People by ſuch an expreſſion, In what words did they own it, if you can remember?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have declared my memory as well as I can; when the other Clerks come to be examined, if they can tell any more, let them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we will have no Diſcourſe to enflame the World; Did the King promiſe or declare that no advantage ſhould be taken of their confeſſion?

L. C. Juſt. I would ask him that queſtion, What was the manner that my Lord Chancellour expreſt himſelf in to them, when they came in the third time?

Mr. Blathwayt. Aſſoon as my Lord Chancellor had required them to declare whether they owned that Paper, as well as I remember, His Grace took the Paper in his hand, and it was handed over, or ſhewed, to my Lords the Biſhops, and they owned and declared ſo, juſt as if they ſhould lay it before the Court, juſt ſo: I do not recollect my ſelf of all the circumſtances that paſſed, I only can tell you the ſubſtance.

Holding it forth to the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not remember what they ſaid particularly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sollicitour, I know well enough what they mean by the queſtion; I know they would fain poſſeſs the World with a belief that there was ſuch a promiſe made them, and yet they are proſecuted notwithſtanding that promiſe; therefore I do ask you, Mr. Blathwayt, and for the King's Honour I muſt ask it. Did the King make any Promiſe or Declaration, that no advantage ſhould be taken, or uſe made of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King did not make any Promiſe or Declaration that no advantage ſhould be taken, or uſe made of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He only put them upon it, whether they did own it or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath Did my Lord Archbiſhop own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes he did, and ſaid he writ it with his own Hand, and would not let his Clerk write it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he own the whole to be his Hand-writing, or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did every one of the Biſhops own their names ſubſcribed to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we pray now that it may be read.

L. C. Juſt. I ſuppoſe now they will be content it ſhould be read.

Mr. Finch. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to favour me one word, I think it cannot yet be read, and my Objection is this:—

L. C. Juſt. I thought you had made all your Objections before, as to the reading of it.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us: Here are two parts of this Information; the one is for conſulting and conſpiring to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative, and for that end they did make and write a ſeditious Libel; the other part is, that they did publiſh this ſeditious Libel; We are hitherto upon the firſt part, the making and writing of it; both parts are local; until they have proved the making and writing of it to have been in Middleſex, it is not Evidence upon this Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have proved it written and publiſhed in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. The contrivance and writing of a Libel is in itſelf penal, and they may be puniſhed for it, if they be found guilty. Now if they could give an undeniable Evidence concerning the publiſhing of it, that is nothing to this point; but if they ſhould not give ſuch Evidence, or any Evidence at all of the publication, yet if it be proved that it was written and contrived by them, they would be guilty for ſo much, if it be a Libel, and this we ſay is local as well as all the reſt: and therefore we inſiſt upon it, that the writing and contriving muſt as well be proved to be in Middleſex, as the publication, for all is local.

L. C. Juſt. There is no publiſhing yet proved.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is true, my Lord, here is nothing of a Publication yet, (with your Lordſhip's favour,) for their Anſwer to His Majeſty in Council was, that they did not publiſh it; all that is ſaid yet, is, that they owned the Paper to be their hands: My Lord, does the owning of that own that it was written in the County of Middleſex? or that it was contrived or made there? No ſurely, upon this Evidence the place is clearly at large: My Lord, this might have been done in the County of Surrey, or Somerſet, or any other County: Their Information is, that they did conſult and contrive to diminiſh the King's Prerogative at Weſtminſter in the County of Middleſex, and there they did write, write; and cauſe to be written, this Libel, and there they did publiſh it; ſuppoſe it ſhould be granted that it is proved that this is the Archbiſhop's Hand-writing, and theſe are their Names to it, is there any one Evidence that any thing of this was done in Middleſex? and, my Lord, that is the thing they are to prove.

Mr. Sommers. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, all matters of Crime are ſo local, that if it be not proved to be done in the County where it is laid, the Party accuſed is as innocent, as if he never had done the thing; and, with ſubmiſſion, it is the very point of the Information; that it be proved they are guilty of the Fact in the place where it is laid to be done.

L. C. Juſt. This is the ſame thing over and over again; but I am content to hear you, Mr. Sommers, at any time; I have told you my opinion about reading of the Paper already, if you'll have it again you may.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray good my Lord, ſpare us before it be read.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Mr. Pollixfen, you have not yet had the Directions of the Court for the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord when this Paper is read, which we pray it may be, we will anſwer their Objections, but at preſent we ſay, they are out of time.

Mr. Pollixfen. Good Lord, what a ſtrange thing is this! We object againſt the reading of it, and you'll anſwer us after it is read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, we have done enough to prove that this is a Paper owned by them in the County of Middleſex, and we pray it may be read.

L. Ch. Juſt. Truly I am of the ſame mind I was before, that it is too ſoon to make the Objection, and that the Paper ought to be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ſubmit to your Rule.

Mr. Pollixfen. If it be the Will of the Court, I have nothing to ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. My Lord, The Contrivance and Publication are both matters of Fact, and upon Iſſue joined the Jurors are Judges of the Fact, as it is laid in the Information; but how can they be Judges of a matter of Fact done in another County? and it muſt be preſumed, in favour of Innocence, not to be done in this County, but in another, except they prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are not yet ripe for arguing that point.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We are ſpeaking only to the Court now for the reading of this Paper, and the Jury are not Judges of that, whether the Paper ought to be read or no; that is merely a matter of Law, and under the direction of the Court; and therefore I pray, ſince it is now in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether that Paper ſhould be read, that you would pleaſe to order it to be read.

L.C. Juſt. I can only give you my own opinion, let my Brothers give theirs.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. There is no body againſt the reading of it, my Lord; I ſuppoſe my Brother Powell is not againſt its being read.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But they ſay the King's Council muſt make it out firſt, that the writing of it, and the conſpiring about it was in the County of Middleſex or there can be no Judgment, ſo much as to read it.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, If the Objection be ſaved to us, we ſhall not ſo much oppoſe the reading it, only we would not be ſurprized in point of time.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Nay, if they conſent to the reading, we have no reaſon to hinder it.

L. C. J. Brother, I believe they know well enough what they have to ſay for their Clients; let the Paper be read.

Clerk reads. The Humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury ——

Sir Robert Sawyer. Read the whole Petition; Pray, my Lord, that the whole may be read. Read the Top firſt, Sir; to whom it was directed.

L. C. J. Read the whole.

Clerk reads.

To the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The Humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province, now preſent with him, in behalf of themſelves and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſes.

Humbly ſheweth:

THat the great averſeneſs they find in themſelves to the diſtributing and publiſhing in all their Churches your Majeſties late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to your Majeſty, (our holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles and in her conſtant practice unqueſtionably loyal; and having (to her great Honour) been more than once publickly acknowledged to be ſo by your Gracious Majeſty,) nor yet from any want of due tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit, when that matter ſhall be conſidered and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation; but amongſt many other conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a Diſpencing Power, as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and in the beginning of your Majeſties Reign; and is a matter of ſo great moment and conſequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves parties to it, as the Diſtribution of it all over the Nation, and the ſolemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's Houſe, and in the time of his Divine Service, muſt amount to, in common and reaſonable Conſtruction:

Your Petitioners therefore moſt humbly and earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, that You will be graciouſly pleaſed not to inſiſt upon their Diſtributing and Reading your Majeſties ſaid Declaration:

And Your Petitioners (as in duty bound) ſhall ever pray, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall leave our Evidence here, and hear what they can object to it.

Mr. Finch. Have you no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We leave it here for the preſent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to ſee the Petition.

L. C. J. Shew it them.

(The Petition was ſhewn to the Jury.)

Mr.

Mr. Finch. But will you give no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you we'll leave it here, till we ſee what you ſay to it.

Mr. Finch. There is nothing that we ſhould ſay any thing to.

Mr. Att. Gen. Make your Advantage of it; if it be nothing, we can have nothing.

L. C. J. What ſay you for the Defendents, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, in ſhort, we ſay that hitherto they have totally failed, for they have not proved any Fact done by us in Middleſex, nor have they proved any Publication at all.

Sir Robert Sawyer. They have given no Evidence of any thing.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen ſpeak One at once, and then we ſhall underſtand the better what we hear.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, We ſay, they have given no Evidence of the Conſpiring, Writing, or publiſhing in Middleſex; Nay, as to the Publication, there is none at all proved.

Mr Finch. Here is no proof of any Publication, nor of the writing or making in Middleſex; ſo that there is no proof at all againſt my Lords, the Biſhops.

L. C. J. You heard what Mr. Blathwayt ſaid, they owned it in Middleſex.

Mr. Finch. That is not a Publication ſure, or any Evidence where it was done.

Mr. Serj Levinz. Suppoſe, my Lord, that I own in Middleſex, that I robb'd a man in Yorkſhire, will that make me guilty in Middleſex?

Mr. Att. Gen. But if you had ſtole a Horſe in Yorkſhire, and had that Horſe in Middleſex, and owned it, I doubt it would go hard with you in Middleſex?

Mr Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant thinks he has put a very home Compariſon, but we ſhall ſhew how little ſignificant it is by and by.

Mr. Serj Levinz. My Lord, in the firſt place we inſiſt upon it; here is no proof in this Caſe at all, as to the doing of any Fact at all in the County of Middleſex; in the next place, this Information and Petition do not agree; for they have brought an Information, and ſet forth, That my Lords the Biſhops under pretence of a Petition did make a Libel, and they have ſet forth no Petition at all, all the Petitionary part is omitted: If I will take part of a Man's Words, and not the whole, and make a Libel of that part, certainly that is very diſingenuous and injurious; For that part that I omit may alter the Sence of the whole. They here ought to ſet forth the Petition, with the Direction to the King, and the Prayer at the end, whereby it will appear what the whole is, and what was deſired by their Petition. But, my Lord, to make this matter a little more clear, whatſoever they ſay of its being my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand, we ſhall prove that if it were ſo, it could not be done in Middleſex; for we ſhall prove that my Lord of Canterbury hath not been in Middleſex for three or four Months before.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray let the Information be read, then you will ſee the variance.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is not the latter part (we acknowledge) in the Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There may be, and is, a ſic Continetur, and there is no Objection in that at all.

L. C. J. It is ſic Continetur, and that's——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The truth of it is, this Information has made a very deformed thing of it, has left it neither Head nor Tail; they ſtyle it a Petition, but it is without any Direction to any body, and without any Prayer for any thing; and without thoſe two it cannot be told what it is.

Mr. J. Allybone. Sir Rob. Sawyer, if I miſtake not, it is ſaid only under pretence of a Petition.

Sir Robert Sawyer. There may be more in the Paper, than in the Information, and if all were in, one part might explain another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So there may be more; and I wonder to hear that Objection from Sir Rob Sawyer, who has exhibited ſo many Informations for Libels in pieces taken out of Books.

Mr. Recorder. All that we alledge in the Information is contained in the Paper, and that's enough for our purpoſe; we are not bound to recite the whole.

L. Ch. J. Indeed I think it is no material Objection at all.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Truly I think it is very material in this Caſe; here's a Petition that is preferred to his Majeſty; take the whole Petition together, and, ſay they, it is a reaſonable Petition; chop off the Direction and the Prayer, and then here's nothing but the body of a Petition, without beginning or ending; or if a Man will ſay any thing concerning the King, and do it by way of Petition to himſelf, that will alter the Caſe mightily, from a Paper ſpread about, that ſhould contain only the body of a Petition, and nothing elſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray read that part of the Information.

Mr. Pollixfen. If ſo be there be an Information, and that Information charges a man with a pretended Petition, and the Evidence comes and proves a Petition both top and bottom, that is not the Petition in the Information; for that lacking the proper parts of a Petition, is called a pretended Petition, but that which is proved, is proved is a real one.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. My Lord, there is nothing in this Objection, as this Record hath it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to ſtate it on our ſide, as they have done on theirs, and it will be the better underſtood upon the reading: I hope it is not come to that paſs that they would have it, ſure theſe Gentlemen have not forgot altogether the practice that has been ſo frequent in this Court; if there be an Information for a Libel, is there any thing more frequent, than only to recite the material part? Sure they may ſay in ſuch a Libel is contained ſo and ſo, without ſetting forth the whole Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Tryals have we had here, wherein there has been only a Clauſe taken out of a Book? as particularly, Baxter's Bible, and Johnſon's Book, and all by vertue of a ſic continetur.

Mr. Finch. That comes not up to our Objection here.

Mr. J. Powell. Let us hear the Record read, and then we can judge of it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We pray, Sir, the Information may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are here upon all Occaſions chopp'd in upon, and I do not know how they come to take this Liberty; I am ſure other people had it not in former times, when theſe Gentlemen ſtood where we do; as ſoon as ever we offer to ſpeak, preſently there are two or three upon us.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Let me hear them, Mr. Attorney, make their Objection, and let the Record be read, and that will anſwer that Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as for that other thing, they come and tell us, we have ſet forth a Petition, we ſay no ſuch thing; in the Information we ſay, you compoſed a certain Libel pretenſu Petitionis, in which are contained ſuch and ſuch things; and now I pray let it be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little firſt; Take the Information as we have laid it, and I believe there are twenty Preſidents that I could give you in an inſtant of late days practice; ſo was the Information againſt Mr. Baxter, ſo was the Information againſt Mr. Johnſon, ſo was the Information againſt Doctor Eades, and ſo was the Information againſt Sir Samuel Barnardiſton. They are all in this form, ſic continetur; ſo that as for that matter, we are well enough. But here's another thing (ſay they,) You do not ſet out the Petition; we ſay, it is a Libel, and it is not the Name we rely on, but there is ſuch a Libel, ſo we in our Information call it; if it be not a Libel, then are they very innocent; and whether it be or no, is now in Judgment before your Lordſhip; but if it be as we ſay, then it is not the ſpeaking ill things in the body of a Petition, and then giving it a good Title, and concluding it with a good Prayer at the end of it; 'tis not, I ſay, any of theſe that will ſweeten this Crime, nor alter, nor alleviate it at all; if there be that which is Seditious and Libellous in the Body of it, call the Paper what you will, and ſmooth it with a Preamble, or a Concluſion, that will not make it any thing leſs a Libel; theſe things are plain and manifeſt: We ſay there is ſuch a thing done, a Libel made, pretenſu Petitionis, do you call it what you will; but we ſay, theſe and theſe things are a Libel upon the King and the Government: We have proved our Caſe, we have proved there was ſuch a Paper under their Hands, we have proved it was owned in Middleſex, and then we are in your Judgment, whether this be not Evidence ſufficient to convict the Defendents.

L. C. J. But they do make an Objection about the Writing and Contriving of it, that it is not proved to be in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, our Information does not go with a continued Clauſe, that they framed a Libel, ut ſequitur in hæc verba, but we only ſay, they made a Libel pretenſu Petitionis, and then we ſay, In quo quidem Libello continetur, ſo and ſo; we do not tie our ſelves up to a particular Recital of all that's in the Paper.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

Clerk Reads.

Ipſi iidem Willielmus Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis, (and the reſt) dicto decimo octavo die Maii, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc quarto ſupradicto vi & armis, &c. apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto illicite malitioſe ſeditioſe & ſcandaloſe quoddam falſum fictum pernitioſum & ſeditioſum Libellum in ſcriptis de eodem Domino Rege & Regali Declaratione & Ordine predictis pretenſu Petitionis fabricaverunt compoſuerunt & ſcripſerunt & fabricari componi & ſcribi cauſaverunt, & eundem falſum fictum malitioſum pernitioſum & ſeditioſum Libellum per ipſos prædictos Willielmum Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem, (and the reſt) manibus ſuis propriis reſpectivè ſubſcriptum die anno & loco ultimo mentionatis in præſentia dicti Domini Regis nunc vi & armis, &c. publicaverunt & publicari cauſaverunt; In quo quidem falſo fictо malitioſo pernitioſo & ſeditioſo Libello continetur The humble Petition of, &c.——

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is quite another thing; that which is produced from that which is in the Information, by this leaving out a part; for here is the Prayer omitted, and the Direction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I think there is nothing in the Caſe, but this mighty Objection of the County; and, ſays Mr. Serj. Levinz, if my Country-man Confeſſes in this County, that he ſtole a Horſe in Yorkſhire, you ſhall not try him in London, but in Yorkſhire, becauſe by his own Confeſſion the Fact is in another County.

Mr. Serj Levinz. I did not put the Caſe ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But take the Fact of the Caſe as it is here; my Lord, the Biſhops come in Middleſex and own this Paper, my Lord Archbiſhop owns it to be his Writing, and the reſt of the Biſhops own their Hands; if they had done as Mr. Serjeant's Yorkſhire-man did, and ſaid, we own we did this, but it was in the County of York, then it would have been like the Caſe that theſe Gentlemen put; but here we are in a plain Caſe of another nature; my Lord Archbiſhop comes here in Middleſex, and owns that he writ the Paper, the other Biſhops they ſigned it; now it does lie certainly in their knowledge where this was done, and they ſhould have declared then; but they have owned it as their Paper, and the ſigning and writing of it, which is enough for us.

Mr. Finch. I own this to be my Paper, therefore I writ it in the County of Middleſex; Is that a Conſequence? I am very glad they are no better at their Inferences.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They have owned the thing in Middleſex, that we inſiſt upon, and they have not owned it with any qualifications; if they had ſaid, it was done in another County, then you muſt have taken it to be as they ſaid it; then if they do not diſtinguiſh the place of the Fact, your Lordſhip can only take it to be where they owned it, it would be ſuppoſed to be done in that place, for when they owned the Fact, it will be ſuppoſed, if they do not ſay where it was done, that it was done where they own'd it, becauſe the King can't tell where it was done; but the Evidence comes out of their own mouths, they may give ſatisfaction where it was done, for they know it; and till that be done, the Suppoſition is againſt them, that it was done in the place where they owned it; and that is a plain Caſe, whereſoever a man is to ſpeak of his own Fact. Indeed if I publiſh the Writing of another perſon which is Libellous, then there muſt be a particular proof of the place, becauſe it is not my own Fact; but if thoſe Lords publiſh a Libel that they make themſelves, it is their own knowledge, and in their own power to tell where it was done, becauſe it is their own Act and Deed: it is true, if my Lords had publiſhed a Paper that was contrived by ſome of their Council, it had been ſome Excuſe, and they muſt have only ſuffered for that Publication in the place where it was done; but they are here for Writing this they have owned in this County, and therefore it lies upon them to prove it done elſewhere. There is another Objection, my Lord, made, That here is no Evidence of a Publication; my Lord, I take it to be a Publication in it ſelf; Is it poſſible for a man to write a Libel? to ſet his Name? and part with it? and it coming to the hands of the King, that this is not a Publication? It is not their ſaying, we did not publiſh it, that will excuſe them; for can there be a greater Publication in it ſelf than this, when men have ſet their Hands to it, and owned their Names? what makes the Fact in this Caſe? If a Deed be denied to be factum of ſuch a one, what is the proof of it, but ſetting the Hand and Seal, and the Delivery? There is owning the Paper, and ſetting their Hands is a Publication in it ſelf, and therefore they cannot make any ſuch Objection. My Lord, if there were occaſion, we have Authorities enough to this purpoſe, and we will give them ſcope enough if they will argue this matter; and if they have any Evidence, we deſire to hear what they can ſay to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. As for this matter of Fact, my Lord, if I take it right, they do not Controvert the Publiſhing, but (ſay they) pray make it out, where it was written or compoſed; I confeſs this would be a buſineſs worth the while, for all perſons that act in this manner, and are concerned in making of Libels, to underſtand for their advantage. No man doubts in the matter of Treaſon, but it is local; then put the Caſe a man is found in Middleſex with a treaſonable Paper in his Pocket, I do not make a Compariſon, as if this was ſuch a Paper, I hope I am not ſo underſtood, but I only put it as a Caſe, and that the Law is ſo, is beyond all Controverſie; then the man is indicted here in Middleſex, for framing and compoſing ſuch a Treaſonable Libel, and he comes to be tryed, and (ſays he) Pray prove where I made and compoſed it, for though you found it in my Pocket, in the County of Middleſex, yet I might do it in the County of York; and upon my word, this had been a very good Defence for Mr. Sidney, who was indicted, convicted, and attainted, for making a Treaſonable Paper which was found in his Study; might not he have put the ſame Objection? might not Mr. Sidney have ſaid (it was great pity he did not underſtand it) pray prove where I did it, for I did it elſewhere than in this County. —

Mr. Sol. Gen. He did ſay it, I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I would not hear any Anſwer given to this, for it would make the King in a very woful Caſe: Here is a Paper that is found in the County of Middleſex, and this is there owned by you to be written and ſubſcribed by you; pray do you prove it, that it was written elſewhere.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, we will do it, we will be governed by Mr. Attorney for once.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We will prove that my Lord Archbiſhop was not in Middleſex, in ſeven Months before; and truly I think Mr. Attorney's Caſe of a Paper found about a Man, or in his Cuſtody, will not come up to our Caſe; for was this Paper found about us, ſurely that is not pretended.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Your Lordſhip ſees by the very frame of the Petition, that this Petition which they call a Libel, was made after the King's Order concerning reading this Declaration: Now we ſhall prove that my Lord Archbiſhop, whoſe Hand-writing they prove this to be, was not out from Lambeth-Houſe in two Months before, nor till he was before the Council.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Which was long after that time when it was made.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. So that this cannot be written in the County of Middleſex.

Call Francis Nichols.

Mr. Nicholls was ſworn.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you remember the 18th of May laſt?

Mr. Nicholls. Yes, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray how was it with my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury at that time, and before that, did he go abroad?

Mr. Nicholls. My Lord, I am very ſure that my Lord his Grace of Canterbury, whom I have ſerved in his Bed-Chamber this ſeven Years, never ſtirred out of the Gate of Lambeth-Houſe ſince Michaelmas laſt.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Till when, Mr. Nicholls?

Mr. Nicholls. Not till the time he was ſummoned before the Council.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Now I hope we have given them a full proof that it could not be in Middleſex.

Call Thomas Smith.

Mr. Smith was not examined.

Mr. Finch. Truly, my Lord, I think that what we have proved or what Proof we further offer of my Lord of Canterbury's not being in Middleſex for ſo long a time, is ex abundanti, and we need it not; for with humble ſubmiſſion, in point of Law, it is incumbent upon them that are to prove the Charge in the Information, to prove where it was done; becauſe, the Locality of it is part of the thing, they ought to prove it; in it's nature it is local, there is a Place aſſigned in the Information, and unleſs they prove it was done in the Place that they have laid, they have not proved the Charge in the Information. Now, my Lord, they have not made Proof of that, and for proof of Publication, I think they have offered none to your Lordſhip, they never did call it ſo yet, and truly I never did hear or know that the owning of their Hands at the Council-Table was a Publication of a Libel; it is owning the Writing, but it is not an owning where the Writing was made; but where it was written, and where it was made, is of neceſſity to be proved; before the Charge upon a Record, in a Court of Juſtice, can be ſaid to be made out, it is a Local Charge, and in Juſtice, the locality muſt be proved, or the Information fails; my Lord, they have offered no Proof to it, and they have not yet gone to the ſecond part of the Information, for as to the Publication of it, there is not a tittle of Proof offered, but only the owning of their Hands upon their Examination at the Council, and no Man did ever yet think that the anſwering a Queſtion, and owning a Paper at the Council-Table, upon a Queſtion put by the King himſelf, was a Publication of a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Pray, my Lord, hear me a Word to that; Though the thing be never ſo local, yet there muſt be ſome place where a thing that was done, was done: Then if nothing elſe appears, but what was done in Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, unleſs they ſhew the contrary, that muſt be the very place where it was done.

Mr. Sollicitor General. Here is a great deal of Prevarication in this matter, and I would obſerve to your Lordſhip how they do uſe the Court ill in it; pray, my Lord, What is it we are upon? we are proving that theſe ſeven Lords, the Biſhops ſigned this Paper; and I think we have proved it ſufficiently out of their own Mouths: But (ſay they) it was not ſigned in the County of Middleſex, but in the County of Surry. All this is but Imagination, and they would have the Court

Court to imagine it too; For how do they prove it? They would have your Lordſhip and the Jury believe, That it was ſigned elſewhere, becauſe my Lord Archbiſhop has not been out of his Houſe in ſome Months before; it is all but Inference, and Argument, and Imagination. But ſtill Gentlemen, do you anſwer what I objected to you? Does it not lie in their Power to ſhew where it was ſigned? Here are ſix more, beſides the Archbiſhop, where was it ſigned by them? Here are ſix of the Biſhops, that it does not appear where they ſigned it; but they confeſs at White-Hall, in Middleſex, that they did ſet their Hands——

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Ay, they did ſo, and what then?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, and ay too; if they did ſo, the Preſumption and Common Intendment upon ſuch Evidence is, That it was done in the Place where it was owned; and the rather, for that Reaſon that I ſaid before, That it lies in their Knowledge, and therefore it is incumbent upon them to prove, That it was not in the County of Middleſex: So that this Objection I take rather to be an Invention of the Council than the Truth of the Fact, becauſe they that can make this out, do not. And as to what they ſay of my Lord Archbiſhop, That he has not been out of Doors for ſo long, who can prove ſuch a thing? Certainly my Lord was able to come, for any thing that appears; he has been here twice, and he was able to come to the Council-Board: But when all is done, my Lord Archbiſhop is certainly able to put this matter out of doubt, for he may eaſily prove it, if the Fact be ſo, and that will ſatisfie the Court and every Body, That it was ſigned by him at Lambeth; if he deſigns to deal ſincerely with your Lordſhip and the Court, and the Jury; but certainly it is not to be proved by a Circumſtance, ſuch a one as this is, but he ought to give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction about this Fact: He ought to ſay, 'Tis true, I did ſign it, but it was at Lambeth-Houſe; that indeed would be a downright Stroke to us: But to go upon a Suppoſition, That becauſe my Lord Archbiſhop was not out of his Houſe for ſo long together, therefore they are all not Guilty, is a very hard and foreign Inference. My Lord, there's another Matter that they inſiſt upon; and that is about the Publication, that is as plain as any thing can be, that here is a full Proof of a Publication, for if the Paper be Libellous, where-ever that Paper is, that is a Publiſhing, where-ever the Paper travels, how far ſoever it goes, it is a Publication of it by theſe Perſons that ſigned it: I believe no body thinks that this ſhould fly into the King's hand, but ſome body brought it to him; and certainly, my Lord, if your Opinion ſhould be, that this Paper is Libellous, then where-ever it is, it is a Publiſhing, which is our offence; where-ever it is found, it is a Publication; for there is the miſtake of theſe Gentlemen, they fancy, that unleſs there was a Publick Delivery of this Paper abroad, nothing can be a Publication; but I rely upon it, they ſetting their Names to it, made it their Paper; and where-ever it was afterwards found, that did follow the Paper where-ever it went, and was a Publication of it; it was in their Power, being their own Contrivance; it was made and formed by themſelves, and no body will believe, when it was their own Hands that they put to it, that any body elſe could have any power over it; for ought appears, no body elſe was at work about it, and when there were ſo many Learned Prelates that had ſigned ſuch a Paper, no one can believe they would let it go out of their Hands, but by their Conſent and Direction: Is not this a Proof of the Publiſhing? Do they give your Lordſhips any Evidence that they had ſtifled this Paper? If they had ſo done, they had ſaid ſomething, but will any body believe that this thing was done in vain? Can any body aſſign a Reaſon why ſo ſolemn a thing as this ſhould be done to no end and purpoſe? Why a Paper ſhould be framed that rails at the King's two Declarations? Why a Paper that gives Reaſons why they could not read it in their Churches, and ſigned with ſuch Solemnity by all theſe Noble Lords, we ſubmit this to you in point of Law, and the Law is plain in it, that if this Paper be Libellous, and it is found in the County of Middleſex, there is a Publication of that Libel. I ſhall mention to your Lordſhip that Caſe of Williams, which is reported in the ſecond Part of Roll's Reports, Mr. Finch made uſe of it in the Caſe of Sidney; it was the great Caſe relied upon, and that guided and governed that Caſe (as I apprehend) from the Verdict and Judgment that was given in it. This Caſe was 15 Jacobi. It ſeems Williams was a Barriſter of the Inner Temple, and it ſeems being an high Catholick for Opinion and Judgment, he was expelled the Houſe, and he being ſo expelled (being a ſort of a Vertuoſo) wrote a Book called Baalam's Aſs, and therein he makes uſe of the Prophet Daniel, and he makes Application of it according to his own particular fancy. He writes there, That this World was near at an end; and he ſaid, Thoſe ill days were come that that Prophecy ſpoke of, and becauſe of the Impurity of Prince, and Prieſt, and People, and other things that hapned, thoſe were the worſt of days, and therefore the laſt; and that certainly we had the worſt Prince that ever was in the World, when he wrote this Book, what does he do? He was a little more cloſe than my Lords the Biſhops, and pins it up, or ſeals it up, and it was brought to the King; and what is this more than the Caſe before your Lordſhip? They indeed ſay, I do this by way of Advice to the King; ſo, ſaid he, I do this by way of Advice to the King, for God forbid that any of this ſhould happen to the King, and ſo what he does was by way of Advice, and he prayed God to avert it from him; here was as good a Prayer as there is in this Paper; and there was a good deſign, he made uſe of the Prophet Daniel, and applied his words. Well, what was done upon it? This was never publiſhed; for the Queſtion was before the Court, whether this Sealing of it up, and not delivering it to any other body were a Publication, the Court was of Opinion, that the very Writing of it was a Publication; they did not value the delivery of it to the Prince, but it was proved he Writ it, and that made it Treaſon. My Lord, we have Caſes enough in my Lord Hobart for this Matter, Sir Baptiſt Hick's Caſe, and my Lady Hatton's Caſe, there was only a Letter ſealed up and delivered to the Party.

L. C. J. You need not trouble your ſelf about that Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Caſe then be thus, I take it, it will turn upon this Fact; they have given your Lordſhip no Proof where this Paper was Signed by them; here are ſeven Perſons that had had a hand in it, and here is only one Perſon whom they have inſiſted upon to be infirm, and kept his Houſe for a great while together. We ſay the Publiſhing follows the Libel wherever it goes; the Libel is in the County of Middleſex, they have confeſſed it in the County of Middleſex, and they did not diſtinguiſh when it was done. Then if they will not diſtinguiſh upon the Evidence, no Man ought to diſtinguiſh, but ought to preſume it was done in that place where they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did not apprehend we were got ſo far, that they oppoſed us in the Publication.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Yes we did, for you have given no Evidence of it.

Mr. Att Gen. Surely, my Lord, for that we have given a ſufficient Evidence, and they have given ſome Proof of it, as to my Lord Archbiſhop; that becauſe he had not been from Lambeth, therefore he did not publiſh, nor could cauſe it to be publiſhed; for your Lordſhip ſees by this Information, they are not only to anſwer the Publicavit, but alſo the Publicari cauſavit; for do you doubt, Gentlemen, of the Law in this Caſe, that if I compoſe a Libel in Surrey, for Example, and ſend a Perſon over into Middleſex, I am not Guilty of the Publiſhing?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not your Caſe, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Finch. That were clear if it were ſo, but it is not ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Archbiſhop's Caſe ſignifies nothing, if we ſhew it was publiſhed in Middleſex, and you give no Evidence to the contrary but it might be there; and I am ſure as to the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, there is no Evidence at all given. Here is a Petition that we ſay is a Libel, they it may be will make that a Queſtion; this is delivered to the King's own Hand in the County of Middleſex, and there are as many Caſes as any one Man can name, that this amounts to a Publication by the Party; for if I ſend a Letter by the Poſt ſealed, that no body can ſee but the Party himſelf, and he that writ it, it is adjudged over and over again, it is a Libel.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. That you need not labour, Mr. Attorney, for that's the Caſe of Williams of Eſſex; but how do you apply it to the Caſe now before us?

Mr. Att. Gen. That's an Anſwer to their Objection as to the Publication.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. But what ſay you to the firſt part, you have not proved that it was written in Middleſex.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is the Caſe of Barrow and Lewellin in Hobart, and likewiſe the Caſe of Sir Baptiſt Hicks, which is reported both in Hobart and in Popham; and in Popham, towards the end of the Caſe, there is a remarkable Paſſage. Says that Caſe, If it ſhould not be puniſhable at the Suit of the King, there would be no Remedy; for the Party cannot bring an Action, becauſe he can be no Witneſs for himſelf, and it is only known betwixt them two; but a Witneſs for the King he may be, to prove his own Receipt of the Letter, and the Party's Hand.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. You need not labour that Point, I'll tell you, Mr. Attorney; for the Law is very clear in that Point, I think, if you bring it home to your Caſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then here's the Caſe in ſhort, my Lord; That my Lords the Biſhops have cauſed to be made and written this Petition, they are made Parties to it by ſetting their Names, and this is a continued Act; whatſoever is written there is my Lord Archbiſhop's Writing, wherever it goes, as I'll put a Caſe that's very well known. If I take away Goods from a Man in the County of Cumberland, and I am found with them in the County of Middleſex, it is a continued Act, and makes all but one Felony, and I ſhall be tried here in Middleſex for it; If a Man write a thing in one County, and it is ſent and diſperſed in another County, that ſtill continues to be his Fact, though it may be the firſt part was not in the ſame County with the other; but ſuppoſe all this while that part ſhould not affect my Lord of Canterbury, the cauſing it to be publiſhed does.

Mr. J. Powel. Do you think, Mr. Attorney, that writing in one County is ſuch a continued Act, that he may be ſaid to write it in another County?

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir I take it, where there is a complicated Crime of Writing and Publiſhing a Libel, and the beginning of it is in one County, and the carrying it on is in another, that is a continued Act, and may be tried in either County.

L. C. J. It is all one Act of Libelling (as they ſay.)

Mr. J. Holloway. In Caſes of Felony 'tis ſo, taking in one County, and being found with the Goods in another, it is Felony in either County.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. But in that Caſe they are two Felonies; for it is Robbery in the one County, and but bare Felony in the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppoſe that my Lords the Biſhops ſigned this Paper in another County, and my Lord Archbiſhop conſents to have it ſent into Middleſex, is not this a cauſing it to be publiſhed in another County?

Mr. J. Powel. Yes, it may be, if you prove his Conſent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſuppoſe further, which may very well conſiſt with my Lord Archbiſhop's Evidence of his not being out of Lambeth in ſo long time, the reſt of the Biſhops might ſign it in Middleſex, or it may be in that Place; and then they carry it by my Lords conſent over hither, into this County, is not this a cauſing it to be publiſhed? the Delivery with his Conſent certainly is a Proof of that, for our Information goes two ways, for Making, Contriving, Writing and Publiſhing, that's one: And then, for cauſing it to be Made, Contrived and Publiſhed, that's the other: And if I prove that he cauſed it to be publiſhed, he may be found Guilty as to that part, and not Guilty as to the other; for the Information is not ſo entire, but that the King has his choice, if the Archbiſhop had not ſigned it, or written it, but had cauſed it to be publiſhed, he may be found guilty of ſo much: But if he be Guilty of any one of theſe things, it is enough; and if he be Guilty of none of the other things laid in the Information; yet if he be Guilty of cauſing it to be publiſhed, by his conſenting that the reſt of the Biſhops ſhould do it, that will be enough to maintain this Information. Then, my Lord, is there any Evidence brought againſt what we have proved, That he did not conſent?

Mr. Juſt. Powel. But where was this Conſent of his given, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, good Sir, give me your Favour, I think I am in a plain Caſe.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. So you are truly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, good Sir, you ought to make out the Locality, if you'l take advantage of it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. That's very well indeed, this is the firſt time I ever heard that Doctrine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I cannot help that, but certainly the Law is plain, we have proved there was ſuch a Fact as this was done; and they do not go about to prove that it was done elſewhere than where we have laid it; for if they did, their Witneſſes wonld be croſs-examined by us; and then we know what would become of them, then the Truth of the matter would come out: Therefore I would make all this conſtare. The Archbiſhop might be at Lambeth, and yet Guilty in Middleſex, by his Concurrence with what was done in Middleſex: And I ſay, my Lord, this is natural, upon the Evidence that has been given, becauſe when they were interrogated at the Council, and confeſſed the Paper to be theirs, they made no ſuch Explanation of their Confeſſion, of which they can make any Advantage in their Defence. Here has been no Body produced that proves any thing to be done out of Middleſex; ſo that ſtill if he's Guilty of the Fact proved, he muſt be Guilty in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. And it does not appear, in this Caſe, but that my Lord Archbiſhop might write the ſame thing in Middleſex, tho' he was at Lambeth ſo long as the Witneſs ſpeaks of.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. How do you make out that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Baldock. He might do it when he came over to the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He muſt do it after it was preſented.

Mr. S. Baldock. Might he not be ſo long here on this ſide the Water, as to make ſuch a ſhort thing as this, before it was delivered? half a quarter of an Hour would have done it.

L. C. J. That's a thing not to be preſumed, Brother, eſpecially ſince he is proved not to have been in Middleſex for ſo long together.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Serjeant is mightily miſtaken, for it is not pretended, That it was delivered at the time when the Archbiſhop, and my Lords the Biſhops, were before the Council.

Mr. Recorder. Either the Making and Contriving, or the Publiſhing of this Libel will do upon this Information, for they ſhall be taken to be one continued complicated Act; and then the Party may be tryed in either of the Counties, as the King will; as in the Caſe of Treaſon, it has been over and over again adjudged: That if a Man does one Act of Treaſon in one County, and afterwards goes into another County, and does another Act of Treaſon, the Jury of either of the Counties may enquire of the Fact done in the other. If they then ſhould take thoſe two as ſeveral Acts, they were ſeveral Offences, and they may be found Guilty of the one and acquitted of the other; but if they are taken as one continued Act, they are but one Offence, and the Jury of either County may try it. If then, in this Caſe, the Jury of this County may take notice of the Publication, which was here, as certainly they may, if they will agree, as the Law certainly is; That the Writing of a Letter will be a ſufficient Publication, if the matter be Libellous. And there are multitudes of Precedents for that; and that the bare ſetting of a Man's Hand has been adjudged to be a Publication: Then give me leave, my Lord, to bring it to a ſimilar Caſe; Suppoſe a Man write a ſcandalous Letter from London, to a Judge or Magiſtrate in Exeter; and ſends it by the Poſt, and the Letter is received from the Poſt at Exeter, and there opened; would any Man make a Queſtion whether the Gentleman that ſent the Letter may not be indicted and proſecuted for a Libel at Exeter, where the Libel was received?

Mr. J. Powell. There's no queſtion of that, Mr. Recorder; that comes not home to the Fact in our Caſe, undoubtedly in the Caſe that you put, the Law is as you ſaid, but it is far different from this Caſe.

L. C. J. There's no Body oppoſes the Publication, but the framing of it where it was made.

Mr. Recorder. Suppoſing then the Party were at Exeter; and he were interrogated before the Magiſtrate, Whether that were his Hand or no? and he ſhould own it to be his Hand; can any body doubt whether his owning that to be his Hand, would be a ſufficient Evidence to prove a Publication?

Mr. Juſt. Powell. But is that any Evidence where it was written? Or if it be not proved that it was received at Exeter, would that be a Proof of a Publication at Exeter?

L. C. J. They do not deny the Publication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We do deny that there was any Publication; and they have proved no place where it was made.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are not for turning my Lords the Biſhops out of the way of Proof, that is uſual in ſuch Caſes; let them take it if they will, That this was contrived and made in Surrey. But can they publiſh it in Middleſex, without committing an Offence? and that is it we ſtand upon: We are not for laying a greater Load upon my Lords the Biſhops than our Proof will anſwer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We thank you for your Complement, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a fair way, of interrupting us when we are ſpeaking? Durſt any one have ſerved you ſo when you were in the King's Service? We would make our Duty as eaſie as we can to my Lords the Biſhops; and it may be eaſier than other Men would have made it. But my Lord, let it be a doubtful Caſe, that we cannot tell which County it was made and contrived in, if it were made and contrived in another County; yet when they brought it into Middleſex, there was a Publication in Middleſex; and if my Lord of Canterbury conſented to it, and if he cauſed it to be publiſhed, how can any Body ever get him off from that cauſing of it to be publiſhed? Here is a Paper that muſt be ſuppoſed to be my Lord Archbiſhops Paper: Now either the World muſt look upon it to be an Impoſture put upon my Lords the Biſhops, or a real Paper made by them. If it were an Impoſture and an Affront put upon the Biſhops, they ought to make it out for their own Vindication, and to prove themſelves Innocent: If they do that, they do well, and they ought to have Satisfaction made them by thoſe that have ſo highly injured them; and the King cannot be better pleaſed, I am ſure, than to find them ſo: But if Men will look one way and act another, they muſt expect to be dealt with accordingly. Will any Man that has heard this Evidence, and ſees that theſe Gentlemen will not go the right way to work to prove their own Innocence, believe them to be not Guilty? 'Tis plain they contrived it and ſigned it; for can any one imagine that they ſet their Hands to a Paper that was not formed and contrived by themſelves? then let it go, That this was done in another County, and we cannot puniſh the Writing of it in this County; yet ſtill they are Guilty of cauſing it to be publiſhed in this County, and for that we may puniſh them here: We will be content with having that found that we have proved, which certainly is an Offence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We oppoſe that, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You oppoſe it, I know you'l oppoſe common Senſe, we don't ſpeak to you, we ſpeak to the Court; we are content with what is plain, and do not deſire to inſiſt upon any ſtrained Conſtruction; we ſay this is Natural Evidence for us; If this thing be a Libel, as we ſay it is, then the cauſing it to be publiſhed, is an Offence: The Publication we ſay was here in Middleſex, and of that there is a clear Evidence, becauſe it was found there, and came from the King's Hand, to whom it was directed, and it could not come to the King's Hand out of their Cuſtody, without their Conſent: This (we ſay) is a clear Evidence of cauſing it to be publiſhed let the reſt go as it will, becauſe we will take the eaſieſt part of the Caſe, and not go upon Strains.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. The greateſt Queſtion is, I think, now come to the Publiſhing——

L. C. J. The Court is of Opinion, that its coming to the King is a publiſhing.

Mr. J. Powel. Ay, my Lord, if it be proved to be done by them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Before the Court deliver their Opinion, we deſire to be heard.

L. C. J. Brother, you ſhall be heard in good time, but let them make an end on the other ſide, and when the King's Council have done, we'l hear you.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, upon the Queſtion of Publiſhing, it has been inſiſted upon, and the Court ſeems to be very much of the ſame Opinion; That the Writing of it is a Publiſhing: That it is without Controverſie, if the Writing of it fell out to be in Middleſex, where the Information is laid; but that they would not have to be ſo by Argument, becauſe the Archbiſhop had kept in at Lambeth ſo long. But ſuppoſe, that it were ſo as they would have it; that is only as to the Archbiſhop, he being the Writer of it, but yet notwithſtanding that, the other ſix might ſubſcribe it in Middleſex, taking it, that there is ſuch a Face in their Argument as they would have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will lay no greater load on the other ſix than we do upon my Lord Archbiſhop, and we ſay they are all Guilty of the Publication in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir, ſpare me; this Paper was in the Archbiſhops Cuſtody and Power, he taking of it himſelf; and regularly it could not have come out of his Cuſtody, in common Suppoſition, but it muſt come with his Conſent. It was afterwards in the Power of the other ſix, they had it to ſubſcribe; where the Subſcription was non conſtat, they it may be can prove it themſelves, but I will only deduce this Argument; That if it after comes into Middleſex, it muſt be taken by preſumption to be ſubſcribed by them there and publiſhed, it muſt taken by Preſumption ſo to be.

L. C. J. No Brother, we ought not to do any thing by Preſumption here.

Mr. J. Powel. No, no, by no means, we muſt not go upon Preſumptions but Proofs.

L. C. J. I will not preſume it to be made in Middleſex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But it is proved to be publiſhed in Middleſex.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, with Submiſſion, there is no Evidence of the Publication.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Court is to judge of.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, what Inſtance of a Publication have they given?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court has heard the Evidence, we leave it there.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was it their owning and acknowledging it was their Hands, when the King asked them the Queſtion at the Council-Table? Surely the King's Council won't pretend that was a Publication, when it was done at the King's Command; it was certainly the King that publiſhed it then, and not my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well ſaid.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Don't you remember that, when Mr. Blathwayt ſaid the King gave it to be read, and it was ſhewed to the Biſhops?

L. C. J. I remember what Evidence Mr. Blathwayt gave of the Paſſages at the Council-Board very well; and I know what Mr. Attorney did preſs about the King's promiſing to take no advantage.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Attorney is on the other ſide, he did not preſs it.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer (I mean), I beg both your Pardons, Gentlemen, I think I have done Injury to you both.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we ſay there is no Evidence at all, that ever this was ſent to the King by the Archbiſhop, or any of my Lords the Biſhops: And as for the Caſes that they have put, they might have put five hundred Caſes, and all nothing to the purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So they might, and done juſt as others had done before them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And ſo are theſe; for here is the Queſtion, We are in a Caſe, where the Publication is that which makes it a Crime: Now I would have them (if they can) put me any ſuch Caſe, and then apply it to this; in Williams's Caſe, the Queſtion is quite otherwiſe, and ſo in any Caſe of Treaſon it muſt be; where-ever there is an Overt Act proved, it is the Treaſonable Intention, and the ill Mind of the Traytor that is the Crime, and the Treaſon (the Overt Act) is only to be the Evidence of it: In that Caſe of Williams, with Submiſſion, my Lord, the Publication was not at all neceſſary, but the very ſecreteſt Act that could be done by him (if it were an Act) is an evidence of the Mind, and ſo the ſending of the Book to the King himſelf, though no body elſe did ſee it, was an Evidence of the Crime of Treaſon, yet it could not be called a Publication. But in the other Caſe of Sir Baptiſt Hicks, which was in the Star-Chamber, about ſending a Letter of Challenge, it was plainly reſolved that it was no Publication of the Letter, and that was not the ground of the Judgment given againſt him there, that it was the Publication of a Libel, but the very Fact was a particular Offence; for (ſaid the Court there) if you will ſend a Letter to a private Man, and that is a Letter that will provoke him to break the the Peace, that is an Offence puniſhable in the Star-Chamber; but that is not the Reaſon which was alledged, becauſe no Action will lie for want of Proof, but quite the contrary; becauſe they may produce the Porter or Party that brought it, and prove it that it came from this Man's Hands; and I do not queſtion but that in the King's Bench at this Day, if a Man will write a Letter privately to provoke another Man to fight, there will lie an Information, but not for a Libel; for there it will be neceſſary for to make an Offence, that there may be a Publication; for that is the very form of the Crime, and upon that ground were all thoſe Judgments againſt Libels in the Star-Chamber. My Lord, I agree to write a Letter to the King of another Perſon, or to make a Petition to the King concerning another Perſon, as of my Lord Chancellor, or the Judges, or the like, to complain to the King of them ſcandalouſly, with provoking and reviling Language, that is a Publication; and ſo if I write a Letter to one Man of another; if there be Scandal in a Letter, that is a Publication of a Libel; and that is the difference that has been always taken; where it is eſſential to make it a Libel, that there be a Publication, ſuch a Publication muſt be proved, and the delivery of a Letter to a Man that concerns himſelf, is no Publication, but in this caſe they have not ſo much as proved that it was delivered to the King.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's leave, I take it, that they have given no manner of Evidence of a Publication; to ſay, the writing and ſubſcribing of their Names to a Paper, is a Publication of that Paper, is ſuch a Doctrine truly as I never heard before; ſuppoſing this Paper had lain in my Study, ſubſcribed by me, but never went further; would this have been a Publication? They never ſaid any ſuch thing. As to Algernoon Sidney's Caſe, there was no colour for it, that it ſhould a Publication; but it was an Overt Act of Treaſon to compoſe ſuch a Book; They have proved by our Confeſſion here, that we have ſubſcribed this Paper, they would take it now, that therefore it muſt be preſumed we ſent this to the King, and ſo ſurmiſe us into an Information for making and publiſhing a Libel, which we ſent to the King; but they do not prove it at all: My Lord, there are a thouſand ways that it might come into Middleſex, and perhaps come to the King's Hands too, without our Knowledge of Delivery; and ſure you will not preſume theſe Noble Perſons without Evidence to be guilty of ſuch an Offence as this is ſuggeſted to be; ſo that, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, 'tis impoſſible for you to find this a Publication in Middleſex; and for the other thing, (the writing this Paper) they that would make it an Offence, muſt prove where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, The Anſwer that I ſhall give to what has been ſaid on the other ſide, is very ſhort; the Caſes that have been cited are all Law, but not one tittle to this purpoſe: In Sir Baptiſt Hicks's Caſe, and Williams's Caſe, it was proved they all ſent them to the Places whither they were directed; but is there a tittle of Proof that theſe Biſhops ſent it here? In all thoſe Caſes, they muſt ſend it either by a Porter or a Carrier, and they ſend it as their own Act, and when it comes there, by their ſending, that is ſufficient Proof of their Act in the place whither it is ſent: And for Sidney's Caſe, there was Treaſon in the very Libel and Book that he made; and he was not indicted for publiſhing, but for Treaſon in the place where it was found, becauſe it was found in his Poſſeſſion: But was this ever in my Lord Archbiſhop's Poſſeſſion in Middleſex, or the reſt of the Biſhops, and were they publiſhing of it? if it had, then it had been their Act clearly: But that is the thing wherein they are defective, that they do not prove that my Lords the Biſhops ſent or brought it here; but upon the Queſtion asked them by the King, they acknowledged it to be their Hands: So that my Lord there is no proof of any Fact done here, but an Acknowledgement of a Fact done, no Body knows where, upon the King's Queſtion here in Middleſex; Is that any Proof of this Information?

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word on the ſame ſide, let us ſee what the Evidence is. The Evidence is this, That the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Biſhops owned their Hands to it: This is the Effect of the Evidence, and all that is to prove the Forming and Making a Libel in Middleſex, and the Publication of that Libel. And what is therefore inferred from thence? Why, having proved that the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Biſhops owned their Hands: Therefore, Firſt the Biſhops made this Libel in Middleſex. Secondly, they brought it to the Council-Table, and publiſhed it at the Council-Table, or elſe there is no proof at all: For here is nothing of Evidence given of any Fact, but becauſe they acknowledged it, therefore they made it, therefore they gave it to the King in Middleſex: This were good Evidence if they had had the Help of a Suppoſition to make it good; but they want that, nor muſt any ſuch thing be admitted; but I think they are ſuch groſs falſe Conſequences, that I doubt not you'll be of Opinion, Here's no proof of a Publication in Middleſex, and then there is no proof at all againſt my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Pollixfen. I muſt confeſs I hear them ſay two Acts prove a Publication in this Caſe; the one is, the Writing of the Libel, and the Subſcribing. If ſo, then I think upon the Evidence that has been given, the Court muſt needs be ſatisfied, that the Writing of it was in Surrey: The next is, their owning their Hands; for there is no Act done that appears, or any Evidence againſt them of any Act done, from the time of the Writing, to the time that they were asked, is this your Hand? Surely no Man would ever think this to be a Publication, where one is asked by Authority, whether ſuch a Paper be his Hand, and he acknowledges it in Anſwer to that Queſtion; to turn this to be a Crime, I think it can never be done, nor never was before. Then there is nothing in the Caſe, that they can hold to for Evidence, and Proof againſt my Lords the Biſhops, but the Writing; and that is apparent to have been in Surrey, or otherwiſe they muſt hold that the Anſwer to the King's Queſtion, this is my Hand, is a Publication. But truly, my Lord, I think neither of theſe will do: But my Lord, to me this is a great Evidence in it ſelf againſt the Proof of a Publication, the Care and Warineſs that has been uſed, that there ſhould be nothing at all of this Matter known, from the time that it was written, to the time that they came to be examined and ſummoned to appear as Offenders. My Lord, the Nature of Libels is to publiſh and proclaim Scandal and Defamation, or elſe it loſes its End, and conſequently its Name: This, as it ſtands upon their Evidence, is a monſtrous Proof for my Lords the Biſhops, againſt the King's Council; for it ſeems, 'tis a very private Matter, ſo cautiouſly and warily carried, that there is not any Evidence of the Fact, but only the Names of the Perſons that writ it, till they come to be examined by the greateſt Authority, Is this your Hand? and then they own it ſo to be; how can this be taken to be a Publication? and it will be a thing of wonderful Conſequence, if an Anſwer to a Queſtion put by Authority, ſhould amount to a Crime, as it would in this Caſe; that would be as if Authority that ſhould be employed to do Right, would be turned to do the greateſt Wrong; for it is the Duty of all Men to anſwer when examined by a lawful Authority, and it would never be offered at ſure in any other Caſe: If a Man comes before a Magiſtrate, and confeſſes any thing, that indeed is Evidence, but is not a Crime; for there is a great deal of difference between Evidence and the Crime; but that this ſhould be both an Evidence and a Crime too, is, I think, a very ſtrange Conſtruction; and for the other part (the writing of it) I ſuppoſe the Court is ſatisfied that it was in another County.

Sir Geo. Treby. I deſire your Lordſhip to ſpare me a Word, which I think has not been obſerved by the Council that have ſpoke before. The Queſtion that remains, is, Whether my Lords the Biſhops did Publiſh this Paper? This is a matter of Fact that lies upon the Proſecutors to prove. Now I think they are ſo far from having proved that the Biſhops did publiſh it, that on the contrary, they have proved that their Lordſhips did not Publiſh it. The Evidence they have offered for this matter is a Confeſſion. This Confeſſion is teſtified by Mr. Blathwayt, and he ſays the Biſhops were ask'd at the Council whether they did ſubſcribe and publiſh this paper, and that their anſwer was that they did ſubſcribe but not publiſh it.

Now a Confeſſion muſt be taken together, and muſt be admitted to be intirely true by them that produce it; they ſhall never be allowed to take out and uſe one piece, and wave the reſt.

Why then by this Evidence of Confeſſion, taken as it ought, it appears that the Biſhops (though they did ſubſcribe) did not publiſh the paper. So that, I ſay, the King's Council have hereby plainly proved that the Biſhops did not publiſh this paper, and yet this is the only Evidence upon which they would infer that they did publiſh it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, it does lie upon you Gentlemen to prove it was done elſewhere than in Middleſex.

Mr. Finch. Sure Mr. Attorney is in jeſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I am in good earneſt, all the proof that we have given has been in Middleſex, and you can beſt tell whether you did it in Middleſex or no.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have done as to this Objection; for we ſay they have not proved their Caſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch you may obſerve (and I am ſure you do obſerve as well as any body in all Caſes,) but I ſay you may obſerve that they are off of every thing but cauſing it to be publiſhed; now that does lie upon the King's Council to prove, that my Lords the Biſhops did cauſe it to be publiſhed, for their owning their Hands does not amount to a Publication.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, We are upon this point with them, whether here be any Evidence of a Publication at all.

Mr. J. Powell. Pray let us clear this firſt; for if there be no Publication, there can be no cauſing of it to be publiſhed.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you think fit, we ſhall go on and reſerve this point till afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They may make Objections, if they think fit.

L. C. J. So they may, and they ſay if theſe Objections are with us, we need go no farther.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. But, my Lord, if they be not with us, we have a reſerve to give a farther Anſwer to it, and to offer Evidence againſt the Evidence they have offered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With all our Hearts, give in Evidence what you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray my Lord let us go on to anſwer this Objection.

L. C. J. Pray do Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I would firſt obſerve how far we have gone. That there was ſuch a paper written is clear beyond all Queſtion, and written by my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and that it was ſigned by the reſt of the Biſhops, but not in the County of Middleſex, and that this paper was publiſhed is agreed on all hands.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No, they do not agree that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do I ſay it was publiſhed by them? but there was ſuch a Paper publiſhed.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, we ſay it was never publiſhed at all.

L. C. J. Pray Brother Pemberton be quiet, if Mr. Attorney in opening does ſay any thing that he ought not to ſay, I will correct him, as I would do any body that does not open things right as they are proved, but pray don't you that are at the Bar interrupt one another, it is unbecoming Men of your Profeſſion to be chopping in and ſnapping at one another———Go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſay, that the Paper is proved to be written and ſigned by my Lords the Biſhops, that I take for granted, and that the Paper ſo ſigned and written is now publiſhed to the World, is alſo evident; but the Queſtion is who it was done by, or who cauſed it to be done, we are reduced to that Queſtion: Now, firſt, it is agreed on all hands, that if I ſend a Letter to a private Man containing Scandalous things in it, though there is no proof more, but that it was ſent ſealed, and received by the party, in that Caſe it was a fault puniſhable in the Star-Chamber, as a Crime; but now that this was received by the King, and written by them, there is no room for doubt; for you hear it was produced by the King at the Council-Board, and they asked upon it, if it were their Hands? that the King did receive it, there is no room for queſtion, or that they did write it; but the queſtion is, from whom the King had it? I am ſure they muſt ſhew that ſome body elſe did it; and unleſs they do ſhow that, I hope there is no manner of queſtion, but it came from them, and they did it; though no Man Living knew any thing of this matter, but whom they thought fit to communicate it to; yet ſtill they putting the King upon the the neceſſity of ſhewing this Power in order to his obtaining ſatisfaction for it, or elſe he muſt remain under the indignity without reparation, it ought to be put upon them to clear the Fact; for if he does not produce it, then muſt the King put up the higheſt injury and affront, that perhaps a Man can give the King to his face, by delivering a Libel into his own hands; and if he does produce it, then ſay they, that is not our publication, we prove it to be your writing and ſigning, and we prove it to come from the hand of the King againſt whom it was compoſed, for we ſay it is a Libel againſt his Majeſty, his Government and Prerogative; if then, all thoſe caſes that have been cited be Law, then ſure there never was a ſtronger caſe in the World than this; and I hope the Law goes a little farther in the caſe of the King, than it does in the caſe of a private Man; no Man muſt think by policy to give private wounds to the Government, and diſparage the Adminiſtration of it, and then when he is called in queſtion about it, ſays he, pray prove that I publiſhed it, or elſe you ſhall not puniſh me for it, we prove you framed it and writ it and ſigned it, and we prove it came to the King's hand, of whom it was compoſed, muſt we produce two Witneſſes of the delivery of it to the King? Surely there will be no need of any thing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have reduced it now to a very narrow queſtion, for (as Mr. Attorney has ſaid) my Lord, there is no doubt but that my Lords the Biſhops are the Authors of this Paper, there is no doubt but they ſigned it, and there is no doubt but that their ſigning of it, though it were at Lambeth (as they ſay) is a publiſhing of it, but however this is plain and manifeſt, that this Paper was publiſhed, and that this was publiſhed in Middleſex, this is as plain too; now then there is nothing left but this queſtion, whether my Lords the Biſhops who framed the thing, who wrote the thing, who ſigned the thing, were not the occaſion or cauſe of its publication, or privy or conſenting to it; my Lord, I will reduce it to a very plain point; for we are upon a rational queſtion, before a rational Court, and a rational Jury, whether theſe Lords did all of them in the County of Surry, conſent to the publiſhing of this Paper in Middleſex; for it is publiſhed in Middleſex, (that we ſee,) and if they are guilty of that part of the Information, of cauſing it to be publiſhed, now what do they ſay to it, ſay they, it is agreed that it is publiſhed in Middleſex, but it is not proved to be publiſhed by us.

L. C. J. No, they do not ſay ſo, they agree it was in Middleſex, but not publiſhed.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, they do agree it was in Middleſex, but not publiſhed to be ſure, nor by them.

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, I'll tell you what they ſtand upon, they ſay you ought to prove it to be delivered to the King by the Biſhops, or ſome body employed by them; for upon that went the Reſolution that was in Williams's caſe, that he ſent it to the King; but here is no body that proves that it was delivered to the King in this caſe, ſo that how it came to the King Non conſtat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There will be the queſtion between us, whether this be not a publication.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray Mr. Sollicitor prove your Caſe before you argue it.

L. C. J. Firſt ſettle what the caſe is, before you argue it.

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lord, I'll put you the caſe, here does appear in Middleſex a Paper that is a Libel in it ſelf, and this Libel is proved to be written and formed by theſe perſons, this Libel coming into Middleſex, the queſtion is, whether they are privy to it, I ſay in point of preſumption, it muſt come from them.

L. C. J. I cannot ſuppoſe it, I cannot preſume any thing.

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lord, I ſpeak of that which is a common preſumption, a natural preſumption, what we commonly call a violent preſumption, which is a legal preſumption, and has always been allowed for Evidence; now whether there be not ſuch a preſumption in our Caſe, as to induce your Lordſhip and the Jury to believe that it cannot be otherwiſe, or at leaſt to put the labour upon them, to ſhew how it came out of their Studies, and how it came to the King's hands, for it is in their power to ſhew the truth of this matter, how it was, if they do not, the preſumption will lie upon them; that the Paper came to the King, that is plain enough, and its coming to the King's hands, is a plain proof of a publication in Middleſex, and who ſhould bring it to the King, but theſe Gentlemen in whoſe power it was? there is no Man undertakes to ſay, he loſt it, then what elſe is to be believed, but that it came from them, I ſpeak of common ſuppoſition and belief, they may very well ſhew it if it were not ſo; all that we can ſay in it, is, here is a Paper in Middleſex, this you agreed was was once your Paper, and in your power, pray ſhew what became of it, it lies upon you to clear this doubt.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, there is but this queſtion in the caſe, the queſtion is not, whether the owning it be a publication, but whether here be any Evidence that they did deliver it to the King; now if they did deliver it to the King, that will be agreed to me to be a publication.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No doubt of it, if you can prove it.

Mr. Recorder. Pray Sir ſpare me, that they did it you have this Evidence; firſt, that they were the Authours of this Paper by their own Confeſſion, that this was in the County of Middleſex, and that when they were asked concerning it, they owned it to be their hand Writing; now whether you can in the leaſt queſtion after all this, their delivering of it to the King, or that it came to the King's hands without their knowledge or conſent, is that which lies before your Lordſhip for your Judgment.

L. C. Juſt. I will ask my Brothers their Opinion, but I muſt deal truly with you, I think it is not Evidence againſt my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Truly I think you have failed in your Information, you have not proved any thing againſt my Lords the Biſhops in the County of Middleſex, and therefore the Jury muſt find them not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. I'll put you but one caſe my Lord, a Man has an opportunity ſecretly to deliver a Libel into the King's hands, when no Body is by, and ſo there can be no proof of the delivery.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. 'Tis a dangerous thing Mr. Attorney on the other ſide, to convict People of Crimes without proof.

Mr. Att Gen. But ſhall a Man be permitted thus to affront the King, and there be no way to puniſh it?

L. C. Juſt. Yes, there will ſure, but it will be a very ſtrange thing if we ſhould go and preſume that theſe Lords did it, when there is no ſort of Evidence of it; 'tis that which I do aſſure you I cannot do, we muſt proceed according to Evidence and forms and methods of Law, they may think what they will of me, but I always declare my mind according to my Conſcience.

Mr. S. Trinder. But as to that other point whether their owning of it be a publication, has not been particularly ſpoke to.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Sollicitor, if there were enough to raiſe doubt in the Court, ſo as to leave it to the Jury, I would ſumm up the Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we know it is with the Court, theſe Lords inſiſted upon it, that it was a great while in their hands, but it ſeems as far as our Evidence has gone hitherto, their Confeſſion went no farther than that it was their Paper, and we muſt not extend their Confeſſion further than it was; but I think we ſhall offer a fair Evidence that they did deliver it in the County of Middleſex.

L. C. Juſt. Indeed, indeed, you ought to have gone to this, Mr. Sollicitor, before the Court gave their Opinions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call Mr. Blathwayt again.

Mr. Blathwayt called.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Sollicitor, unleſs you are ſure that Mr. Blathwayt is a Witneſs to the publication, 'tis but ſpending the Courts time to no purpoſe to call him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are ſure of nothing, my Lord, but we muſt make uſe of our Witneſſes, according to our Inſtructions in our Briefs.

Then Mr. Blathwayt appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt you were ſworn before.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You were preſent when this Paper or Petition was delivered by the King, at the Council-Board.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, I was ſo Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of the Biſhops acknowledging their delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt I would ask you, was there any mention of diſcourſe with my Lords the Biſhops, how that Paper came into the King's hands, was there any mention of what it was done for, upon the account of Religion or how?

Mr. Blathwayt. I don't remember any thing of that Mr. Sollicitor, at which there was a great Laughter.

L. C. Juſt. Pray let us have no laughing, it is not decent, can't all this be done quietly without noiſe? pray Mr. Blathwayt let me ask you, do you remember there was any diſcourſe how that writing came into the King's hands?

Mr. Blathwayt. I received it from the King's hands, and I know it was preſented to him by my Lords the Biſhops.

L. C. Juſt. How do you know it was preſented to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I heard the King ſay ſo ſeveral times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray mind my queſtion Sir, firſt I ask you who produced the Paper at the Council-Table?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſaid the Biſhops when that Paper was ſhewed them?

Mr Blathwayt. Then (as I remember) they were asked, whether that was the Paper that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then what ſaid the Biſhops?

Mr. Blathwayt. They at firſt ſcrupled to anſwer, and they ſaid it might be made uſe of to their prejudice if they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwayt conſider again, was that the queſtion put to my Lords the Biſhops, whether that was the Paper that was preſented by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I do think, to the beſt of my remembrance, that my Lord Chancellor did ask them to that purpoſe, I cannot ſpeak to the very words.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And upon this, what anſwer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lords the Biſhops ſcrupled to anſwer the firſt and ſecond time (as I told you before) but they did own it was the Petition that they preſented to the King, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Archbiſhop do any thing to own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, both my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the reſt of the Biſhops did own all the ſame thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this done at Whitehall?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, at the Council-Table.

L C. Juſt. Pray recollect your ſelf, and conſider what you ſay, did they own that that was the Paper they delivered to the King?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Pray my Lord give us leave to ask a queſtion to clear this matter, was the queſtion put to them, Whether it was the Paper that they delivered, or whether it were their hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not exactly recollect the words.

L. C. Juſt. But pray tell us, if you can, what the queſtion was?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not remember the very words, but I think if Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be pleaſed to repeat his queſtion, I ſhall give him a ſatisfactory anſwer, as well as I can.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Sir, that which I ask you is this, Whether the queſtion that was put to my Lords the Biſhops at that time was, Whether this was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King, or whether thoſe were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwait. My Lord, I did always think that it was a plain Caſe, that that was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King; and my Lords the Biſhops did never deny but that they gave it to the King, and I had it from the King's hands.

L. C. Juſt. But we muſt know from you (if you can tell us) what the queſtion was that was put to my Lords the Biſhops, were they asked, Whether thoſe were their hands that were to that paper, or was it Whether they delivered that paper to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the firſt part, that they owned 'twas their hands, that I am ſure of; but as to the other, I do not remember what the words were.

At which there was a great Shout.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwayt recollect your ſelf, you ſay the King produced it.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes Sir:

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King

King asked them any queſtion upon the producing of it?

Mr. Blathwait. My Lord Chancellour asked them, if thoſe were not their Hands to the Petition.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any other matter in diſcourſe, whether that was the paper that was delivered by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwait. I cannot ſo poſitively ſay, what were the words that my Lord Chancellor uſed.

Mr. S. Levinz. Pray do not twiſt a man ſo, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you are not to untwiſt a man neither, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King ſaid any thing of the paper being delivered to him?

Mr. Blathwait. The King has ſaid it ſeveral times, I believe I have heard him ſay it ten times at leaſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay it at that time?

Mr. Blathwait. I cannot poſitively ſay that he did, Sir.

Mr. S. Pemberton. He cannot anſwer it, why will you preſs it?

Mr. Blathwait. My Lord, here is the Clerk of the Council that was then in waiting, he took minutes, and perhaps can remember more than I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here they cry he cannot anſwer it, as if they could tell what he can anſwer better than himſelf; pray Mr. Bridgman, was there any queſtion to this purpoſe either from my Lord Chancellor, or from the King, whether that was the Paper that was preſented by my Lords the Biſhops, or delivered to the King, for I ſee you are very nice as to words, and you do very well; but was there not a queſtion to that purpoſe?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir, I do not remember, for I ſpeak to the beſt of my remembrance in all this matter; I ſay, I do not remember that that queſtion was asked in thoſe very words, but I do remember ſomething was ſaid to that purpoſe, but by whom I cannot particularly ſay.

Sir Robert Sawyer. To what purpoſe?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is very ſtrange that they won't let the Witneſs ſpeak, but are continually interrupting him.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Sollicitor, no body interrupts him.

L. C. J. Why do not I behave my ſelf between you all as I ought to do? pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, ſit down, you cannot be contented when the man does you no harm.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray conſider, did my Lords the Biſhops ſay any thing, or was there any diſcourſe concerning the Paper, whether it was delivered to the King or no?

Mr. Bridgman. Mr. Sollicitor, I have told you as near as I can what I do remember; I know not by whom it was ſaid, but that queſtion or to that purpoſe was asked, whether that was the Petition they delivered, but I do not remember whether the queſtion was directly asked or anſwered, there was ſomething about it, and ſeveral paſſages there were; but whether ſpoken by my Lord Chancellor or who, I cannot remember.

Mr. Sol Gen. You ſay there was that which ſufficiently denoted a queſtion to that purpoſe, and they ſaid nothing againſt it.

Mr. Bridgman. No, there was no denial of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſee you do not remember the particular, nor do we deſire it of you.

Mr. Bridgman. They did not deny it nor confeſs it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then in your apprehenſion did they own that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. You muſt not ask that Mr. Sollicitor, it is not a fair queſtion to ask him what he apprehended.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He ſaid it before himſelf.

L. C. J. But his apprehenſions are no Evidence, and it is a ſort of a leading queſtion which we muſt not allow of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then if your Lordſhip do not it like, I will not ask it, but I will ask him another queſtion.

L. C. J. Ay, ten if you will, ſo they be fair ones.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it upon the firſt or ſecond time of their being examined?

Mr. Bridgman. I cannot tell, it was not the firſt time, all of it, I believe; for at the firſt time my Lords the Biſhops made ſome ſcruple of anſwering or owning any thing, and whatſoever they owned, they ſaid, they hoped it ſhould not be made uſe of to their prejudice; I remember no reply that was made, nor any thing farther, only my Lord Chancellor ſaid, they were not to capitulate with their Prince; but they were required to anſwer the queſtions that were asked them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were thoſe queſtions?

Mr. Bridgman. I have told you already as well as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you take it upon the main that they owned the delivery of that paper to the King?

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, you have been told you are to ask no ſuch queſtions.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Nor never was there ſuch wire-drawing of a Witneſs in this World before.

L. C. J. Pray ſit ſtill, Sir Robert Sawyer, you are not to teach us what we are to do, Mr. Sollicitor muſt ask queſtions that are proper for him and not ſuch as theſe; but the Court muſt correct him and not you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Bridgman is very cautious, and he is to be commended for it, but we would get the truth out of him, if we could; pray Sir, if you can remember, recollect your ſelf, whether by any queſtion to that purpoſe, it was believed that they did own the delivery of the Paper to the King.

Mr. Bridgman. I told you, Mr. Sollicitor, as to that at firſt, that I do not remember the very words of the queſtion, but I believe there was no body doubted that that was not the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſpeak well in your way, but theſe Gentlemen are very unwilling you ſhould tell your opinion.

L. C. J. His opinion is no Evidence, therefore you muſt not ask any ſuch queſtions, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Bridgman. Aſſoon as the Petition was delivered, within a few hours after, I ſaw it, the King ſhewed it to ſeveral people, and he ſaid, it was the Petition the Biſhops had delivered, he took it into his own cuſtody, and afterwards commanded me to write a Copy of it, and there was no Copy made of it but that one, but notwithſtanding that, I do remember I did ſee a Copy of the Petition, within a day or two after it was preſented, about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how many days was this before the diſcourſe in Council upon their Examination?

Mr. Bridgman. How many days was what, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the King gave the Paper to be copied.

Mr. Bridgman. It was upon the Sunday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you ſay (as you believe) it was in a few hours after the Paper was delivered to the King, that you did ſee it?

Mr. J. Powel. But what makes him ſay that this was delivered to the King, but only hear-ſay?

L. C. J. Pray Mr. Sollicitor, will you produce that which is Evidence, and not ſpend our time in that which is not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would make no more of it than it is.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. 'Tis a ſhameful thing to offer ſuch things in a Court of Juſtice.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. 'Tis a practice that ought not to be endured.

L. C. J. Pray Brothers be quiet, or i'll turn him looſe upon you again, if you'l not be quiet; what is the matter? cannot you let us alone? we ſhall do every body right: come, to ſhorten this matter, I ask you but this one queſtion, and that may ſatisfie any one that has common honeſty about him; do you remember whether or no they were asked, if that was the Petition that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I have anſwered that queſtion as directly as I can, I do not poſitively remember that that was the queſtion.

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor General, you muſt be ſatisfied, when proper queſtions are fairly anſwered, and therefore pray be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. However we pray we may ask the Clerks of the Council, it may be they may remember more —— Sir John Nicholas you were at the Council-Table that day my Lords the Biſhops were examined about this Paper.

Sir John Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you obſerve that the King produced the Petition?

Sir John Nicholas. No indeed, I did not ſee it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any thing that paſſed there in diſcourſe?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve any queſtions that were asked the Biſhops, either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Sir John Nicholas. I think my Lord Chancellor did ask them, if that was their hands to the Petition, and they owned it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember whether they owned, that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. I'll ask you, Sir John Nicholas, did my Lord Chancellor ask them this queſtion, is this the Petition you delivered to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. I do not remember that.

Then there was a great ſhout.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here's wonderful great rejoycing that truth cannot prevail.

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, Mr. Sollicitor, Truth does prevail.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are all very glad that Truth is ſtifled, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. S. Trinder. Pray Sir John Nicholas, let me ask you one queſtion, was there any diſcourſe about delivering that Petition to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. Indeed I do not remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Pepy's, we'll examine him.

Mr. Pepy's ſworn.

L. C. J. Come i'll ask the queſtions, were you bye at the Council-Board when my Lords the Biſhops were committed?

Mr. Pepy's. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What were the queſtions that were asked either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Pepy's. My Lord, I would remember as well as I could, the very words, and the very words of the queſtion were (I think) my Lords, do you own this Paper? I do not remember any thing was ſpoken about the delivering, but I believe it was underſtood by every body at the Table, that that was the Paper that they had delivered.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? But to ſatisfie you i'll ask this queſtion, was this queſtion asked, my Lords was this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Pepy's. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Sir, do you remember whether the King himſelf asked the queſtion?

Mr. Pepy's. You mean I ſuppoſe Mr. Attorney that theſe were the words, or ſomething that imported their delivering it to the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Pepy's. Truly I remember nothing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve any diſcourſe concerning their delivery of it to the King.

Mr. Pepy's. Indeed Mr. Sollicitor I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Muſgrave.

Mr. Muſgrave Sworn.

L. C. J. You hear the queſtion Sir, what ſay you to it?

Mr. Muſgrave. My Lord, I will give as ſhort an account of it as I can, the firſt time after his Majeſty had produced the Petition and it was read at the Board, his Grace my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the other ſix Reverend Lords the Biſhops were called in, and it was asked of them, if they owned that, or if it was their hands, my Lord Archbiſhop in the name of the reſt, did decline anſwering, upon the account that they were there as Criminals, and were not obliged to ſay any thing to their own prejudice, or that might hurt them hereafter; but if his Majeſty would command them, and if he would promiſe that no advantage ſhould be made of whatſoever they confeſſed, then they would anſwer the queſtion; his Majeſty made no anſwer to that, but only ſaid he would do nothing but what was according to Law, whereupon the Biſhops were ordered to withdraw, and being called in a ſecond time the Petition was ſhewn to them, and they were asked if they did own it, or if it was their hands, and I think my Lord Archbiſhop did ſay then, we will rely upon your Majeſty, or ſome ſuch general thing was ſaid, and then they did all own it that it was their hands, I cannot ſay the Petition was read to them.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Mr. Blathwait (as I remember) ſaid it was the third time.

Mr. Muſgrave. It was the ſecond time (to the beſt of my remembrance)

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray Sir, was there any queſtion to this purpoſe? is this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Muſgrave. I do not remember that ever any ſuch direct queſtion was asked.

Mr. J. Allybone. But (as my Brother Pemberton did very well before diſtinguiſh) there is a great deal of difference between the owning the ſubſcription of a Paper, and between the owning of that Paper, Mr. Pepy's did ſay that they did own the Paper, and upon my Word that will look very much like a Publication.

Mr. Muſgrave. I remember, my Lord, there was at the ſame time a queſtion asked, becauſe ſeveral Copies had gone about the Town, whether they had publiſhed it, and my Lord Archbiſhop did ſay, he had been ſo cautious that he had not admitted his own Secretary, but writ it all himſelf, and the reſt of the Biſhops did ſay, they did not publiſh it, nor never gave any Copies of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord (I confeſs) now it is to be left to the Jury upon this point, whether there not being a poſitive Witneſs that was by when the thing was done, yet upon this Evidence the Jury can't find any otherwiſe, than that the thing was done; truly I think we muſt leave it as a ſtrong caſe for the King, I could have wiſhed indeed for the ſatisfaction of every body, that the proof would have come up to that, but we muſt make it as ſtrong for the King upon the Evidence given as it will bear; now my Lord, take all this whole matter together, here is a Paper compoſed, framed, and written by ſeven learned Men, and this muſt be written by ſuch Perſons, ſure for ſome purpoſe; it is directed as a Petition to the King, and this Petition did come to the hands of the King, (for the King produces it in Council,) and my Lord Archbiſhop and the reſt of the Biſhops owned their hands to it, then the queſtion is, my Lord, whether or no there be any room for any body living to doubt in this caſe that this was not delivered by my Lords the Biſhops to the King, though it be not a concluſive Evidence of a poſitive Fact, yet unleſs they ſhew ſomething on the other ſide, that may give way for a ſuppoſition to the contrary, that it came out of their hands by ſurprize, or that any body elſe delivered it to the King without their knowledge or conſent; here muſt needs be a very violent preſumption, that they did do it; and when nothing of that is ſaid on their ſide, can any Jury upon their Conſciences ſay that it was not publiſhed by them? and it being found in Middleſex, though it might be written and compoſed in Surrey, yet ſurely we have given a convincing Evidence that either they publiſhed it or cauſed it to be publiſhed in Middleſex.

Pray call Mr. Graham.

Cryer. He is gone out of the Hall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there is in Law a preſumption that is Evidence, though there be no poſitive proof.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But not in an Information for a Libel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is a meer queſtion of Fact, there is no difficulty in the Law of it at all, for it is plain, if theſe Lords or any of them did conſent and agree to the publiſhing of this Paper in Middleſex, they are guilty of this Information, and whether they are guilty or not guilty, we do rely upon the Circumſtances proved, which are violent; Firſt, that they were the Men that contrived and ſet their hands to it, and ſo were the Authors of it is undeniable; for they have owned it. Men of their learning and parts never did any ſuch thing in vain; and then that they were concerned in the publiſhing of it in Middleſex, we offer for proof that which was ſaid by Mr. Pepy's and Mr. Blathwait, who though they do not come directly and expreſly to the formal words of ſuch a queſtion, yet they tell you, eſpecially Mr. Blathwait, that they did apprehend it, and it was the Collection of all their thoughts, and they took it for granted, as a thing that every body was ſatisfied in, that they did deliver that Paper to the King. I muſt confeſs and agree there is no proof of the delivery of it by my Lords the Biſhops to the King, but we know very well, that it is no wonder, when a Paper is Libellous, that Men ſhould uſe all the skill they can to publiſh it with impunity, and this is a thing that was done after ſome time of Premeditation and ſerious Conſultation; for it was ſome days after the Order for reading the Declaration was publiſhed, that this was framed and delivered, and it concerned them to be wary, (as it ſeems they have been) but take this altogether, my Lord, the Paper being found in the King's Hands, it is in theſe Perſons Power, and it lies upon them to make it out plain, what became of this Paper, which once lay in their own Hands and Cuſtody; they can give an Account of it, they can give Light unto it: If they do not, I ſhall ſubmit to the Jury, whether this is not ſufficient Evidence to Convict them, eſpecially when being examined, they did not make that their Excuſe, they never ſaid, this Paper indeed we ſigned, but we did not intend to publiſh it, we intended to ſtifle it; that had been ſome excuſe: But for them to ſay now, they did not preſent it to the King, I muſt ſubmit to the Jury, whether they will believe upon this Evidence, that theſe Lords the Biſhops did preſent it, or cauſe it to be preſented to the King, then they are guilty of this Matter: And I leave it to them and their Conſciences, what they will think upon the whole.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe——

L. C. J. What, again? Well, go on Sir Bartholomew Shore, if we muſt have a Speech——

Mr. Recorder. Nay, my Lord, I would not treſpaſs upon your Lordſhip

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops; I think I need not trouble my ſelf to open all of it, becauſe I ſee you are Men of Underſtanding, Men of great Diligence, and have taken Notes your ſelves ſome of you; therefore, I ſay, only ſomething of the Proof that is required in ſuch a Caſe, and of the manner of the Proof that has been given in this Caſe, and then tell you my Opinion in Point of Law. Here is an Information brought by Mr. Attorney General on behalf of the King, againſt theſe Reverend Fathers of the Church, the Archbiſhop and the reſt; and it is for publiſhing a Seditious Libel, under the pretence of a Petition, in which are contained the words that are ſeen. Gentlemen, the Information is long, it tells you, That the King, out of his Gracious Clemency to all his Loving Subjects, and for other Conſiderations, had thought fit to publiſh a Declaration of Indulgence, that all his Loving Subjects might have Liberty of Conſcience, upon the 4*th* of April, in the 3*d* Year of his Reign; and that this was ſet forth by the the King; and that the King of his farther Grace, about the 27*th* of April then next following——

Mr. Finch. I humbly beg your Lordſhips Favour.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. I ask your Pardon for breaking in upon you when you are directing the Jury: I know I ſhould not do it, but I hope you will not be angry with me for it.

L. C. J. If I thought you did any Service to your Client, I ſhould willingly hearken to you.

Mr. Finch. That which I humbly offer to your Lordſhip, is only to remember your Lordſhip where we were.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Finch. I would only ſay this, my Lord, the Queſtion is, Whether this be Evidence, or no?

L. C. J. I am ſorry, Mr. Finch, you have that Opinion of me, as to think I ſhould not leave it fairly to the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I only ſpeak it, my Lord, becauſe if it be Evidence, we have other Matters to offer in Anſwer to that Evidence, and in our own Defence.

L. C. J. If you have more to offer, why did you conclude here, and let me begin to direct the Jury? but ſince you ſay you have other Matter to offer, we will hear it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we ſubmit to your Lordſhips direction.

L. C. J. No, no, you do not, you ſay you have further Matter to offer.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, we ſhall reſt it here.

L. C. J. No, no, I will hear Mr. Finch; Go on, my Lords the Biſhops ſhall not ſay of me, I would not hear their Council; I have been already told of being Council againſt them, and they ſhall never ſay that I would not hear their Council for them.

Mr. S. Levinz. My Lord, we beſeech your Lordſhip go on with your Directions; for all that Mr. Finch ſaid, was only that this was not ſufficient Evidence.

L. C. J. No, Brother, he ſays you have a great deal more to offer, and I will not refuſe to hear him; the Court will think there was ſomething more than ordinary, therefore I will hear him, ſuch a Learned Man as he ſhall not be refuſed to be heard by me, I'll aſſure you; Why don't you go on Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I beg your pardon for interrupting you; but all that I was going to ſay, would have amounted to no more than this, that there being no Evidence againſt us, we muſt of courſe be acquitted.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. My Lord did intend to have ſaid as much as that I dare ſay.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen of the Jury, we have had Interruption enough——

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt beg your Pardon for interrupting you now; and I am very glad theſe Gentlemen have given us this Occaſion, becauſe we ſhall now be able to clear this Point. There is a Fatality in ſome Cauſes, my Lord, and ſo there is in this, we muſt beg your Patience for a very little while, for we have notice that a Perſon of very great Quality is coming, that will make it appear, that they made their Addreſſes to him, that they might deliver it to the King.

L. C. J. Well——You ſee what comes of the Interruption, Gentlemen, now we muſt ſtay.——

——Then there was a Pauſe for near half an hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, put the Caſe that a Man writes a Libel in one County, and it is found in another, is not he anſwerable, unleſs he can ſhew ſomething that may ſatisfie the Jury how it came there?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ought he not to give an account what became of it?

L. C. J. No: look you Mr. Attorney, you muſt look to your Information, and then you will find the Caſe that you put, does not come up to it; It is for Writing, Compoſing and Publiſhing, and cauſing to be publiſhed, and all this is laid in Middleſex; Now you have proved none of all theſe things to be done in the County.

Mr. Att. Gen. They did in Middleſex confeſs it was theirs.

L. C. J. Ay, but the owning their Hands is not a publication in Middleſex, and ſo I ſhould have told the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordſhip's pardon for interrupting you.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, does it not put the Proof upon them, to prove how it came out of their Hands into the King's Hands?

L. C. J. No, the Proof lies on your part.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray, my Lord, give us your favour to diſmiſs us and the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, our Witneſſes will be here preſently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure, my Lord, the Preſumption is on our ſide.

Mr. J. Powel. No, the Preſumption is againſt you, for my Lord Archbiſhop lived in Surry; and it is proved was not out of Lambeth-Houſe ſince Michaelmas, till he came before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, good my Lord, we ſtand mightily uneaſy here, and ſo do the Jury, pray diſmiſs us.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, it is your own Fault.

—— Then there was another great Pauſe.

L. C. J. Sir Bartho. Shore, now we have time to hear your Speech, if you will.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, there is no Body come, nor I believe will come.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, he will come preſently, we have had a Meſſenger from him.

[Call Mr. Graham.]

Cryer. He is gone, and ſaid he would come preſently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he will bring our Witneſſes with him.

—— Then there was another Pauſe.

Mr. S. Pemb. My Lord, this is very unuſual to ſtay thus for Evidence.

L. C. Juſt. It is ſo; but I am ſure you ought not to have any Favour——Mr. Sollicitor, Are you aſſured that you ſhall have this Witneſs that you ſpeak of?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he will be here preſently.

L. C. Juſt. We have ſtaid a great while already, and therefore it is fit that we ſhould have ſome Oath made that he is coming.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Cryer tells you, that Mr. Graham did acquaint him, that he would return preſently.

L. C. Juſt. Give him the Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let your Left-hand give your Right-hand the Oath.

The

The Cryer ſworn.

L. C. Juſt. By the Oath that you have taken, did Mr. Graham tell you, there was any further Witneſs coming in this Caſe?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he did; he went out of the Hall, and returned when your Lordſhip was directing the Jury, and he asked me what the Court were upon? and I told him you were directing the Jury, and then he ſaid my Lord Sunderland was a coming, but he would go and prevent him; and afterwards he returned and finding your Lordſhip did not go on to direct the Jury, he ſaid he would go again for my Lord Sunderland, whom he had ſent away, and he is now gone for him, and he ſaid he would bring him with him preſently.

L. C. Juſt. Well then, we muſt ſtay till the Evidence for the King comes, for now there is Oath made that he is coming.

——And after a conſiderable pauſe the Lord Preſident came.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we muſt pray that my Lord Preſident may be ſworn in this Caſe, on behalf of the King.

The Lord Preſident ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's favour, I would ask my Lord Preſident a Queſtion; Your Lordſhip remembers where we left this Cauſe; we have brought it to this Point, That this Petition came to the King's Hands, that it is a Petition written by my Lord Archbiſhop, and ſubſcribed by the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, but there is a Difficulty made, whether this Petition thus prepared and written was by them delivered to the King, and whether my Lords the Biſhops were concerned in the doing of it, and were privy or Parties to the Delivery: Now that which I would ask your Lordſhip my Lord Preſident, is, Whether they did make their Application to your Lordſhip to ſpeak to the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they make their Application to your Lordſhip upon any account whatſoever?

L. Preſident. My Lord, my Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, and my Lord Biſhop of Chicheſter came to my Office, and told me, they came in the Names of my Lord Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and four others of their Brethren and themſelves, with a Petition which they deſired to deliver to his Majeſty, and they did come to me to know which was the beſt way of doing it, and whether the King would give them leave to do it or not? they would have had me read their Petition, but I refuſed it, and ſaid, I thought it did not at all belong to me, but I would let the King know their deſire, and bring them an Anſwer immediately, what his pleaſure was in it; which I did, I acquainted the King, and he commanded me to let my Lords the Biſhops know, they might come when they pleaſed, and I went back and told them ſo, upon which they went and fetch'd the reſt of the Biſhops, and when they came, immediately they went into the Bed-Chamber, and into another Room where the King was: this is that I know of the matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what time was this, pray, my Lord?

L. Preſident. I believe there could not be much time between my coming from the King, and their fetching their Brethren, and going in to the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were with the King that day.

L. Preſident. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this before they appeared in Council?

L. Preſident. Yes, it was ſeveral days before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I think now, my Lord, the matter is very plain.

Mr. Juſt. Allibone. Did they acquaint your Lordſhip that their buſineſs was to deliver a Petition to the King?

L Preſident. Yes, they did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they would have had my Lord read it (he ſays.)

Mr. Att. Gen. And this was the ſame day that they did go in to the King.

L. Preſident. The very ſame day, and I think the ſame hour, for it could not be much longer.

L Ch. Juſt. Now it is upon you truly, it will be preſumed to be the ſame unleſs that you prove that you delivered another——Pray, my Lord, did you look into the Petition?

L. Preſident. No, I refuſed it, I thought it did not concern me.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Did you ſee them deliver it to the King, my Lord?

L. Preſident. I was not in the Room when it was delivered.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. They did open their Petition to your Lordſhip, did they?

L. Preſident. They offered me to read it, but I did refuſe.

L. C. Juſt. Will you ask my Lord Preſident any Queſtion, you that are for the Defendants?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then my Lord, we muſt beg one thing for the ſake of the Jury, if your Lordſhip can turn your ſelf a little this way, and deliver the Evidence you have given over again that they may hear it.

L. Preſident. My Lord, I will repeat it as near as I can, I think I ſhall not vary the Senſe: The Biſhops of St. Aſaph and Chicheſter came to my Office, I do not know juſt the day when, but it was to let me know, that they came in the Name of the Arch biſhop and four other of their Brethren——Is it neceſſary I ſhould name them?

L. C. Juſt. Do it, my Lord, if you can.

L. Preſident. They were the Biſhops of Ely, Bath and Wells, Briſtol, and Peterborough; they came to let me know, in the Name of the Archbiſhop, thoſe four and themſelves, that they had a Petition to deliver to the King, if he would give them leave; and deſired to know of me which was the beſt way to do it. I told them I would know the King's Pleaſure, and bring them word again: they offered me their Petition to read, but I did not think it fit for me to do it, and therefore I refuſed and would not read it, but I went immediately to the King, and acquainted his Majeſty with it, and he commanded me to let them know they might come when they would, which I immediately did, they ſaid they would go and ſpeak with ſome of their Brethren that were not far off; in the mean time I gave order that they ſhould be admitted when they came, and they did in a little time return, and went firſt into the Bed-Chamber, and then into the Room where the King was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And this was before they came and appeared at the Council.

L. Preſident. Yes it was.

Mr.

Mr. Pollixfen. Your Lordship did not read any thing of the Petition?

L. President. No, Sir, I did not, I refused it.

Mr. Pollixfen. Nor does your Lordship know what Petition they did deliver to the King?

L. President. I did not know any thing of it from them then.

L. C. J. Now you may make your Observations upon this two hours hence; now we shall hear what Mr. Finch had further to offer, I suppose.

Then my Lord President went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think now it is very plain.

L. C. J. Truly, I must needs tell you, there was a great Presumption before, but there is a greater now, and I think I shall leave it with some effect to the Jury, I cannot see but that here is enough to put the Proof upon you: they came to the Lord President, and asked him how they might deliver a Petition to the King, he told them he would go see what the King said to it; they would have had him read their Petition, but he refused it; he comes and tells them the King said they might come when they would; then those two that came to my Lord President went and gathered up the other four (the Archbishop indeed was not there) but they six came, and my Lord President gave Direction they should be let in, and they did go into the Room where the King was; now this, with the King's producing the Paper, and their owning it at the Council, is such a Proof to me, as I think will be Evidence to the Jury of the Publication.

Mr. Pollixfen. Then my Lord thus far they only can go, the Archbishop was not there, and so there is no Evidence against him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As to the Writing, we have given Proof against him, for it is all his Hand.

Mr. Pollixfen. That still is in another County, and there is nothing proved to be done by my Lord Archbishop in Middlesex; and next, for the other six Lords, my Lord President does not say that this is the Petition that they said they had to deliver to the King; nor did he see them deliver any thing to the King, but that is left still doubtful, and under your Judgment, so that it stands upon Presumption, not upon Proof, that this is the same, and left under Consideration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will leave it fairly to the Jury upon this Fact.

Mr. Pollixfen. If so, then we desire to be heard in our Defence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Charge which Mr. Attorney has been pleased to make against my Lords the Bishops, and that is this, That they did conspire to diminish the Royal Authority, and Regal Prerogative, Power, and Government of the King, and to avoid the Order of Council, and in prosecution of this, they did falsely, maliciously and seditiously make a Libel against the King, under pretence of a Petition, and did publish the same in the King's Presence.

This, Gentlemen, is a very heinous and heavy Charge; but you see how short their Evidence is; The Evidence they bring forth is only, that my Lords the Bishops presented the Paper to the King in the most private and humble manner they could, that which they have been so many hours a proving, and which they cry up to be as strong an Evidence as ever was given, proves it to be the farthest from Sedition in the doing of it that can be; and you see what it is, it is a Petition to be relieved against an Order of Council, which they conceive they were aggrieved by, they indeed do not deal fairly with the Court nor with us, in that they do not set it forth that it was a Petition.

L. C. J. That was over-ruled before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I do not insist upon it now, so much an Exception to the Information, as I do to the Evidence; they set this forth to be a scandalous matter; but it only contains their Reasons, whereby they would satisfy His Majesty why they cannot comply in a Concurrence with His Majesty's Pleasure; and therefore they humbly beseech the King, and beg and request him (as the words of it are) that His Majesty would be pleased not to insist upon their distributing and reading of this Declaration; so the Petitioners on behalf of themselves, and the whole Clergy of England, beg of the King that he would please not to insist upon it.

Gentlemen, you may observe it, that there is nothing in this Petition that contains any thing of Sedition in it, and it would be strange this Petition should be Felo de se, and by one part of it destroy the other, it is laid indeed in the Information, that it was with intent and purpose to diminish the King's Royal Authority, but I appeal to your Lordship, the Court, and the Jury, whether there be any one word in it, that any way touches the King's Prerogative, or any tittle of Evidence that has been given to make good the Charge; It is an Excuse barely for their non-Complyance with the King's Order, and a begging of the King with all Humility and Submission, that he would be pleased not to insist upon the reading of His Majesty's Declaration upon these grounds, because the Dispensing Power upon which it was founded, had been several times in Parliament declared to be against Law, and because it was a Case of that Consequence that they could not in Prudence, Honour or Conscience concur in it.

My Lord; Mr. Attorney has been pleased to charge in this Information, that this is a false, malicious and seditious Libel: both the falsity of it, and that it was malicious and seditious are all Matters of Fact, which with Submission they have offered to the Jury no proof of, and I make no question but easily to demonstrate the quite contrary.

For my Lord, I think it can be no question, but that any Subject that is Commanded by the King to do a Thing which he conceives to be against Law, and against his Conscience, may humbly apply himself to the King, and tell him the Reason why he does not that thing he is commanded to do, why he cannot concur with His Majesty in such a Command.

My Lord, that which Mr. Attorney did insist upon in the beginning of this Day (and he pretended to cite some Cases for it) was, that in this Case, my Lords the Bishops, were not sued as Bishops, nor prosecuted for their Religion: truly, my Lord, I do not know what they are sued for else; the Information is against them as Bishops, it is for an Act they did as Bishops, and no otherwise; and for an Act they did and do conceive they lawfully might do with relation to their Ecclesiastical Polity, and the Government of their People as Bishops.

The next thing that Mr. Attorney offered was, That it was not for a Non-feasance, but for a Feasance; Feaſance; it is true, my Lord, it is for a Feaſance in making of the Petition, but it was to excuſe a Non-feaſance, the not reading according to the Order, and this ſure was lawful for all the Biſhops as Subjects to do; and I ſhall ſhew it was certainly the duty of my Lords the Biſhops, or any Peer of this Realm to do the ſame in a like Caſe. It was likewiſe ſaid, they were proſecuted here for affronting the Government, and intermedling with Matters of State; but I beg your Lordſhip and the Jury to conſider, whether there is one tittle of this mentioned in the Petition, or any Evidence given of it; the Petition does not meddle with any thing of any Matter of State, but refers to an Eccleſiaſtical Matter, to be executed by the Clergy, and to a Matter that has relation to Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes; ſo that they were not Buſybodies, or ſuch as meddled in Matters that did not relate to them, but that which was properly within their Sphere and Juriſdiction.

But after all, there is no Evidence, nor any ſort of Evidence that is given by Mr. Attorney, that will maintain the leaſt tittle of this Charge; and how he comes to leave it upon this ſort of Evidence I cannot tell, all that it amounts to is, That my Lords the Biſhops being grieved in this manner, made this Petition to the King in the moſt private and reſpectful manner; and for him to load it with ſuch horrid black Epithets, that it was done libellouſly, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, and to oppoſe the King and Government, 'tis very hard, 'tis a Caſe of a very extraordinary Nature, and I believe my Lords the Biſhops cannot but conceive a great deal of trouble, that they ſhould lie under ſo heavy a Charge, and that Mr. Attorney ſhould draw ſo ſevere an Information againſt them, when he has ſo little Proof to make it out.

My Lord, by what we have to ſay to it, we hope we ſhall give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction, that we have done but our Duties, ſuppoſing here has been a ſufficient Evidence of the Fact given, which we leave to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

My Lord, we ſay in ſhort, That this Petition is no more than what any Man if he be Commanded to do any thing, might humbly do it, and not be guilty of any Crime: And, my Lord, as to the matter of our Defence, it will conſiſt of theſe Heads;

Firſt, We ſhall Conſider the Matter of this Petition.

Secondly, The Manner of the delivering it, according as they have given Evidence here; and,

Thirdly, The Perſons that have delivered this Petition. And we hope to make it appear, beyond all Queſtion, that the Matter contained in this Petition, is neither falſe nor contrary to Law, but agreeable to all the Laws of the Land in all Times. We ſhall likewiſe ſhew you (though that appear ſufficiently to you already) that the Manner of delivering it was ſo far from being Seditious, that it was in the moſt ſecret and private manner, and with the greateſt Humility and Duty imaginable. And then as to the Perſons, we ſhall ſhew you that they are not ſuch as Mr. Attorney ſays, who meddle with Matters of State, that are out of their Sphere, but they are Perſons concerned, and concerned in Intereſt in the Caſe, to make this humble Application to the King. And when we have proved all this Matter, you will ſee how ſtrangely we are blackned with Titles and Epithets which we no ways deſerve, and of which, God be thanked, there is no Proof.

For, my Lord, for the Matter of the Petition, we ſhall conſider two things.

The Firſt is, The Prayer, which is this, They humbly beg and deſire of the King, on behalf of themſelves and the reſt of the Clergy, that he would not inſiſt upon the Reading and Publiſhing of this Declaration.

Surely, my Lord, there is nothing of Falſity in this, nor any thing that is contrary to Law, or unlawful for any Man that is preſſed to any thing, eſpecially, by an Order of Council; and this is nothing but a Petition againſt an Order of Council, and if there be an Order that commands my Lords the Biſhops, to do a thing that ſeems grievous to them, ſurely they may beg of the King that he would not inſiſt upon it.

And for this Matter, they were ſo well ſatisfied about it, and ſo far from thinking that it was any part of a Libel, that they left it out of the Information, and ſo have made a deformed and abſurd Story of it, without Head or Tail, a Petition directed to no Body, and for nothing, it being without both Title and Prayer; ſo that this is plain, it was lawful to Petition.

Then, my Lord, the next thing is, the Reaſons which my Lords the Biſhops come to acquaint the King with, why, in Honour and Conſcience, they cannot comply with, and give obedience to this Order; and the Reaſons, my Lord, are two.

The firſt Reaſon that is aſſigned, is, the ſeveral Declarations that have been in Parliament, (ſeveral of which are mentioned) that ſuch a Power to diſpenſe with the Law, is againſt Law; and that it could not be done but by an Act of Parliament, for that is the meaning of the word Illegal, that has no other Signification, but unlawful; the ſame word in point of Signification with the word Illicitè, which they have uſed in their Information, a thing that cannot be done by Law; and this they are pleaſed to tell the King, not as declaring their own Judgments, but what has been declared in Parliament; though if they had done the former, they being Peers of the Realm, and Biſhops of the Church, are bound to underſtand the Laws, eſpecially when (as I ſhall come to ſhew you) they are made Guardians of theſe Laws; and if any thing go amiſs, and contrary to theſe Laws, they ought to inform the King of it.

My Lord, the next thing is, Becauſe it is a Thing of ſo great moment, and the Conſequences that will ariſe from their publiſhing of this Declaration, and that too, my Lord, (for the latter I ſhall begin firſt with) there can be no Queſtion about, or any pretence that this is libellous or falſe, for certainly it is a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence to the whole Nation that ever was, therefore it cannot be falſe or libellous to ſay ſo.

My Lord, I would not mention this, for I am loth to touch upon things of this Nature, had not the Information it ſelf made it the very Giſt of the Charge; for the Information (if there be any thing in it) ſays, that it was to diminiſh the King's Prerogative and Regal Power in publiſhing that Declaration.

Now, my Lord, what the Conſequence of this would be, and what my Lords the Biſhops meant by ſaying, It was a Cauſe of great Moment, will appear, by conſidering that which is the main Clause in the Declaration, at which my Lords the Bishops scrupled, which is the main Stumbling block to my Lords, and has been to many honest Men besides, and that is this.

'We do likewise declare, It is our Royal Will 'and Pleasure, that from hence forth the Execu- 'tion of all and all manner of Penal Laws, in 'Matters Ecclesiastical, for not coming to 'Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or 'for any other Nonconformity to the Religion 'Established; or for or by Reason of the Exer- 'cise of Religion in any manner whatsoever, 'be immediately suspended; and the further 'Execution of the said Penal Laws, and every of 'them, is hereby suspended.

Here the Lord Chief Justice speaking aside said,

L. C. Just. I must not suffer this, they intend to dispute the King's Power of suspending Laws.

Mr. Just Powell. My Lord, they must necessarily fall upon that Point; for if the King hath no such Power, (as clearly he hath not in my Judgment) the natural Consequence will be, that this Petition is no diminution of the King's Regal Power, and so not seditious or libellous.

L. C. Just. Brother, I know you are full of that Doctrine; but however, my Lords the Bishops shall have no occasion to say, that I deny to hear their Council. Brother, you shall have your Will for once, I will hear them, let them talk till they are weary.

Mr. Just. Powel. I desire no greater liberty to be granted them than what in Justice the Court ought to grant, that is, to hear them in defence of their Clients.

Now, my Lord, this Clause either is of some legal Effect and Signification, or it is not. If Mr. Attorney, or the King's Council, do say it is of no Effect in Law, then there is no harm done, then this Petition does no ways impeach the King's Prerogative in saying, it has been declared in Parliament, according, as the King's Council do agree the Law to be.

But my Lord, if it have any Effect in Law, and these Laws are suspended by virtue of this Clause in the Declaration, then certainly, my Lord it is of the most dismal Consequence that can be thought of, and it behoved my Lords, who are the Fathers of the Church, humbly to represent it to the King.

For, my Lord, by this Declaration, and particularly by that Clause in it, not only the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the preservation of the Christian Religion in general are suspended, and become of no force; if there be such an Effect in Law wrought by this Declaration as is pretended, (that is) that the Obligation of Obedience to them ceaseth, the Reason of it is plain, the words cannot admit of such a Quibble as to pretend, that the Execution of the Law is not the suspending of the Law, and that the suspending the Execution of the Law, is not a suspending of the Law; for we all know the Execution of every Law, in its primary Intent, is Obedience to it, that of the Penalty comes in by way of Punishment and Recompence for their Disobedience.

Now, my Lord, if this Declaration does discharge the King's Subjects from their Obedience to, and the Obligation from those Laws: then pray, my Lord, where are we? Then all the Laws of the Reformation are suspended, and the Laws of Christianity it self, by those latter words, [or for, or by reason of Religion in any manner whatsoever] so that it is not confined to the Christian Religion, but all other Religions are permitted under this Clause; and thus all our Laws for keeping the Sabbath, and which distinguish us from Heathens, will be suspended too.

My Lord, this is such an Inconvenience as (I think) I need name no more; and it is a very natural Consequence from that Clause of the Declaration, it discharges at once all Ministers and Clergymen from performing their Duty in reading the Service of the Church, it discharges their Hearers from attending upon that Service.

When a Law is suspended, the Obligation thereof is taken away; and those that before thought themselves bound to obey, now conclude they are not so obliged; and what a mischief that will be to the Church, which is under the Care of my Lords the Bishops, your Lordship will easily apprehend.

These things, my Lord, I only mention, to shew the great and evil Consequences that apparently follow upon such a Declaration, which made my Lords the Bishops decline obeying the Order, and put them under a necessity of applying thus to the King, to acquaint him with the Reasons why they could not comply with his Commands, to read this Declaration to the People, because the Consequences thereof were so great, it tending naturally to lead the People into so great an Error, as to believe those Laws were not in force, when in Truth and Reality they are still in force, and continue to oblige them.

And that being the second Reason in this Petition, I come next to consider it, to wit, that the Parliament had often declared this pretended Power to be Illegal, and for that we shall read the several Records in Parliament mentioned in their Petition, and produce several ancient Records of former Parliaments that prove this Point; and particularly in the Time of Richard the Second, concerning the Statute of Provisors, where there were particular Dispensations for that Statute, the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and could not do it without.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, go to your Proofs, and reserve your Arguments till afterwards.

Sir Rob. Sawyer My Lord, I do but shortly mention these things; so that, my Lord, as to the Matter of this Petition, we shall shew you, that it is true and agreeable to the Laws of the Land.

Then, my Lord, as to the manner of delivering it, I need say no more, but that it is plain from their Evidence, that it was in the most private and humble manner. And, as my Lord President said, Leave was asked of the King, for them to be admitted to present it: Leave was given, and accordingly they did it.

We come then, my Lord, to the third thing, the Persons, these noble Lords; and we shall shew, they are not Busybodies, but in this Matter have done their Duty, and medled with their own Affairs. That, my Lord, will appear,

First, By the general Care that is reposed in them by the Law of the Land: They are frequently in our Books, called the King's Spiritual Judges; they are intrusted with the Care of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy is their principal Care.

But, besides this, my Lord, there is another special Care put upon them, by the express Words of an Act of Parliament; for, over and above the general Care of the Church, by virtue of their Offices as Bishops, the Act of 1 Eliz. cap. 2. makes them special Guardians of the Law of Uniformity, and of that other Law in His late Majesty's Reign; where all the Clauses of that Statute Statute of 1 Eliz. are revived, and made applicable to the preſent State of the Church of England. Now in that Statute of 1 Eliz. there is this Clauſe.

And for the due Execution hereof, the Queen's Moſt Excellent Majeſty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do, in God's Name, earneſtly require and charge all the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, and other Ordinaries, that they do endeavour themſelves, to the utmoſt of their Knowledges, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceſſes and Charges, as they will anſwer before God, for ſuch Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty God may juſtly puniſh his People, for neglecting this good and wholeſome Law.

This is the Charge that lies upon the Biſhops, to take care of the Execution of that Law; and I ſhall pray by and by, that it may be read to the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is very well, indeed! To what purpoſe?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. So that, my Lord, by this Law it is plain, that my Lords the Biſhops, upon pain of bringing upon themſelves the Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, are obliged to ſee it executed; and then, my Lord, when any thing comes under their Knowledge, eſpecially if they are to be Actors in it, that has ſuch a tendency to deſtroy the very Foundations of the Church, as the Suſpenſion of all the Laws that related to the Church muſt do, it concerns them that have no other Remedy, to addreſs the King, by Petition, about it.

For that, Mr. Attorney, my Lord, has agreed, That if a proper Remedy be purſued in a proper Court, for a Grievance complained of, though there may be many hard Words that elſe would be ſcandalous, yet, being in a regular Courſe, they are no Scandal. And ſo it is ſaid in Lake's Caſe, in my Lord Hobart.

My Lord, we muſt appeal to the King, or we can appeal to no body, to be relieved againſt an Order of Council, with which we are aggrieved; and it is our Duty ſo to do, according to the Care that the Law hath placed in us.

Beſides, my Lord, the Biſhops were commanded by this Order, to do an Act relating to their Eccleſiaſtical Function, to diſtribute it to be read by their Clergy: And how could they in Conſcience do it, when they thought part of the Declaration was not according to Law?

Pray, my Lord, What has been the reaſon of His Majeſty's conſulting of his Judges? And if His Majeſty, or any the great Officers, by his Command, are about to do any thing that is contrary to Law, was it ever yet an Offence to tell the King ſo? I always look'd upon it as the Duty of an Officer or Magiſtrate, to tell the King what is Law, and what is not Law.

In Cavendiſh's Caſe, in the Queen's time, there was an Office granted of the Retorn of the Writs of Superſedeas in the Court of Common-Pleas; and he comes to the Court, and deſires to be put into the Poſſeſſion of the Office: The Court told him, They could do nothing in it, but he muſt bring his Aſſize. He applies to the Queen, and ſhe ſends, under the Privy Seal, a Command to ſequeſter the Profits, and to take Security to anſwer the Profits, as the Judgment of the Law ſhould go: But the Judges there return an Anſwer, That it was againſt Law, and they could not do it. Then there comes a ſecond Letter, reciting the former, and commanding their Obedience: The Judges returned for Anſwer, They were upon their Oaths, and were ſworn to keep the Laws, and would not do it.

My Lord, The like was done in the time of my Lord Hobart: We have it reported in Anderſon, in a Caſe where a Prohibition had gone; There came a Meſſage from Court, that a Conſultation ſhould be granted; and that was a Matter wherein there were various Opinions, whether it was Ex Neceſſitate, or Diſcretionary, but there they return'd, That it was againſt Law, for any ſuch Meſſage to be ſent.

Now here, my Lord, is a Caſe full as ſtrong: My Lords the Biſhops were commanded to do an Act, which they conceived to be againſt Law, and they declined it, and tell the King the reaſon; and they have done it in the moſt humble manner that could be, by way of Petition. If they had done (as the Civil Law terms it) Reſcribere generally, that had been lawful; but here they have done it in a more reſpectful manner, by an humble Petition. If they had ſaid the Law was otherwiſe, that ſure had been no Fault; but they do not ſo much as that, but they only ſay, it was ſo declared in Parliament; and they declare it with all Humility and Dutifulneſs. So that, my Lord, if we conſider the Perſons of the Defendants, they have not acted as Buſy bodies; and therefore, as this Caſe is, when we have given our Evidence, here will be an anſwer to all the Implications of Law, that are contained in this Information: For they would have this Petition work by Implication of Law, to make a Libel of it; but by what I have ſaid, it will appear, there was nothing of Sedition, nothing of Malice, nothing of Scandal in it; nothing of the Salt, and Vinegar, and Pepper, that they have put into the Caſe. We ſhall prove the Matters that I have open'd for our Defence, and then, I dare ſay, your Lordſhip and the Jury will be of Opinion, we have done nothing but our Duty.

Mr. Finch. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This Information ſets forth (as you may obſerve upon opening it) that the King having, by his Royal Prerogative, ſet forth his Declarations that have been read, and made an Order of Council for the reading the ſaid Declarations in the Churches; and that the Archbiſhop and Biſhops ſhould ſeverally ſend them into their Dioceſſes, to be read; my Lords the Biſhops, that are the Defendants, did conſult and conſpire together to diminiſh the Kingly Authority, and Royal Prerogative of the King, and his Power and Government in his Regal Prerogative, in ſetting forth his Declaration; and that, in proſecution of that Conſpiracy, they did contrive (as it was laid in the Information) a malicious, ſeditious, falſe, and feigned Libel, under pretence of a Petition, and ſo ſet forth the Petition; and that they publiſhed the Petition in the preſence of the King.

To this Charge in the Information, not Guilty being pleaded, the Evidence that hath been given for the King, I know hath been obſerved by the Court and the Jury, and I know will be taken into Conſideration, how far it does come up to the Proof of the Delivery of this Petition by my Lords the Biſhops; for all that was ſaid till my Lord Preſident was pleas'd to come, was no Evidence of any Delivery at all; and my Lord Preſident's Evidence is, that they were going to deliver a Petition; but whether they did deliver it, or did it not, or what they did deliver, he does not know. This is all the Evidence that has been given for the King.

But ſuppoſing now, my Lord, that there were room to preſume that they had delivered this Petition ſet forth in the Information, let us conſider what the Queſtion is between the King and my Lords the Biſhops: The Queſtion is, Whether they are guilty of Contriving to diminiſh the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative, in his Power and Government, in ſetting forth this Declaration? Whether they are guilty of the making and preſenting a malicious, ſeditious and ſcandalous Libel; and whether they have publiſhed it, as it is ſaid in the Information, in the King's Preſence?

So that the Queſtion is not now reduced to this, Whether this Paper, that is ſet forth in the Information, was delivered to the King by my Lords the Biſhops; but whether they have made a malicious and ſcandalous Libel, with an Intent to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative, and Kingly Authority? And then, if you Gentlemen, ſhould think that there is Evidence given ſufficient to prove that my Lords the Biſhops have delivered to the King that Paper which is ſet forth in the Information; yet, unleſs they have delivered a falſe, malicious, ſeditious and ſcandalous Libel; unleſs they have publiſhed it, to ſtir up Sedition in the Kingdom; and unleſs they have contrived this by Conſpiracy, to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative and Authority, and that Power that is ſaid to be in the King, my Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of this Accuſation.

There are in this Declaration ſeveral Clauſes, which, upon reading of the Information (I am ſure) cannot but have been obſerved by you, Gentlemen of the Jury; and one ſpecial Clauſe hath been by the Council already opened to you, and I ſhall not enlarge upon it.

My Lord, This Petition that is thus delivered to the King, if it be a Libel, a ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel (as the Information calls it) it muſt be ſo, either for the Matter of the Petition, or for the Perſons that deliver'd the Petition, or for the manner of their preſenting and delivering it: But neither for the Matter, nor for the Perſons, nor for the manner of preſenting it, is there any Endeavour to diminiſh the King's Royal Prerogative, nor to ſtir up Sedition, nor Reflection upon the King's Royal and Kingly Authority.

The Petition does humbly ſet forth to His Majeſty, that there having been ſuch a Declaration, and ſuch an Order of Council, they did humbly repreſent to His Majeſty, that they were not averſe to any thing commanded them in that Order, in reſpect to the juſt and due Obedience that they owed to the King, nor in reſpect of their want of a due Tenderneſs to thoſe Perſons to whom the King had been pleaſed to ſhew his Tenderneſs; but the Declaration being founded upon a Power of Diſpenſing, which had been declared illegal in Parliament ſeveral times, and particularly in the Years 1662, 72, and 85. they did humbly beſeech His Majeſty (they not being able to comply with his Command in that matter) that he would not inſiſt upon it.

Now, my Lord, Where is the Contrivance to diminiſh the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative?

This is a Declaration founded upon a Power of Diſpenſing, which undertakes to ſuſpend all Laws Eccleſiaſtical whatſoever; for not coming to Church, or not Receiving the Sacrament, or any other Nonconformity to the Religion eſtabliſhed, or for or by reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any manner whatſoever; ordering that the Execution of all thoſe Laws be immediately ſuſpended, and they are thereby declared to be ſuſpended; as if the King had a Power to ſuſpend all the Laws relating to his eſtabliſh'd Religion, and all the Laws that were made for the Security of our Reformation. Theſe are all ſuſpended by His Majeſty's Declaration (as it is ſaid) in the Information, by virtue of his Royal Prerogative, and Power ſo to do.

Now, my Lord, I have always taken it, with Submiſſion, that a Power to abrogate Laws, is as much a part of the Legiſlature, as a Power to make Laws: A Power to lay Laws aſleep, and to ſuſpend Laws, is equal to a Power of Abrogating them; for they are no longer in Being, as Laws, while they are ſo laid aſleep, or ſuſpended: And to abrogate all at once, or to do it time after time, is the ſame thing; and both are equally parts of the Legiſlature.

My Lord, In all the Education that I have had, in all the ſmall Knowledge of the Laws that I could attain to, I could never yet hear of, or learn, that the Conſtitution of the Government in England was otherwiſe than thus, That the whole Legiſlative Power is in the King, Lords and Commons; the King and his two Houſes of Parliament. But then, If this Declaration be founded upon a part of the Legiſlature, which muſt be by all Men acknowledged, not to reſide in the King alone, but in the King, Lords and Commons, it cannot be a legal and true Power, or Prerogative.

This, my Lord, has been attempted, but in the laſt King's time; it never was pretended till then; and in that firſt Attempt, it was ſo far from being acknowledged, that it was taken notice of in Parliament, and declared againſt: So it was in the Years 1662. and 1672.

In the Year—62. where there was but the leaſt Umbrage given of ſuch a Diſpenſing Power; although the King had declared, in his Speech to the Parliament, that he wiſhed he had ſuch a Power, which his Declaration before ſeemed to aſſume; the Parliament was ſo jealous of this, that they immediately made their Application to His Majeſty, by an Addreſs againſt the Declaration; and they give Reaſons againſt it, in their Addreſs: One, in particular, was, That the King could not diſpenſe with thoſe Laws, without an Act of Parliament.

There was another Attempt in 1672. and then, after his Majeſty had, in his Speech, mentioned his Declaration to them, the Parliament there again, particularly the Houſe of Commons, did humbly addreſs to His Majeſty; ſetting forth, that this could not be done by Law, without an Act of Parliament: And your Lordſhip, by and by, upon reading the Record, will be ſatisfied what was the Event of all this. His Majeſty himſelf was ſo far pleaſed to concur with them in that Opinion, that he cancell'd his Declaration, tore off the Seal, and cauſed it to be made known to the Houſe of Lords, by the Lord Chancellor, who, by His Majeſty's Command, ſatisfied the Houſe of it, that His Majeſty had broken the Seal, and cancell'd the Declaration; with this further Declaration, which is enter'd in the Records of the Houſe, That it ſhould never be drawn into Example, or Conſequence.

My Lord, The Matter ſtanding thus, in reſpect to the King's Prerogative, and the Declarations that had been made in Parliament; conſider next, I beſeech you, how far my Lords the Biſhops were concerned in this Queſtion, humbly to make their Application to the King.

Biſhops

My Lords the Biſhops lying under a Command to publiſh this Declaration, it was their Duty, as Peers of the Realm, and Biſhops of the Church of England, humbly to apply themſelves to His Majeſty, to make known their Reaſons, why they could not obey that Command; and they do it with all Submiſſion, and all Humility, repreſenting to His Majeſty what had been declared in Parliament; and it having been ſo declared, they could not comply with his Order; as apprehending that this Declaration was founded upon that which the Parliament declared to be illegal; and ſo his Majeſty's Command to publiſh this Declaration, would not warrant them ſo to do. This they did, as Peers; and this they had a Right to do as Biſhops; humbly to adviſe the King.

For, ſuppoſe, my Lord, (which is not to be ſuppoſed in every Caſe, nor do I ſuppoſe it in this; but ſuppoſe that there might be a King of England that ſhould be miſled;) (I do not ſuppoſe that to be the Caſe now, I ſay, but I know it hath been the Caſe formerly) that the King ſhould be environed with Counſellors that had given him evil Advice; it hath been objected as a Crime againſt ſuch evil Counſellors, that they would not permit and ſuffer the Great Men of the Kingdom to offer the King their Advice. How often do we ſay in Weſtminſter-Hall, That the King is deceived in his Grant? There is ſcarce a Day in the Term, but it is ſaid in one Court, or other; but it was never yet thought an Offence to ſay ſo: And what more is there in this Caſe?

My Lord, if the King was miſ-informed, or under a Miſapprehenſion of the Law, my Lords, as they are Peers, and as they are Biſhops, are concerned in it; and if they humbly apply themſelves to the King, and offer him their Advice, where is the Crime?

My Lord, theſe noble Lords, the Defendants, had more than an ordinary Call to this; for beſides the Duty of their Office, and the Care of the Church, that was incumbent on them as Biſhops, they were here to become Actors; for they were, by that Order of Council, commanded themſelves to publiſh it, and to diſtribute it to the ſeveral Miniſters in their ſeveral Dioceſſes, with their Commands to read it: Therefore they had more than ordinary Reaſon to concern themſelves in the Matter.

Next, we are to conſider, my Lord, in what manner this was done; They make their Application to the King, by an humble Petition, with all the Decency and Reſpect that could be ſhewn; asking leave, firſt, to approach his Perſon; and having leave, they offer'd my Lord Preſident the Matter of their Petition, that nothing might ſeem hard, or diſreſpectful, or as if they intended any thing that was unfit to be avowed. When they had taken all this Care in their Approach, and begging leave for it, they come ſecretly to the King, in private, when he was all alone, and there they humbly preſent this Petition to His Majeſty. Now, how this can be called the Publication of a malitious and ſeditious Libel, when it was but the Preſenting of a Petition to the King alone: And how it can be ſaid to be with an Intent to ſtir up Sedition in the People againſt His Majeſty, and to alienate the Hearts of his People from him, when it was in this private manner delivered to him himſelf only, truly, I cannot apprehend.

My Lord, I hope nothing of this can be thought an Offence: If the Jury ſhould think that there has been Evidence ſufficient given, to prove that my Lords the Biſhops did deliver this Paper to the King, yet that is not enough to make them guilty of this Information, unleſs this Paper be likewiſe found to be in Diminution of the King's Royal Prerogative, and Regal Authority, in diſpenſing with, and ſuſpending of all Laws, without Act of Parliament: Unleſs it be found to be a Libel againſt the King, to tell him, That in Parliament it was ſo and ſo declared: And unleſs the preſenting this by way of Petition (which is the Right of all People that apprehend themſelves aggrieved, to approach His Majeſty by Petition) be a Libelling of the King: And unleſs this humble Petition, in this manner preſented to the King in private, may be ſaid to be a malicious and ſeditious Libel, with an Intent to ſtir up the People to Sedition: Unleſs all this can be found, there is no Man living can ever find my Lords the Biſhops guilty upon this Information. Therefore, my Lord, we will go on, and make out this Matter that we have opened to your Lordſhip, if Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Sollicitor think fit to argue the Points that we have opened.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word on the ſame Side. For the firſt Point, it is a Point of Law, whether the Matter contained in this Petition be a Libel. The King's Council pretend it is ſo, becauſe it ſays, the Declaration is founded upon a Power the Parliament has declared to be illegal. But we ſay, that whatſoever the King is pleaſed to ſay in any Declaration of his, it is not the King's ſaying of it, that makes it to be Law. Now we ſay, This Declaration under the Great Seal, is not agreeable to the Laws of the Land; and that for this Reaſon, Becauſe it does, at one Blow, ſet aſide all the Law we have in England.

My Lord, if this be denied, we muſt a little debate this matter; for they are almoſt all Penal Laws; not only thoſe before the Reformation, but ſince; upon which the whole Government, both in Church and State, does in a great meaſure depend.

Eſpecially, my Lord, in Matters of Religion, they are all Penal Laws: For, by the Act of Uniformity, which my Lords the Biſhops are ſworn to obſerve, and adjured by an expreſs Clauſe in the Act; No Man is to preach, unleſs he be Epiſcopally ordained; no Man is to preach without a Licence. If all this be ſet aſide, I confeſs, then it will go very far into the whole Eccleſiaſtical Government. If this be denied, we are ready to argue that too.

L. C. J. They are to do ſo ſtill.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, I am ſure the Conſequence is otherwiſe, if this Declaration ſignifie any thing. And if it be the Will of the King, my Lord, the Will of the King is, what the Law is. If ſo be the King's Will be not conſonant to the Law, it is not obliging.

My Lord, The Caſes that we have had of Diſpenſations, are all ſo many ſtrong Authorities, againſt a general, or particular Abrogation. My Lord, that is a Matter of Law, which if it fall out to be any way doubtful, it will be fit to have it debated and ſetled.

If

If they will ſay, that the Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical can be abrogated, or nulled, or made void pro tempore, or for Life, without the meeting of the King and People in Parliament; I muſt confeſs, they ſay a great thing, as it is a Point of great Concern; but I think, that will not be ſaid: And all that has been ever ſaid in any Caſe, touching Diſpenſations, proves quite the contrary, and aſſerts what I affirm. For, Why ſhould any Man go about to argue, that the King may diſpence with this or that particular Law, if at once he can diſpence with all the Law, by an undoubted Prerogative? This is a Point of Law, which we inſiſt upon, and are ready to argue with them; but we will go on with the reſt of thoſe things that we have offer'd: And firſt, we will read the Act of Uniformity, made 1 Eliz. that Clauſe of it, where they are ſo ſtrictly charged to ſee the Execution of that Law.

This Act, my Lord, by the Act of Uniformity, made in the Beginning of the late King's Reign, is revived, with all the Clauſes in it, relating to this Matter. If then this be a Duty incumbent upon them, and their Oaths require it of them; and if they find, that the Pleaſure of the King, in his Declaration, is that which is not conſonant to this Law, what can they do?

Can any thing be more humble, or done with a more Chriſtian Mind, than by way of Petition, to inform the King in the Matter? For I never thought it, nor hath it ever (ſure) been thought by any body elſe, to be a Crime to petition the King: For the King may be miſtaken in the Law, ſo our Books ſay; and we, every Day, in Weſtminſter Hall, argue againſt the King's Grants, and ſay, He is deceived in his Grants. It is the great Benefit and Liberty, which the King gives to his Subjects, to argue the Legality, or Illegality of his Grants.

My Lord, When all this is done, to make this to be a Libel, by putting in the Words, Malicious, Seditious, Scandalous, and with an Intent to raiſe Sedition, would be pretty hard.—— My Lord, We pray, that Clauſe of the Statute may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What for?

Mr. Pollixfen. It is a general Law, and therefore the Court will take notice of it; and we pray, the Jury may hear it read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I agree it to be as Mr. Pollixfen has opened; and I agree it to be as Sir Robert Sawyer has opened it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, We ſhall put it upon a ſhort Point. My Lords the Biſhops are here accuſed of a Crime, of a very heinous nature as can be; they are here branded and ſtigmatized by this Information, as if they were ſeditious Libellers; when, my Lord, it will, in truth, fall out, that they have done no more than their Duty; their Duty to God, their Duty to the King, and their Duty to the Church.

For, in this Caſe, that which we humbly offer to your Lordſhip (and inſiſt upon it, as very plain) is this; That the Kings of England have no power to ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, that eſtabliſh Religion: That is it, which we ſtand upon for our Defence. And we ſay, That ſuch a Diſpenſing Power with Laws and Statutes, is a thing that ſtrikes at the very Foundation of all the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the King's Subjects whatſoever. If the King may ſuſpend the Laws of the Land, which concern our Religion, I am ſure there is no other Law, but he may ſuſpend: And if the King may ſuſpend all the Laws of the Kingdom, what a Condition are all the Subjects in, for their Lives, Liberties and Properties? All at Mercy.

My Lord, The King's Legal Prerogatives are are as much for the Advantage of his Subjects as of himſelf; and no Man goes about to ſpeak againſt them: But, under pretence of Legal Prerogatives, to extend the Power of the King, to ſupport a Prerogative that tends to the Deſtruction of all his Subjects, their Religion, and Liberties; in that, I think, they do the King no Service, who go about to do it.

But now we ſay, with your Lordſhip's Favour, that theſe Laws are the great Bulwark of the Reformed Religion; they are, in truth, that which fenceth the Religion and Church of England, and we have no other Human Fence beſides. They were made upon a Foreſight of the Miſchief that had, and might come, by falſe Religions in this Kingdom; and they were intended to defend the Nation againſt them, and to keep them out; particularly, to keep out the Romiſh Religion (which is the very worſt of all Religions) from prevailing among us; and that is the very Deſign of the Act for the Teſts, which is intituled, An Act to prevent Dangers that may happen from Popiſh Recuſants.

My Lord, If this Declaration ſhould take effect, what would be the End of it? All Religions are let in, let them be what they will; Ranters, Quakers, and the like; nay, even the Roman Catholick Religion (as they call it;) which was intended, by theſe Acts of Parliament, and by the Act of Uniformity, and ſeveral other Acts, to be kept out of this Nation, as a Religion no way tolerable, nor to be endured here.

If this Declaration take effect, that Religion will ſtand upon the ſame Terms with the Proteſtant Religion. Suſpend thoſe Laws, and that Romiſh Religion, that was intended to be prohibited, and ſo much Care was taken, and ſo many Statutes made, to prohibit it, will come in; and all this Care, and all thoſe Statutes go for nothing. This one Declaration ſets them all out of doors; and then that Religion ſtands upon equal Terms with the eſtabliſhed Religion.

My Lord, we ſay this farther, that my Lords the Biſhops have the Care of the Church, by their very Function, and Offices; and are bound to take care, to keep out all thoſe falſe Religions that are prohibited, and deſigned to be kept out by the Law. My Lords the Biſhops finding this Declaration founded upon a meer pretended Power, that had been continually oppoſed, and rejected in Parliament, could not comply with the King's Command to read it.

My Lord, Such a Power to diſpence with, or ſuſpend the Laws of a Nation, cannot, with any ſhadow of Reaſon, be. It is not long ſince, that ſuch a Power was ever pretended to by any, but ſuch as have the Legiſlative too; for it is plain, that ſuch a Power muſt, at leaſt be equal to the Power that made the Laws. To diſpence with a Law, muſt argue a Power greater, or, at leaſt, as great as that which made the Law.

My Lord, It has been often ſaid in our Books, That where the King's Subjects are concerned in Intereſt, the King cannot ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with a particular Law. But, my Lord, how can the King's Subjects be more concern'd in in Intereſt, than when their Religion lies at ſtake? It has been reſolved, upon the Statute of Symony, that where the Statute has diſabled the Party to take, there the King could not enable him, againſt that Act of Parliament: And ſhall it be ſaid, that by his Diſpenſation, he ſhall enable one to hold an Office, who is diſabled by the Teſt-Act?

My Lord, We ſay, The Courſe of our Law allows no ſuch Diſpenſation, as the Declaration pretends to. And he that is but meanly read in our Law, muſt needs underſtand this, That the Kings of England cannot ſuſpend our Laws; for that would be, to ſet aſide the Law of the Kingdom: And then we might be clearly without any Laws, if the King ſhould pleaſe to ſuſpend them.

'Tis true, we ſay, the laſt King Charles was prevailed upon, by Miſ-information to make a Diſpenſation, ſomewhat of the nature of this, though not ſo full an one; for that diſpenſed only with ſome few Ceremonies, and things of that nature: But the Houſe of Commons (this taking Air) in 1662. repreſent this to the King, by a Petition. And what is it that they do repreſent? That he, by his Diſpenſation, has undertaken to do that, which nothing but an Act of Parliament can do; that is, the diſpenſing with Penal Laws; which is only to be done by Act of Parliament. And thereupon it was thought fit, upon the King's Account, to bring in an Act for it, in ſome Caſes.

My Lord, the King did then, in his Speech to the Parliament (which we uſe, as a great Argument againſt this Diſpenſing Power) ſay this, 'That, conſidering the Circumſtances of 'the Nation, he could wiſh with all his Heart, 'that he had ſuch a Power, to diſpenſe with 'ſome Laws, in ſome Particulars. And thereupon, there was a Bill, in order to an Act of Parliament, brought in, giving the King a Power to diſpenſe; but, my Lord, with a great many Qualifications. Which ſhews plainly, that it was taken by the Parliament, that he had no Power to diſpenſe with the Laws, of himſelf.

My Lord, Afterwards, in 1672. the King was prevailed upon again, to grant another Diſpenſation, ſomewhat larger.——

L. C. Juſt. Brother Pemberton, I would not interrupt you, but we have heard of this over and over again already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then, ſince your Lordſhip is ſatisfied of theſe things (as I preſume you are) elſe I ſhould have gone on, I have done my Lord.

Mr. S. Levinz. But, my Lord, we ſhall go a little higher than that, and ſhew, that it has been taken all along, as the ancient Law of England, that ſuch Diſpenſations ought to be by the King and the Parliament, and not by the King alone.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you will admit every one of the Council to ſpeech it, before they give their Evidence, when ſhall we come to an End of this Cauſe? We ſhall be here till Midnight.

L. C. Juſt. They have no Mind to have an End of the Cauſe, for they kept it three Hours longer than they need to have done.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, This Caſe does require a great deal of Patience.

L. C. Juſt. It does ſo, Brother; and the Court has had a great deal of Patience: but we muſt not ſit here only to hear Speeches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, after all their Speeches, of two Hours long, let them read any thing, if they have it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We will begin with the Record of Richard the Second —— Call William Fiſher.

William Fiſher, Clerk to Mr. Ince, ſworn.

L. C. Juſt. What do you ask him?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Shew him that Copy of the Record.

The Record was then ſhewn him.

L. C. Juſt. Where had you thoſe, Sir?

Mr. Fiſher. Among the Records in the Tower.

L. C. Juſt. Are they true Copies?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Did you examine them by the Record?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then hand them in; put them in.

Clerk reads. Ex Rotulo Parliamenti de Anno Regni Regis Richardi Secundi XV. N. 1.——— My Lord, It is written in French, and I ſhall make but a bad Reading of it.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Where is the Man that examin'd it?——Do you underſtand French?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Record is in another Hand than this; they may eaſily read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who copy'd this Paper?

Mr. Fiſher. I did examine it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you examine it with?

Mr. Fiſher. I look'd upon that Copy, and Mr. Halſtead read the Record.

L. C. Juſt. Young Man, read out.

Fiſher reads. Vendredy Lende maine del Almes qu'eſtoit le primier jour——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, tell us what it is you would have read?

Mr. S. Levinz. I'll tell you what it is, Mr. Sollicitor: 'Tis the Diſpenſation with the Statute of Proviſors: And the Act of Parliament does give the King a Power to diſpenſe, till ſuch a time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Don't you think the King's Prerogative is affirmed by many Acts of Parliament?

Mr. S. Levinz. If the King could diſpenſe without an Act of Parliament, what need was there for the making of it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, We are not to argue with you about that yet.

L. C. Juſt. Read it in Engliſh, for the Jury to underſtand it.

Mr. Fiſher. My Lord, I cannot undertake to read it ſo readily in Engliſh.

Mr. J. Powel. Why don't you produce the Records that are mentioned in the Petition, thoſe in King Charles the Second's time?

Mr. S. Levinz. We will produce our Records in Order of Time, as they are.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. There is the Clerk of the Records of the Tower, Mr. Halſtead, will read it very well in French or Engliſh.

Then Mr. Halſtead was ſworn to interpret the Records into Engliſh, according to the beſt of his Skill and Knowledge; but not reading very readily——a true Copy of the Record in Engliſh follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, in the 15th Year of King Richard the Second, Numero Primo.

'FRiday, the Morrow of All Souls, which was 'the firſt Day of this Parliament, holden 'at Weſtminſter, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign

'Reign of our Lord, King Richard the Second, 'after the Conqueſt, the Reverend Father in 'God, the Archbiſhop of York, Primate and 'Chancellor of England, by the King's Com-'mandment, being preſent in Parliament, pro-'nounced and declared, very nobly and wiſely, 'the Cauſe of the Summons of this Parliament: 'And ſaid, Firſt, That the King would, that 'holy Church principally, and afterwards the 'Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and alſo the 'Cities and Burroughs, ſhould have and enjoy 'their Liberties and Franchiſes, as well as they 'had them, and enjoyed them, in the Time of 'his Noble Progenitors, Kings of England; and 'alſo, in his own Time. And afterwards ſaid, 'The Summons of this Parliament was principal-'ly for three Occaſions: The firſt Occaſion was, 'To ordain how the Peace and Quiet of the 'Land, which have heretofore been greatly ble-'miſhed and diſturbed, as well by Detraction 'and Maintenance, as otherwiſe, might be bet-'ter holden and kept, and the Laws better exe-'cuted, and the King's Commands better obey-'ed. The ſecond Occaſion was, To ordain and 'ſee how the Price of Wools, which is, beyond 'meaſure, leſſened and impaired, might be bet-'ter amended and inhaunced. And alſo, That 'in caſe the War ſhould begin again, at the End 'of the preſent Truce, to wit, at the Aſſumption 'of our Lady next coming, to ordain and ſee, 'how and whereby the ſaid War may be main-'tained at the leaſt Charge of the People. And 'the third Occaſion was, touching the Statutes 'of Proviſors, To ordain and ſee how our Ho-'ly Father might have that which to him be-'longs; and the King, that which belongs to 'him, and to his Crown; according unto that, 'Render unto Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and 'unto God the things which are God's.

Then the other Record of Richard the Second was read as follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, the fifteenth Year of King Richard the Second (N. 8.)

'Be it remembred, touching the Statute of 'Proviſors, That the Commons, for the great 'Confidence which they have in the Perſon of 'our Lord the King, and in his moſt excellent 'Knowledge, and in the great Tenderneſs which 'he hath for his Crown, and the Rights there-'of; and alſo, in the noble and high Diſcretions 'of the Lords, have aſſented, in full Parliament, 'that our ſaid Lord the King, by Advice and Aſſent 'of the ſaid Lords, may make ſuch Sufferance, 'touching the ſaid Statute, as ſhall ſeem to him rea-'ſonable and profitable, until the next Parliament, 'ſo as the ſaid Statute be not repealed in no Ar-'ticle thereof: And that all thoſe who have any 'Benefices by force of the ſaid Statute, before 'this preſent Parliament; and alſo, That all 'thoſe, to whom any Aid, Tranquillity, or Ad-'vantage is accrued, by virtue of the ſaid 'Statute of the Benefices of Holy Church (of 'which they were heretofore in Poſſeſſion) as 'well by Preſentation, or Collation of our Lord 'the King, as of the Ordinaries, or Religious 'Perſons whatſoever, or by any other manner 'or way whatſoever; may freely have and en-'joy them, and peaceably continue their Poſſe-'ſſion thereof, without being ouſted thereof, or 'any ways challenged, hindred, moleſted, diſ-'quieted, or grieved hereafter, by any Proviſors, 'or others, againſt the Form and Effect of 'the Statute aforeſaid, by reaſon of the ſaid 'Sufferance in any time to come. And moreover, 'That the ſaid Commons may diſagree at the next Par-'liament, to this Sufferance, and fully reſort to the ſaid 'Statute, if it ſhall ſeem good to them to do it: 'With Proteſtation, That this Aſſent, which is a 'Novelty; and has not been done before this time, be 'not drawn into Example or Conſequence for Time to 'come. And they prayed our Lord the King, 'that the Proteſtation might be entred of Record, 'in the Roll of the Parliament: And the King 'granted, and commanded to do it.

Mr. S. Levinz. Now, my Lord, we will go on.——This was in Richard the Second's Time: And a Power is given by the Commons to the King, with the Aſſent of the Lords, to diſpenſe, but only to the next Parliament; with a Power reſerved to the Commons; and to diſagree to it, and retract that Conſent of theirs the next Parliament.

Sir Geo. Treby. The Statute of Proviſors was and is a Penal Law and concerning Eccleſiaſtical Matters too; viz. The Collating and Preſenting to Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Benefices, and Dignities of the Church: And in this Record, now read, the Parliament give the King a limited Power, and for a ſhort Time, to diſpenſe with that Statute. But, to obviate all Pretence of ſuch a Power's being inherent in the Crown, as a Prerogative, they declare, (1) That it was a Novelty; that is as much as to ſay, That the King had no ſuch Power before. (2) That it ſhould not be drawn into Example; that is to ſay, That he ſhould have no ſuch Power for the future.

Mr. S. Levinz. Now we will go on to the Records mentioned in the Petition; thoſe in the laſt King's Time, in 1662, and 1672; and that in this King's Time, in 1685.——Where is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords?

Mr. Walker ſworn.

L. C. J. Is that the Book of the Houſe of Lords?

Mr. Walker. It is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Is it kept by you?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is it kept?

Mr. Walker. In the uſual place, here in Weſtminſter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that?

Mr. S. Levinz. It is the Journal of the Houſe of Lords——But, my Lord, there is one thing that is mentioned in the laſt Record that is read, which is worth your Lordſhip's, and the Jury's Obſervation; That it is declared a Novelty, and a Proteſtation, that it ſhould not be drawn into Precedent for the future.

L. C. J. That has been obſerved, Brother: Let us hear your Record read.

Clerk reads. —— Die Mercurii 18. die Februarii, 1662.

'His Majeſty was preſent this Day, ſitting in 'the Regal Crown and Robes, the Peers being 'likewiſe in their Robes: The King gave Or-'der to the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, 'to ſignifie to the Houſe of Commons his Plea-'ſure, that they preſently come up, and attend 'His Majeſty, with their Speaker; who being 'preſent, His Majeſty made this Speech follow-'ing.

'My Lords, and Gentlemen;

'I Am very glad to meet you here again, ha-'ving thought the Time long ſince we 'parted, and often wiſhed you had been toge-'ther,

'ther, to help me in some Occasions which have 'fallen out: I need not repeat them unto you, 'you have all had the Noise of them in your 'several Countries; and, God be thanked, they 'were but Noise, without any worse Effects.

'To cure the Distempers, and compose the 'differing Minds that are yet amongst us, I set 'forth my Declaration of the 26th of December. 'In which you may see, I am willing to set 'Bounds to the Hopes of some, and to the Fears 'of others; of which, when you shall have ex-'amined well the Grounds, I doubt not but I 'shall have your Concurrence therein. The 'truth is, I am in my Nature, an Enemy to all 'Severity for Religion and Conscience, how 'mistaken soever it be, when it extends to Ca-'pital and Sanguinary Punishments; which I am 'told, were began in Popish Times. Therefore, 'when I say this, I hope I shall not need to 'warn any here, not to inferr from thence, that 'I mean to favour Popery. I must confess to you, 'there are many of that Profession, who, having 'served my Father, and my self very well, may 'fairly hope for some part in that Indulgence, I 'would willingly afford to others who dissent 'from us. But let me explain my self, lest some 'mistake me herein, as I heard they did in my 'Declaration: I am far from meaning by this, 'a Toleration, or Qualifying them thereby to 'hold any Offices or Places of Trust in the Go-'vernment. Nay, further, I desire some Laws 'may be made, to hinder the Growth and Pro-'gress of their Doctrine.

'I hope you have all so good an Opinion of 'my Zeal for the Protestant Religion, as I need 'not tell you, I will not yield to any therein, not 'to the Bishops themselves; nor in my liking the 'Uniformity of it, as it is now established; 'which being the Standard of our Religion, 'must be kept pure, and uncorrupted, free from 'all other Mixtures. And yet, if the Dissenters 'will demean themselves peaceably and modestly under 'the Government, I could heartily wish, I had such a 'Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion ——

Sir Geo. Treby. Pray Sir, read that out distinctly.

Clerk reads.——'I could heartily wish I had such 'a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, 'as might not needlesly force them out of the 'Kingdom; or, staying here, give them Cause 'to conspire against the Peace of it.

'My Lords, and Gentlemen:

'It would look like Flattering in me, to tell 'you, in what degree I am confident of your 'Wisdom and Affection in all things that relate 'to the Greatness and Prosperity of the King-'dom. If you consider well what is best for us 'all, I dare say, we shall not disagree. I have 'no more to say to you at present, but, once 'again, to bid you heartily welcome'.

Mr. Finch. The next thing we shall shew you is, that after the King had made this Speech, and wished he had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, there was a Bill in the House of Lords brought in, to enable the King to dispense with several Laws: We shall shew you the Journal, where it was read and committed; but further than that it went not.

L. C. J. What use do you make of this, Mr. Finch?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You may easily apprehend the Use we shall make of it. (The King, in his Speech, says, He wished he had such a Power;) the House of Lords thought he had not; and therefore they order'd a Bill to be brought in, to enable him.——Read the Journal of the Lords, of the 13th of March, 1662.

Clerk reads.

Die Veneris XIII° die Martii, 1662.

'After some Debate, whether the House 'should be put into a Grand Committee, for the 'further Debate of the Bill concerning His Ma-'jesty's Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs, it was put 'to the Question; (viz.)

'As many of your Lordships as would have 'this House adjourned, and put into a Com-'mittee, to consider of the said Bill, say, Content; 'others, Not Content.

'Passed in the Affirmative.

'And then the Lord Chamberlain of the 'Houshold was directed to take the Chair, as 'formerly; which he did accordingly.

'And after Debate the House was resumed, 'after the Grand Committee had appointed a 'Sub-Committee, touching the said Bill.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all in the Journal of the House of Lords, about this Matter.—— We will now shew you the Bill it self.

Clerk reads. 'An Act concerning His Majesty's 'Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs.

'WHereas divers of His Majesty's Subjects, 'through Error of Judgment, and mis-'guided Consciences (whereunto the Licentious-'ness of these late unhappy Times have much 'contributed) do not conform themselves to the 'Order of Divine Worship and Service established 'by Law; and although His Majesty and both 'Houses of Parliament are fully satisfied, that 'those Scruples of Conscience, from whence 'this Nonconformity ariseth, are ill grounded; 'and that the Government of the Church, with 'the Service thereof (as now established) is the 'best that is any where extant, and most effectual 'to the Preservation of the Protestant Religion: 'Yet hoping that Clemency and Indulgence 'may, in time, wear out those Prejudices, and 'reduce the Dissenters to the Unity of the 'Church; and considering that this Indulgence, 'how necessary soever, cannot be dispensed by 'any certain Rule, but must vary, according to 'the Circumstances of Time, and the Temper 'and Principles of those, to whom it is to be 'granted; and His Majesty being the best Judge, 'when, and to whom this Indulgence is to be 'dispensed, or as may be most consistent with 'the publick Peace, and without just Cause of 'Offence to others; and to the end His Majesty 'may be enabled to exercise it with univer-sal 'Satisfaction, Be it Enacted by the King's Most 'Excellent Majesty, by Advice and with the 'Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'and Commons, in this present Parliament as-'sembled, and by the Authority thereof, That 'the King's Majesty may, by Letters Patents 'under the Great Seal, or by such other Ways as 'to His Majesty shall seem meet, dispense with one 'Act, or Law, made the last Session of this present 'Parliament (intituled, An Act for the Uniformity 'of Publick Prayers, and Administration of the Sa-'craments, and other Rites and Ceremonies; and for 'Establishing the Form of Making, and Ordaining, 'and Consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons in the 'Church of England) and with any other Laws 'or Statutes concerning the same; or requiring 'Oaths, or Subscriptions; or which do enjoin

'Conformity to the Order, Discipline and 'Worship established in this Church, and the 'Penalties in the said Laws imposed, or any of 'them: And may grant Licences to such of His 'Majesty's Subjects of the Protestant Religion, 'of whose inoffensive and peaceable Disposition 'His Majesty shall be perswaded, to enjoy and 'use the Exercise of their Religion and Worship, 'though differing from the publick Rule; (the 'said Laws and Statutes, or any Disabilities, In-'capacities, or Penalties, in them, or any of 'them contained, or any Matter or Thing to 'the contrary thereof notwithstanding.)

'Provided always, and be it Enacted, That no 'such Indulgence, License, or Dispensation 'hereby to be granted, shall extend, or be construed 'to extend to the Tolerating, or Permitting the Use or 'Exercise of the Popish, or Roman Catholick Religion 'in this Kingdom; nor to enable any Person or Per-'sons, to hold or exercise any Place or Office of publick 'Trust within this Kingdom, who, at the Begin-'ning of this present Parliament, were, by the 'Laws and Statutes of this Realm, disenabled 'thereunto; nor to exempt any Person or Per-'sons from such Penalties, as are by Law to be 'inflicted upon such as shall publish or preach any 'thing to the Depravation, or Derogation of 'the Book of Common Prayer or the Government, 'Order and Ceremonies of the Church establish-'ed by Law.

'Provided also, and be it Enacted, That no such 'Licence or Dispensation shall extend to make any 'Priest or Minister capable of any Ecclesiastical Living 'or Benefice, with Cure, who shall not, before 'the Archbishop of the Province, or Bishop of 'the Dioceſs where he lives, makes such Subscription 'to the Articles of Religion, as is enjoyned by the 'Statute of the 13th of Elizabeth, made for Re-'formation of Disorders in the Church. Nor 'shall extend, or be construed to extend to dispense with 'the Book of Common Prayer: But that the said 'Book shall be constantly read in all the Cathe-'dral and Collegiate Churches, and in all the 'Parish Churches, and publick Chappels.

Sir Rob Sawyer. Here your Lordship sees what the Lords did in this Matter.——We shall now shew you, out of the Commons Journal, what they did, concerning this Speech of the King.—Shew the Journal of the 25th of February, 1662.

Mr. Jodrell sworn.

L. C. J. Did you examine that, Mr. Jodrell?

Mr. Jodrell. It is the Original Book.

The Book delivered into the Court.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii XXV° die Februarii, 15 Car. II. Resolved, that it be presented.——

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You must begin above——The House then took into Debate——

Clerk reads. 'The House then took into De-'bate the Matter touching Indulgence to Disſen-'ters, from the Act of Uniformity.

'The Question being put, that the Present 'Debate be adjourned till to Morrow 'Morning.

'The House was divided.

'The Yeas went out.

Sir John Goodrick, and Sir William Lowther, 'Tellers for the Noes; 'with the Noes, 161.

Sir Richard Temple, and Sir John Talbot, 'Tellers for the Yeas; 'with the Yeas, 119.

'And so it passed in the Negative.

'Resolved, &c.

'That it be presented to the King's Majesty, 'as the humble Advice of this House, That no 'Indulgence be granted to the Dissenters, from 'the Act of Uniformity.——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does your Lordship think it to Evidence?

L. C. J. Let them read it, Mr. Sollicitor, that we may hear what it is.

Clerk reads on.

'Ordered that a Committee be appointed to 'collect and bring in the Reasons of this House 'for this Vote, upon the present Debate; to be 'presented to his Majesty, and that the nomi-'nating of the Committee be adjourned till to 'morrow Morning.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's all

Mr. Sol Gen. Pray, if there be any thing more, read on; you shall not parcel out a Re-cord, and take, and leave what you will.

Mr. Finch. Did not you parcel out our Petition?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read on, if there be any thing about this matter.

Clerk. That is all.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the 27th of February, 1662.

Clerk reads. Veneris xxvii. Februarii xv. Car. II.

'Sir Heneage Finch reports from the Committee 'appointed to collect and bring in the Reasons 'of the House for their Vote of Advice to the 'King's Majesty; and in the close of those Rea-'sons to add, That the House will assist His Ma-'jesty with their Lives and Fortunes, and to pen 'an Address to His Majesty for that purpose; 'the several Reasons and Address agreed by the 'Committee in writing, he read in his place, 'and did bring up, and deliver the same in at the 'Clerk's Table.

'The First Paragraph was read, and upon the 'Question agreed to.

'The Second Paragraph was read, and upon 'the Question agreed to.

'The Third was read, and upon the Question 'agreed to.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Go over that, and go to the Address it self.

Clerk reads. 'May it please your most Excel-'lent Majesty:

'We your Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal 'Subjects, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses 'of the House of Commons, in Parliament as-'sembled, having with all Fidelity and Obe-'dience considered of the several matters com-'prised in your Majesty's late Gracious Decla-'ration of the 26th of December last, and your 'most Gracious Speech at the beginning of this 'present Session, Do in the first place for our 'selves, and in the Names of all the Commons 'of England, render unto your Sacred Majesty 'the Tribute of our most hearty Thanks for that 'infinite Grace and Goodness wherewith your 'Majesty hath been pleased to publish your Royal 'Intention of adhering to your Act of Indemp-'nity and Oblivion by a constant and religious 'observance of it; and our Hearts are further 'enlarged in these returns of Thanksgiving, 'when we consider your Majesty's most Princely 'and Heroick Profession of relying upon the Af-'fections of your People, and the abhorring all 'sorts of Military and Arbitrary Rule: but above 'all, we can never enough remember to the 'honour of your Majesty's Piety, and our own 'unspeakable Comfort, those solemn and most 'endearing Invitations of your Majesty's Subjects,

'jects, to prepare Laws to be preſented to your 'Majeſty againſt the growth and increaſe of 'Popery; and withal, to provide more Laws 'againſt Licentiouſneſs and Impiety, at the ſame 'time declaring your own Reſolutions for main-'taining the Act of Uniformity: and it becomes 'us always to acknowledge and admire your Ma-'jeſty's Wiſdom in this your Declaration, where-'by your Majeſty is pleaſed to reſolve, not only 'by ſumptuary Laws, but by your own Royal 'Example of Frugality, to reſtrain that exceſs 'in men's Expences, which is grown ſo general, 'and ſo exorbitant, and to direct our endeavours 'to find out fit and proper Laws for advancement 'of Trade and Commerce.

'After all this, we moſt humbly beſeech your 'Majeſty to believe; That it is with extream un-'willingneſs and reluctancy of heart that we are brought 'to differ from any thing which your Majeſty hath 'thought fit to purpoſe; and though we do no ways 'doubt but that the unreaſonable diſtempers of 'mens Spirits, and the many Mutinies and Con-'ſpiracies which were carried on during the 'late intervals of Parliament, did reaſonably en-'cline your Majeſty to endeavour by your De-'claration to give ſome allay to thoſe ill humours, 'till the Parliament aſſembled, and the hopes of 'an Indulgence, if the Parliament ſhould con-'ſent to it, eſpecially ſeeing the Pretenders to 'this Indulgence did ſeem to make ſome title to 'it by vertue of your Majeſty's Declaration from 'Bredah; Nevertheleſs, we your Majeſty's moſt 'Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, who are now returned 'to ſerve in Parliament from thoſe ſeveral parts 'and places of your Kingdom, for which we are 'choſen, Do humbly offer it to your Majeſty's great 'Wiſdom, that it is in no ſort adviſeable that there be 'any Indulgence to ſuch Perſons who preſume to diſ-'ſent from the Act of Uniformity, and Religion eſta-'bliſhed (for theſe Reaſons.)

'We have conſidered the nature of your Ma-'jeſty's Declaration from Bredah, and are humbly 'of Opinion, That your Majeſty ought not to 'be preſſed any further.

'Becauſe it is not a Promiſe in it ſelf, but only 'a gracious Declaration of your Majeſty's In-'tentions to do what in you lay, and what a 'Parliament ſhould adviſe your Majeſty to do, 'and no ſuch Advice was ever given, or thought 'fit to be offered; nor could it be otherwiſe un-'derſtood, becauſe there were Laws of Unifor-'mity then in being, which could not be diſ-'penced with but by Act of Parliament.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all that we read this for; your Lordſhip and the Jury ſee what is here declared by the Parliament, That the Act of Uniformity could not be diſpenſed with, without an Act of Parliament.

Next, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew you what was done in the Year 1672.——Read the King's Speech the 5th of February, 1672.

The Journals of the Lords Houſe were delivered in.

Clerk reads. 'Die Mercurii, 5 Febr. 1672.

'My Lords and Gentlemen,

'I am glad to ſee you here this day. I would 'have called you ſooner together, but that I was 'willing to eaſe you and the Country, till there 'were an abſolute neceſſity.

'Since you were laſt here, I have been forced 'to a moſt important, neceſſary and expenſive 'War, and I make no doubt but you will give 'me ſuitable and effectual aſſiſtance to go through 'with it; I refer you to my Declaration for the 'Cauſes, and indeed the neceſſity of this War; 'and ſhall now only tell you, That I might have 'digeſted the Indignities to my own Perſon, 'rather than have brought it to this Extremity, 'if the Intereſt as well as the Honour of the 'whole Kingdom had not been at Stake; and if 'I had omitted this Conjuncture, perhaps I had 'not again ever met with the like advantage.

'You will find that the laſt Supply that you 'gave me, did not anſwer Expectation for the 'ends you gave it, the Payment of my Debts; 'therefore I muſt in the next place recommend 'them again to your ſpecial Care.

'Some few days before I declared the War, I 'put forth my Declaration for Indulgence to 'Diſſenters, and have hitherto found a good 'effect of it, by ſecuring my Peace at home, 'when I had War abroad; There is one part in 'it, that has been ſubject to Miſconſtructions, 'which is that concerning the Papiſts, as if more 'liberty was granted to them than to other Re-'cuſants, when 'tis plain there is leſs; for the 'others have publick Places allowed them, and I 'never intended that they ſhould have any, but 'only have the freedom of their Religion in their 'own Houſes, without any concourſe of others; 'and I could not grant them leſs than this, when 'I had extended ſo much more Grace to others, 'moſt of them having been loyal, and in the 'Service of me and the King my Father: And 'in the whole courſe of this Indulgence I do not 'intend that it ſhall any way prejudice the 'Church, but I will ſupport its Rights, and It in 'its full power.

'Having ſaid this, I ſhall take it very ill to 'receive Contradiction in what I have done; 'and I will deal plainly with you, I am reſolved 'to ſtick to my Declaration.

'There is one Jealouſie more which is mali-'ciouſly ſpread abroad, and yet ſo weak and 'frivolous, that I once thought it not of moment 'enough to mention; but it may have gotten 'ſome ground with ſome well minded People, 'and that is, That the Forces which I have raiſed 'in this War were deſigned to controul Law and 'Property; I wiſh I had had more Forces the 'laſt Summer, the want of them then, convinces 'me, I muſt raiſe more againſt this next Spring; 'and I do not doubt but you will conſider the 'charge of them in your Supplies.

'I will conclude with this aſſurance to you, 'That I will preſerve the true Reformed Prote-'ſtant Religion, and the Church, as it is now 'Eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom, and that no Man's 'Property or Liberty ſhall ever be invaded. I 'leave the reſt to the Chancellor.

Mr. S. Pemb. Now go to the Journal of the Commons of the 14th of February, 1672.

The Journal put in.

Clerk reads. 'Veneris xiiij. die Februarii, 1672.

'Mr. Powle Reports from the Committee ap-'pointed to prepare, and draw up a Petition and 'Addreſs to His Majeſty, The ſaid Petition and 'Addreſs, which he read in his place, and after-'wards delivered the ſame in at the Clerks Table, 'and the ſame being again twice read, is as fol-'loweth, (viz.)

'Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'We your Majeſties moſt Loyal and Faithful 'Subjects, the Commons Aſſembled in Parlia-'ment, do in the firſt place, as in all Duty bound, 'return your Majeſty our moſt humble and hear-

' ty Thanks, for the many Gracious Promiſes ' and Aſſurances which your Majeſty has ſeveral ' times during this Preſent Parliament given to ' us, That your Majeſty would Secure and ' Maintain unto us the true Reformed Proteſtant ' Religion, our Liberties and Properties, which ' moſt gracious Aſſurances your Majeſty out of ' your great Goodneſs has been pleaſed to re- ' new unto us, more particularly, at the Open- ' ing of this preſent Seſſion of Parliament.

' And further, we crave leave humbly to re- ' preſent, That we have with all Duty and Ex- ' pedition, taken into our Conſideration, the ' ſeveral parts of your Majeſties laſt Speech to ' us; and withal, the Declaration therein men- ' tioned, for Indulgence to Diſſenters dated the ' 15th of March laſt: And we find our ſelves ' bound in Duty to inform your Majeſty, ' That Penal Statutes in Matters Eccleſi- ' aſtical, cannot be Suſpended but by Act of ' Parliament.

' We therefore, the Knights, Citizens and ' Burgeſſes of your Majeſties Houſe of Com- ' mons, do moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, That ' the ſaid Laws may have their free Courſe, untill it ſhall ' be otherwiſe provided for by Act of Parliament. ' And that your Majeſty would graciouſly be ' pleaſed to give ſuch Directions herein, that no ' Apprehenſions or Jealouſies may remain in the ' Hearts of your Majeſties good and faithful Sub- ' jects.

' That this Houſe doth agree with the Com- ' mittee in the Petition and Addreſs by them ' drawn up, to be preſented to his Majeſty.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the 24*th* of February, 1672. in the ſame Book.

Clerk Reads. ' Lunæ 24*th* of February, 1672. ' Mr. Secretary Coventry Reports and Pre- ' ſents in Writing from his Majeſty, his Anſwer ' to the humble Petition and Addreſs of this ' Houſe, which was thrice read, and the Matter ' debated, and is as followeth, (viz.)

CHARLES R.

' HIS Majeſty hath received an Addreſs ' from you, and he hath ſeriouſly conſi- ' dered of it, and returns you this Anſwer, ' That he is very much troubled, that that De- ' claration which he put out for ends ſo neceſſ- ' ary, for the quiet of his Kingdom, and eſ- ' pecially in that Conjuncture, ſhould have prov- ' ed the Cauſe of diſquiet in his Houſe of Com- ' mons, and give occaſion to the queſtioning ' of his Power in Eccleſiaſticks, which he finds ' not done in the Reigns of any of his Anceſtors: ' He is ſure he never had thoughts of uſing it ' otherwiſe than as it hath been intruſted in him, ' to the Peace and Eſtabliſhment of the Church ' of England, and the eaſe of all his Subjects in ' general. Neither does he pretend to the Right of ' Suſpending any Laws, wherein the Properties, ' Rights or Liberties of any of his Subjects are concern- ' ed, nor to alter any thing in the eſtabliſhed Doctrine ' or Diſcipline of the Church of England. But his ' only deſign in this, was to take off the Penalties ' the Statutes inflicted upon Diſſenters, which ' he believes when well conſidered of, you your ' ſelves would not wiſh executed according to ' the Rigour and Letter of the Law; neither ' hath he done this with any thought of avoiding ' or precluding the Advice of his Parliament; ' and if any Bill ſhall be offered, which ſhall ' appear more proper to attain the aforeſaid ' Ends, and ſecure the Peace of the Church and ' Kingdom, when tendred in due manner to ' him, he will ſhew how readily he will Concur ' in all ways that ſhall appear good for the ' Kingdom.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

' WE your Majeſties moſt Humble and ' Loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens ' and Burgeſſes in this preſent Parliament ' Aſſembled, do render to your moſt Sacred ' Majeſty, our moſt dutiful Thanks, for that ' to our unſpeakable Comfort, your Majeſty has ' been pleaſed ſo often to reiterate unto us thoſe ' gracious Promiſes and Aſſurances of maintain- ' ing the Religion now Eſtabliſhed, and the Li- ' berties and Properties of your People; and we ' do not in the leaſt Meaſure doubt but that ' your Majeſty had the ſame gracious Intention ' in giving Satisfaction to your Subjects, by ' your Anſwer to our laſt Petition and Addreſs; ' Yet upon a ſerious Conſideration thereof, We ' find that the ſaid Anſwer is not ſufficient to clear the ' Apprehenſions that may juſtly remain in the minds ' of your People, by your Majeſties having claimed a ' Power to ſuſpend Penal Statutes in Matters Eccleſi- ' aſtical, and which your Majeſty does ſtill ſeem to ' aſſert in the ſaid Anſwer, to be intruſted in the ' Crown, and never queſtioned in the Reigns of any ' of your Anceſtors. Wherein we humbly con- ' ceive your Majeſty has been very much miſin- ' formed: Since no ſuch Power ever was claimed or ' exerciſed by any of your Majeſties Predeceſſors; and ' if it ſhould be admitted, might tend to the inter- ' rupting the free Courſe of the Laws, and altering the ' Legiſlative Power, which hath always been acknow- ' ledged to reſide in your two Houſes of Parliament. ' We therefore with an unanimous Conſent ' become again moſt humble Suiters unto your ' Sacred Majeſty, That you would be pleaſed to give us ' a full and ſatisfactory Anſwer to our ſaid Petition and ' Addreſs, and that your Majeſty would take ſuch ' effectual order, that the Proceedings in this Matter ' may not for the future be drawn into Conſequence ' or Example.

' The Anſwer to his Majeſties Meſſage, was ' again read by Paragraphs, and the ſeveral ' Paragraphs to the laſt, were upon the queſtion ' ſeverally agreed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the Lords Journal, and there your Lordſhip will ſee, that the King does Communicate this Addreſs to the Lords, and deſires their Advice.

Read the 1ſt of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, Die Sabbati primo die Martii, 1672.

'His Majeſty this Day made a ſhort Speech, 'as follows.

My Lords,

'You know, that at the Opening of this Seſ- 'ſion, I ſpoke here to your Satisfaction; it has 'notwithſtanding, begotten a greater diſquiet 'in the Houſe of Commons, than I could have 'imagined.

'I received an Addreſs from them, which I 'looked not for, and I made them an Anſwer 'that ought to have contented them; but on 'the contrary, they have made me a Reply of 'ſuch a nature, that I cannot think fit to proceed 'any further in this Matter without your Ad- 'vice.

'I have commanded the Chancellor to ac- 'quaint you with all the Tranſactions, wherein 'you will find both me and your ſelves highly 'concerned: I am ſenſible for what relates to 'me, and I aſſure you my Lords, I am not leſs 'ſo for the Priviledg, and the Honour of this 'Houſe.

'Afterwards the Lord Chancellor read the ſe- 'veral Papers and Addreſſes of the Houſe of 'Commons, and his Majeſties Anſwer thereun- 'to, and opened his Majeſties proceedings upon 'them.

The Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons was read.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Paſs over that, you have read it already.

Clerk reads. The next, his Majeſties Anſwer to the Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons, was read as follows,—

Sir Robert Sawyer. That hath been read too.

Clerk reads. Then was read the Reply of the Houſe of Commons to his Majeſties Anſwer, as followeth,—

Mr. Finch. You have read that likewiſe.

Clerk reads. 'Upon this it is ordered, that the 'Lord Treaſurer, Duke of Buckingham, Earl of 'Bridgwater, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Briſtol, 'Earl of Berks, Earl of Bullingbrook, and the Earl 'of Angleſy, do forthwith withdraw and conſider 'what humble Thanks is fit to be given to his 'Majeſty for his great Favour in communicating 'this Buſineſs to this Houſe, and report the ſame. 'And accordingly, the ſaid Lords Committees 'did withdraw themſelves for that purpoſe.

'The Lords being returned, the Duke of 'Buckingham reported what the Committee had 'prepared to preſent to his Majeſty by way of 'Thanks, which was read as followeth.

'We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Par- 'liament aſſembled, do unanimouſly preſent to 'your Sacred Majeſty, Our moſt humble Thanks, 'for having been pleaſed to Communicate to us, 'what has paſſed between your Majeſty and the 'Houſe of Commons, whereby you have graci- 'ouſly offered us the means of ſhewing our Duty 'to your Majeſty, and of aſſerting the Ancient 'Juſt Rights and Priviledges of the Houſe of Peers.

'The Queſtion being put, whether to agree 'with the Committee.

'It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

'Ordered that his Majeſty be deſired, that his 'Speech, and the Papers read this day, may be 'entred into the Journal Book of this Houſe.

'The Lord Treaſurer, the Duke of Buckingham, 'and the Lord Chamberlain, are appointed to attend 'his Majeſty preſently, to know his pleaſure, 'what time and place, this whole Houſe ſhall 'wait upon him, to preſent the humble Thanks 'of this Houſe, for his great Favour ſhewed this 'day.

'Ordered, that upon Monday morning next, 'this Houſe will debate the whole Matter of his 'Majeſties Speech, and theſe Papers; and to 'conſider the Points of Priviledge, and what elſe 'may ariſe thereupon.

'The Lords that were appointed to attend his 'Majeſty, return with this Anſwer.

'That his Majeſty has appointed this After- 'noon at five of the Clock, for this Houſe to 'wait upon him in the Banquetting-houſe at 'Whitehall.

'Ordered, that all the Judges now in Town, 'ſhall attend this Houſe on Monday morning 'next.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 3d of March, 1672. is 'the next.

Clerk reads, 'Die Lunæ 3. die Martii, 1672.

'The Lord Chancellor reported, That the 'whole Houſe on Saturday laſt, waited upon his 'Majeſty at Whitehall, and preſented the hum- 'ble Addreſs of this Houſe, and his Majeſty was 'pleaſed to return this Anſwer.

My Lords,

'I take this Addreſs of yours very kindly; I 'will always be very affectionate to you, and 'expect you ſhould ſtand by me, as I will al- 'ways by you.

'Then the Houſe took into Conſideration the 'whole Matter of his Majeſties Speech on Sa- 'turday, and the three Papers which his Majeſty 'acquainted this Houſe withal, and all the ſaid 'Papers in their order were read, and after a 'long debate, the Queſtion being put,

'Whether this Houſe ſhall in the firſt place 'enter into Conſideration of giving Advice to 'his Majeſty?

'It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

'It is ordered, that this Buſineſs ſhall be taken 'into Conſideration to morrow Morning, at 'nine of the Clock, the firſt Buſineſs.

'Ordered that the Judges now in Town, ſhall 'attend to morrow Morning.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 4th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, 'Next, The Houſe took into 'Conſideration the Advice to be given to his 'Majeſty concerning the Addreſſes made to him 'from the Houſe of Commons.

'The Addreſſes of the Houſe of Commons, 'and his Majeſties Anſwer were read, and after 'a long debate, the Queſtion being put, Whe- 'ther the King's Anſwer to the Houſe of Com- 'mons in referring the Points now controverted 'to a Parliamentary way by Bill, is good and gra- 'cious, that being a proper and natural Courſe 'for Satisfaction therein.

It was reſolved in the Affirmative.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 8th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, Die Sabbati 8. die Martii, 1672.

'His Majeſty in his Royal Throne, adorned 'with his Crown and Regal Ornaments, com- 'manded the Gentleman Uſher of the Black 'Rod,

'Rod, to give notice to the House of Commons, 'that they attend his Majesty presently.

'The Commons being come with their Speaker, his Majesty made this short Speech, following.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

'Yesterday you presented me an Address, as 'the best means for the satisfying and composing 'the Minds of my Subjects, to which I freely 'and readily agreed, and I shall take care to see 'it performed accordingly.

'I hope on the other side, you Gentlemen of 'the House of Commons will do your part; for 'I must put you in mind, it is near five Weeks 'since I demanded a Supply, and what you Voted unanimously upon it, did both give Life to 'my Affairs at Home, and dishearten mine Enemies abroad; but the seeming delay it hath 'met withal since, hath made them to take new 'Courage, and they are now preparing for this 'next Summer a greater Fleet, (as they say) than 'ever they have had yet, so that if the Supply be 'not very speedily dispatcht, it will be altogether 'ineffectual, and the Safety, Honour and Interest 'of England, must of necessity be exposed. Pray 'lay this to heart, and let not the Fears and Jealousies of some draw an inevitable Ruin upon 'us all.

'My Lords and Gentlemen,

'If there be any Scruple remaining with you, concerning the Suspension of Penal Laws, I here faithfully Promise you, That what has been done in that particular, shall not for the future be drawn either into Consequence or Example. And as I daily expect from you a Bill for my Supply, so I assure you, I shall as willingly pass any other you shall offer me that may tend to the giving you satisfaction in all your just Grievances.

'Next, my Lord Chancellor reported. That 'both Houses waited upon the King yesterday, 'and presented him with the Address against the 'growth of Popery, and his Majesty hath been 'pleased to return this Answer.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

'I do heartily agree with you in your Address, 'and shall give speedy Order to have it put in 'Execution; there is one part to which I believe 'it is not your Intention that it should extend; 'for I can scarce say, those are in my pay, that 'are presently to be imployed abroad; but as for 'all other parts, I shall take care it shall be done 'as you desire.

'After which the Lord Chancellor said, he had 'somewhat more to impart to the House by 'the King's Command, which was,

That his Majesty last night, having spoken with several Members of both Houses, found some dissatisfaction remaining concerning his Answer to their Addresses in the particular of the Officers to be employed abroad, of which number he had five or six that were of the best Officers of France and Flanders, and being his own Subjects, he had been very sollicitous to get; but if that bred any umbrage, the King commanded him to let them know, that he resolves to give both his Houses full satisfaction to their desires.

There was another particular that the Lord Chancellor said he thought fit to acquaint them with, which, though it was by his Majesties leave, yet it was not by his Command, however he thought it his duty to acquaint the House with it, (Mr. Secretary Coventry intending to acquaint the House of Commons with the same) That his Majesty had the last night, in pursuance of what he then intended, and declared this morning concerning the suspension of Penal Laws not being for the future drawn either into Consequence or Example, caused the Original Declaration, under the Great Seal, to be cancelled in his presence, whereof himself and several other Lords of the Council were Witnesses.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Turn to the 10th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. 'Die Lunæ decimo die Martii, 1672.

'Ordered, That what my Lord Chancellor 'said on Saturday last concerning his Majesty's 'causing the vacating his Indulgence under the 'Great Seal of England, shall be entred into the 'Journal Book of this House as on Saturday 'last.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We shall now come to that which past in the Parliament in 1685.—Read the 9th of November, 1685.

'The Journal of the Lords, 1685. put in.

Clerk Reads. 'His Majesty being on his Royal Throne adorned with his Regal Robes and 'Crown (the Lords being in their Robes also) 'commanded the Gentleman Usher to give notice to the House of Commons that they immediately attend his Majesty; who being come, 'his Majesty made the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

'After the Storm that seemed to be coming 'upon us when we parted last, I am glad to meet 'you all again in so great peace and quietness; 'God Almighty be praised, by whose blessing 'that Rebellion was suppressed; but when I 'reflect what an inconsiderable number of men 'began it, and how long they carried it on without any opposition, I hope every body willbe 'convinced that the Militia, which hath hitherto 'been so much depended upon, is not sufficient 'for such Occasions, and that there is nothing 'but a good force of well disciplined Troops in 'constant pay that can defend us from such as 'either at home or abroad are disposed to disturb 'us.

'And in truth, my concern for the peace and 'quiet of my Subjects, as well as for the safety of 'the Government, made me think it necessary to 'increase the number to the proportion I have 'done; this I owed as well to the honour as to 'the security of the Nation, whose Reputation 'was so infinitely exposed unto all our Neighbours, by having lain open to this late wretched 'Attempt; that it is not to be repaired without 'keeping such a Body of Men on foot, that 'none may ever have the thoughts again of 'finding us so miserably unprovided.

'It is for the support of this great Charge, 'which is now more than double to what it was, 'that I ask your assistance in giving me a Supply 'answerable to the Expence it brings along with 'it; And I cannot doubt, but what I have begun so much for the honour and defence of the 'Government, will be continued by you with all 'the chearfulness and readiness that is requisite 'for a Work of so great importance.

'Let no man take Exceptions that there are some Officers in the Army not qualified according to the late Tests for their Imployments: The Gentlemen, I must tell you, are most of them well 'known to me, and having formerly served with 'me on several Occasions, and always approved 'the Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices, I think them fit now to be employed under me; and will deal plainly with you, that after after having had the benefit of their Services in such time of need and danger, I will neither expose them to disgrace, nor my self to the want of them, if there should be another Rebellion to make them necessary to me.

I am afraid some men may be so wicked to hope and expect that a difference may happen between you and me upon this Occasion; but when you consider what advantages have risen to us in a few months by the good understanding we have hitherto had, what wonderful effects it has already produced in the change of the whole scene of Affairs abroad, so much more to the honour of the Nation, and the figure it ought to make in the World, and that nothing can hinder a further progress in this way, to all our satisfactions, but Fears and Jealousies amongst our selves: I will not apprehend that such a misfortune can befall us as a Division, or but a Coldness between me and you; nor that any thing can shake you in your Steadiness and Loyalty to me, who, by God's blessing, will ever make you all returns of kindness and protection, with a Resolution to venture even my own Life in the defence of the true Interest of this Kingdom.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the Commons Journal the 16th of November, 1685.

The Journal of the House of the Commons put in.

Clerk reads. Die Lunæ xvi. die Novemb. 1685.

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We your Majesty's most Loyal and Faithful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament assembled, do in the first place (as in duty bound) return your Majesty our most humble and hearty thanks for your great care and conduct in the suppression of the late Rebellion, which threatned the overthrow of this Government both in Church and State, and the uttermost extirpation of our Religion by Law established, which is most dear unto us, and which your Majesty has been pleased to give us repeated assurances you will always defend and support, which with all grateful hearts we shall ever acknowledge.

We further crave leave to acquaint your Majesty, That we have with all duty and readiness taken into our consideration your Majesty's gracious Speech to us; and as to that part of it relating to the Officers in the Army not qualified for their Imployment according to an Act of Parliament made in the 25th year of the Reign of your Majesty's Royal Brother of blessed Memory, Intituled, An Act for preventing danger that may happen by Popish Recusants: We do out of our bounden duty humbly represent unto your Majesty, That those Officers cannot by Law be capable of their Imployments, and that the Incapacities they bring upon themselves thereby, can no ways be taken off but by Act of Parliament.

Therefore out of the great deference and duty we owe unto your Majesty, (who has been graciously pleased to take notice of their Services to you) we are preparing a Bill to pass both Houses for your Royal Assent, to indemnify them from the Penalties they have now incurred; and because the continuance of them in their Employments may be taken to be dispencing with that Law without Act of Parliament, the consequence of which is of the greatest concern to the Rights of all your Majesty's Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, and to all the Laws made for the security of their Religion;

We therefore, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of your Majesty's House of Commons, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, that you would be graciously pleased to give such directions therein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the hearts of your Majesty's good and faithful Subjects.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, We pray that these half dozen lines of the Statute 1 Eliz. may be read.

A Statute-book was then produced by Mr. Ince.

L. C. J. We will have it read out of our own Book. Which was delivered into Court.

Clerk reads. This is 1 Eliz. cap. 2. An Act for Uniformity of Religion, &c. Whereabout is it?

Mr. Ince. 'Tis the 15th Paragraph, [at these words] —— And for the due execution, &c.

Clerk Reads. And for due Execution hereof, the Queens most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this Parliament Assembled do in Gods Name earnestly Require and Charge all the Archbishops and Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they shall endeavour themselves to the utmost of their knowledge, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceses and Charges, as they will answer before God for such Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty God may justly punish his People for neglecting this good and wholsome Law.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, the Charge is a Charge for a Libel, and there are two things to be Considered.

First, Whether the Bishops did deliver this Paper to the King? But that we leave upon the Evidence that has been given; only we say, there has been no direct proof of that.

In the next place, Supposing they did deliver this Petition to the King, Whether this be a Libel upon the Matter of it, the manner of delivering it, or the Persons that did it?

And with submission, my Lord, this cannot be a Libel, although it be true, that they did so deliver it.

First, my Lord, there is a little disingenuity offered to my Lords the Bishops, in only setting forth part and not the whole, in only reciting the Body and not the Prayer.

But, my Lord, with your Lordships favour, taking the Petitionary part, and adding it to the other, it quite alters the Nature of the thing, for it may be, a Complaint without seeking redress might be an ill matter; but here taking the whole together, it appears to be a Complaint of a Grievance, and a desire to be eased of it.

With your Lordships favour, the Subjects have a right to Petition the King in all their Grievances, so say all our Books of Law, and so says the Statute of the Thirteenth of the late King; They may Petition, and come and deliver their Petition under the number of ten, as heretofore they might have done, (says the Statute) so that they all times have had a right so to do, and indeed if they had not, it were the most lamentable thing in the World, that Men must have Grievances upon them, and yet they not to be admitted to seek Relief in an humble way.

Now, my Lord, this is a Petition setting forth a Grievance, and praying his Majesty to give Relief. And what is this Grievance? It is that Command of his, by that Order made upon my Lords the Bishops, to distribute the Declaration, and cause it to be read in the Churches: And pray, my Lord, let us conſider, what the Effects and Conſequences of that Diſtribution and Reading is; It is to tell the People, that they need not ſubmit to the Act of Uniformity, nor to any Act of Parliament made about Eccleſiaſtical Matters, for they are ſuſpended and diſpenſed with; this my Lords the Biſhops muſt do, if they obey this Order; but your Lordſhip ſees, if they do it, they lie under an Anathema by the Statute of 1 Eliz. for there they are under a Curſe if they do not look to the preſervation and obſervation of that Act; But this Command to Diſtribute and Read the Declaration, whereby all theſe Laws are diſpenſed with, is to let the People know, they will not do what the Act requires of them.

Now, with your Lordſhips favour, my Lords the Biſhops lying under this preſſure, the weight of which was very grievous upon them, they by Petition apply to the King to be eaſed of it, which they might do, as Subjects; beſides, my Lord, they are Peers of the Realm, and were moſt of them ſitting as ſuch, in the laſt Parliament, where (as you have heard) it was declared, ſuch a Diſpenſation could not be, and then in what a Caſe ſhould they have been, if they ſhould have diſtributed this Declaration, which was ſo contrary to their own Actings in Parliament? What could they have anſwered for themſelves, had they thus contributed to this Declaration? when they had themſelves before declared, that the King could not diſpenſe.

And that this was no new thing, for it had been ſo declared in a Parliament before, in two Seſſions of it, in the late King's Reign, within a very little time one of another; and ſuch a Parliament that were ſo liberal in their Aids to the Crown, that a Man would not think they ſhould go about to deprive the Crown of any of its Rights; it was a Parliament that did do as great ſervices for the Crown as ever any did, and therefore there is no reaſon to ſuſpect, that if the King had had ſuch a power, they would have appeared ſo earneſt againſt it.

But, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, theſe are not the beginnings of this matter, for we have ſhewed you from the Fifteenth of Richard the Second, that there was a power granted by the Parliament to the King to diſpenſe with a particular Act of Parliament, which argues, that it could not be without an Act of Parliament: And in 1662. 'tis ſaid expreſly, that they could not be diſpenſed with, but by an Act of Parliament: 'Tis ſaid ſo again in 1672; the King was then pleaſed to aſſume to himſelf ſuch a power, as is pretended to in this Declaration; yet, upon Information from his Houſes of Parliament, the King declared himſelf ſatisfied that he had no ſuch power, Cancelled his Declaration, and promiſed, that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example. And ſo the Commons by their Proteſtation ſaid in Richard the Seconds time, That it was a Novelty, and ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, if this matter that was Commanded the Biſhops to do, were ſomething which the Law did not allow of, ſurely then, my Lords the Biſhops had all the Reaſon in the World to apply themſelves to the King, in an humble manner to acquaint him, why they could not obey his Commands; and to ſeek relief againſt that, which lay ſo heavy upon them.

Truly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney was very right in the opening of the Cauſe at firſt, that is, That the Government ought not to receive affronts, no, nor the Inferiour Officers are not to be affronted, a Juſtice of the Peace, ſo low a Man in Office, is not. For a Man to ſay to a Juſtice of Peace, when he is executing his Office, that he does not do right, is a great Crime, and Mr. Attorney ſaid Right in it; But ſuppoſe a Juſtice of Peace were making of a Warrant to a Conſtable, to do ſomething that was not Legal for him to do, if the Conſtable ſhould Petition this Juſtice of the Peace, and therein ſet forth, Sir, you are about to command me to do a thing, which, I conceive, is not Legal, ſurely that would not be a Crime that he was to be puniſhed for, for he does but ſeek relief, and ſhew his Grievance in a proper way, and the diſtreſs he is under.

My Lord, this is the Biſhops Caſe with ſubmiſſion, they are under a diſtreſs, being Commanded to do a thing which they take not to be Legal, and they, with all humility by way of Petition, acquaint the King with this Diſtreſs of theirs, and pray him, that he will pleaſe to give Relief.

My Lord, there is no Law, but is either an Act of Parliament, or the Common Law, for an Act of Parliament there is none for ſuch a power, all that we have of it in Parliamentary Proceedings, is againſt it; and for the Common Law, (ſo far as I have read it) I never did meet with any thing of ſuch a Nature, as a Grant or Diſpenſation that pretended to diſpenſe with any one whole Act of Parliament; I have not ſo much as heard of any ſuch thing mentioned by any of the Kings Council; But here, my Lord, is a Diſpenſation that diſpenſes with a great many Laws at once, truly, I cannot take upon me to tell how many, there may be forty or above, (for ought I know.)

Therefore, my Lord, the Biſhops lying under ſuch a Grievance as this, and under ſuch a Preſſure, being Ordered to diſtribute this Declaration in all their Churches, which was to tell the People they ought to be under no Law in this Caſe, which ſurely was a very great Preſſure, both in point of Law and Conſcience too, they lying under ſuch Obligations to the contrary, as they did. With ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip and you Gentlemen of the Jury, If they did deliver this Petition, (Publiſhing of it I will not talk of, for there has been no proof of a Publication, but a delivering of a Petition to his Majeſty in the moſt ſecret and decent manner that could be imagined) My Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of the Matter Charged upon them in this Information; it has been expreſly proved, that they did not go to diſperſe it abroad, hut only deliver'd it to the King himſelf; And, in ſhort, my Lord, if this ſhould be a Libel, I know not how ſad the Condition of us all would be, if we may not Petition, when we ſuffer.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I Challenge them to ſhew us any one inſtance of ſuch a Declaration, ſuch a General Diſpenſation of Laws from the Conqueſt, till 1672. The firſt Umbrage of ſuch a thing is, that of Car. 2. 1662. but your Lordſhip hears the Declaration of the Parliament upon it. Before that, as there was no ſuch thing, ſo your Lordſhip ſees, what the Parliament did to enable the King (not to do this thing, but ſomething like it) in Richard the Seconds Time, where you ſee the Parliament did give the King a Power to Diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors for a time; time; but at the ſame time declared, that very Grant of their own, to be a Novelty, and that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

My Lord, we ſhall leave it upon this Point, to ſuſpend Laws is all one, as to abrogate Laws; for ſo long as a Law is ſuſpended, whether the Suſpenſion be Temporary, or whether it be for ever, whether it be at once, or at ſeveral times, the Law is abrogated to all Intents and Purpoſes: But the Abrogation of Laws is part of the Legiſlature, that Legiſlative Power is lodged (as I ſaid before, and I could never find it otherwiſe, in all our Law) in King, Lords, and Commons——.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. You did open that before, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. With this, my Lord, That my Lords the Biſhops finding this Order, made upon them to publiſh this Declaration, did what in Duty they were bound to do, and unleſs the Jury do find, that they have done that which is contrary to Law and to the Duty of their Places, and that this Petition is a Libel, and a ſeditious Libel, with an intent to ſtir up Sedition among the People, (We rely upon it) My Lords, the Biſhops, can never be found Guilty upon this Information.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. Have you now done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. Yes, my Lord, till they give us further occaſion, if they have any other Evidence to offer, we muſt Anſwer it, if not, this is the Anſwer we give to what they have ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We make no Bargain with you: If you have done, ſay ſo.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. You muſt know, that you are not to have the laſt word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have been three hours already, if you have any more to ſay, pray conclude.

Mr. Finch. If they ſay they have no more Evidence, then we know what we have to do.

L. C. Juſt. If you do ſay any thing more, pray let me adviſe you one thing, don't ſay the ſame thing over and over again, for after ſo much time ſpent, it is irkſom to all Company, as well as to me.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordſhip at preſent, unleſs they, by offering new Evidence, give us occaſion to Reply upon them.

L. C. Juſt. Gentlemen, you ſhall have all the Legal favour and advantage that can be; but, pray, let us keep to an orderly decent Method of proceeding.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, favour me a word before we conclude, My Lord, I do find very few Attempts of this Nature, in any Kings Reign.

In the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was an Act of Parliament that Foreigners ſhould have a Free Trade in the City of London, notwithſtanding the Franchiſes of London; after the Parliament roſe, the King iſſued out his Proclamation, forbidding the Execution of that Law, and Commanding that it ſhould be in Suſpence, Uſque ad Proximum Parliamentum, yet that was held to be againſt Law.

L. C. Juſt. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you are to look to, is the publiſhing of this Paper, and whether it be a Libel or no. And as to the buſineſs of the Parliaments you mentioned, they are not to the purpoſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I ſay, I would put it where the Queſtion truly lyes, if they don't diſpute the Point, then we need not labour it; but I don't know whether they will or no, and therefore I beg your Lordſhips favour to mention one Caſe more, and that is upon the Statute of 31 Hen. 8. cap. 8. Which enables the King by Proclamation in many Caſes to create the Law, which Statute was repealed by 1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. That very Act does recite, that the Law is not to be altered, or reſtrained, but by Act of Parliament, and therefore the Parliament enables the King to do ſo and ſo: But that was ſuch a Power, that the Parliament thought not fit to continue, and it was afterwards repealed, but it ſhews, that at that time the Parliament was of the ſame Opinion, as to this Matter, that other Parliaments have been ſince.

Mr. Sommers. My Lord, I would only mention the great Caſe of Thomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer Chamber upon the validity of a Diſpenſation of the Statute of Edward the Sixth, touching Selling of Wine. There it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, and they did lay it down as a ſettled Poſition, that there never could be an Abrogation, or a Suſpenſion, (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legiſlative Power. That was a Foundation laid down quite through the debate of that Caſe: Indeed it was diſputed, how far the King might diſpenſe with the Penalties in ſuch a particular Law, as to particular Perſons, but it was agreed, by all, that the King had no power to ſuſpend any Law: And my Lord, I dare Appeal to Mr. Attorney General himſelf, whether in the Caſe of Godden and Hales, which was lately in this Court, to make good that Diſpenſation, he did not uſe it as an Argument then, that it could not be expounded into a Suſpenſion; he admitted it not to be in the King's power to ſuſpend a Law, but that he might give a Diſpenſation to a particular Perſon, was all, that he took upon him to juſtifie at that time.

My Lord, by the Law of all civilized Nations, if the Prince does require ſomething to be done, which the Perſon (who is to do it) takes to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, Reſcribere Principi, this is all that is done here, and that in the moſt humble manner, that could be thought of; your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve how far it went, how careful they were, that they might not any way juſtly offend the King. They did not interpoſe by giving advice, as Peers, they never ſtirr'd till it was brought home to themſelves, when they made their Petition, all they beg is, that it may not ſo far be inſiſted upon by His Majeſty, as to oblige them to read it, whatever they thought of it, they do not take upon them to deſire the Declaration to be revoked.

My Lord, as to Matters of Fact alledged in the ſaid Petition, that they are perfectly true, we have ſhewn by the Journals of both Houſes. In every one of thoſe Years, which are mentioned in the Petition, this Power of Diſpenſation was conſidered in Parliament, and upon Debate, declared to be contrary to Law; there could be no Deſign to diminiſh the Prerogative, becauſe the King hath no ſuch Prerogative.

Seditious my Lord it could not be, nor could poſſibly ſtir up Sedition in the Minds of the People, becauſe it was preſented to the King in private and alone, falſe it could not be, becauſe the Matter of it is true. There would be nothing of Malice, for the occaſion was not ſought, the thing was preſſed upon them, and a Libel it could not be, becauſe the intent was innocent, and they kept within the bounds ſet by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his Prince by Petition, when he is aggrieved.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. We have done, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I ſhall be a great deal more merciful to your Lordſhip and the Jury, than they have been, who have ſpent theſe four hours, in that which I think is not pertinent to the Caſe in Queſtion: They have let themſelves into large Diſcourſes, making great Complaints of the Hardſhips put upon my Lords the Biſhops, by the Order of Council to read His Majeſty's Declaration; and putting theſe words into the Information of ſeditious, malicious and ſcandalous: But my Lord, I admire that Sir Robert Sawyer ſhould make ſuch Reflections, and Obſervations upon theſe words, when I am ſure he will ſcarce find any one of his own exhibiting, that has ſo few of thoſe aggravating words as this has, and therefore, that might have been very well ſpared, eſpecially by him.

In the next place my Lord, we are told, what great Danger our Religion is in by this Declaration, I hope we have an equal concern for that with them, or any Perſon elſe whatſoever: But however, I am ſure our Religion teaches us, not to preſerve our Religion, or our Lives, by any illegal Courſes, and the Queſtion is, whether the Courſe that my Lords the Biſhops have taken to preſerve (as they ſay) our Religion, be legal or not; if it be not legal, then I am ſure our Religion will not juſtifie the uſing ſuch a Courſe, for never ſo good an End.

My Lord, for the thing it ſelf, I do admire that they, in ſo long a time and ſearch that they have made, ſhould not (which I expected) produce more Preſidents of ſuch a Paper as this is; They challenge us to ſhew, that ever there was any ſuch Declaration as this, I'll turn the ſame Challenge upon them; Shew me any one inſtance, that ever ſo many Biſhops did come under pretence of a Petition, to reflect upon the King out of Parliament.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that your way of Anſwering, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Attorney General. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have had your time, don't interrupt us, ſure we have as much right to be heard as you.

L. C. J. You have been heard over and over again, Sir Robert Sawyer, already.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I don't intend to interrupt him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We cannot make them be quiet, they will ſtill be chopping in upon us.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is an Art that ſome People have always practiſed, not to permit any body to ſpeak, but themſelves.

But my Lord, I ſay, that thoſe few Inſtances that they have produced, are nothing at all to this Matter, that is now upon Tryal before your Lordſhip and this Jury; nay, they are Evidences againſt them, for they are only matters tranſacted in Parliament, which are no more to be applied to this thing that is in Controverſy now, than any the moſt remote matter that could be thought of; and though they have gone ſo high in point of time, as to the Reign of Richard the Second, yet they have nothing between that and the late King's Reign, to which at laſt they have deſcended down.

But my Lord, I ſay, that all the talk of Richard the Second's time is wholly out of the Caſe; truly, I do not doubt, but that in Richard the Second's time they might find a great many Inſtances of ſome ſuch ſort of Petitioning as this, for our Hiſtories tell us, that at that time they had 40000 Men in Arms againſt the King, and we know the troubles that were in that King's Reign, and how at length he was depoſed; but certainly there may be found Inſtances more applicable to the Caſe, than thoſe they produce; as for thoſe in King Charles the Second's time, do they any ways juſtifie this Petition? for now they are upon juſtifying the words of their Petition, that this power has been declared to be illegal in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

For what was done in 1662, do they ſhew any thing more than ſome Debates in the Houſe of Commons? And at laſt an Addreſs, an Anſwer by the King, a Reply of the Commons, and then the thing dies. Pray, my Lord, is a Tranſaction in the Houſe of Commons, a Declaration of Parliament? Sure, I think, no one will affirm that any thing can be a Declaration of Parliament, unleſs he that is the Principal part Concurs, who is the King: for if you ſpeak of the Court of Parliament in a Legal Senſe, you muſt ſpeak of the whole Body, King, Lords and Commons, and a Declaration in Parliament muſt be by all the whole Body, and that is properly an Act of Parliament.

Why then they come to the Year 1672, where your Lordſhip obſerves, that the late King did inſiſt upon his Right, for after the Diſpute which was in 1662, His Majeſty did iſſue out another Declaration, and when it comes to be debated in Parliament, he inſiſts upon his Right in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, and though his Declaration was cancelled, yet there is no formal Diſclaimer of the Right.

My Lord, after all, how far theſe things that they have offered may work, as to the point that they have debated, I ſhall not now meddle with it, nor give your Lordſhip any trouble about it, becauſe it is not at all pertinent to the Caſe in queſtion, for I do (after all this time and pains that they have ſpent) take leave to ſay, that theſe Gentlemen have ſpent all this time to no purpoſe.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, I'll tell you what they offer, which it will lie upon you to give an Anſwer to; They would have you ſhew, how this has diſturbed the Government, or diminiſhed the King's Authority?

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether a Libel be true or not, as to the matter of Fact, was it ever yet in any Court of Juſtice permitted to be made a Queſtion, whether it be a Libel or not? Or whether the Party be puniſhable for it; and therefore I wonder to hear theſe Gentlemen to ſay, that becauſe it is not a falſe one, therefore 'tis not a Libel: Suppoſe a Man ſhould ſpeak ſcandalous Matter of any Noble Lord here, or of any of my Lords the Biſhops, and a Scandalum Magnatum be brought for it, though that which is ſpoken has been true, yet it has been the Opinion nion of the Courts of Law, that the Party cannot justifie it, by reason it tends to the disturbing of the Peace, to publish any thing that is matter of Scandal; The only thing that is to be lookt into, is, whether there be any thing in this Paper, that is reflecting and scandalous, and not whether it be true or no, for if any Man shall Extra-Judicially, and out of a legal Course and way, reflect upon any of the great Officers of the Kingdom, nay, if it be but upon any Inferior Magistrate, he is to be punished, and is not to make his Complaint against them, unless he do it in a proper way; A Man may Petition a Judge, but if any Man in that Petition shall come and tell the Judge, Sir, you have given an illegal Judgment against me, and I cannot in Honour, Prudence or Conscience obey it, I do not doubt, nor will any Man, but that he that should so say would be laid by the Heels, though the Judgment perhaps might be illegal.

If a Man shall come to Petition the King, as (we all know) the Council Doors are thronged with Petitioners every day, and Access to the King by Petition is open to every body, the most Inferior Person is allowed to Petition the King, but because he may do so, may he therefore suggest what he pleases in his Petition, shall he come and tell the King to his Face, what he does is Illegal? I only speak this, because they say, in this Case His Majesty gave them leave to come to him to deliver their Petition; but the King did not understand the Nature of their Petition I suppose, when he said, he gave them leave to come to him.

My Lord, for this Matter we have Authority enough in our Books, particularly there is the Case of Wrenham in my Lord Hobart, the Lord Chancellor had made a Decree against him, and he Petitioned the King, that the Cause might be reheard, and in that Petition he Complains of Injustice done him by my Lord Chancellor, and he put into his Petition many reflecting things, this my Lord, was punished as a Libel in the Star-Chamber; and, in that Book it was said, that though it be lawful for the Subject to Petition the King against any Proceedings by the Judges, yet it must not be done with Reflections, nor with Words that turn to the Accusation or Scandal of any of the King's Magistrates or Officers, and the Justice of the Decree is not to be questioned in the Case; for there Wrenham in his Defence would have opened the Particulars, wherein he thought the Decree was unjust, but that the Court would not meddle with, nor would allow him to justifie for such Illegality in the Decree; so in this Case, you are not to draw in question the truth or falshood of the Matter complained against, for you must take the way the Law has prescribed, and prosecute your Right in a legal Course, and not by Scandal and Libelling.

My Lord, there is a great deal of difference between not doing a thing that is Commanded, if one be of Opinion that it is unlawful, and coming to the King with a Petition highly reflecting upon the Government, and with scandalous Expressions telling him, Sir, you act illegally, you require of us that which is against Prudence, Honour or Conscience, as my Lords the Bishops are pleased to do in this Petition of theirs. I appeal to any Lord here, that if any Man should give him such Language, either by Word of Mouth or Petition, whether he would bear it, without seeking Satisfaction and Reparation by the Law?

My Lord, there is no greater proof of the Influence of this Matter than the Croud of this Day, and the Harangue that hath been made, is it not apparent that the taking this Liberty to Canvas and dispute the King's Power and Authority, and to Censure his Actions, possess the People with strange Opinions, and raises Discontents and Jealousies, as if the free Course of Law were restrained, and Arbitrary Will and Pleasure set up instead of it?

My Lord, there is one thing that appears upon the Face of the Information, which shews this not to be the right Course, and if my Lords the Bishops had given themselves the opportunity of reading the Declaration seriously, they would have found in the end of the Declaration, that the King was resolved to call a Parliament in November; might not my Lords the Bishops have acquiesced under their Passive Obedience till the Parliament met? But nothing would serve them, but this, and this must be done out of Parliament, for which there is no President can be shewn, and this must be done in such a manner, as your Lordship sees the Consequence of, by your Trouble of this Day.

There is one thing I forgot to speak to, they tell us, that it is laid malicious and seditious, and there is no Malice or Sedition found, we know very well, that that follows the Fact, those things arise by Construction of Law out of the Fact. If the thing be illegal, the Law says it is Seditious, a Man shall not come and say, he meant no harm in it: That was the Case of Williams in his treasonable Book, (says he) I only intended to warn the King of the Danger approaching, and concludes his Book with God save the King, but no Man will say, that a good Preface at the beginning, or a good Prayer at the end, should excuse Treason, or Sedition in the Body of a Book; if I meet another Man in the Street and kill him, though I never saw him in my Life, the Indictment is, that it was ex Malitia Præcogitata, as it often happens, that a Person kills one he never had acquaintance with before, and in favorem vitæ, if the Nature of the Fact be so, the Jury are permitted to find according to the Nature of the Case, but in Strictness of Law, there is Malice imply'd: But, my Lord, I think these Matters are so common, and that is a Point that has been so often settled, that the form of the Indictment and Information must follow the Nature of the Fact, that I need not insist upon it, if the Act be unlawful, the Law supplies the Malice, and evil Intentions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Case for the King, and I shall take leave to proceed in this Method; Firſt, I shall put the Case of my Lords the Bishops, and then consider the Arguments that have been used in their Defence, and answer them as much as is material to be answered; and then leave it to your Lordship and the Juries Consideration, whether what has been said by these Gentlemen, weigh any thing in this Case?

Firſt, my Lord, I take it for granted, and I think the Matter is pretty plain by this time, by my Lord President's Evidence, and their own Confession; that it is not to be disputed, but that this Paper was presented by these Lords to the King, I think there is no great difficulty in that Matter at all, but I juſt touch upon it, becauſe I would follow them in their own Method.

Then my Lord, let us take this Caſe as it is, upon the Nature of the Petition, and the Evidence that they have given, and then let us ſee, whether that will juſtifie the thing that is done: For the buſineſs of Petitioning, I would diſtinguiſh and enquire, Whether my Lords the Biſhops out of Parliament, can preſent any Petition to the King: I do agree, that in Parliament the Lords and Commons may make Addreſſes to the King, and ſignifie their Deſires, and make known their Grievances there, and there is no doubt, but that is a natural and proper way of Application. For in the beginning of the Parliament, there are Receivers of Petitions appointed, and upon Debates, there are Committees appointed, to draw up Petitions and Addreſſes, but to come and deduce an Argument, that becauſe the Lords in Parliament have done thus, (there being ſuch Methods of Proceedings uſual in Parliaments) therefore my Lords the Biſhops may do it out of Parliament, that is certainly a Non ſequitur, no ſuch Concluſion can be drawn from thoſe Premiſes.

My Lord, I ſhall endeavour to lay the Fact before you, as it really is, and then Conſider, what is proper for the Court to take notice of, as legal Proof or Evidence: And I take it, all thoſe Preſidents that they have produced, of what the Lords did, and what the Commons did, in Parliament, is no Warrant for them to ſhelter themſelves under, againſt the Information here in Queſtion.

Here Mr. Juſtice Powell ſpake aſide to the Lord Chief Juſtice, thus:

Mr. Juſt. Powel. My Lord, this is ſtrange Doctrine; ſhall not the Subject have Liberty to Petition the King, but in Parliament? If that be Law, the Subject is in a miſerable Caſe.

L. C. J. Brother, let him go on, we will hear him out, tho' I approve not of his Poſition.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Lords may Addreſs to the King in Parliament, and the Commons may do it, but therefore, that the Biſhops may do it out of Parliament, does not follow. I heard nothing ſaid, that could have given Colour to ſuch a thing, but the Curſe that has been read in 1 Eliz.

But pray, my Lord, let us conſider that Evidence they have given, they have begun with that Record in Richard the Second's time, and what is that? That the King may diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors, till the meeting of the next Parliament, and a Proteſtation of the Commons at the end of it, whether that be an Act of Parliament, that is Declaratory of the Common Law, or Introductory of a new Law, Non Conſtat; and for ought appears, it might be a Declaratory Act: And if ſo, it is a Proof of the King's Prerogative of Diſpenſing. It might be an Act in Affirmance of the King's Prerogative, as there are a great many ſuch, we very well know; and generally moſt of the Laws in that kind, are in Affirmance of the King's Power, ſo that the Law turns as an Argument for the King's Prerogative, and they have given him that, which will turn upon themſelves, ſo it ſtood in Richard the Second's time, but whether that be an Argument one way or other Concluſive, is left to your Lordſhip, and the Jury.

Ay, but ſay they, there is no Execution of ſuch a Power, till very lately, and the firſt Inſtance that they produce is, that in the Year 1662. But your Lordſhip knows, that before the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was great Juriſdiction aſſumed by the Lords in original Cauſes, then comes the Statute of Appeals, 1 Hen. 4. which takes notice, that before that time, the Lords had aſſumed an original Juriſdiction in all Cauſes, and would proceed, and determine them in Parliament, and out of Parliament, and it fell out to be ſo great a Grievance, that it was thought neceſſary to make a Law againſt it, that Appeals in Parliament ſhould be aboliſhed and deſtroyed, and then comes that Law in favour of the Subject of England, and that ſettles the bounds between the King and the Lords in a great meaſure; before that time, the Lords were grown very powerful, and where there is a Power, there always will be Applications, and what is the effect of that Statute 1 Hen. 4. for all that we endeavour is, to make things as plain as can be, that no further Applications, no Accuſations, no Proceedings in any Caſe whatſoever be before the Lords in Parliament, unleſs it be by Impeachment of the Commons; ſo that there is the Salvo; and the uſe that I make of it, is this, The Commons by that very Statute did aboliſh the Power that the Lords had arrogated to themſelves, and ordered, that they ſhould not meddle with any Cauſe, but upon the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, and eſtabliſh the Impeachment of the Commons, which is as ancient as the Parliament, for that was never yet ſpoken againſt; the Power of the Commons impeaching any Perſon under the degree of the Prince, and that is the regular legal way, and ſo the Commons aſſerted their ancient Right, and whatſoever the Lords took notice of, muſt come by Application of the Commons, then Conferences were to paſs between the Houſes, and both Houſes by Addreſs apply to the King, this is the proper way and courſe of Parliament; of which my Lord Cook ſays, It is known to few, and practiſed by fewer, but it is a venerable honourable way, and this is the Courſe that ſhould have been taken by my Lords here, and they ſhould have ſtayed till the Complaint had come from the Commons in Parliament, and then it had been regular for them to Addreſs to the King; but they were too Quick, too Nimble.

And whereas the Statute of Hen. 4. ſays, That no Lord whatſoever ſhall intermeddle with any Cauſe, but by the Impeachment of the Commons, they interpoſe and give their advice before their time; if there be any Irregularity in Parliament, or out of Parliament, the Commons are to make their Complaint of it, and a Man muſt not be his own Judge, nor his own Carver, nor muſt every Man create Difficulties of his own, nor ſet upon petitioning in this ſort: But there I lay my Foundation, That in ſuch a matter as this, there ought to have been the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament before theſe Lords could do any thing; and I know nothing can be ſaid for the Biſhops more than this, That they were under an Anathema, under the Curſe that Sir Robert Sawyer ſpeaks of, and for fear of that they took this Irregular Courſe: But ſome would ſay, Better fall into the hands of God than of Men; ſome would ſay ſo, (I ſay) I know not what they would ſay; but theſe being the Methods that theſe Lords ſhould have taken, they ſhould have purſued that Method, the Law ſhould have carved out their Relief and Remedy for them, but they were for going by a new Fancy of their own.

My Lord, the Law continued thus, and was practiſed ſo till the 3 Hen. 7. where the Grievance was found, that Offences in the Intervals of Parliament could not be well puniſhed, and then comes the Statute that ſets up the Court of Star-Chamber, and there Men were often brought to Judgment and Puniſhment for their Sins; and though very great Power was given them, yet they arrogated to themſelves a greater; and therefore that Court is aboliſhed by the Statute of the 15*th Car.* 1. and what is the reaſon of aboliſhing that Statute? Becauſe the Star-Chamber did not keep within their Bounds that the Law ſet them, but aſſumed to themſelves a larger Power than the Law would allow; and grew very Exorbitant and very grievous to the Subject: And another reaſon was, which the Statute of 15 Car. 1. founded it ſelf upon, becauſe there was nothing that was brought in Judgment before that Court, but might be relieved and remedied in the ordinary methods of Juſtice in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall: So that upon thoſe two Conſiderations, becauſe that Courſe was exorbitant, and becauſe all the Sins and Miſdemeanours that were puniſhed there, might be puniſhed in an ordinary way of Law in another Court, and therefore there was no need of that Court, and ſo it was aboliſhed, and the Subject was pretty ſafe; If there was a Crime committed here, a Man might come properly before your Lordſhip into this Court, and have it puniſhed.

My Lord, they find fault with the Words in the Information, and they ſay, Why are theſe Words put in, ſeditious, malicious? If the matter be libellous and ſeditious we may lawfully ſay, and it is no more than the Law ſpeaks, it reſults out of the Matter it ſelf; and, if it be a libellous Paper, the Law ſays, it is maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly done, and theſe Gentlemen need not quarrel with us for ſo are all the Informations in all times paſt, and 'tis no more than the Vi & Armis, which is Common Form. It may be ſaid, How can the publiſhing of a Libel be ſaid to be done Vi & Armis? That is only a Suppoſition of Law; and they may as well object to the Concluſion of the Information, that it was Contra Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis; if it be an illegal thing, or a Libel, theſe are neceſſary Conſequences, it is no more than the ſpeaking of the Law upon the Fact.

But, my Lord, let us a little conſider, whether this Matter were warrantable, and whether they had any Warrant to do what was done; they pretend it was done upon this account, That the King had ſet forth a Declaration, and had ordered them to read it; which to excuſe themſelves from, they make this Petition, or this Libel, (call it what you will) and they uſe this as the main Argument, That they ſay the King has done illegally, and they tell the King plainly ſo, that it is illegal; for they take notice of this Declaration, and ſay, it is illegal; becauſe it is contrary to the Declarations of Parliament in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

Pray, my Lord, let us conſider a little, whether there be any Declaration in Parliament that they have given Evidence of; Have they read any Declaration of the Parliament in 1662? What is a Declaration in Parliament, but a Bill that is paſſed by the King, Lords and Commons? That we know to be the meaning, and no other; if it paſs the Commons it is no Declaration in Parliament; nay, if it paſs the Lords and Commons, it is not a Declaration in Parliament, except it alſo paſs the King; all theſe things are Nullities, and the Law takes no notice of them; we have it in our Books over and over, and no Court ought to ſuffer ſuch Evidence to be given. I know theſe Gentlemen are very well acquainted with the Authority in Fitz-Herbert's, Title, Parliament, there was ſuch an Act that was ſaid to be by the King and the Lords, but becauſe the Commons did not agree to it, it is declared and adjudged to be a Nullity, and the Court would take no notice of it; and how can any Man call that a Declaration in Parliament, which is only a Vote of the Houſe of Commons, or of the Lords? No ſure; that is one of the Heads I go upon, it's not a Declaration in Parliament, unleſs it be by an Act of Parliament.

Indeed my Lord, there is another ſort of a Declaration in Parliament before the Lords, as they are a Court of Judicature, and that is a fair Declaration too; for if any thing comes judicially before the Lords, either by Writ of Error, or by natural Appeal from any of the other Courts, or by Adjournment, and there be any Judgment given, That is a Declaration in Parliament, and may be fairly ſo called. So likewiſe there is another judicial Declaration, which is, when any thing comes before the Lords judicially, upon an Impeachment of the Commons, and they give Judgment upon that Impeachment, That is a Declaration in Parliament: But to ſay, that there is any other Declaration in Parliament, is to ſay more than theſe Gentlemen can make out; if they will ſhew me any ſuch I will ſubmit to them, and not ſpeak a Word againſt my Lords the Biſhops, but, if theſe Learned Gentlemen cannot ſhew me any ſuch, then they have not ſaid that was true in this Petition, that it was ſo and ſo declared in Parliament.

For let us conſider what there is in this Caſe upon this Evidence, for that in 1662. is only a Vote and Opinion of the Houſe of Commons; and I always underſtood, and have been told ſo by ſome of the Gentlemen of the other ſide, that ſuch a Vote ſignifies nothing: But beſides, it ſeems to be a miſtaken Addreſs; for they ſay in it, That the Declaration in 1662. which they Addreſs againſt, was the firſt Declaration of that ſort, to ſuſpend Laws without Act of Parliament; and yet, in the ſame Breath, they do take notice of the King's Declaration from Breda. But here is a mighty Argument uſed from the King's Speech, That becauſe he wiſhed he had ſuch a Power, this muſt be declared in Parliament that he had no ſuch Power: Is the Speech of the Prince a Declaration in Parliament? All the Speeches that were made upon the opening of the Parliament, will you ſay, they are Declarations in Parliament? Then the Chancellor, or the Keeper's Speech, or the Lord Privy Seals, muſt be a Declaration in Parliament. Whoever ſpeaks the Senſe of the King, if he does not ſpeak that which is Law and Right, is queſtionable for it, and ſeveral have been impeached for ſo doing; for they look not upon it as the King's Speech, except it be according to Law: Nothing can turn upon the Prince but what is Legal; if it be otherwise, it turns upon him that speaks it. I never did hear that a Speech made by the Chancellor (and I will appeal to all the Lords that hear me in it) was a Declaration in Parliament.

Then my Lord, we come to the business in 1672. which with that in 1662. and that in Breda, shews, That this of the King's is not such a Novelty, but has been done often before. In 1672. the King was in Distress for Money, being intangled in a Dutch War, and wanted Supply; He Capitulates with his Commons, you have heard it read, and, upon the Commons Address, he asserts it to be his Right, and makes his Complaint to the Lords how the Commons had used him; for when he gives them a fair Answer, they Replyed, and there are Conferences with the Lords about it; but at length it all ends in a Speech by the King, who comes and tells them of his present Necessities, and so he was minded to remit a little at the Instigation of the Commons, and he has a good Lump of Money for it. Would this amount to a Declaration in Parliament? Can my Lords the Bishops fancy or imagine that this is to be imposed upon the King, or upon the Court, for a Declaration in Parliament?

Then last of all, for that in 1685. in this King's time, What is it? The Commons make an Address to the King, and Complain to his Majesty of some of his Officers in his Army, * that might pretend to have a Dispensation, something of that Nature, contrary to the Test Act; and what is done upon it? They make their Application to the King, and the King answers them, and that is all: But since it is spoken of in the Court I would take notice, That it is very well known by the Case of Godding and Hales, the Judgment of this Court was against the Opinion of that Address.

* Here Mr. Justice Powel speaking to the Lord Chief Justice,

Mr. J. Powel. My Lord, this is wide, Mr. Sollicitor would impose upon us; let him make it out if he can, that the King has such a Power, and answer the Objections made by the Defendants Council.

L C J. Brother, impose upon us? he shall not impose upon me, I know not be what he may upon you; for my part, I do not believe one word he says.

But what sort of Evidence is all this? Would you allow all the Addresses of the House of Commons to be Evidence? Give me leave to say it, my Lord, If you suffer these Votes, these Copies of imperfect Bills, these Addresses, and Applications of one or both Houses to the King, to be Evidence and Declarations in Parliament, then what will become of the * Bill of Exclusion? Shall any Body mention that Bill of Exclusion to be a Declaration in Parliament? If so, then there is Declaration against Declaration, the Declaration of the Commons against the Declaration of the Lords. I know not what Judgment my Lords the Bishops may be of now, concerning those things of Votes and Addresses being Declarations in Parliament, but I am sure they have spoken against it heretofore; nay, I am sure, some of them have preached against it.

* Here there was a great Hissing.

And if my Lords the Bishops have said, These are Declarations in Parliament, and they are not Declarations in Parliament; and if they accuse the King of having done an illegal thing, because he has done that which has been declared in Parliament to be illegal, when it was never so declared, then the Consequence is very plain, That they are Mistaken sometimes; and I suppose by this time they believe it.

I dare say, it will not be denied me, That the King may, by his Prerogative Royal, issue forth his Proclamation; it is as essential a Prerogative, as it is to give his assent to an Act of Parliament to make it a Law. And it is another Principle, which I think cannot be denied, That the King may make Constitutions and Orders in Matters Ecclesiastical; and that these he may make out of a Parliament, and without the Parliament. If the King may do so, and these are his Prerogatives, then suppose the King does issue forth his Royal Proclamation (and such in effect is this Declaration under the Great Seal) in a Matter Ecclesiastical, by Virtue of his Prerogative Royal, and this Declaration is read in the Council, and published to the World, and then the Bishops come and tell the King, Sir, you have issued out an illegal Declaration, being contrary to what has been declared in Parliament; when there is no Declaration in Parliament: Is not this a diminishing the King's Power and Prerogative in issuing forth his Declaration? And making Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical? Is not this a questioning of his Prerogative? Do not my Lords the Bishops in this Case raise a Question bewteen the King and the People? Do not they (as much as in them lyes) stir up the People to Sedition? For who shall be Judge between the King and the Bishops? (Says the King) I have such a Power and Prerogative to issue forth my Royal Proclamation, and to make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical, and that without the Parliament, and out of Parliament: Say my Lords the Bishops, You have done so, but you have no Warrant for it. Says the King, Every Prince has done it, and I have done no more than what is my Prerogative to do: But this, say the Bishops, is against Law. How shall this be tryed? Should not the Bishops have had the Patience to have waited till a Parliament came? When the King himself tells them, he would have a Parliament in November at furtheſt.

L. C. Just. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, come close to the business, for it is very late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg your Patience; you have had a great deal of Patience with them, pray spare me a little. I am saying, when the King himself tells them, that he would have a Parliament in November at furtheſt, yet they have no Patience to stay till November, but made this Application to him. Is not this raising a Question upon the King's Prerogative in issuing forth Declarations? and upon the King's Power and Right in Matters Ecclesiastical? And when I have said this, that my Lords the Bishops have so done; If they have raised a Question upon the Right of the King, and the Power of the King in Matters Ecclesiastical, then they have stirred up Sedition. That they have so done is pretty plain; and for the Consequence of it, I shall appeal to the Case in the 2 Cro. 2. Jac. 1. That is a plain direct Authority for me.

Mr. Just. Powel. Nay, Mr. Sollicitor, we all very well know, to deny the King's Authority in Temporals and Spirituals, as by Act of Parliament, is High Treason.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I carry it not ſo far, Sir; we have a Gracious Prince, and my Lords the Biſhops find it ſo by this Proſecution: But what ſays that Caſe? It is Printed in Three Books, in Noy 100. in Moor 375. and in Mr. Juſt. Cro. 371. Says that Caſe, The King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. But how will you apply that Caſe to this in hand, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will apply it by and by, Sir. I would firſt ſhew what it is; there is a Convention of the greateſt Men in the Kingdom.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Indeed, Mr. Sollicitor, you ſhoot at Rovers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the Lord Privy Seal, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and a great many others; it is the greateſt Aſſembly we meet with in our Books, and all of them are of this Opinion, That the King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

My Lord, there is another Authority, and that is, from the Statute 1 Eliz. which erected the High Commiſſion Court, and that Statute was not Introductory of a New Law, but Declaratory of the Old Law; The King by his Proclamation declares his Senſe to do ſuch and ſuch a thing; the Court, and all Perſons there, give their Judgment and Opinion upon that Statute, That they looked upon it as the groſſeſt thing, and the fouleſt affront to the Prince, for any Man to bring into Queſtion that Power of the King in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; 'tis ſaid to be a very High Crime. Why then, my Lord, what is done in this Caſe?

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, Pray, when you are applying, apply that other part of the Caſe too, which ſays, that it was a heinous Offence, to raiſe a Rumor that the King did intend to grant a general Toleration; and is there any Law ſince that has changed it, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr Sol. Gen. In the main, Judgment goes another way; as for that part, it was perſonal to the Prince that then was, of whom they had Scandalouſly reported, that he intended to do ſuch a thing; they look'd upon it as a Scandal to King James, that it was a ſowing Sedition, and ſtirring up People againſt the Government, and that will come up to our Caſe; for as ſome Men do it on the right ſide, others do it on the left; and whoever he be that endeavours to bring a diſlike of the King in the People, that is moving Sedition againſt the Prince, but that is perſonal to the Prince himſelf, and does not go to his Succeſſors.

Now, my Lord, I come to that which is very plain from the Caſe of De Libellis Famoſis; If any Perſon, in any Paper, have Slandered the Government, you are not to Examine who is in the Right, and who is in the Wrong, whether what they ſaid to be done by the Government be Legal or no; but whether the party have done ſuch an Act. If the King have a Power (for ſtill I keep to that) to Iſſue forth Proclamations to his Subjects, and to make Orders and Conſtitutions in matters Eccleſiaſtical, if he do Iſſue forth his Proclamation, and make an Order upon the matters within his Power and Prerogative; and if any one would come and bring that Power in Queſtion, I ſay, that is Sedition, and you are not to Examine the Legality, or Illegality of the Order or Proclamation; and, that I think is very plain upon that Caſe, in the Fifth Report, for it ſays, If a Perſon does a thing that is Libellous, you ſhall not Examine the Fact, but the Conſequence; whether it tended to ſtir up Sedition againſt the Publick or to ſtir up Strife between Man and Man; in the Caſe of private Perſons, as if a Man ſhould ſay of a Judge, He has taken a Bribe, and I will prove it; this is not to be ſent in a Letter, but they muſt take a regular way to Proſecute it according to Law.

If it be ſo in the Caſe of an Inferior Magiſtrate, what muſt it be in the Caſe of a King, to come to the Kings Face, and tell him (as they do here) that he has Acted Illegally, doth certainly, ſufficiently prove the matter to be Libellous. What do they ſay to the King, they ſay, and admit, that they have an averſneſs for the Declaration, and they tell him from whence that averſneſs doth proceed; and yet they inſinuate, that they had an inclination to Gratify the King, and Embrace the Diſſenters, that were as averſe to them, as could be, with due tenderneſs, when it ſhould be ſettled by Parliament and Convocation. Pray, what hath their Convocation to do in this matter?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor General, I will not interrupt you; but, pray, come to the Buſineſs before us; Shew us that this is in diminution of the Kings Prerogative, or that the King ever had ſuch a Prerogative.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will, my Lord; I am obſerving what it is they ſay in this Petition——They tell the King it is inconſiſtent with their Honor, Prudence, and Conſcience, to do what he would have them to do; and if theſe things be not reflective upon the King and Government, I know not what is; this is not in a way of Judicature, poſſibly it might have been allowable to Petition the King to put it into a courſe of Juſtice, whereby it may be Tryed; but, alas, there is no ſuch thing in this matter.

It is not their deſire to put it into any Method for Tryal, and ſo it comes in the Caſe De Libellis Famoſis; for by this way, they make themſelves Judges, which no man by Law is permitted to do. My Lords, the Biſhops have gone out of the way, and all that they have offered does not come home to juſtify them; and therefore I take it under Favour, that we have made it a good Caſe for the King, we have proved what they have done, and whether this be Warrantable or not, is the Queſtion, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The whole Caſe appears upon Record; the Declaration, and Petition are ſet forth, and the Order of the King and Council. When the Verdict is brought in, they may move any thing what they pleaſe in arreſt of Judgment: They have had a great deal of Latitude, and taken a great deal of Liberty; But truly, I apprehend, not ſo very pertinently. But, I hope, we have made a good Caſe of it for the King, and that you, Gentlemen, will give us a Verdict.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Mr. Sollicitor, there is one thing I would feign be ſatisfied in; you ſay the Biſhops have no Power to Petition the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Not out of Parliament, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray give me leave, Sir; Then the King having made ſuch a Declaration of a General Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience, and afterwards he comes and requires the Biſhops to diſperſe this Declaration; this they ſay, out of a tenderneſs of Conſcience, they cannot do, becauſe they apprehend it contrary trary to Law, and contrary to their Function: What can they do, if they may not Petition?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I'll tell you what they ſhould have done, Sir. If they were commanded to do any thing againſt their Conſciences, they ſhould have acquieſced till the Meeting of the Parliament.

[At which ſome People in the Court hiſſed.]

Mr. Att. Gen. This is very fine indeed; I hope the Court and the Jury will take notice of this Carriage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is one thing for a Man to ſubmit to his Prince, if the King lay a Command upon him that he cannot obey, and another thing to Affront him. If the King will impoſe upon a Man what he cannot do, he muſt acquieſce; but ſhall he come and fly in the Face of his Prince? Shall he ſay it is illegal? And that the Prince acts againſt Prudence, Honour or Conſcience? And throw Dirt in the King's Face. Sure that is not to be permitted; that is libelling with a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Sollicitor, I am of Opinion that the Biſhops might Petition the King, but this is not the right way of bringing it; I am not of that Mind, that they cannot Petition the King out of Parliament, but if they may Petition, yet they ought to have done it after another Manner: For if they may in this reflective way petition the King, I am ſure, it will make the Government very precarious.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, it would have been too late to ſtay for a Parliament, for it was to have been diſtributed by ſuch a time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They might have lain under it, and ſubmitted.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. No, they would have run into Contempt of the King's Command, without petitioning the King not to inſiſt upon it; and if they had petitioned, and not have ſhewn the Reaſon why they could not obey, it would have been looked upon as a piece of Sullenneſs, and that they would have been blamed for, as much on the other ſide.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. After ſo long a Debate I ſhall not trouble you long, moſt things that are to be ſaid have been ſaid, but I ſhall only ſay this in ſhort; I cannot deny, nor ſhall not, but that the Subject has a right to Petition, but I ſhall affirm it alſo, he has a Duty to obey; and, that in this Caſe, the Power of the King to diſpenſe with Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical is not a thing that is now in Queſtion, nor need we here have had theſe long Debates on both ſides: It may be perceived plainly, by the Proofs that have been read, that the Kings and Princes have thought themſelves that they had ſuch a Power, though it may be, the Parliament thought they had not; and therefore the Declarations of the one, or the other, I ſhall not meddle with in this Caſe. That Power it ſelf which the King has, as King of this Realm, in Matters rather Eccleſiaſtical and Criminal than Matters of Property, may ſomewhat appear by what has been read before your Lordſhip; but all this will be nothing in our Caſe, neither has His Majeſty now depended ſo much upon this thing; the Declaration has been read to you; and what's there ſaid? The King there ſays, That for thoſe Reaſons he was ready to ſuſpend thoſe Laws; and be they ſuſpended? Yet, my Lord, with this too, That he refers it to, and hopes to make it ſecure by a Parliament: So that there being this, it has not gone, I think very far; and, it not having been touch'd here, it is not a point of Duty in my Lords the Biſhops, as Biſhops, that's here inquired into; Whether they ſhould have meddled with this or no, in this manner, is the Queſtion. That the King is Supream over all of us, and has a particular Supremacy over them, as Supream Ordinary and Governor, and Moderator of the Church, is very plain; and my Lord, it is as plain that in ſuch things as concern the Church, he has a particular Power to Command them; this is not unknown, but very frequent and common in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, and Matters of State; It is not here a Queſtion now, whether theſe Declarations which they were Commanded to take Care of getting read, were legal or not legal; what Prudence there was, what Honour there was, what Conſcience there was, for their not reading it, is not the Queſtion neither: But the point was, the King as ſupream Ordinary of his Kingdom, to whom the Biſhops are Subject, does in Council Order; and what is it he Orders? Their ſending out and diſtributing his Declaration; they were concerned in no more than that, and it had been a very petty thing, a ſmall thing, to ſend out the King's Declaration to be read by the Clergy: All the Clergy were ordered to read it, but my Lords the Biſhops were only commanded to diſtribute it; this he might do by Virtue of his Power Eccleſiaſtical. And if this be not an Evil in it ſelf, and if it be not againſt the Word of God, certainly Obedience was due from my Lords the Biſhops; active Obedience was due from them to do ſo much as this; it was no Conſent of theirs, it was no Approbation of theirs, of what they read, that was required. So that if they had read it, or another had read it, by the King's Order, eſpecially if that Order be legal, they are bound to do it by Virtue of their Obedience, and not to Examine more.

And my Lord, in this Petition, here they come to relieve, not only themſelves that were preſent, (for I ſpeak to the Preamble, as others before me have ſpoke to the Concluſion) but they do involve the reſt of the Biſhops that were abſent; for it is in behalf of themſelves, and their Brethren, and all the Clergy of that Province. Now that all theſe ſhould joyn in the Petition, is a thing very uncertain; how does it conſtrue here, whether they were altogether, and conſented to it, or how all their Minds could be ſo fully known, that they would be all involved in the Diſobedience to this Order of the King. Then, my Lord, What is the thing they are greatly averſe to? There are two things required in the Order, The Biſhops required to diſtribute the Declaration to the inferior Clergy; and the inferior Clergy are required to read it. Then their Averſeneſs muſt be to diſtribute it, and the others to read it, and ſo they will be involved; none of whom did ever appear to have joyned in it. And then they give Reaſons for their Averſeneſs; and it is true, Reaſons might have been given, and good Reaſons ſhould be given, why they ſhould not do this in Duty to His Majeſty; more gentle Reaſons, and other kind of Reaſons, than thoſe that they have given.

L. C. J. Pray Brother, will you come to the Matter before us.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. I have almoſt done, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. The Information is not for Diſobedience, Brother, but for a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. No, Sir, it is not for Diſobedience, but it is for giving Reaſons for the Diſobedience in a libellous Petition; and I am going on to that. The Declaration is ſaid in the Petition to be illegal, which is a Charge upon the King, That he has done an illegal Act. They ſay, they cannot in Honour, Conſcience or Prudence do it; which is a Reflection upon the Prudence, Juſtice, and Honour of the King in Commanding them to do ſuch a thing: And this appearing to have been delivered to the King by my Lords the Biſhops; Perſons, to whom certainly we all owe a Deference, as our Spiritual Maſters, to believe what things they ſay, as moſt likely to be true; and therefore it having an Univerſal Influence upon all the People, I ſhall leave it here to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, whether they ought not to Anſwer for it.

Mr. Recorder. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me one Word?

L. C. J. I hope, we ſhall have done by and by.

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordſhip don't think fit, I can ſit down.

L. C. J. No, no, go on, Sir Bartholomew Shower, you'll ſay I have ſpoiled a good Speech.

Mr. Recorder. I have no good one to make, my Lord, I have but a very few Words to ſay.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. That which I would urge, my Lord, is only this; I think my Lord, we have proved our Information, and that they have made no Anſwer to it; for the Anſwer they have made, is but Argumentative, and taken either from the Perſons of the Defendants, as Peers, or from the Form of its being a Petition: As Peers, it is ſaid, they have a right to Petition to, and adviſe the King; but that is no Excuſe at all, for if it contains Matter reproachful or ſcandalous, it is a Libel in Them, as well as in any other Subject; and they have no more Right to Libel the King than His Majeſties other Subjects have; nor will the Privilege of their Peerage exempt them from being puniſhed. And for the Form of this Paper, as being a Petition, there is no more Excuſe in that neither. For every Man has as much Right to publiſh a Book, or Pamphlet, as they had to preſent their Petition. And as it would be puniſhable in that Man to write a ſcandalous Book, ſo it would be puniſhable in them to make a ſcandalous, and a libellous Petition. And the Author of Julian the Apoſtate, becauſe he was a Clergy Man, and a Learned Man too, had as much right to publiſh his Book, as my Lords the Biſhops had to deliver this Libel to the King. And if the City of London were ſo ſeverely puniſhed, as to loſe their Charter, for petitioning for the Sitting of a Parliament, in which there were reflecting Words, but more ſoft.——

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray, good Mr. Recorder, don't compare the Writing of a Book to the Making of a Petition; for it's the Birth-right of the Subject to Petition.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, it was as lawful for the City of London to petition for the ſitting of a Parliament, as it was for my Lords the Biſhops to give Reaſons for their Diſobedience to the King's Command: And if the Matter of the City of London's Petition was reckoned to be libellous, in ſaying that what the King had done in diſſolving the Parliament, was an Obſtruction of Juſtice, what other Conſtruction can be made of my Lords the Biſhops ſaying that the King's Declaration is illegal? And if the Matter of this Petition be of the ſame Nature with that of the City of London, your Lordſhip can make no other Judgment of it; but that it ought to have the ſame Condemnation.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Mr. Recorder, you will as ſoon bring the two Poles together, as make this Petition to agree with Johnſon's Book; they are no more alike, than the moſt different things you can name.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, I have but one Word.

L. C. J. How unreaſonable is this now, that we muſt have ſo many Speeches at this time of Day? But we muſt hear it; go on Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, That which they ſeem moſt to inſiſt upon on the other ſide, and which has not been much ſpoken to on our ſide, is, That this Power which His Majeſty has Exerted, in ſetting forth His Declaration, was illegal, and their Arguments were Hypothetical; if it were illegal, they had not offended; and they offered at ſome Arguments to prove it illegal: But as to that, my Lord, we need not go much further, than a Caſe that is very well known here, which I crave leave to mention, only becauſe the Jury perhaps, have not heard of it; and that was the Caſe of Sir Edward Hales, where after a long Debate, it was reſolved, That the King had a Power to diſpenſe with Penal Laws.

But my Lord, if I ſhould go higher into our Books of Law, that which they ſeem to make ſo ſtrange of, might eaſily be made appear, to have been a frequent and conſtant practice.——

L. C. J. That is quite out of the Caſe, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. I beg your Lordſhips Favour, for a Word or two; if your Lordſhip pleaſe to conſider the Power the King has, as ſupream Ordinary, we ſay, he has a Power to diſpenſe with theſe Statutes, as he is King, and to give Eaſe to his Subjects, as ſupream Ordinary of the whole Kingdom, and as having ſupream Eccleſiaſtical Authority throughout the Kingdom. There might be abundance of Caſes cited for this, if there were need; the Statute of primo Eliz. doubtleſs is in force at this time, and a great many of the Statutes that have been made ſince that time, have expreſs Savings of the King's Supremacy; ſo that the King's Power is unqueſtionable: And if they have come and queſtioned this Power in this manner, by referring themſelves to the Declarations in Parliament, they have done that, which of late days has been always look'd upon as an ill thing, as if the King's Authority was under the Suffrages of a Parliament. But when they come to make out their Parliament Declarations, there was never a one, unleſs it be firſt in Richard the Second's time, that can properly be called a Parliament Declaration; ſo that that of the ſeveral Parliaments is a Matter perfectly miſtaken; and if they have miſtaken it, it is in the Nature of falſe News, which is a Crime, for which the Law will puniſh them. More things might be added, but I conſider your Lordſhip has had a great deal of Patience already, and much time has been ſpent, and, therefore I ſhall conclude, begging your Lordſhips Pardon for what I have ſaid.

L. C. Juſt. I do aſſure you, if it had not been a Caſe of great Concern, I would not have heard you ſo long: It is a Caſe of very great Concern to the King, and the Government, on the one ſide, and to my Lords the Biſhops on the other; and I have taken all the Care I can to obſerve what has been ſaid on both ſides. 'Tis not to be expected that I ſhould repeat all the Speeches, or the particular Facts, but I will put the Jury in mind of the moſt Material things, as well as my Memory will give me leave; but I have been interrupted by ſo many Long, and Learned Speeches, and by the length of the Evidence which has been brought in, in a very broken, unmethodical way, that I ſhall not be able to do ſo well as I would.

Gentlemen, thus ſtands the Caſe; It is an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops, his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the other Six Noble Lords; and it is for Preferring, Compoſing, Making, and Publiſhing, and Cauſing to be Publiſhed, a Seditious Libel; the way that the Information goes is ſpecial, and it ſets forth, That the King was Graciouſly pleaſed, by his Royal Power and Prerogative, to ſet forth, a Declaration of Indulgence for Liberty of Conſcience, in the Third Year of his Reign; and afterwards upon the 27. of April, in the Fourth Year, he comes and makes another Declaration; and afterwards, in May, orders in Council that this Declaration ſhould be Publiſhed by my Lords the Biſhops in their ſeveral Dioceſſes; and after this was done, my Lords the Biſhops come and preſent a Petition to the King, in which were contained the Words which you have ſeen.

Now, Gentlemen, the Proofs that have been upon this, you'll ſee what they are; the two Declarations are proved by the Clerks of the Council, and they are brought here under the Great Seal; a Queſtion did ariſe, whether the Prints were the ſame with the Original Declarations, and that is proved by Hills, or his Man, that they were Examined, and are the ſame; then the Order of the Council was produced by Sir John Nicholas, and has likewiſe been read to you; then they come to prove the Fact againſt the Biſhops, and firſt they fall to proving their Hands; they begun indeed a great way off, and did not come ſo cloſe to it as they afterwards did; for ſome of their Hands they could hardly prove, but my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand was only proved, and ſome others, but there might have been ſome Queſtion about that Proof; but afterwards it came to be proved, that my Lords the Biſhops owned their Hands, which, if they had produced at firſt, would have made the Cauſe ſomething ſhorter than it was.

The next Queſtion that did ariſe, was about the Publiſhing of it, whether my Lords the Biſhops had Publiſhed it, and it was inſiſted upon, That no body could prove the Delivery of it to the King; it was proved, the King gave it to the Council, and my Lords the Biſhops were called in, and there they acknowledged their Hands; but no body could prove how it came to the King's Hands. Upon which, we were all of Opinion, That it was not ſuch a Publiſhing, as was within the Information; and I was going to have directed you to find my Lords the Biſhops Not Guilty: But it hapned, that being Interrupted in my Directions, by an Honeſt, Worthy, Learned Gentleman, the Kings Council took the Advantage, and informing the Court that they had further Evidence for the King, we ſtaid till my Lord Preſident came, who told us how the Biſhops came to him to his Office at White-hall, and after they had told him their Deſign, That they had a mind to Petition the King, they asked him the Method they were to take for it, and deſired him to help them to the Speech of the King: And he tells them he will acquaint the King with their Deſire, which he does; and the King giving leave, he comes down and tells the Biſhops, that they might go and ſpeak with the King when they would; and (ſays he) I have given Direction that the Door ſhall be opened for you, as ſoon as you come. With that the Two Biſhops went away, and ſaid, they would go and fetch their other Brethren, and they did bring the other Four, but my Lord Archbiſhop was not there; and immediately when they came back, they went up into the Chamber, and there a Petition was Delivered to the King. He cannot ſpeak to that particular Petition, becauſe he did not read it, and that is all that he knew of the Matter; only it was all done the ſame Day, and that was before my Lords the Biſhops appeared at the Council.

Gentlemen, after this was proved, then the Defendants came to their Part; and theſe Gentlemen that were of Council for my Lords let themſelves into their Defence, by notable Learned Speeches, by telling you that my Lords the Biſhops are Guardians to the Church, and great Peers of the Realm, and were bound in Conſcience to take care of the Church. They have Read you a Clauſe of a Statute, made in Queen Eliz. time, by which they ſay, my Lords the Biſhops were under a Curſe, if they did not take care of that Law. Then they ſhew you ſome Records; One in Richard the Seconds time, which they could make little of, by reaſon their Witneſs could not Read it; but it was in ſhort, a Liberty given to the King, to Diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors. Then they ſhew you ſome Journals of Parliament; Firſt in the Year 1662. where the King had Granted an Indulgence and the Houſe of Commons Declared it was not fit to be done, unleſs it were by Act of Parliament. And they Read the King's Speech, wherein he ſays, he wiſh'd he had ſuch a Power, and ſo likewiſe that in 1672. which is all nothing, but Addreſſes and Votes, or Orders of the Houſe, or Diſcourſes, either the King's Speech, or the Subjects Addreſſes; but theſe are not Declarations in Parliament, that is inſiſted upon by the Council for the King, That what is a Declaration in Parliament is a Law, and that muſt be by the King, Lords, and Commons; the other is but common Diſcourſe, but a Vote of the Houſe, or a Signification of their Opinion, and cannot be ſaid to be a Declaration in Parliament: Then they come to that in 1685. where the Commons take notice of ſomething about the Soldiers in the Army that had not taken the Teſt, and make an Addreſs to the King about it; but in all theſe things (as far as I can obſerve) nothing can be gathered out of them, one way or other, it is nothing but Diſcourſes. Sometimes this Diſpenſing Power has been allowed, as in Ric. 2. time; and ſometimes it has been denied, and the the King did once wave it; Mr. Sollicitor tells you the Reaſon, There was a Lump of Money in the Caſe: But I wonder indeed to hear it come from him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I never gave my Vote for Money, I aſſure you.

L. C. Juſt. But thoſe Conceſſions which the King ſometimes makes for the Good of the People, and ſometimes for the Profit of the Prince himſelf; (but I would not be thought to diſtinguiſh between the Profit of the Prince, and the Good of the People, for they are both one; and what is the Profit of the Prince is always for the Good of the People;) but I ſay, thoſe Conceſſions muſt not be made Law, for that is reſerved in the King's Breaſt, to do what he pleaſes in it at any time

The truth of it is, the Diſpenſing Power is out of the Caſe, it is only a Word uſed in the Petition; but truly I will not take upon me to give my Opinion in the Queſtion, to determine that now, for it is not before me: The only Queſtion before me is, and ſo it is before you, Gentlemen, it being a Queſtion of Fact, Whether here be a certain Proof of a Publication? And then the next Queſtion is a Queſtion of Law indeed, Whether if there be a Publication proved, it be a Libel?

Gentlemen, upon the point of the Publication, I have ſummed up all the Evidence to you; and if you believe, that the Petition which theſe Lords preſented to the King was this Petition, truly, I think, that is a Publication ſufficient; if you do not believe it was this Petition, then my Lords the Biſhops are not Guilty of what is laid to their Charge in this Information, and conſequently there needs no Inquiry whether they are Guilty of a Libel: But if you do believe, that this was the Petition they preſented to the King, then we muſt come to Inquire whether this be a Libel.

Now, Gentlemen, any thing that ſhall diſturb the Government, or make Miſchief and a Stir among the People, is certainly within the Caſe of Libellis Famoſis; and I muſt in ſhort give you my Opinion, I do take it to be a Libel. Now, this being a point of Law, if my Brothers have any thing to ſay to it, I ſuppoſe they will deliver their Opinions.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Look you, Gentlemen, it is not uſual for any Perſon to ſay any thing after the Chief Juſtice has ſummed up the Evidence, it is not according to the Courſe of the Court; but this is a Caſe of an Extraordinary Nature, and there being a point of Law in it, it is fit every body ſhould deliver their own Opinion: The Queſtion is, whether this Petition of my Lords the Biſhops be a Libel, or no; Gentlemen, the End and Intention of every Action is to be Conſidered, and likewiſe, in this Caſe, we are to Conſider the Nature of the Offence that theſe Noble Perſons are Charged with; it is for delivering a Petition, which, according as they have made their Defence, was with all the Humility and Decency that could be: So that if there was no ill Intent, and they were not (as it is nor can be pretended they were) Men of Evil Lives, or the like, to deliver a Petition cannot be a Fault, it being the Right of every Subject to Petition: If you are ſatisfied there was an ill Intention of Sedition, or the like, you ought to find them Guilty; but if there be nothing in the Caſe that you find, but only that they did deliver a Petition to ſave themſelves harmleſs, and to free themſelves from blame, by ſhewing the Reaſon of their Diſobedience to the King's Command, which they apprehended to be a Grievance to them, and which they could not in Conſcience give Obedience to; I cannot think it is a Libel: It is left to you, Gentlemen, but that is my Opinion.

L. C. J. Look you, by the way, Brother, I did not ask you to ſum up the Evidence, (for that is not uſual) but only to deliver your Opinion, whether it be a Libel, or no.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Truly, I cannot ſee, for my part, any thing of Sedition, or any other Crime, fixed upon theſe Reverend Fathers, my Lords the Biſhops.

For, Gentlemen, to make it a Libel it muſt be falſe, it muſt be malicious, and it muſt tend to Sedition; as to the Falſhood, I ſee nothing that is offered by the King's Council, nor any thing as to the Malice: It was preferred with all the Humility and Decency that became the King's Subjects to approach their Prince with.

Now, Gentlemen, the Matter of it is before you; you are to conſider of it, and it is worth your Conſideration, they tell His Majeſty, It is not out of averſeneſs to pay all due Obedience to the King, nor out of a want of Tenderneſs to their diſſenting Fellow Subjects, that made them not perform the Command impoſed upon them; but they ſay, That becauſe they do conceive, that the thing that was commanded them was againſt the Law of the Land, therefore they do deſire His Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to forbear to inſiſt upon it, that they ſhould perform that Command which they take to be illegal.

Gentlemen, we muſt conſider what they ſay is illegal in it; they ſay, they apprehend the Declaration is illegal, becauſe it is founded upon a diſpenſing Power, which the King claims, to diſpenſe with the Laws concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

Gentlemen, I do not remember in any Caſe in all our Law, and I have taken ſome Pains upon this Occaſion to look into it, that there is any ſuch Power in the King, and the Caſe muſt turn upon that, in ſhort; If there be no ſuch diſpenſing Power in the King, then that can be no Libel which they preſented to the King, which ſays, that the Declaration, being founded upon ſuch a pretended Power, is illegal.

Now Gentlemen, this is a Diſpenſation with a Witneſs, it amounts to an Abrogation and utter Repeal of all the Laws; for I can ſee no Difference, nor know of none in Law, between the King's Power to diſpenſe with Laws Eccleſiaſtical, and his Power to diſpenſe with any other Laws whatſoever: If this be once allowed of, there will need no Parliament, all the Legiſlature will be in the King, which is a thing worth conſidering, and I leave the iſſue to God and your Conſciences.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. The ſingle Queſtion that falls to my ſhare, is, to give my Senſe of this Petition, whether it ſhall be in Conſtruction of Law a Libel in it ſelf, or a thing of great Innocence; I ſhall endeavour to expreſs my ſelf in as plain Terms as I can, and as much as I can, by way of Propoſition.

And I think, in the firſt place, That no Man can take upon him to write againſt the actual Exerciſe of the Government, unleſs he have leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel, be what he writes true or falſe; for if once we come to impeach the Government by way of Argument, 'tis the Argument that makes it the Government, or not the Government: So that I lay down that in the firſt place, That the Government ought not to be impeached by Argument, nor the Exerciſe of the Government ſhaken by Argument; becauſe I can manage a Propoſition in it ſelf doubtful, with a better Pen than another Man: This ſay I, is a Libel.

Then I lay down this for my next Poſition, That no private Man can take upon him to write concerning the Government at all; for what has any private Man to do with the Government, if his Intereſt be not ſtirred or ſhaken? It is the buſineſs of the Government to manage Matters relating to the Government; it is the buſineſs of Subjects to mind only their own Properties and Intereſt: If my Intereſt is not ſhaken, what have I to do with Matters of Government? They are not within my Sphere: If the Government does come to ſhake my particular Intereſt, the Law is open for me, and I may redreſs my ſelf by Law: And when I intrude my ſelf into other Mens buſineſs, that does not concern my particular Intereſt, I am a Libeller.

Theſe I have laid down for plain Propoſitions; now then let us conſider further, Whether if I will take upon me to contradict the Government, any ſpecious Pretence that I ſhall put upon it ſhall dreſs it up into another Form, and give it a better Denomination; and truly I think 'tis the worſe, becauſe it comes in a better Dreſs; for by that Rule, every Man that can put on a good Vizard, may be as miſchievous as he will to the Government at the bottom; ſo that whether it be in the form of a Supplication, or an Addreſs, or a Petition, if it be what it ought not to be, let us call it by its true Name, and give it its right Denomination, It is a Libel.

Then, Gentlemen, conſider what this Petition is; This is a Petition relating to ſomething that was done and ordered by the Government. Whether the Reaſons of the Petition be true or falſe, I will not examine that now, nor will I examine the Prerogative of the Crown, but only take notice that this relates to the Act of the Government: The Government here has publiſhed ſuch a Declaration as this, that has been read, relating to Matters of Government; and ſhall, or ought, any body to come and impeach that as illegal, which the Government has done? Truly in my Opinion, I do not think he ſhould or ought; for by this Rule may every Act of the Government be ſhaken, when there is not a Parliament de Facto ſitting.

I do agree, That every Man may Petition the Government, or the King, in a matter that relates to his own private Intereſt; but to meddle with a matter that relates to the Government, I do not think my Lords the Biſhops had any Power to do more than any others: When the Houſe of Lords and Commons are in Being, it is a proper way of applying to the King, there is all the openneſs in the World, for thoſe that are Members of Parliament, to make what Addreſſes they pleaſe to the Government, for the rectifying, altering, regulating, and making of what Law they pleaſe; but if every private Man ſhall come and interpoſe his Advice, I think, there can never be an End of adviſing the Government; I think, there was an inſtance of this in King James's Time, when by a ſolemn Reſolution it was declared to be High Miſdemeanour, and next to Treaſon, to petition the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution.

Mr. J. Powel. Brother, I think, you do miſtake a little.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother, I dare rely upon it, that I am Right; it was ſo declared, by all the Judges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Puritans preſented a Petition to that purpoſe, and in it they ſaid, if it would not be granted, they would come with a great number.

Mr. J. Powel. Ay, there it is.

Mr. J. Allybone. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, the Reſolution of the Judges is, That ſuch a Petition is next Door to Treaſon, a very great Miſdemeanour.

Mr. J. Powel. They accompanying it with Threats of the Peoples being Diſcontented.

Mr. J. Allybone. As I remember, it is in the Second Part of the Folio 35, or 37. where the Reſolution of the Judges is, That to frame a Petition to the King, to put the Penal Laws in Execution, is next Door to Treaſon; for (ſay they) no Man ought to intermeddle with Matters of Government without leave of the Government.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That was a Petition againſt the Penal Laws.

Mr. J. Allybone. Then I am quite miſtaken indeed, in caſe it be ſo.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. That is not material at all, which it was.

Mr. Pollixfen. They there threatned, unleſs their Requeſt were granted, ſeveral Thouſands of the King's Subjects would be diſcontented.

Mr. J. Powel. That is the Reaſon of that Judgment, I affirm it.

Mr. J. Allybone. But then I'll tell you, Brother, again, what is ſaid in that Caſe that you hinted at, and put Mr. Sollicitor in mind of; For any Man to raiſe a Report that the King will, or will not, permit a Toleration, if either of theſe be diſagreeable to the People, whether he may, or may not, It is againſt Law; for we are not to meaſure things from any Truth they have in themſelves, but from that Aſpect they have upon the Government; for there may be every tittle of a Libel true, and yet it may be a Libel ſtill: So that I put no great ſtreſs upon that Objection, That the Matter of it is not falſe; and, for Sedition, it is that which every Libel carries in it ſelf; and as every Treſpaſs implies Vi & Armis, ſo every Libel againſt the Government carries in it Sedition, and all the other Epithets that are in the Information; This is my Opinion as to the Law in general.

I will not Debate the Prerogatives of the King, nor the Privileges of the Subject; but as this Fact is, I think, theſe venerable Biſhops did meddle with that which did not belong to them; they took upon them, in a petitionary way, to contradict the actual Exerciſe of the Government, which I think no particular Perſons, or ſingle Body may do.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Have you a Mind to drink before you go?

Jury. Yes, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

[Wine was ſent for, for the Jury.]

Juryman. My Lord, we humbly pray, that your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to let us have the Papers that have been given in Evidence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What is that you would have, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. He deſires this, my Lord, That you would be pleaſed to direct that the Jury may have the uſe of ſuch Writings and Statute-Books, as may be neceſſary for them to make uſe of.

L. C. J. The Statute Book they ſhall have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But they can have no Papers, but what are under Seal.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. They may have them by Conſent, and they may have a Copy of the Information.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, and the Declarations under Seal.

Mr. Pollixfen. If they have thoſe, and the Libel, (as they call it) they will not need a Copy of the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to aſcertain what it is they ſhall have.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, the Libel, and the Declarations under the Great Seal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But not the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, nor the Journals, for they are not Evidence.

L. C. J. No, I don't intend they ſhall.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we pray they may have the whole Petition.

Mr. J. Holloway. That is, with the Direction, and Prayer, you mean.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, with all our Hearts.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Jury went together to conſider of their Verdict, and ſtayed together all Night, without Fire or Candle.

On Saturday the 30th day of June, Anno Dom. 1688. about Ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Biſhops, came again into the Court, and immediately after the Jury were brought to the Bar.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Cryer, Take the Appearance of the Jury. Sir Roger Langley.

Sir Roger Langley. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez, &c.

[And ſo all the reſt were called, and anſwered] Then Proclamation for Silence was made.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Gentlemen, are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Sir Sam Aſtry. Do you find the Defendants, or any of them, guilty of the Miſdemeanour whereof they are Impeached, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath Recorded it——

You ſay, the Defendants, and every of them, are Not Guilty of the Miſdemeanour whereof they are Impeached; and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

[At which there were ſeveral great Shouts in the Court, and throughout the Hall.]

Mr. Sollicitor General, taking Notice of ſome Perſons in Court that Shouted, moved very earneſtly that they might be committed; whereupon a Gentleman of Grays-Inn was laid hold on, but was ſoon after diſcharged. And after the Shouting was over, the Lord Chief Juſtice reproving the Gentleman, ſaid,

L. C. J. Sir, I am as glad as you can be, that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your manner of rejoycing here in Court is Indecent, you might rejoyce in your Chamber, or elſewhere, and not here.

[Then ſpeaking to Mr. Attorney, he ſaid,]

Have you any thing more to ſay to my Lords the Biſhops, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Biſhops went away.]

Philip Standsfield, Eldeſt lawful Son to Umquhile Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, Priſoner within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh.

INdyted and Accuſed at the Inſtance of Sir John Dalrymple Younger of Stair, His Majeſties Advocate for His Highneſs's Intereſt: That where notwithſtanding by the Law of God, the Common Law, Law of Nations, Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and conſtant Practice thereof, the expreſſing of malicious and ſeditious Words to the diſdain of His Sacred Majeſties Perſon, and contempt of His Royal Government, ſuch as drinking or wiſhing Confuſion to His Majeſty, is High-Treaſon, particularly by the 2d Act. 2d Seſſ. Par. 1ſt King Charles IId. of ever glorious Memory: The Plotting, Contriving or Intending Death or Deſtruction to the King's Majeſty, or any bodily harm, tending to Death or Deſtruction, or who ſhall by Writing, Printing, or other malicious Plotting, and adviſed ſpeaking, expreſs and declare ſuch their Treaſonable Intentions, after ſuch perſons, being legally Convicted thereof, they ſhall be deemed, declared and adjudg'd Traytors: And the Curſing, Beating, Invading, or Aſſaſſinating of a Parent by a Child above the Age of ſixteen Years, who is not Mad and Furious, is puniſhable by Death, and Confiſcation of Moveables: And of all other Murders, Parricide is the moſt atrocious and unnatural; and Murder under Truſt, is puniſhable as Treaſon with forfaulture of Life, Land and Goods, and particularly by the 20 Act. 1ſt Seſſ. 2d Par. K. Ch. 2d. The King's Majeſty and Eſtates of Parliament, conſidering how great and atrocious a Crime it is for Children to Beat or Curſe their Parents, and how the Law of God hath pronounced juſt Sentence of Death againſt ſuch as ſhall either of theſe ways injure either of their Parents; therefore the King and Eſtates of Parliament did Statute and Ordain, That whoſoever Son or Daughter above the Age of Sixteen Years, not being Diſtracted, ſhall Beat or Curſe either their Father or their Mother, ſhall be put to Death without Mercy. And ſicklike by the 31 Act, 11 Par. K Ja. 6th. It is Statuted and Ordained, That the Murder or Slaughter of whatſomever of the Leidges, where the Party ſlain is under the truſt, credit, aſſurance, and power of the Slayer, all ſuch Murder or Slaughter to be committed in time coming, the ſame being lawfully tryed, and the Perſon dilated found guilty by an Aſſiſe thereof ſhall be Treaſon, and the Perſon found culpable ſhall forfault Life and Goods; as in the ſaid Laws and Acts of Parliament at more length is contained. Nevertheleſs it is of Verity, that the ſaid Philip Standsfield ſhaking off all Fear of God, the Bonds and Ties of Nature and Chriſtianity, Regard and Obedience to the ſaid Laws and Acts of Parliament, did dare and preſume to commit the ſaid horrid and deteſtable Crimes, in ſwa far as upon the firſt, ſecond, third, or one or other of the Days of the Moneths of June, July, Auguſt, or September laſt, by paſt, one or other of them, he did, within the Houſe and Kitchin of New milns, call for Ale to Drink ſome Healths, and in the preſence of John Robiſon, then his Fathers Servant, Agnes Bruce, likewiſe his Fathers Servitrix, and ſeveral others, he did, as a moſt villanous and avowed Traitor, preſume and dare to begin a Health to the Confuſion of his Sacred Majeſty, his native Soveraign, and did drink off the ſame, and cauſed others in his Company to do the like. And ſicklike Sir James Standsfield of New-milns his Father, having cauſed Educat and bring him up Decentlie, and in plenty conform to his Rank and Quality, and having left no means uneſſayed for his Literature, Education and Subſiſtence; yet he being a profligate and debauched Perſon, did commit, and was acceſſory to ſeveral notorious Villanies, for which, both at home and abroad, he was apprehended and detained Priſoner, as in the Marſhal-Sea-Priſon in Southwark, in the publick Priſons of Antwerp and Orleance, and ſeveral other places; and tho' his Father out of his natural compaſſion to him, did cauſe releaſe him out of theſe Priſons, in which he was ſo juſtly confined, he no ſooner had his Liberty, than he of new invented and went about his villanous Practices and Debauches: And his Father at laſt perceiving that nothing could reclaim him from theſe and the like proceedings, having ſignified his inclinations to Diſheriſh him, and in order thereto having diſponed his Eſtate in Favours of John Standsfield his ſecond Son; the ſaid Philip did thereupon conceive, harbour and entertain ane Helliſh Malice and Prejudice againſt the ſaid Sir John Standsfield his Father, and moſt barbarouſly did declare, threaten and vow at ſeveral times, that he would cut his Throat. And particularly upon the firſt, ſecond, or third, or remanent days of the Months of the Year 1680, within the Houſe of James Smith in Nungate or Haddingtoun: and upon the firſt, ſecond, or third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remnant Months of the Year 1687, within the Houſe of James Baikbie Fermorer in New-Milns; and within his Fathers own Houſe of New Milns, and in the Houſe of William Scot there; and upon the firſt, ſecond, third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the Year of God 1683, 1684, and 1685 Years, when he was both in Bruſſels and Breda, and ſeveral other places, both in Holland and Flanders, and in Priſons within which he was detained in the City of London and Southwark, or upon one or other of the days, of one or other of the Months of the ſaids Years, or either of them moſt wickedly, unnaturally, and bitterly Rail upon, abuſe and Curſe the ſaid Sir James Standsfield, his natural and kindly Parent. And being tranſported with rage and malice, he did, contrary to the light and tyes of Nature, nor once, but often, and frequently curſe his Father, by bidding, and praying the Devil to take him, and the Devil rive him. God damm him, and ſwear, if he had a Sword, he would run it through him, and if ever he came to Scotland, he would be avenged upon him. And particularly upon the day of November laſt, which was the laſt time his Father went to Edinburgh; he did moſt impiouſly, and unnaturally imprecate, God let him never return, and God let him never ſee his Face. And frequently when he ſaw his Fathers diet taken to him; he uſed to ſay, God grant he may choak upon it; and at other occaſions, when his Father refuſed to eat, he was in uſe to ſay, God let never more be in his Stomach than was in it then. And upon the firſt, ſecond, or third, or one, or other of the days of the Months of September, October, or November, laſt by paſt, or one or other of them, His Mother being recovered out of a Swond, and having ſaid to him, Philip, ye will ſhortly want your Mother, which will be a gentle Viſitation to Sir James your Father. To which he did Anſwer: By my Soul, my Father ſhall be dead before you, Mother; and about eight days after, he upon the like occaſion did renew the ſame Words: As alſo he was in uſe to declare, that though at preſent he had neither Cloaths nor Money, yet ſhortly (and no body did think how ſoon) he would be Laird of all, and then would uſe other Perſons as they did him now: And at other times declared, that before Chriſtmas he would be Laird of all; which Curſes and Imprecations, he the ſaid Philip Standsfield, by a continual Habit, uſed, and repeited theſe ſeveral Years by paſt; and lately ſome few Months or Weeks, before his Fathers Murder. And not ſatisfied therewith, the ſaid Philip did proceed to that degree of unnatural Cruelty, and malicious Spite and Enmity againſt his Father; that upon the firſt, ſecond, third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the years of God, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, and 1684 years, or one or other other of the Days, of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the ſaids Years; he did attempt to aſſaſſinate, and offered Violence to his Fathers Perſon, and did chaſe and purſue him upon the King's High-way at Lothian burn, and did fire Piſtols upon his Father. And likewayes upon one or other of the Days of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the Years of God above ſpecified, he did attempt to aſſaſſinat his Father for his Life, at Culterallors; and did fire Piſtols upon him: And his Father being afraid of his Life, and under the apprehenſion of Violence, from the cruel and bloudy Hands of the ſaid Philip, his unnatural Son, He did to ſeveral Perſons both of Quality, and intire Reputation, declare that the ſaid Philip his Son, had both attempted to aſſaſſinate, and offered Violence to his Perſon, and that he was deviſing, and contriving his Death. And the ſaid Sir James Standsfield his Father, having upon the day of November laſt, gone from the City of Edinburgh, to his own Houſe of New milns, and about Ten a Clock at Night, or thereby having gone to his own Chamber, in order to his reſt, and being alone in the Room, under the Credit, Truſt, and Aſſurance of the ſaid Philip his Son, and his own Servants within his own Family; The ſaid Philip did conſult, and adviſe, and correſpond with ſome other Perſones, within and about the Houſe for the time, to aſſaſſinat and and cruelly murder his ſaid Father, and perticularly with George Thomſon in New-Milns, and Helen Dickſon his Spouſe, and Janet Johnſtoun Spouſe to John Nicols, there, in the Houſe of the ſaid George Thomſon many times, particularly the Saturdays Night, immediately preceeding the Murder, where he curſed his Father, and ſaid he ſhould ſhortly make an end of him, and be Maſter of all: And accordingly he and they did Murder and Strangle him in his Bed-Chamber, and in the dead time of the night, did carry and tranſport him from the ſaid Room, to the Water, near by the Houſe, and laid his Body down upon the Waterſide, and tyed a Stone about his Neck, to make him ſink in the Water; and before he was throwen therein, he went back with his Accomplices to a little Kiln near by, and conſulted and adviſed, whether it was more fit to throw him in the Water, with the Stone about his Neck, to make him ſink, or to take away the Stone, leaſt when he ſhould be found, it might thereby appear that the Stone had been tyed by ſome other hand than his own; and at laſt reſolved to take away the Stone, and throw his Body in the Water, which they returning, did accordingly: And ſome Perſons being accidentally lying in the Houſe at the time, they did hear a Noiſe of many Tongues and Voices, to their great Terror and Amazement; And the next Morning very early, ſome of the Servants in the Houſe, having come to the Room, where his ſaid Father did lye, and having miſſed him out of the Room, gave notice thereof, to ſome others of the Servants. He declared that he had been ſeeking him about the Water-pools; and a Noiſe and Cry having ariſen, Search and Inquiry was made for his ſaid Father: (and by him ſeemingly amongſt the reſt) And after ſome time his Body was found in the Water hard by his own Houſe, and being dead, and his Neck broken before he was thrown in the Water, his Body did neither ſink to the ground, nor receive Water, (as all drowned Bodies are in uſe to do) and he knowing where his Fathers Body had been put, went on the Sabbath Morning directly to the place where his Body was in the Water, and ſtood a conſiderable ſpace on the Water-ſide, directly oppoſite to the Body, with his Eyes fixed on the ſame, before his Body was found or knowen to any others than the Murtherers; and when John Topping (a ſtanger) paſſing that way, and ignorant of the whole Matter, or that Sir James was amiſſing, called to him, and asked, who that was in the Water: He made no anſwer, but went away from that place ſtraight to New-Milns, and gave no intimation to him, or any other Perſon what he had ſeen in the Water, but appeared ſurprized when his Body was found there, by other Perſons; and his Fathers Body being taken out of the Water, the ſame was by his order, carried to a dark Out-houſe; and though he was deſired by the Friends and Servants preſent, to ſuffer his Fathers dead Body to be carried to his own Houſe, and kept therein, and not to be buried till his Friends in Edinburgh and elſewhere, and Phyſicians in Haddingtoun, or near by, might ſee the ſame. Yet he refuſed ſo to do, and cauſed bury the dead Body of his Father privately, and in haſte. And the Noiſe having ſpread abroad, that his Father had been barbarouſly Murdered by him, and his Accomplices: Order was given by theſe in Authority, to cauſe open the Grave that Phyſicians and expert Chirurgians might inſpect his Body, and make Report anent the Truth of the Matter: And accordingly by the Report of the ſaids Chirurgians who inſpected the Body, it did appear, that his ſaid Father was cruelly ſtrangled and murdered, and not drowned, and that he had been caſt in the water of purpoſe to conceal the ſame: And when his Father's dead body was ſighted and inſpected by Chirurgians, and the clear and evident ſigns of the Murder had appeared, the Body was ſewed up, and moſt carefully cleaned, and his neareſt Relations and Friends were deſired to lift up his Body to the Coffin: And accordingly James Row, Merchand, (who was in Edinburgh in the time of the Murder) having liſted the Left ſide of Sir James his Head and Shoulder, and the ſaid Philip the Right ſide, his Father's Body, though carefully cleaned, as ſaid is, ſo as the leaſt Blood was not on it, did (according to God's uſual Method of diſcovering Murders) blood afreſh upon him, and defiled all his hands, which ſtruck him with ſuch a terror, that he immediately let his Father's Head and Body fall with Violence, and fled from the Body, and in conſternation and confuſion, cryed, Lord, have Mercy upon me, and bowed himſelf down over a Seat in the Church (where the Corps were inſpected) wiping his Father's innocent blood off his own murdering Hands upon his Cloaths. By all which it is manifeſt, that he did moſt traiterouſly expreſs his hatred and malice to his Majeſties Sacred Perſon, by wiſhing and drinking to his confuſion, and cauſing others to do the ſame. And likewiſe, that he did not only unnaturally curſe, invade, attempt to aſſaſſinate or beat his ſaid Father, but under truſt and aſſurance, barbarouſly and treaſonable did ſtrangle, kill, and murder him in manner forſaid, and is actor, art and part of the forſaids Crimes, or one or other of them, which being found by an Aſſyſe, he ought to be puniſhed for the treaſonable Crimes above ſpecified, with forefaulture of Life, Land and Goods, and for the other Crimes above-mentioned, Capitally, and with the pains of Death and Confiſcation of Moveables, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter.

Procurators in Defence.

Sir David Thoirs.

Sir Patrick Hume.

Mr William Moniepenny.

Mr. William Dundaſs.

The Pannal's Procurators produced two Warrands of Privy Council, Commanding them to compeir and plead the Pannals Defence.

SIr Patrick Hume for the Pannal (always denying the Inditement, and whole members and qualifications thereof) alleadges, That as to the firſt part of the Indictment, in relation to the drinking an Health to the Confuſion of his Sacred Majeſty, as it is moſt calumnious, ſo it is not to be ſuppoſed, that any man in his right wits would have been guilty of ſuch a thing; And it is poſitively offered to be proven, that at or about the time libel'd, and ſeveral times before and after, the Defender did moſt heartily and chearfully in ſeveral Companies drink the King's Health, and upon all occaſions he was ready to teſtifie his Loyalty to the King, and particularly the time of the Invaſion by the late Duke of Monmouth in England, where he did enter himſelf voluntarly a Souldier in the Earl of Dumbarton's Regiment, and continued in the King's Army till the Rebels were defeat, and the Voluntiers diſmiſſed.

As to the ſecond part of the Libel, in relation to the Pannal, his alledged committing and being guilty of, and acceſſory to many notour Crimes abroad, and being detained Priſoner in London, Antwerp, Orleance, &c. and that he vented and entertained malice againſt his Father, and that he declared many times that he would cut his Throat, and that he did rail againſt and curſe his Father, by many Imprecations.

It is anſwered, primo, That it is abſolutely deny'd, that the Pannal was guilty of, or acceſſory to any notorious Crime abroad, or put in Priſon upon that account, nor is there ſo much as any Crime condeſcended upon.

2. The Defender could not conceive any prejudice againſt his Father, upon the account of Diſponing his Eſtate to his ſecond Son; for he knew nothing thereof till after his Father's deceaſe, that one Alexander Ainſlie told him that his Father had made ſuch a Diſpoſition.

3. As to the pretended Expreſſions, that the Defender ſhould have had of Railing, Curſing, and uſing Imprecations againſt his Father, in ſo far as the ſamen are lybel'd to have been done abroad, in England, Holland, or other places, he cannot be lyable to the Puniſhment inflicted by the Law of this Kingdom, becauſe when a party commits a Crime in another Nation, he is only to be puniſhed according to the Law of the place where the Crime was committed, and not according to the Law of the Nation where he is a Subject, or has his Dwelling: As is clear by the Common Law, Authentick Cod: ubi de criminibus agi oportet. Qua in provincia quis delinquit, aut in qua pecuniarum aut criminum reus ſit, ſive de terra, ſive de terminis, ſive de poſſeſſione, ſive de proprietate, ſive de hypotheca, aut de alia qualibet occaſione, vel de qualibet re fuerit reus, illic jure ſubjaceat, quod jus eſt perpetuum. In that Nation where any Perſon commits a Crime, or is lyable to anſwer upon any account whatſomever, he is to be judged by the Law of that place, which is eſtabliſhed as a perpetual Law, and Matthæus de Criminibus, in his Title, de pœnis, is expreſs of the ſame Opinion.

4. As to all thoſe pretended Expreſſions of railing, curſing, and threatning, lybel'd, that were before March, 1685. The Defender is ſecured by the Act of Indemnity, by which all Crimes are indemnified, preceeding that time, againſt the Government and Laws.

5. As to any pretended Expreſſions, of railing and curſing, ſince that time, they being but Injuries alledged done to the Father, he might and did remit the ſamen, in ſo far he did not challenge and purſue the ſame in his own time, and this is clear from the Common Law, Carpzov. Part 2. Queſt. 65. *Actio autem injuriarum nec activè nec paſſive in Hæredes tranſit etiamſi mortuus illatas injurias ignoraverit. Inſtitut. lib.*4. *tit.*12. par. 1. de perpetuis temporalibus action. Leg. 10. par. 2. ff. ſi quis cautionibus in judicio ſiſten. And leg. 13. ff. de injuriis, injuriarum actio neque hæredi neque in hæredem datur; As alſo it is a Principle in Law, that diſſimulatione tollitur injuria; and if it could be made appear, that the Pannal had any ſuch Expreſſions, the Father did diſſimulat and paſs from the ſame, in ſo far as by a Letter, dated in June laſt, written by the Father to the Pannel, he orders him to take in his Chamberlain Accompts of the Rents of his Lands, and of any Money he had received from the Tenements, or for the Corns ſold, and that he expects he will do the ſame exactly, and recommends to him, to be careful of all his Affairs, and ſubſcribes himſelf to be his Loving Father; By which it is evident, that all former Differences (if any were) betwixt them were then taken away.

As to the third part of the Indytement, in relation to the ſeveral Acts and Qualifications inſiſted upon: To inferr, that the Defender had Acceſſion to his Father's death. It is anſwered, (primo) That the Indytement, in ſo far as it is founded upon the 51. Act Par. K. Ja. 6. in relation to the Murder under truſt, which is declared to be puniſhable as Treaſon, is not relevant: Becauſe the Father cannot in Law be ſaid to be under truſt and aſſurance of the Son, and that Act of Parliament takes only place in Caſes where a Man is invited to his Neighbours Houſe, or of an Traveller being in an Inn, and that he be murdered under that truſt, and the ſame Act of Parliament being founded on in the Caſe of Swinton, who killed his Wife, in the year 1666. the Inditement was reſtricted to ſimple Slaughter. And in the Caſe of Maſter James Oliphant, in the year 1665, The Lords of the Seſſion found, that a Son's killing his Mother, was not Murder under truſt, and ſo he was not puniſhable by that Act of Parliament, as guilty of the Crime of Treaſon.

2. The Acts and Qualifications condeſcended on to infer the Defenders Acceſſion to his Father's death, are but very remote and uncertain, for as to that Expreſſion, That the Defender is alledged to have threatned his Fathers death, It is the Opinion of all Lawyers, who have written upon the Subject, that that is but a very remote Preſumption. And as Carpzovius expreſſes it, Part. 3. Queſt. 121 Numb. 51. quod eſt indicium admodum periculoſum, quippe cum homines ſæpe nil minus faciant quam quod minas exequantur & ira iracundia agitatus minas de crimine perpetrando ſæpe jactet, ipſo tamen animo fervore paulo poſt diſcuſſo, cohibeat manus, & abſtineat a facinore illo quod forſan ab alio poſtea committitur. And Paris de puteo gives an inſtance in his Tractat de ſyndicatu upon the word Tortura; and Boverius, That a Woman ſeeing a Perſon going by her Window, againſt whom ſhe had a Prejudice, and that another having a hatred againſt her, and hearing that ſhe had threatned to cut off that Perſons Leggs, the party that did hear the Woman uſe the threatning, did the thing, upon which the Woman that did threaten, being challenged, and put to the Torture, did confeſs; Yet thereafter it was found, that ſhe was altogether innocent, and that another had done it.

3. As to the pretended Acts of the Defender's alledged purſuing, and invading his Father, and fireing Piſtols at him, at Lothian burn and Culterallors in Annis 1683, and 1684. As it is moſt groundleſs, ſo if need were it could be made appear by the Perſons who were in company with him at that time, That the Defender, and his Father, were then in intire Friendſhip all alongſt the Journey, and he was ſo far from making any ſuch Attempt, That it can be made appear, that the Defender did behave himſelf towards his Father, with all the Submiſſion and Reſpect that became a Son to have to his Father; But as to theſe and all other Acts preceeding March, 1685. the Defender is ſecured by the Act of Indemnity, and as the Defender cannot be purſued for any Crime preceeding that time; neither in Judgment nor out with the ſame, they in effect being no Crimes, being taken away by the Act of Indemnity, they cannot be ſo much as made uſe of as Qualifications or Aggravations to infer another Crime poſterior thereto.

4. As to that pretended Qualification, that when the Defender did touch his Fathers dead body after it was taken out of the Grave, the Corps did bleed.

It is anſwered, That this is but a ſuperſtitious Obſervation without any ground either in Law or Reaſon. And Carpzovius relates, Part 3. Queſt. 122. Numb. 31. That ſeveral Perſons upon that ground had been unjuſtly challenged, and that he in his own Experience, had ſeen a dead body bleed in preſence of the Perſon who was not guilty,-as alſo that he has ſeen the body not bleed in preſence of the Perſon that was guilty. And Mattheus de Criminibus, is of the ſame Opinion, Tit. 16. de Quæſtionibus, Numb. 12. de Sanguine porro de Cadavere profluente quod dicitur id de plurimis experimentis comprobetur, tamen cum experimenta falſa ſint; ratio vero idonea nulla reddi poſſit, non putaverim indicium ad torturam ſufficiens eſſe; non enim ſapientis Judicis eſt incerto experimento credere quod certa ratione dirimendum eſt. And the truth is, the occaſion of the dead bodies bleeding, was that the Chirurgions that came out to viſit the body, did make an Inciſion about the neck, which might be the occaſion of the bleeding, and alſo the very moving of the dead body when it was taken out of the Grave, and out of the Coffin might occaſion the bleeding; eſpecially ſeeing the body did not bleed for ſome time after, which certainly was made by the Motion, and by the Inciſion: As alſo as a further Evidence, that it could not be the Defenders touching the body, the Chirurgions did likeways touch the body as well as he, and ſeveral others preſent, ſo that the bleeding could no more be aſcribed to his touching, than the touching of the other perſons preſent.

5. As to the other Articles lybel'd, relating to the pretended Murder, They are but meer Stories, and the Truth is, and it is offered to be proven, That the Defender having gone to his Chamber and Bed the night before his Father's death, he did not ſtir out of his Bed, nor out of the Roum, till the next morning, that John Robertſon his Fathers Servant came to his Chamber, where he was in Bed, and told him that he had been in his Maſter's Roum, and that he could not find him; Upon which the Defender immediately aroſe, and put on his Cloaths, and went out to ſee where his Father was. And ſhortly after word being brought him, by ſome Perſons in the Town, that they did ſee his Father's Body lying in the Water, and it being generally concluded by all, that he had thrown himſelf in the Water, and the body being taken out, and laid in a Low-Roum; it was thought fit by all the Neighbours about, that he ſhould be buried the next day.

6. The particulars lybel'd, to infer the Defender's Acceſſion to his Fathers death, being but remote and uncertain Conjectures, it is a certain principle in Law, that ex præſumptionibus & conjecturis nemo criminaliter condemnari poteſt, eſpecially as to a Capital Puniſhment: As is clear from the common Law, Leg. 5. digeſt. de pœnis, ſed nec de ſupplicationibus debere aliquem damnari, ſatius enim eſt Impunitum relinqui facinus nocentis quam Innocentem damnari. And which is the Opinion of all Lawers, writing upon the Subject; As Bartol, upon the foreſaid Law, and Farin. part. 3. oper: Crim. Queſt. 86. and the Lawers by him there cited. And Muſcard de prob: Concluſ. 223. layes it down as a certain concluſion, quod Argumenta quantumcunque urgentiſſima, etiamſi eſſent talia quæ mentem indicantis adeo coactarent quod aliud credere non poſſit non tamen ſufficerent ad condemnationem pœnæ corporalis ſed duntaxat pecuniariæ.

7. The Preſumptions and Qualifications lybel'd, cannot be ſuſtained even to infer an Arbitrary Puniſhment: Becauſe they may and are taken off by other Preſumptions, That either the Father was not murdered, but that in a Frainzie or melancholy fit he had thrown himſelf in the Water: Or at leaſt if he was murdered, that the Defender had no Acceſſion thereto, and the Preſumptions condeſcended upon in behalf of the Defender, eleid the Preſumptions contained in the Inditement, are theſe. That it is notourlie known, That his Father was ſubject to melancholly Fits, and that in the Year 1679, the time of Bothwell-bridge, It is offered to be proven, that he was in a fit of Diſtraction; and at another time in his Houſe at the Netherbow, he was going to throw himſelf out over the Window, if one Thomas Lindall had not come in at the time and pulled him back by the Leggs, when his body was half out at the Window: And ſome few days before he went out of Edinburgh laſt, he came to George Sterling, Chirurgeon, and deſired him to draw blood of him, for a Diſtemper in his Head, which he refuſed, unleſs he had advice from a Phyſician. As alſo a day or two before he went out of the Town, he was ſeen reading upon the Book of Burtouns Melancholly. And that day when he went out of the Town in company of Mr. Bell the Miniſter, and Aiton Merchant in Haddingtoun, they obſerved him to be melancholy, diſordered, and more troubled than ordinary; or if it could be made appear, that the Father was murdered, yet it cannot be preſumed that the Defender had any Acceſſion thereto, or that he would have committed ſuch an Act againſt the very Ties and light of Nature: As alſo it appears by the foreſaid letter, written to the Defender by his Father, that they were in intire Friendſhip; as alſo when the ſurmiſe went abroad, that his Father had been murdered, if he had been conſcious to himſelf that he had any Acceſſion thereto, he would have certainly fled the Country, and gone away: But he was ſo far from that, that upon the firſt Rumor of it he came preſently in to Edinburgh, and ſeveral days thereafter, it being told him, that he was ſuſpected to have Acceſſion to his Fathers Death, he came voluntarily and entered himſelf in Priſon, that he might undergo the ſtricteſt and ſevereſt Tryal. Which alone is ſufficient, if it were no more to take off all the Preſumptions lybell'd, and to convince the World of the Defender's innocence; and it being a principle in Law, That una præſumptio tollit aliam, The Preſumptions adduced for the Defender ought to be preponderat, Maſcard. Concluſ. 1205. is poſitive, That præſumptiones quæ ſtant pro reis prævalent. As alſo that Præſumptio affectionis naturalis prævalet contrariis præſumptionibus. So that upon both theſe Conſiderations, the Preſumptions alledged for the Defender ought to be ſuſtained, to take away the Preſumptions lybel'd, and to free him from the Crime.

His Majeſties Advocate anſwers, That the Libel conſiſts of three Articles, (Primo) Treaſon by the Pannal's drinking the King's Confuſion, and by the Murder under Truſt. 2o. The Curſing of a Parent. 3o. The Qualifications inferring the Pannal's Acceſſion to the Murder of his Father.

As to the firſt, it cannot be denied, but that the drinking or wiſhing Confuſion to His Majeſty, is the higheſt Act of Contempt, Malice, and Diſdain to his Royal Perſon; and as the Relevancy of this Article is not expreſly contraverted, ſo the atrocity of the Act, and the forcing others to do the ſame upon the common grounds of Law, does clearly infer Treaſon, and it cannot be expected, that ſuch extravagant Words ſhould either be expreſt, or particularly provided againſt by any Law in expreſs Terms; but the nature of the words in expreſs Terms of our Law diſcharging all Speeches to the diſdain of his Majeſty, the Contempt of his Authority, do clearly and naturally comprehend the words libelled, and by the common Law, Ad leg: jul. Maj. crimen læſæ Majeſtatis ad exemplum legis ſcriptæ eſt vindicandum.

And whereas it is pretended, that theſe words were inadvertantly ſaid, and that it appears by the Tract of the Pannal's Life, and his Readineſs to engage in His Majeſties Service, that the words could not be deliberate and malicious. It is replyed, That it is offered to be proven, that the drinking Confuſion to the King, was openly and plainly propoſed; and that the Pannal did deliberately ſend out for Ale to drink certain Healths, and that this Health to the King's Confuſion was the firſt or ſecond, and that it was no lapſe or miſtake in the Expreſſion; but that he forced others to pledge and drink that ſame Health: And the malice and diſloyalty is evident by the Healths ſubſequent, viz. Antichriſt's, &c. and it is not at all relevant, (after the reiterate and deliberat expreſſing of theſe words) that he had retracted or drank the King's Health; for a Crime once committed, is not retracted or taken off by ſuch inconſiſtent and unconſequential Speeches; but to ſhew the ſence the Pannal had of the importance of his own Words, the Pannal being informed, that ſome of the Perſons preſent had divulged his having drunk the King's Confuſion, the Pannal did conjure them to Secrecy, and did menace the Witneſſes with a great Kane, that he would beat and brain them if ever they told it.

Whereas it is anſwered in general, as to all Crimes committed without the Kingdom, that they cannot be cognoſced or puniſhed here. It is replyed, That as to all Crimes againſt Nature or the Law of Nations, as every party is competent to be an Accuſer, ſo every Judicature is competent, and therefore as to the Crimes of Treaſon, or curſing of Parents, wherever committed, they are puniſhable by the Juſtices: But becauſe in relation to the Crimes committed abroad, there is not poſitive Probation, but Declarations and Teſtimonies; Therefore as to theſe Crimes, His Majeſties Advocate does not inſiſt on them as diſtinct Crimes per ſe, but as Qualifications, Documents and Evidences of the habitual Debauchery, and unnatural Malice expreſt by the Pannal againſt his Father for a Tract of many Years.

Whereas it is anſwered, That as to all Crimes preceeding 1685, they are taken off by the Indemnity. It is replyed, The Indemnity 1685, is no general Indemnity, neither as to Perſons nor Crimes, but particular Crimes are remitted, and particularly enumerat without any general Clauſe: And as curſing of Parents is not particularly enumerat, ſo by the Nature of that Crime, it cannot be included or comprehended in any general Indemnity: And the words of the Act of Parliament, 20. Act. 1. Par. K. Ch. 2d. bears expreſly, That the Curſers of Parents ſhall be put to death without Mercy. So that a general Act of Indemnity or Mercy without a ſpecial Remiſſion, could not include this Crime, which as the Act of Parliament bears, is expreſly againſt Nature and the Law of God: And by the Opinion of all Lawers, general Indemnities do not extend to all Crimes; but theſe Crimes which are called in Law Crimina excepta, are never intended to be Indemnified, nor ſuch Crimes, where the Intereſt of Parties is more than the Intereſt of publick Juſtice, and in all former and general Indemnities, Murther and other Crimes are particularly excepted with a general Clauſe, excepting all ſuch Crimes as uſe not to be comprehended in general Acts of Indemnity; So that this ſo horrid a Crime, wherein the Parent was more intereſted than the Publick, neither was nor could be comprehended under a general Indemnity: As alſo that reſtricted, limited Indemnity, bears expreſly an Exoneration for all perſons below the degree and quality of an Heretor, Wodſetter or Burgeſs; and whether the Pannal were an Heretor or not, yet it cannot be ſaid, that he is below the degree and quality of a Wodſetter or Burgeſs; and therefore the Act of Indemnity is of no uſe to him.

Whereas

Whereas it is answered, That Sir James was reconciled with the Pannal, and wrote kind Letters to him, whereby dissimulando former Injuries were taken off. It is replyed, That Injuries are only taken off dissimulando, which are not atrocious, but never specifick Crimes, wherein the discharge or expres Renunciation of the Party injured cannot liberat à vindicta publica, the Punishment of Crimes, especially in Capital Punishments, belonging to the Magistrat, and the privat Party has not the sole Interest, nor can dispense with Capital Punishments: But the Letter founded upon, does not in the least infer the Parties Forgiveness or Dissimulation of the Injury: And a Father ordering his Son to call in for Chamberlain Accompts, without impowering him to discharge the same, is not the least evidence of Confidence in his Son, much less a remitting of his Crime.

As to the second Article in relation to the Cursing, it is positively offered to be proven, not in single Acts, but by a tract and habit of cursing his Father in the most abominable termes imaginable.

As to the third Article in Relation to the Murder, that this matter may be clear, & ut constet de corpore delicti, these undoubted Qualifications are offered to instruct, that Sir James Standsfield was murdered and strangled, and that he did not drown himself. 1. It is offered to be proven by the Minister, that was that night in the House, that long after ten a Clock at night, and that Sir James had retired to the Chamber, where he lay alone, the Minister heard the confused Whispers, Murmurs, and Noise of several Persons, both Men and Women, which afrighted him, and that he heard the noise go away by the back-side of the House, which leads directly to that Pool where Sir James his Body was thrown in the Water.

2. Sir James's Body was found swimming above the Water, and albeit it appeared by the Ice upon the top of his Cloaths, that he had been several hours in the Water, yet there had no Water entred into his Body, which is a Demonstration, that he was dead before he was thrown in the Water; for a person thrown alive into Water drawing in of Air and Respiration, being in the Water, he must draw in Water, and if the person drawes in as much Water as fills his concavitie, he becomes heavy, having so much more weight of Water, and therefore he sinks; But if a Person be thrown dead into the Water, when the Clap of his Throat is shut, the Water cannot enter, and there being so much Emptiness, the Body is light and supported by more parts of Water, than the gravity of the Body can depress. 3. There being several Chyrurgions and others sent out by order from Authority to take up and inspect the Body; to see whether there was any evidence of Strangling, or other Symptoms of Murder upon the Body: It did appear to all these Persons who did depone before a Committee of the Privy-Council; That from the one Jugular Vein to the other round the Neck, there was a tumour of congealed black bruised Blood, three inches broad, and that there was congealed Blood in the Throat, upon which matter of Fact, the Colledge of Physicians have given an unanimous Testimony in writing, that Sir James Standsfield was Strangled and not drowned: And the Deaconry of the Chirurgions being conveened, have emitted a Declaration in Writing, concurring and agreeing with the Report of the Physicians; So that it is as clear as the light of Day, that Sir James Standsfield was murdered.

2. For the Qualifications that the Pannal was the Murderer, or accessory to the Murder of his Father, these clear Evidences are offered, which makes his Crime without possibility to be palliat or denyed. 1. It is notorious that the Pannal is a most debauched, vitious, pernicious Person, and has been Prisoner or condemned to dy in all the Places or Societies he ever haunted; He entred a Souldier in the Scots Regiment where he was condemned to die at Treves, but made his escape, and his being in Prison, in the Marshal-Sea-Prisons, Orleance, and Brussels, (which makes the Circuit of his Travels) are not denyed; and his profligat life and constant Drunkenness, since he came to the Prison, is offered to be proven by the Keepers: and as it is unnecessar to trace all his Debauches; so there is one material point offered to be proven, That upon the least Provocation either by Man or Woman, the Pannal used to swear by horrid Oaths, that he would take their lives, though he should die in the Grass-mercat for it.

3. Sir James Standsfield for these Debaucheries having disherished the Pannal, and disponed his Estate to his second Son: It is positively offered to be proven, That in the Nun gate of Haddingtoun, in James Smith's House, the Pannal being told, that his Father would disherish him, he with horrible Oaths vowed to cut his Fathers Throat.

And whereas it is answered to this Qualification, That the saying that a Son would cut a Father's Throat, is but a remot circumstance. It is replyed, That the Law, and all Lawers do agree, That Minæ præcedentes & damnum sequutum, is a most pregnant Qualification of that Party's Crime, especially where the Threats were to cut a Father's Throat, which of it self was so horrid and unnatural a Villany, that it cannot be doubted he who durst vow it, wanted but an occasion to act it. And it is acknowledged, that though this be the cleareſt Presumption, yet per se, it is not full Probation: For though the Son had both vowed, and resolved, yet by an accident he might have been prevented; but the Presumption at least lays the Burden, that except the Pannal could condescend, and document, that some other Person killed his Father, he must be reputed the Murderer.

2. It is offered to be proven, That Sir James Standsfield who was a Person of eminent Sobriety and Veracity, did declare to several Persons, that his unnatural Son had attempted his Life, and offered violence to his Person, and particularly, that he had pursued him on Horseback, and fired Pistols on him; and that same Friday before Sir James was Murdered, he did declare that it was not his Debts, or any thing under Heaven that troubled him, but that his Son and Family were plotting and contriving his Destruction, and the next night he was murdered.

3. It is offered to be proven, That the Pannal's Mother declared, That her Son had vowed to be his Fathers death, and that he was a vindictive Person, and that she did apprehend he had murdered him. So as to this Article, there is a concourse of the Pannals own Oaths, to murder his Father, and of his Father and Mother's Declarations, that he had attempted, and was ſtill plotting the ſame.

The ſecond Qualification is, that, that Saturdays-night, Sir James Standsfield came home: The Pannal would not come where his Father was, either to Supper, or Prayer, and being expreſly deſired by ſeveral Perſons, to go to his Father, and ſpeak with him: He declared, (that ſame night he was murdered) he could not endure to ſee, or look upon his Father; and he had been all that day cloſs with Thompſon and his Wife, and Janet Johnſton. So after ten hours at even, after the Family was gone to Bed, he came out to Thomſon's Houſe, which is hard by the Gate, and there in preſence of Thomſon, his Wife, and Jannet Johnſton, he declared that his Father would neither give him Money, nor Cloaths, and curſed his Father, and declared that he would ſhortly make ridd of him, which agrees with what he had ſeveral times ſaid in other Companies, that he was to be Laird before Chriſtmas; and that he was ſhortly to be Maſter of all, and none could think how ſoon. As alſo ſhortly before Sir James's Death, the Pannal's Mother falling in Swound, it was ſaid to him, Philip, ye will ſhortly want your Mother; to which he anſwered, by God his Father ſhould be dead before her: And eight days after, his Mother falling again Sick, he repeated the ſame words, whereby it is evident the Murder was deliberate and determined.

3. On the Sunday Morning, before Sir James's Body was found, Philip came to the Miniſter's Chamber, and told him that his Father was gone out in the night, and that he had been ſearching for him about the Pools, and water ſide; and when the Miniſter reproved him for making ſuch Inſinuations againſt his Father, he laughed at him, and went away to the Pool, and ſtood looking upon his Father in the water, but made no Diſcovery; and thereafter a Stranger coming by upon the Highway likeways, ſeeing Sir James's body in the water, he came back and diſcovered the matter; at which Philip ſeemed ſurpriſed, and told that he had ſeen his Father's Body in the Water before, but he did not think fit to be the firſt Diſcoverer, which ſhews, that he was conſcious of his own guilt; otherwayes upon the firſt ſight of his Father in the Water, he would have gone to him, but on the contrary, he never laid a hand upon his Father's Body, either to pull him out of the water, or to carry him into the Houſe, for the dread of ſome extraordinary diſcovery, and did not allow the Corps to be brought within his Father's Gates, but cauſed carry the Corps to the Wake-miln, where to cover the Appearance of Strangling upon his Body, he entruſted Jannet Johnſton with the care of woonding him, who was known to be a Perſon ſo odious to Sir James, that he could not ſee her for her baſeneſs with the Pannal, and ſhe did acknowledge, that ſhe had not been for three quarters of a Year within the Houſe before; and yet this infamous Strumpet, who has been Tortured by order of the Privy Council, as Acceſſory to the Murder, chiefly intruſted to ſee the naked body, and the Cloaths put on.

4. The Pannal did refuſe to ſend for a Chyrurgion, and to let his Father's Body be ſighted, though the Miniſter, and others did expreſly demand it; and the Engliſhmen in the Manufactory, who were acquainted with the Crowner-Laws, they made a muriny anent the Burial, till the Corps were ſighted; yet the Pannal cauſed bury the Corps that ſame night without ſhewing them.

The Corps being raiſed by order, and inciſion being made, whereby the Strangling did clearly appear, and the Corps being dreſſed clean, and Linnen put on, there did appear no bloud; but to take off Suſpition, the Corps were liſted up, and the Night-Cap being wrong put on, it was altered and changed, and thereafter the Corps were laid down without any Bloud upon the Linen; and the Pannal (who to this time had never touched his Father's Corps) being required to aſſiſt to lift the Body into the Coffin, having taken his Father by the right ſide of the Head with his left hand, James Row bearing the left, the Pannal's hand was altogether blooding, as if his Hand had been put in a Veſſel of Blood, which notwithſtanding of all his Impudent reſolution to the contrary, had that horrible Impreſſion, and Conviction upon him, that he let his Father's Head fall to the ground, and cryed out, O God, and run away and went to a Desk in the Church, where he lay groaning and in Confuſion, but durſt never return to touch the Corps, and as there can no natural reaſon be given, but an ordinar and wonderful Providence of God, in this kind of diſcoveries of Murder: So the Fact was never more evident, and ſure, though half a dozen of Perſons were bearing the Corps, no Mans hands were bloody but the Pannals, and the Corps being two intire days in the Grave, in that Weather and Seaſon, the Blood by the courſe of nature was become ſtagnat and congeal'd, ſo that the former toſſing, and liſting of the Corps, and even the Inciſion it ſelf had occaſioned no ſuch Effuſion, but only ſome water or gore; but upon the firſt touch of the Pannal the Murderer, there appeared abundance of liquid florid Blood, and though this per ſe might not be ſufficient, and as Mattheus is cited, it ſhould not inferr Torture, yet Mattheus acknowledges that moſt part do ſuſtain this, as a violent preſumption oft times experimented, yet in his Opinion it is not ſufficient for Torture, becauſe Torture being in it ſelf a Puniſhment, it cannot be uſed, except where there is ſemiplena probatio, or where the Conſcience of the Judge is ſatisfied, as to the truth of the Crime, and therefore uſes an extraordinar courſe, to extort a Confeſſion, which proves that this preſumption is ſemiplena probatio per ſe according to their own grounds.

And whereas it is alledged, that Capital Puniſhment cannot be infered from Conjectures, but from clear and poſitive Teſtimonies. It is anſwered, that the Lex ult. Cod: de probationibus, clearly ſtates that probation is either, Teſtibus, tabulis inſtrumentis documentis & indiciis. And Matthæus ſtates a particular title upon this ſingle Queſtion, Cap. 6. Titulo 15 de probationibus, and does moſt poſitively determin that Crimes are to be proven Documentis, Argumentis & Indiciis. And it is moſt evident, that the probation which ariſes from the nature of the thing, which is incapable to be ſoffiſticate, or impoſed upon, as Witneſſes may be, that kind of probation is the ſureſt, becauſe it is always the ſame, and admits no variation: It's true, and it is acknowledged that Argumenta & Indicia muſt be clara & evidentia, and probation being Quod facit fidem Judici, Judici, every Man's Experience tells him, that the complication and conjunction of ſo many evident Qualifications, though none of them per ſe were ſufficient, yet being all of them joyned, it induces a greater certainty, than two Witneſſes poſitively deponing upon the Fact. And therefore the evidence of the probation belongs to the Inqueſt, and the relevancy that theſe Articles conjoyn'd, or any part of them are ſufficient to infer the Crime, belongs to the Judge.

As to the Preſumptions offered for the exculpation of the Pannal, they are not at all relevant; for though ſo horrid a Murder is not to be preſumed againſt Nature, yet being proved, or ſo ſtrongly evinced, it does but conclude the Pannal's greater Guilt; and ſuppoſe that Sir James Standsfield was formerly Melancholy, and had been Frantick in the Year 1679, yet it is known he recovered his Health, and was of a compos'd, ſedat temper of mind for many Years thereafter, aud was as capable and diligent about his Affairs, theſe many Years, as he had been formerly, and was ſo conſidered and employed by the wiſeſt Men in the Kingdom; and at the time of his Death there was no Sickneſs, or returning of Frenzie upon him, but all that Week he had compoſedly done his Affairs; and did upon the Saturday, when he went Home, diſcourſe rationally upon all the Subjects that occurred: But it being ſo clearly documented and proven that he was Strangled, it is a ridiculous conceit, and there remains no poſſibility that after he was Strangled, he walked out and drowned himſelf. And as to that Preſumption, that the Pannal rendered himſelf Priſoner, it was indeed ſuitable to the reſt of his Impudence, and he did not render himſelf till after the Order to apprehend him was intimate to him, when he could not Eſcape, and when he was under Obſervation, and there did not want Project in fixing upon this Impudence when he could not Eſcape, as an Qualification of Innocence, that he would render.

Sir David Thoirs without repetition of the Replyes made by His Majeſties Advocat, doth make his Duply to the foreſaids Replyes, and every Member thereof, in order as follows, viz.

TO the firſt, Anent the Treaſonable Words, the Pannals Procurators oppon their former Anſwers, and the Act of Parliament whereupon that part of the Ditty is founded, being only in order to ſuch Treaſonable Speeches adviſedly ſpoken. The conſtant tract of the Pannal's Life, in drinking his Majeſties good Health at all occaſions, and offering to adventure his Life in his Service in the laſt Rebellion, ſufficiently demonſtrats, that if any ſuch Expreſſion did eſcape the Pannel, as it is denyed, the ſame was only raſh and unadviſed, and not deliberate and adviſed, as is required by the Act of Parliament, to infer the pains libelled; and the Qualifications added by my Lord Advocat, bearing, that the Pannal did conjure the Perſons then preſent to Secrecy, demonſtrats that the Pannal was ex incontinenti heartily ſorrowful and penitent for the ſame. And it's clear by that excellent Law of the Cod, the words whereof are, Si quis Imperatori maledixerit, ſi ex inſania miſerando, ſi ex temeritate, & petulantia temnenda, ſi ex animo injuriandi ad principem remittendum, which demonſtrats, that by the Common Law, ſuch an raſh and unadviſed Expreſſion was never to be laid hold on to infer a capital Puniſhment, where the Perſon alledged, expreſſer thereof, was not otherways ſuſpect of Diſloyalty.

2. Repeats the Defence as to Crimes alledged committen abroad, and it were againſt reaſon and equity, that Perſons for one and the ſelf ſame Crime, ſhould be ſubject to the Puniſhments of ſeveral Juriſdictions, where the Puniſhment of the ſaids Crimes are different: But ſeeing my Lord Advocat declares he hath no Probation for theſe alledged Crimes, but Certificats and Affidavits, they cannot be obtruded as a part of the Libel, becauſe the ſaids pretended Certificats and Affidavits, are neither inſert in the Libel, or given out to the Pannal, and all Crimes are to be proven teſtibus, non teſtimoniis; and if the cuſtom of Affidavits ſhould be introduced in this Court, all Pannals (how innocent ſoever) might be murdered, by being deprived of their unanſwerable Objections againſt the Granters of theſe Affidavits, &c. and therefore they cannot be ſuſtained as a Qualification to load the Pannal, or make the Inqueſt have a prejudicat opinion of him.

3. As to my Lord Advocat's Reply anent the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence and Act of Indemnity is opponed, and bears expreſly Murders, Robberies, Slaughters, and all other Crimes committed againſt His Majeſty, and Laws of the Kingdom, either by Word, Writ, or Deed, which undoubtedly excludes all alledged Crimes, ſaid, done, or committed by the Pannal before that time, and this favour & gratia principis, is to be ampliat and extended, and not reſtricted, and all His Majeſties Judges and Officers of State are commanded to ſuſtain the ſame, according to the moſt ample Interpretations for the Pannal, that the Words will allow.

4. The pretence that the Pannal was of the quality of a Burger, or a Barron, is moſt irrelevant, the Pannal having no viſible Fortune at the ſame time, and as my Lord Advocat himſelf acknowledgeth, no Expectation of any Fortune whatſoever, ſo that if Barons, Burgars, Liferenters, Woodſetters, and likewiſe theſe who have nothing in poſſeſſion at the time, ſhall be ſecluded from the benefit of that Indemnity, it is ſcarce intelligible, to whom, and for what cauſe the ſame was granted. 5. And as to that part of the Reply, bearing, that this was a privat Injury, and ſo not comprehended within the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence is opponed, and all pretence of privat Injury was taken away by Diſſimulation or Death.

As to the pretence that the Reconciliation can be no defence againſt the Libel, as to vindicta publica, and that the Letter whereupon the Defence is founded doth not import a Diſſimulation. It is Duplyed, That the Act of Parliament being an Comminatory Law, and principally intended in favours of Parents, the ſame was never yet made uſe of, and it were very hard to make uſe of the ſame to deprive a Parent of his Child, for any raſh or paſſionate Expreſſion, eſpecially where upon Repentance the Father had remitted the Injury; but the Father being in effect Judge of the Injury, his remitting the ſame ought at leaſt to Aſſoilzie the Child, from any capital Concluſion. And as to the alledged habitual Curſing, the ſame is denyed, and the former former Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity is repeated and opponed, and the Libel is opponed, which doth not bear habitual Curſing, but particular Acts at particular Times.

And as to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for clearing that the Defunct Sir James Standsfield was murdered, the Pannal is truly ſorry, that for his own Defence, and for clearing of his own Innocence, his Lawers ſhould be neceſſitated to plead any thing relating to his Fathers Infirmities, or way and manner of his Death. But it is duplyed, That the whole Preſumptions adduced by my Lord Advocat are allanerly fallacious Conjectures, and can neither be ſeparatim, or complexly relevant to infer any ſuch thing, becauſe, 1. That the Miniſter did hear a whiſpering noiſe, and was thereby terrified, his Terror and Conſternation having (as he himſelf pretends) put him in a Diſorder and Confuſion, he was thereby rendered incapable to obſerve or judge of any thing that happened. 2. That the Body was ſwimming above Water, imports nothing, the Defunct having a great Coat of thick Cloth about him, which was ſufficient to keep him floating above. 3. The pretence that there was no Water in the Defunct's Body when the Chirurgions viſited the ſame, imports nothing, becauſe the Defunct's Body having been ſeveral times ſtirred before that time, by which the Water might have run out, as it actually did (in Caſe there was any water within it).

4. Albeit where a Man is drowned unwillingly, and endeavours to breathe, ſo long as he can, his breathing may ſuck in the Water; Yet if a Man intend to drown himſelf, he will certainly endeavour all means for quick diſpatch of himſelf, and thereby keep in his Breath, and the keeping in of the Breath after that manner was ſufficient, both to keep the Body floating, and the water from coming in.

5. To put the matter beyond all queſtion, the Defunct was laying in the water a conſiderable ſpace from the Bank; And albeit the Ice was not ſo ſtrong as to have carried a Child, yet the Ice was whole and entire betwixt the Defunct and the Bank, which demonſtrats, that the Defunct had jumped in from the Bank, to that place where he was lying. 6. As to that pretence, that there was Blood about the Defunct's Neck, all lapper'd and bruiſed before inciſion was made, the Defunct being pulled out of the water, by an great Cleik, the touching of the Neck with the Cleik, when his breath was juſt gone out, was ſufficient to have made the Blood where that part was to lapper and congeal. 7. As to the Declarations of the Phyſicians, and Chirurgions, they are only Declarations ex auditu, and upon Report of one or two Chirurgions, and hath no Foundation, but the ignorance or knowledge of the ſaids two Reporters; neither can any ſuch Declarations be obtruded againſt the Pannal, becauſe not given out with the Libel; But whatever may be inferred from theſe Preſumptions, whether the Defunct was Murdered or not, the ſame does not concern the Pannal, unleſs his acceſſion to the Murder were inſtructed, as is impoſſible it can be.

As to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for fixing the Murder, or acceſſion thereto upon the Pannal; It is duplyed to the firſt, That the Pannal's alledged vitious Life, and the Story at Treves, his being Drunk in Priſon, and Threating to cut Throats upon ſmall Provocations, the ſame are extrinſick to the Lybel, and cannot be reſpected. 2. As to the alledged threatning uſed in James Smith's Houſe, the Lybel is opponed, bearing theſe Expreſſions, to have been uſed in the Year 1684, or ſome Year preceeding; And therefore the former defence founded upon the Indemnity, is repeated, and opponed. And whereas my Lord Advocat pretends, that minæ præcedentes cum damno ſequuto, is ſufficient either to fix the guilt upon the Perſon who uſed the Threats, or at leaſt to burden him with the probation, that another committed the Crime. It is Duplyed, 1. That my Lord Advocat's Poſition is abſolutly denyed, unleſs he can inſtruct ſome other poſitive Acceſſion againſt the Pannal, and theſe pretended Threats being taken away, not only by the Act of Indemnity, but likeways by Diſſimulation, which is not only offered to be inferred from the Letter made mention of in the Defence, but likeways by the Defunct's owning, receiving, intertaining, furniſhing, and providing for the Pannal, in every thing ſuitable as his eldeſt Son, the ſame doth undoubtedly take away all pretence that can be founded upon threatning, ſo many Years preceeding; and by no Law can the Pannal be burdened to prove who were either Actors, or in Acceſſion to his Fathers Murder.

As to the ſecond Qualification bearing, that the Defunct ſaid to ſeveral Perſons, that the Pannal offered to invade him (denying the ſame) the Father's Aſſertion could not infer a Crime againſt the Pannal, unleſs the Crime it ſelf were otherways proven by Witneſſes, and the ſame is Libeled to have been ſaid by Sir James before the Act of Indemnity. And Sir James's other Aſſertion, that he was in trouble, for fear of Prejudice from his Family, cannot infer a Crime, eſpecially againſt the Pannal; and far leſs can it be proven by the Relict and the other Son, who in Sir James's apprehenſion were deſigning miſchief againſt him, and for their own Vindication, they would certainly depone partially againſt the Pannal. And the ſame is repeated againſt the other Expreſſions alledged ſpoken by the Mother; And Witneſſes cannot be received to prove what another Witneſs ſaid.

As to the Pretence, that the Pannal refuſed to ſup with his Father the night before his Death. It is Duplyed, the Pannal was not at all in uſe to ſup, except on Sundays-night. And the Pannal had no Kindneſs for the Miniſter, Becauſe he and others of his Gang had endeavoured to keep up diſcord betwixt him and his Father.

As to the alledged Bleeding of the Corps, the former Defences are opponed; And albeit the Pannal did help to lift his Fathers Corps before the inciſion, yet no Blood did appear till long thereafter that the inciſion was made, and the Pannel did fall to grip that part of his Father's Head where the Inciſion was. So that the Blood falling from the wound, can neither be a Ground nor Preſumption for guilt; And though the Pannal was ſurpriſed to ſee his Father's Blood, Yet the ſame did only proceed from natural Duty and Affection, and not from any apprehenſion of Guilt. And theſe qualifications being all Libel'd and Debated upon, It is humbly deſired for the Pannal, that the the Lords of Justiciary would give a separat Interloquitor upon every particular qualification.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal adds, That as to the point of Treason, It is offered to be proven, that it was when he was Drunk, and after Cups, and is so presumed, especially it being, as it is acknowledged by the Libel, in a Drunken company.

2. As to the Act of Indemnity, It is extended to all Crimes except the Arch-bishop's Murder, and exceptio firmat regulat, &c. And the Act bears not that Clause excepting other Crimes, which uses to be excepted.

3. As to the qualifications condescended on in my Lord Advocat's answer, either they are Libel'd, and so oppones the former answer; And if they be not Libel'd, they cannot be considered as qualifications.

4. Whereas it is alledged, That the Pannal was in use to threaten to cut Throats, when in passion; the Argument is retorted, For though he threatned, nothing followed; And so his Threatnings were but verba jactantia.

5. As to the citation out of Mattheus, that parties may be punished upon presumptions. It is answered, That the Case there stated is where the Person who committed the Slaughter, was apprehended in the place where it was committed, That he was all bloody and with a bloody Sword, answerable to the Wound, and that he became pale when he was apprehended, and that he had made no answer, but in terrour fled away, which are such Acts as do evidently make appear the Slaughter, and could admit of no other construction, but that cannot be pretended in this Case, where all the Presumptions are remote and extrinsick, and even in the Case instanced by Mattheus, and others of that Nature, they are only to take effect in order to an Arbitrary, but not a capital Punishment, which is the opinion of all Lawers, who ever wrote upon the subject, and particularly Muscard, de prob: conclus. 123. Numb. 20. and 31. where the question is stated, an plures præsumptiones conjunguntur, in order to inferr a capital punishment? And he concludes in the negative as a general conclusion by all Lawers, but only to inferr an arbitrary Punishment,

As to the bleeding of the Body, It is offered to be proven, that the Pannal touched his Father's Body before the Incision, and it did not bleed.

THe Lords, Justice General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, Having considered the Libel, pursued by His Majestie's Advocat against Philip Standsfield the Pannal: And the first part thereof, anent the Treason libel'd, they find the samen as it is lybel'd, relevant to inferr the pain of Treason.

And as to the Pannal's cursing of his Father, mentioned in the Inditement; They find these Expressions, or either of them, viz. the Devil take him, the Devil rive him, God damn him, relevant to inferr the pain of Death: And repells the Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity, and finds the Pannel is not under or below the quality therein specified.

As to the Pannal's murthering of his Father mentioned in the Inditement, they found the Libel as it is lybelled and qualified relevant to inferr the pain of Death, and remits the same with the qualifications lybel'd to the knowledge of the Assise, and allowes Witnesses to be led for the Pannal's proving his Father to have been Melancholy the day before the committing of the Murder, and remits to the Assise to consider the Import thereof, if it be proven, and repells the whole other Defences proponed for the Pannal.

The Lords continues the Dyet against the said Philip Standsfield, till to Morrow at two of the Clock in the Afternoon: And ordains him to be carried back to Prison, and the Witnesses and Assises to attend, ilk Person under the pain of 200 Merks.

Edinburgh the seventh of February, 1688.

Philip Standsfield Prisoner, being this day entered on Pannal, dilated, indyted and accused for the Treasonable drinking of the King's Confusion, cursing his Father, and for the cruel and unnatural murdering of him in manner mentioned in this Ditty.

The Interloquitor above-written was this day read again in presence of the Pannal, and the Assisers afternamed, viz.

William Bailly of Lamingtoun.

His Majesties Advocat for Probation adduced the Witnesses deponing, viz.

John Robertson late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, aged twenty four Years, unmarried, purged of malice, prejudice, hatred, ill will, and partial Counsel, and solemnly sworn, Depones, a little time before harvest last, the Pannal being in the Kitchin of New-Milns, in the deceast Sir James Standsfield's House, where the Deponent was likewise present, he saw the Pannal Philip Standsfield take a Cup of Ale, and heard him say: There is the Pope's Confusion, the Antichrists, the Chancelours, and the King's Confusion, and put the Cup to his Head, and drink a little, and then gave it to Samuel Spofforth, and commanded him to drink it on his Knees; depones, that there were likewise besides Samuel Spofforth, Jeremy Smith, Agnes Bruce and Elspeth Jameson; and depones, that Philip Standsfield the Pannal was not drunk at the time; Depones, That at the naming of the several Confusions above-mentioned, he still drank a little of the Cup; And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God: The Deponent further depones, that he said to the Pannal, after the drinking of the saids Confusions, that it was Treason, and he answered, Ye Dog what are you concerned; ye do not understand to whom ye speak. Sic Scribitur, John Robertson.

Agnes Bruce, Servant to the deceast Sir James Standsfield, aged twenty four years, unmarried, purged purged and ſworn, Depones, That a little before Harveſt laſt, ſhe being in the Kitchin of New-milns with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, ſhe ſaw him take a Cup of Ale, and drink the confuſion of the Pope, and the King, and heard him bid Samuel Spofforth ſit down on his Knees and drink the ſame, which accordingly he did, after this the Deponent went up Stairs, and knows no more what paſt at that time, but heard they drank more confuſions; Depones, that about a week after it being talked in the houſe, that he had drank the confuſions aforeſaid, he ſaid to the Deponent, God damn him, if he knew who divulged it, he would be their Death: And this is the Truth as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God, depones ſhe cannot write. Sic ſubſcribitur, Linlithgow.

Samuel Spofforth, late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New milns, aged 19 years, unmarried, purged and ſwore, Depones, that a little before Harveſt laſt, the Deponent was in the Kitchin of New milns with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, where he heard him drink a confuſion to the Pope, Antichriſt, and the King, and to the Devil, and the Pannal preſt the Deponent to drinke the ſame confuſions upon his knees; Depones, John Robertſon, Agnes Bruce, Jeremy Smith and Elſpheth Jameſon were all likewiſe preſent at that time, and that theſe confuſions were drunk ſeverally: And this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur, Samuel Spofforth.

John Robertſon above deſign'd being Re-examined, purged and ſworn, Depones, That the Deponent being at Morum Caſtle after Harveſt laſt, in order to give a call to a Miniſter, the Deponent having met with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, he ſaid to him, Ye are a wiſe lad, if ye have ſubſcribed that Bond, the Devil take him, and particularly, the Devil take his Father, and named his Father; depon'd, that at another time in the midſt of Harveſt laſt, the Deponent and Sir James Standsfield the Pannal's Father being going to Smeitoun with a Miniſter, the Pannal asked him, Where he and his Father was going and the Deponent anſwered, that he was going to Smeitoun with his Father; And the Pannal Philip Standsfield ſaid, Devil, let never one of them come back again, Horſe nor Man: Depones further, That ſeveral times, and frequently, when the Deponent has been ſeeking the Pannal to come to Dinner with his Father, the Pannels ordinar Anſwer was, the Devil dame him, and you both, and Devil rive him, for I will not go to him, and if he had a ſixpence a day, he would not go near him, for his Father girned upon him like a Sheeps-head in a tongs, and that he has heard him ſay ſometimes, God damn his Father: And this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur John Robertſon.

William Scot Clothier in New-milns, Aged 30 years, Married, Purged and Sworn, Depones, That betwixt Michaelmaſs and Martimaſs laſt, the Pannal Philip Standsfield having come to the Deponent's Shop, and asked for ſome Tobacco, the Deponant ſaid to Philip, his Father would not let him want for Money to buy Tobacco; and the Pannal Philip ſaid, the Devil take him and his Father both, for there never came an honeſt man out of York-ſhire: Depones, his Wife was preſent with him, when that Diſcourſe paſt: Depones, he cannot write. And this is the truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur. Linlithgow.

Agnes Bruce above-deſigned being Re-examined, Purged and Sworn, Depones, That ſhe did hear the Pannal uſually vow and ſwear he would kill any perſon that offended him; and that the Pannal did haunt much with Janet Johnſton, George Thomſon and his Wife, and that he went frequently out of his Fathers Houſe after Supper to theſe perſons; and further Depones, that ſhe has heard the Pannel frequently curſe his father, and bid the Devil damn him, and rive him, and ſwell him; and that ſhe has frequently heard him expreſs his hatred and abhorrence of his Father, and that he could not abide to ſee his Father: further Depones, that the Munday at Night before Sir James came to Edinburgh, the laſt time he was in it, being about a Fourthnight before his Death, the Deponent was ordered to call the Pannal to his Mother after he was gone to his Chamber, and that accordingly ſhe did it, and when the Pannal came down, the Deponent left him with his Mother alone, and when ſhe was without the Door, ſhe heard him ſay to his Mother ſeveral times, God damn him if he did it not; and deſired his Mother to take a good Heart, for as long as he had, ſhe ſhould not want: Depones, ſhe knows not what he meaned by theſe words, but knows there had been a little quarrel betwixt Sir James and his Lady that ſame Night: Further Depones, that on Tueſday thereafter, when Sir James Standsfield was going in to Edinburgh, ſhe did hear Philip Standsfield the Pannal ſay in his Mothers Chamber (his Father not being preſent,) God let him never return, God let him never ſee his Fathers face again, the Devil go with him, the Devil rive him, and take him away: and that there was no body in the Room at the time but the Pannal and his Mother, and the Deponent was at the Door: Further Depones, that about a month before, Sir James having reproved the Pannal, upon the occaſion of an Accompt given in by William Anderſon Brewer, ſhe did hear the Pannal ſay in his Mothers Chamber (Sir James not being preſent,) God damn him if he ſhould not do ten times worſe, and that he could not endure to ſee his Fathers face, and that he had hated his Father theſe ſix or ſeven years: Further Depones, that about a Fourth-night or twenty days before Sir James his death, it being ſaid that Philip was to go to Town with his Father, ſhe heard him ſay, he would be hang'd ere he went with him, let him go, the Devil go with him, and let him never return, and this likewiſe in his Mothers Chamber, and in her preſence: Depones, the Pannal did ordinarly ſhift occaſions of being in his Fathers company: Depones, that the Friday before Sir James his death, ſhe knows the Pannal and Janet Johnſtoun were a conſiderable time together in the Pannal's Chamber, where the Deponent heard Janet Johnſtoun's tongue, but doth not know if George Thomſon and his Wife were with them, Depones, that on the Wedneſday before Sir James his death, Philip having curſed ſome of the Servants, the Deponent ſaid to him, God be thanked, he was not their Maſter; and that he anſwered her with an Oath, ſhe knew not how ſoon he might be their Maſter: and Further Depones, that ſhe thought Sir James not ſo merry as his ordinar the night before his death, but that he conveyed Mr. Bell to his Chamber, and thereafter came down to his own; and the Deponent having deſired to ſpeak with with Sir James, his Servant John Robertſon told her ſhe could not, becauſe his Chamber-door was ſhut, and he was gone to Bed; and that ſhe did then ſee light in his Roum, and when ſhe was going away, found the Hall-door which was without his Chamber-door ſhut, and that the Hall-door was not uſually cloſed in the night time except Sir James had done it himſelf, and which he did but once in two or three Nights: Depones, that on the Saturday's night when Sir James came home, he did go to his Ladies Chamber, where he ſtayed not a quarter of an hour, and that his Lady fell a quarreling of him for going to another Houſe before he came there, and that the Deponent came out of the Chamber, and knows not what more paſt there: Depones, the next morning, when Sir James was miſt, the Deponent went in to his Roum to put on a Fire, and found the Bed better ſpread up than it uſed to be, and the Curtains more drawn about it, and the Candle which uſually was at the Bed-head, ſhe found it ſtanding on a Chair at the Bed-foot. And further Depones, that when the Defunct's body was bringing up to the Houſe, the Deponent would have had him brought to his own Chamber, but Philip ſwore that the Body ſhould not enter there, for he had not died like a Man, but like a Beaſt: Depones, that the Body was then put in the Walk miln (but knows not if Philip cauſed do it,) and that the Body from that was brought to a Cellar within the Cloſs where there was very little light: Depones, that ſhe did not ſee any water come out of his mouth, and that when the Deponent lifted up the Linen-ſheet, which was over him in the Cellar, ſome of them cauſed let it down again, for it was not fit to let the Body be ſeen. Depones, that Janet Johnſtoun was preſent with the Body in the Cellar with the reſt, and though it was known that neither Sir James nor his Lady would look upon her for a good time before, nor was ſhe openly ſeen about the Houſe, yet that morning ſhe went to the Ladies Chamber, as ſoon as the Body was taken out, and the Deponent was preſent and ſaw her come in, and well enough taken with: Depones, ſhe heard Philip after his Father's death, Greet and Cry, but ſaw no Tears: Depones, immediatly after his Fathers body was found, he would have forced his Fathers Chamber-door it being ſhut, but the Key being gotten, it was opened and he entred in, and firſt took his Fathers Gold and Money out of his pocket, and then got the Keys, and ſearched the Cabinet, and that within an hour after his Father was brought from the Water, he got the Buckles of his Father's ſhoes, and put them in his: Depones, that on the Munday after Sir James's death, the Lady and Janet Johnſtoun having quarrelled together about ſome remains of the Holland of the Woonding-ſheet, Philip came down out of his own Chamber, and the Deponent heard him ſay to Janet Johnſtoun, hold your peace when I command you, for he would reward her well for the kindneſs ſhe had done to him at that time: Depones, that when the order came from Edinburgh to raiſe the Corps again, the Deponent did meet George Thomſon the Taylor, and perceived him ſhaking and trembling, and asked him what troubled him? and that his anſwer was, he heard the blackeſt News that ever he heard in his life, for Sir James's body was to be raiſed again, and ſaid he would ſew no more in the Houſe of New-milns for the World, and carried the Mournings to his own Houſe: Depones, ſhe knows nothing of falſe Keys made uſe of about the Houſe, only ſhe heard the Lady ſay, that there were: Depones, Philip had no lock-faſt place in the Houſe, except a little Coffer, and that it once being opened, the Deponent did ſee ſeveral Keys within it, and that he offered once the Key of one of the Roums to the Deponent, but the Deponent took it not, becauſe ſhe had the ordinar Key of the Roum: Depones, that Philip was in uſe to ly alone, but that after his Fathers death, he would not ly in a Roum alone, at New-milns, and that he declared to the Deponent that he was afraid to be alone in a Roum, either night or day, and that he ſleept not the night after his Father died, and that he ſhould not go into the Roum where his Father lay, if once he had the Cabinet out of it: Depones, that a ſhort time before Sir James died, the Lady having fallen in a Swond, and the Deponent having told Philip of it, Philip came to his Mothers Chamber, and that his Mother told him then, that he was like in a ſhort time to loſe his Mother; and that he anſwered in the Deponents hearing, that his Father ſhould be dead firſt: And depones, that ſome few days thereafter, in his Mothers Chamber again, and in the Deponents hearing, he renewed the ſame Words with an Oath: Further depones, that two Nights after Sir James's Death, the Lady told to the Deponent, that ſomething then came in her Mind which ſhe had heard, to wit, that Philip, before he went to London, when he was in his Pomp, having heard that Sir James was to give his Eſtate to his ſecond Son, in the Houſe of James Smith in the Nungate, had vowed to kill his Brother, and the like, or little leſs to his Father; and that thereafter, when they were coming into Edinburgh, the Lady renewed again to the Deponent the ſame Words, and added, what if they ſhould put her Bairn in Priſon. And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God. Depones ſhe cannot write,

John Shand, ſometimes Servitor to Sir James Standsfield, Aged 43 Years, unmarried, purged and ſworn, depones, that a little after Philip Standsfield, the Pannals Marriage, the Pannal and the Deponent being in James Smith's Houſe, in Nungate, of Haddingtoun, the Pannal did expoſtulat with the Deponent, that his Father dealt too narrowly with him, he being then married; and the Deponent told the Pannal that his Father was in ſtraits, and exhorted him to be dutiful to his Father; thereafter the Pannal ſaid, if I knew my Father would give his Eſtate to my Brother John, I would cut his Throat, and the Land-lord of the Houſe being by, and preſent, and ſurprized, cryed out, God preſerve me, what means the Man; the Land lord underſtanding by the Word, His, his Father: And though the Deponent took the Expreſſion in the ſame ſenſe, as James Smith did; yet the Deponent endeavoured to excuſe it, by ſaying it was not his Father that he meaned, but his Brother, or his man Donald; and the Pannal being preſent, ſaid nothing for clearing of the Expreſſion; whereupon the Deponent went away, and left the Pannal, and could not endure to ſtay longer in his Company: Depones, the night before Sir James's Death, being the Friday, the Deponent was with Sir James in his Chamber, in Edinburgh, where the Defunct was reading a Sermon-book, and appeared to be ſad, and ſaid to the Deponent, I have no Comfort in my Wife and Family. And this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God, Sic ſubſcribitur. John Shand.

Mr. Roderick Mckenzie Advocate, Being ſolemnly Sworn, and Purged, depones, that about eight dayes before Sir James Standsfield's Death; the Deponent and he having met in the Parliament Cloſs, the Defunct invited him to take his morning Draught. And when they were gone to Mr. Sheil's Houſe, the Deponent perceiving him to be in ſome concern, the Deponent asked him, what troubled him? The Defunct anſwered, that he had no ſatisfaction at Home; whereupon the Deponent ſaid, that People reported that he was partly the occaſion of it, having diſheriſhed his Son the Pannal, and acquainted him therewith: And the Defunct anſwered, ye do not know my Son, for he is the greateſt Debauch in the Earth: And that which troubles me moſt is, that he twice attempted my own Perſon: And this is the truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur, Rod. Mckenzie.

Archibald Dumbar Merchant in Edinburgh, aged 26 Years, Married, purged, and Sworn, Depones, that the Deponent having met with the deceaſt Sir James Standsfield at Culter: But he does not remember poſitively the time, but it was either in the year of this King's Parliament, or the Harveſt before, and Sir James and the Deponent, and ſome other company being in an Roum: Sir James was diſcourſing of his Sons undutyfulneſs, and within a little while having heard a ſhot at the utter-door of the houſe, and the Deponent, and others offering to go out to ſee what the matter was. Sir James was unwilling to let them, leſt they ſhould come to haſard. And thereafter having heard another Shot, they did offer to go down again, and Sir James ſtill diſſwaded them, and ſaid, that it might be his diſtracted Son Philip. And they having enquired, if he was in the Country, and how he came to fear any harm from him; Sir James ſaid, he believed he was in the Country, and that in his going South, he had followed him to Lotbianburn, and ſhot two Piſtols, firſt one, and then another at him, and if it had not been that Sir James was well horſed, and his Son Philip upon a work Horſe, he had killed him. And Samuel Menzies having ſaid he was ſure there could not be Ball in them. Sir James ſaid, he had gotten too many proofs of his Son's unnaturality to him, that he had no will to be in his reverence. Depones that Sir James all that night went not to Bed, and the Deponent ſat up with him, and conveyed him into Edinburgh. And this is the truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur. Archibald Dunbar.

Mr. William Clerk Advocat, purged, and ſworn, Depones, that having frequent occaſions to be with Sir James Standsfield, and he having deſired him to draw a diſpoſition of his Eſtate to his Son John. Sir James did complain of his Son Philip's undutyfulneſs to him. And the Deponent having diſwaded him to do it, ſince his Son Philip might be reclaimed: Sir James ſaid, no, for he had no expectation of it; for when he was at the Lead-hills, there was ſome Piſtol ſhot at him, which he was ſure came from his Son Philip. And this is the truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur. William Clerk.

Mr. John Bell Miniſter of the Goſpel, aged 40 years, Solutus, purged and ſworn, produces a written Declaration ſigned under his hand, upon what he knows relating to the Murder. And Depones the ſame is truth as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur. John Bell.

Follows the tenor of the ſaid Declaration.

The declaration of Mr. John Bell, in anſwer to ſeveral interrogatores propoſed by his Majeſties Advocat before the Lords of the Committee of the Council.

Imprimis, I declare, that at Sir James Standsfield's earneſt deſire, I went from this Town with him to New-milns. And that by the way I diſcerned nothing but ſound Judgment, and reaſon in Sir James, for his diſcourſe was both rational and pertinent, and that both at Supper that night, and after Supper his diſcourſe he was rational, and his carriage moſt civil, and was pleaſed to accompany me to my Chamber, and ſat with me there (as I ſuppoſed) until it was about ten a Clock at night, diſcourſing pertinently, and to good purpoſe.

3. I declare that I told the Women who put on my fire in my Chamber that Sabbath morning, that I had reſted little that night through dinn I heard, and that I was ſure there were evil Spirits about that houſe that night.

4. I declare that about an hour after day, Philip came to my Chamber, and asked if Sir James came to that Chamber this morning, and told me that he had been ſeeking him upon the bank of the Water; unto which I replyed, I have not ſeen your Father, but what mean ye by the Banks of the Water? whereupon Philip without anſwering went down Stairs immediately, and within a little time, I followed to ſee what he meaned, and having gone without the Gate, and up the Cawſey that leads to the Manufactory; One came running, and ſaid, they had found Sir James lying in the Water, whereupon I was ſtricken with ſuch aſtoniſhment, fear, and trembling, that I could go no further, but returned trembling to the Chamber, and having ſitten down on the bed ſide, I ſaid to an honeſt man who accompanied me, this is the ſaddeſt day that ever I ſaw; my affrightment in the night was terrifying to me, but this is more grievous; and having gone to an honeſt mans houſe, houſe, where I took horſe that morning, I ſaid, if the Majeſtie of God did ever permit the devil, and his inſtruments, to do a honeſt man wrong, then Sir James Standsfield has received wrong this laſt night, which the Lord will diſcover in his good time.

Sir Robert Sinclar of Steinſtoun, purged and ſworn, Depones, Sir James Standsfield being at the Deponent's Houſe, told the Deponent, that he regrated that his Son Philip had miſpent his Time and Money, and when he came Home from London, he was aſhamed to tell how he came on him in his Chamber, at London; And this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God.

James Murehead Chirurgeon, aged 32 years, married, purged and ſworn, Depones, that after the Deponent and James Craufurd Chirurgion had opened the Corps, about the Neck, and ſewed it up again, and removed the foul Linen, and put on again the clean Linens, in doing whereof they were obliged to ſhake the Body to and fro, and move the head back and foreward: The Deponent deſired that the Friends might liſt the Body, and put it in the Coffin, and that the Pannal having come and lift up the Head, he did let it fall upon the Table ſuddenly, and that it made a conſiderable noiſe at the falling, and that the Pannal retired back quickly rubbing his Hands on his Breaſt, and crying, O God! O God! and ſome ſuch other Words, and that the Deponent being aſtoniſhed thereat, looked to the Corps, and as the Pannal did take away his hand from it, did ſee it darting out Blood through the Linnen, from the left ſide of the Neck which the Pannal touched, and that the Deponent was amazed at the ſight, partly through the darting out of the Blood, and partly through the apprehenſion he had of the Murder. Depones he ſaw no Body touch the left-ſide of the Defunct's Head, the time it bled, but the Pannal: Depones, that as ſoon as the Deponent recovered out of his amazement, he cryed to the Boy to give the Pannal ſome Triacle-water, which he did: but Depones he did not ſee Philip the Pannal return again to the Body of his Father: Depones when the Deponent and the other Chirurgion were putting on the clean Linens, and ſtirring and moving the Head and Craig, he ſaw no Blood at all. And this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God.

James Murehead, and James Craufurd Chirurgions give in their Report and Declaration in Write, anent the Murder of Umquhile Sir James Standsfield, which they renewed upon Oath, in preſence of the Juſtices and Aſſiſers, and whereof the Tenor follows:

Edinburgh, December 1. 1687. } November 30. 1687. We viewed the Corps in Morum Church.

We under Subſcribers James Craufurd and James Murehead Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having order from Sir John Dalrymple his Majeſties Advocat to go to Morum, and there to take up the Corps of Sir James Standsfield, and to ſight and view the ſame exactly, and if need were to open up the Body, and to conſider, whether there appeared any evidence of Wounds, Bruiſes, or Strangling upon the Corps beſides what might have happened by his falling or drowning in the water, &c. In obedience thereto, we cauſed take up the ſaid Corps, and in preſence of Philip Standsfield, Mr. Andrew Melvil Miniſter of Morum, James Hamilton Writer to the Signet, James Row and Alexander Campbel Merchands in Edinburgh, Umphray Spurway, James Dick, James Mitchel, and John Robertſon Indwellers in New-Milns, and ſome others having with all poſſible exactneſs viewed the Corps; We obſerved the Face a little ſwelled and inclining to a dark reddiſh colour, ſome fulneſs of ſome capillarie Veins in the Pallat of the Mouth towards the Uvula, as alſo a large and conſpicuous ſwelling about three inches broad of a dark red or blae colour, from one ſide of the Larinx round backwards to the other ſide thereof, we obſerved the Jugular Veins on both ſides the Neck very large and diſtended and full of Blood; There was a large ſwelling under and betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis, there was alſo a little ſcratch below the left Mandibula, which had rankled the Cuticula, and made ſome little Impreſſion on the Cutis, having made Inciſion from the Chin down about the Larinx, and croſs upon the ſwelling of the Neck: We found a greater laxneſs and diſtance (as we think) than ordinary betwixt the Cartilago Scutiformis and Os hyoides; we found the Tumour on the Neck, containing bruiſed like dark or blackiſh Blood; the Jugulars, when cut, bled conſiderably, eſpecially that on the left-ſide.

Having opened his Breaſt, we found the Lungs diſtended to the filling up their Capacities, but free of Water, his Stomach, Liver, &c. were all in good condition, we found no water within the Corps, the Corps had no ſmell at all; The Breaſt, Belly, Privy Parts, &c. were all well coloured, there was no ſwelling in his Belly, nor any thing by ordinary to be ſeen on his Head; This we atteſt and ſubſcribe with our Hands. Sic ſubſcribitur.

IN preſence of the Lord Arch-biſhop of Glaſgow, Lord Tarbat, Preſident of Seſſion, Advocat, and Caſtlehill.

James Murehead, and James Crawfurd Chirurgions, being ſolemnly ſworn in the preſence of the Committee of Council, Depones that the written report anent the Body of the Deceiſt Sir James Standsfield is true, according to their Skill, and this is the truth, as they ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur, John Glaſcow. J. P. D. C.

Edinburgh 7 February 1688. in preſence of the Juſtices and Aſſiſers.

James Murehead, and James Craufurd Chirurgions, being ſolemnly ſworn, Depone upon the truth, and verity, of the above written declaration in all points. Sic ſubſcribitur, James Craufurd, James Murehead. Linlithgow.

Follows the Chirurgions of Edinburgh their opinion anent the ſaid Murder.

WE underſubſcrivers, Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having fully conſidered the Report made by James Craufurd, and James Murehead, concerning the condition of the Corps of Sir James Standsfield, and though it be not uſual to declare more than matter of Fact, yet in obedience to your Lordſhips commands, where ye deſire to be informed, if theſe Symptoms, found upon the Body, do import, Drowning, or Strangling. We humbly offer our opinion, ſo far as our Art or Experience will allow. And whereas the report informs us, that there was found a ſwelling, and preternatural redneſs in the Face, a large conſpicuous Tumour, about three Inches broad, of a dark red, or black colour, from the one ſide of the Larinx, round backwards to the other ſide thereof, a large ſwelling betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis, the Jugular Veines, on both ſides very large, and diſtended, and when Inciſion was made downwards, betwixt the Os hyoid and Larinx was obſerved a laxnes, and diſtance between the Os hyoid and the Cartilago Scutiformis, Inciſion was made croſs alongſt the Tumor, it was found full of bruiſed Blood; The Jugulars likeways when opened yielding a conſiderable quantity of Blood, eſpecially on the left ſide, no ſmell, or corruption appearing in any part of the Body. It is very probable theſe parts have ſuffered ſome external violence, which hath made them appear ſo far different from their natural figure and colour, and could not be cauſed by Drowning ſimply. As to the other part of the report, the Breaſt, and Belly, being opened, the Lungs found diſtended, the Bronchi full of Air, without any Water, nor any Water found in the Stomach, or Inteſtines, a Body when drowned, being generally found to have much Water in it, with other circumſtances of the Report conſidered, gives juſt ground to think he was not drowned. This we ſubſcribe at Edinburgh, the 3 day of February, 1688. Sic ſubſcribitur, Edinburgh 6 February 1688.

THE Colledge of Phyſicians, being aſſembled at the deſire of His Majeſties Advocat: To conſider a Report made by ſome Chirurgions, concerning the Body of the late Sir James Standsfield, and to give their Opinion, whether by the ſaid Report, there is any juſt ground to believe, that the ſaid Sir James Standsfield was Strangled, or Drowned? And they have accordingly conſidered the ſaid Report. They are of Opinion, ſuppoſing the verity of the ſaid Report or Declaration, that there is ſufficient ground to believe, that the ſaid Sir James Standsfield was Strangled, and not Drowned, in teſtimony whereof their Preſents are ſubſcribed by Sir Andrew Balfowr, Preſident of the ſaid College. Sic ſubſcribitur, Umphry Spurway Clothier at New Milns, aged 50 Years, ſolutus, purged and ſworn; Depones upon the truth and verity of his own Declaration given in by him, which is all written, and ſubſcribed with his own hand, and conſiſts of two leaves of paper, written on all ſides, which is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sic ſubſcribitur, Umphray Spurway.

I Umphray Spurway of New Milns, Clothier, being ſummoned to appear before the Lords of his Majeſties Privy Council in Edingburgh, the 6 of December, 1687. To declare my Knowledge of what I had ſeen, and heard, relating to the death of Sir James Standsfield of New Milns, Did then and there declare before the ſaids Lords, as hereafter followeth. And after declaring what I had to ſay, was commanded to commit to writing my ſaid Declaration, under my own hand, which I the aforeſaid Umphray Spurway do hereby humbly offer to the above ſaid Lords of His Majeſties Council, ſubſcribing the ſame with my own hand.

he

he was fruſtrated of his hopes of that his Son too: For his eldeſt Son had debauched his youngeſt Son, who had ſeveral times of late come in Drunk, as the other; This he declared to me with very great Grief of Heart: But the Saturday's-night after Sir James, and a Miniſter, one Mr. Bell, came to New Milns from Edinburgh, I came in at the Houſe of one James Marr, where I ſaw Sir James, and Mr. Bell ſitting by the Fire, before he had been at his own Houſe, which I wondred at, having never known the like done by him before; but ſince, I have had my Thoughts, that he had a fear upon him, (good Gentleman) of going to his own Houſe, but having ſat ſome time with him, he deſired Mr. Marr to ſend one of his People at his Houſe, to know, if they had kindled a Fire for him; and upon the return the Meſſenger gave this anſwer: May it pleaſe your Honour, your Fire is kindled for you; upon which Sir James, and the Miniſter aroſe, and took their leave of Mr. Marr; And I alſo accompanyed Sir James and the Miniſter half the way toward his home, and ſo took my leave of him, wiſhing his Honour a good Night: But the next Morning being Sabbath-day after the light well appeared, one Agnes Bruce came at my Chamber-door, and knocked. I went and opened the Door, ſays ſhe, Sir, Sir James is gone out of his Lodging Roum this Morning, and we have ſought all the Roums of the Houſe for him, but cannot find him; ſhe goes off, I immediately followed her, and when I came out of my door, I met with Maſter Philip Standsfield, and James Dick, Mr. Standsfield declares to me, Lord, Maſter Spurway, what ſhould be the cauſe of this Man's diſcontent, that he ſhould thus leave his Lodgings, and walk out? To which I replyed, Sir, do you wonder the cauſe of his diſcontent, who never gave him content, but had been the cauſe of grieving him, from one to the other of them, ever ſince I knew the Family: But he turned his back upon me, and made no reply at all; however I went at Sir James's Houſe, but could not procure the Keys of neither of the Gardens, and I ſent abroad of Sir James's Servants, and of my own, ſome on Horſe back, and ſome on foot, to inquire after him: At laſt a Servant of mine, one William Bowman found him in the River, a little be weſt the Town; I went at the place, and ſaw him lying about two Yeards, or eight Foot from the Brink of the River, lying upon his Belly, juſt at the top of the Water, as it were floating, only his Coat and Weſtcoat looſe about him, and a Shirt on him that I ſaw. I ſaw the place at the Brink of the River, where ſome one had ſtood all beaten to maſh with Feet, and the ground very open and mellow, although a very hard froſty Morning; So I gave order to ſome to get a Ladder, and to ſet one end into the River, as near the hinder part of Sir James as they could, and the other end of the Ladder to fall at the top of the Brae, which was very ſteep, and ſo they might get him out eaſily; So I came away from the place, and deſired Mr. Marr to ſee the Body landed, declaring that I would go home, and write to Mr. George Hume Merchand in Edingburgh of the ſad ſight which I had ſeen, deſiring him to communicat the ſame to my Lord Advocat, with deſire to know by the Meſſenger his Lordſhip's Pleaſure, what of advice or direction he would be pleaſed to give concerning it, and it ſhould be followed; But the Meſſenger that I ſent, after he had delivered my Letter to Mr. Hume, and Order given by Commiſſary Dalrymple, how to proceed further with the Body of Sir James, which Order was directed to my ſelf by a Letter, which when I read the Letter, the Contents was: That I ſhould endeavour to procure two or three diſcreet Perſons of New Milns to my ſelf, andwe together view the Body of Sir James; and if we found no grounds to believe that his Perſon had been wronged by others, that then with all ſpeed he ſhould be Buried, and that as privatly, and with as little noiſe as could be; But this Letter, which was the Commiſſary's Order to me, was ſent by the hand of one James Mitchel, Kinſman to Sir James; For that Horſe that the Expreſs rode on to Edingburgh, was taken out of the Stable, where he was ſet up: And one Mr. Patrick Smith, the Brother-in-Law of Sir James Standsfield, mounted on him to come for New Milns: So that my Expreſs was thereby diſabled, to bring me the anſwer of my Letter; and the ſaid James Mitchel, who brought my Letter, came home at the place by Nine of the Clock, that Sabbath day at Night, and gave an account of the Letter that he had for me; but they diſwaded him from bringing it me, ſo that I had it not till three Hours after Sir James was buried. But upon Monday Morning, I aroſe about three or four of the Clock; and coming out of my Houſe, I ſaw great Lights at Sir James's Gate, which occaſioned my going down, to ſee what the matter was; and as I went, I met with one William Robinſon, coming up of Home, I asked what the meaning was of theſe Lights, and of the Horſes that I then ſaw at Sir James's Gate? who anſwered me, that Sir James's Corps were brought out at the Gate, and that they were carrying it at Morum to be buried, having received orders from my Lord Advocate for that purpoſe: At which I returned to my Houſe, thinking it very ſtrange thus to proceed without having had the Corps viewed by ſome Perſon, as I well knew was cuſtomary in England in ſuch Caſes. The next ſtep to my Remembrance, was, That upon the Tueſday night following, after I was in Bed, one Mr. Alexander Campbell in Edinburgh, with one Mr. James Row, and an Gentleman, one Mr. Hamilton, with two Chirurgions, came at my Houſe, and cauſed me to riſe out of my Bed, ſhowing me an Order, which they had from my Lord Advocat, for the taking up again the Body of Sir James Standsfield; and commanded me to make ready to go with them, and having ſeen the Order, readily ſubmitted thereunto, and when coming upon the place at Morum, cauſed the ſaid Grave to be opened, and the Coffin taken up. It was carried into the Church, and there opened; and as ſoon as Sir James's Grave-Cloaths were taken off him, and all his upper parts uncovered home to his privy parts, methought his Face looked not as I expected, nor as others had inſinuated, that were at the dreſſing of him at firſt; for they ſaid that his Body and Face was very fair and freſh; but I found his Face at firſt view of another Complection, being blackiſh with ſome ſtrakes of red like ſtanding, or rather ſtrangled Blood; and under his left Ear I ſaw a ſwelling home to his Throat, of a blackiſh red Colour: After this I ſaw the Chirurgions opening his Body, beginning at the top of his Chin, and ſo down to the Pit of his Stomach, and then cut his Skin on both ſides his Throat, towards each Ear, and coming at the place near his left Ear, that I saw swoln, I there saw of corroded, or congeal'd Blood, lying a lump of a great thickness, and two or three inches long, which proved to me he had been Strangled: And one thing more I observed, that when Mr. Murehead put off his Cap at first from his Head, in slipping it back, Sir James's Eye-lids opened, and his Eyes appeared, but his Eye-lids much swoln, and very red, which did also prove to me a Symptom of Strangling.

This being done, and his Breast opened, so that his Intrals appeared, and to me seemed in good order, and no appearance of water in his Body; neither then, nor when first he was taken out of the River; the like I think, has not been ever known by any Man that cast himself, or that has been cast into a River alive, and not to have his Body full of water; nor that ever a dead Man should ly at the top of the water, where no running Stream is, but a still Water, of about 5 foot deep: But to me in this it showes, that as God is a Wonder-working God, so he has in this shown no less, to convince Men, that this worthy Gentleman murdered not himself, but was murdered.

But my last Observation was of a wonder more, that the Lord did show, when the Chirurgions had caused the Body of Sir James to be by their Servants sewen up again, and his Grave-Cloathes put on. A Speech was made to this purpose, It is requisit now, that those of Sir James Standsfield's Relations, and neareſt Friends should take him off from the place where now he lyes, and lift him into his Coffin. So I saw Mr. James Row at the left-side of Sir James's Head and Shoulder, and Mr. Philip Standsfield at the right-side of his Head and Shoulder, and going to lift off the Body, I saw Mr. Philip drop the Head of his Father upon the Furm, and much Blood in his Hand, and himself flying off from the Body, crying, Lord, have Mercy upon me, or upon us, wipeing off the Blood on his Cloaths, and so lay himself over a Seat in the Church, some supposing that he would swarff or swoun away, called for a Bottle of Water for him. After this we went for Morum Castle, where Mr. Philip Standsfield, my self, and several others stayed until it was day: In which time I challenged Mr. Philip for his unkindness to me, by his not inviting me to accompany the Corps of his Father, when first buried, knowing the Intimacy that there was betwixt his Father and my self; and that of all the People in or about the Town, his Father delighted in no ones Company, as in mine; and that he did not give me notice of his Burial, that I might do my last Office of Love and Service to him by accompanying his Body to his Burial place; I took it very ill from him: So then Mr. Philip swore that he had sent two of his Servants to invite me, but if those damn'd Rogues would not do it, what could he help it; and yet did declare, as is proved, and as himself since confest before my Lord Advocat, that he would not invite me, assigning this as his Reason, supposing that my self, and James Marr had been Instruments of setting his Father against him, which was a false suggestion: All which particulars I have before the Lords of His Majesties Honourable Privy Council declared: So by their Command I have in this Sheet of Paper written it over with my own Hand, and do hereby subscribe my Name, the sixth of December, 1687. Sic subscribitur, per me Umphray Spurway.

James Mitchel, Nephew to the deceast Sir James Standsfield, aged 20 Years, unmarried, purged and sworn, Depones, that about twenty dayes before Sir James Standsfield's Death, being in company with Philip the Pannal, he heard the Pannal say, That if his Father did dispone his Estate by him, he would kill him, though he should die in the Grass Mercat for it: Depones that several times about a Month before Sir James's Death, he heard the Pannal say, that little thought the People had how soon the Pannal would be Laird, and when he was, he would then ride in their Skirts that had been ill to him. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, James Mitchel.

John Topping in Monkrig, aged 25 Years, married, purged and sworn, Depones that upon the Sabbath-morning, after Sir James Standsfield's Death, the Deponent coming from Monkrig to New-Milns, by the side of the Water, he discovered a Body Floating, and saw Philip Standsfield looking to that place of the Water where the Body was, and the Deponent asked the Pannal, whose Body that was in the Water, and the Pannal made no answer; and when he came to New Milns, he heard that Sir James's Body was found in the water; Depones he saw the Body taken out of the Water, and went alongst with it, near to the Walk-Miln, but observed no Water come from the Body. This is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. Depones he cannot write. Sic subscribitur, Linlithgow.

James Dick in New Milns, aged fourty seven Years, married, purged and sworn; Depones that the Pannal Philip Standsfield and the Deponent being at Morum after taking up of the Corps, and discoursing about the finding of the Body in the water, the Deponent said to the Pannal, that he saw something in the water, when they were searching after Sir James, but he did not suppose it to be Sir James's Body, and the Pannal said, I saw him before any of you: Depones that he saw the Body after it was taken out of the Water at the Brink of the Brae, and went alongst with the Body a piece of the way, and observed no water come from the Mouth. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, James Dick.

His Majesties Advocat desired that James Thomson, Son to George Thompson in New Milns, and Anna Mark, Daughter to Janet Johnstoun, Spouse to the said James Thompson, might be examined as Witnesses against the Pannal, for proving his Accession to his Father's Murder. And the Procurators for the Pannal having alledged, that the foresaids Persons were but Children, and so not by Law capable to be Witnesses, the Boy not being above thirteen years of Age, and the Girl not above ten years.

The Lords, Justice General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, refused to receive them as Witnesses, but in regard the Persons on the Inquest earnestly desired the said James Thompson and Anna Mark might be examined, anent their knowledge of the Pannal's Accession to the forsaid ſaid Murder, they allowed the forenamed perſons their Declararions to be taken for clearing of the Aſſiſe. And accordingly the ſaid James Thomſon being examined in preſence of the Juſtices and Inqueſt, declared as after ſollows; That Janet Johnſtoun came to George Thomſon's Houſe betwixt nine and ten at Night, and Philip Standsfield the Pannal came there ſhortly thereafter, and the Houſe being dark, the ſaid Philip gave the Declarant a turnor to buy a Candle, which he did in the neighbouring Houſe, and after the Declarant return'd with the Candle, his Mother ordered him to go to his Bed, which was in the ſame Roum, and beat him becauſe he did not preſently obey. Declares he heard one come to the Door, and inquire for Janet Johnſtoun, and deſire her to come home, and give her Child ſuck: Declares he knew by the Voice that the Perſon who came was Agnes Mark the ſaid Janet's Daughter, and that Janet ordered her to go away, and ſhe ſhould follow her; declares ſhe ſtayed a conſiderable time thereafter, and the ſaid Thomſon's Wife was deſired to go for a pint of Ale, and Philip took out a handful of Money to ſee if he had any ſmall Money, and finding he had none, the Ale was taken on upon truſt; Furder declares, that the ſaid George Thomſon and his Wife, and Janet Johnſtoun did ſtay together, and whiſper ſoftly a conſiderable time; declares he heard Philip Standsfield complain that his Father would not give him Money, and pray the Devil take his Father, and God damn his own Soul if he ſhould not make an end of his Father, and then all would be his, and then he would be kind to them; declares Philip Standsfield and Janet Johnſtoun went away about eleven, and ſhortly after his Father and Mother came to the Bed where the Declarant was lying croſs the Bedfoot; and the Declarant in the night time perceived his Father and Mother riſing out of the Bed, and going out of the Houſe, and that they ſtayed a conſiderable time away, about an hour and an half, or two hours, and that the Declarant was perfectly awake, when they went and were away, and he wondred what they were going about: declares his Mother came in firſt, and came ſoftly to Bed, and within ſome time after his Father came in, and put a Stool to the back of the door, without locking it, for the Lock made always a great noiſe when they locked the door, and the Declarant's Father called to him whenever he came in, but the Declarant made no anſwer, that it might be thought he was ſleeping, and his Mother asked, what had ſtayed his Father; and thereupon his Father and Mother did fall a diſcourſing of ſeveral things, and particularly his Father ſaid, that the Deed was done, and that Philip Standsfield guarded the Chamber-door, with a drawen Sword and a bendet Piſtol, and that he never thought a Man would have died ſo ſoon, and that they carried him out towards the water-ſide, and they tyed a Stone about his Neck, and leaving him there came back to the little Kiln, and reckoned whether they ſhould caſt him in the water with the Stone about his Neck or not, and whether they ſhould caſt him in far in or near the ſide, and at length they returned and took away the Stone from about his Neck, and threw him in the water; declares his Father ſaid, that yet he was afraid for all that, that the Murder would come out, and his Mother anſwered, Hout Fool, there is no fear of that, it will be thought he has drowned himſelf, becauſe he will be found in the Water; declares when Sir James was miſſed in the Morning, the Declarant's Mother ſaid to his Father, riſe quickly, for if ye be found in your Bed, they will ſay that ye have a hand in the Murder; declares the Coat and Waſtecoat which were upon Sir James, when he was found in the water, were ſent to Thomſon's Houſe, and Thomſon's Wife ſaid to her Husband and Janet Johnſtoun in preſence of the Declarant, that ſhe was affrighted to ſee the ſaid Coat and Waſtecoat, for ſhe thought that ſome evil Spirit was in it, and deſired her Husband to ſend it away, which he would not; And further that his Mother ſaid to her Husband in the Declarant's hearing, that ſhe was affrighted to be in the Houſe alone after night fell, and accordingly when ever her Husband went out, ſhe went out with him, which was not her ordinary; declares the ſaid George Thomſon did go into Edinburgh ſeveral days before the Declarant's Mother was brought in, and ſhe did immediatly after he came into Edenburgh ſend away Sir James's Coat and Waſtecoat, and that ſhe was never in her own Houſe after night, ſince her Husband came in, but did lie in Janet Johnſtoun's Houſe.

Sic ſubſcribitur,
Linlithgow, I P. D.

Anna Mark Daughter to Janet Johnſtoun declares that on the ſaid Saturdays-night Philip came up to her Mother's Houſe and ſent for George Thomſon and his Wife, and thereafter he ſent her to ſee if Sir James was come home; declares that ſhe ſaw Philip with his Hat off give a low Salutation to George Thomſon when he came up to him, and when ſhe returned and told that Sir James was come, Philip did take a drink, and runs down to New Milns, that about eleven a Clock that night, her Good father ſent her to ſeek her Mother, and that ſhe found her Mother with Philip in George Thomſon's Houſe, and that her Mother bad her go home, and ſhe would come after her, and that her Good-father thereafter finding her Mother did not come, ſent her for Margaret Iſles to give ſuck to the Child, and went home again; but that her Mother did not come long after that, as ſhe thinks about two in the Morning, and that ſhe heard her Good-father ſay, Bitch and Whore, where have ye been ſo long? And ſhe anſwered, where-ever I have been, the Deed is done, and then went to Bed, and that after that, ſhe heard them ſpeak together, but could not know what they ſaid; ſhe declares alſo, that her Mother ſaid, ſhe was ſtill feared, and would not abide alone, nor lie alone in the Bed; but ſaid, ſhe was afraid.

Edinburgh, February 7th 1688. The ſaid Anna Mark being Examined in preſence of the Aſſiſe and Juſtices, declares affirmativè, conform to the above written Declaration in all points.

Sir George M'kenzie's Speech to the Inqueſt.

Gentlemen of the Inqueſt,

I Am glad to ſee ſo ſtrong, and univerſal a propenſity for Juſtice in my native Country, that every Man upon firſt hearing this Death, concluded it a Murder, and trembled leaſt it ſhould not have been diſcovered; every Man became Sollicitor in it, wiſhed to be of the Inqueſt queſt; and ardent Prayers were generally put up to Almighty God for this end, with as much earneſtneſs as uſes to be for removing general Plagues: And the Almighty in return of thoſe, did firſt make ſo clear Impreſſions on all Mens Spirits, of Philip's being the Murderer, that he had fallen by theſe; but his Divine Majeſty, who loves to ſee juſt things done in a legal way, furniſhed thereafter a full probation in an extraordinary manner, whereby we might not only convince our ſelves, but all ſuch as are not wicked enough to have been the Authors. You will diſcern the Finger of God in all the Steps of this Probation, as evidently as Philip's Guilt; and this extraordinary Diſcovery has been made, as well to convince this wicked Age, that the World is govern'd by Divine Providence, as that he is guilty of this Murder. He is accuſed before you for three Crimes, Treaſon, the Curſing of his Father, and the Murdering him: Crimes in great Affinity, and naturally ſubſervient to one another; for to pray Confuſion to the King, who is Pater patriæ, is a Curſing our great Parent; And what can prove better a deſign to Murder his Parent, than the malitious hatred that prevails over a Son to Curſe him? What reſtrains vitious Men from Murdering thoſe, by whoſe Death they may expect licentious Liberty, and an opulent Succeſſion, ſave the fear of the Laws of the Land, or at leaſt an innate awe of the Law of Nature? But here you ſee in the Treaſon a Contempt of the Laws of the Land, and in the Curſing an abhorrence of the Laws of Nature.

There is no Reaſon to ſuſpect our Zeal in this Caſe from any State Deſign; for we took pains to ſhun a Probation of the Treaſon: It was forced upon us, and not ſought by us, ſo violent were, and are we in the ſearch of the Murder, that even Treaſon was not able to divert us. Nor preſs I it at this time; but to let you ſee there is nothing ſo wicked or dangerous, which this Pannal durſt not attempt. He not only wiſhes the King's Confuſion, but drinks it openly; and not only drinks the King's Confuſion himſelf, but he forces others to do ſo; nor needed he to be drunk, to be guilty, for this was the firſt Step of his drinking; and to convince you that he knew it was a Crime, it is proved that he took his Complices ſworn, never to detect it, the fatal Encouragement which always tempt him to commit his Villanies. The Curſing his Father is not from meer humour or diſſoluteneſs, but it becomes yet probable by a previous deſign to have his Eſtate, and from the reſtraint he found from him, of being debarred from the raviſhing hopes of a boundleſs Liberty: The Expreſſions are various and execrable, ſuch as, Devil take him, drown him, rive him, let him never come back, let him never eat more, &c. and theſe Expreſſions, which ſhould never have been once ſpoke, were frequently repeited, and are proved, not by ſuſpected Perſons, or Strangers, but by his Father's, and his own Servants, and ſuch of them too as were Philip's own Favourits, and who think themſelves very unhappy in being obliged to Depone againſt him.

You are then, Gentlemen, in the third place to judge, how far this Murder and Parricide are prov'd, in which you need to be the leſs ſcrupulous, that the Son, who is accuſed of it, is to die however; for either of the two former Crimes are ſo far prov'd beyond all doubt, that though he ſhould eſcape this, he cannot theſe. And as to the Probation of this Crime, I muſt firſt repreſent to you, that in occult or atrocious Crimes, the Law has relaxed, and remitted much of its ſcrupulouſneſs in Probation, becauſe in theſe the ordinary Probation cannot be had, and to admit none but ſuch, were to reject all: And therefore in Hameſucken, which is the Beating a Man in his own Houſe, but much more the Murdering a Man by way of Hameſucken in his own Houſe, wherein all means are uſed to cover, and few can be got for diſcovering; you muſt not expect two Witneſſes who ſaw the Murder committed, but only ſuch Probation as can before God convince you, that this Murder was committed by that Man; no Inqueſt ever failed to find the Murder of Children to be clearly prov'd, though there were no Witneſſes that ſaw it committed, and the Murdering Parents is a more atrocious Crime, becauſe we owe more Duty to our Parents, than any Parent does to a Child, and never Son ow'd more than this did, nor can be more believ'd to have killed a Parent. For clearing whereof you are to conſider firſt, that he did not Drown himſelf, as was pretended, but was Murdered by ſome Perſons; and as the Law violently preſumes, that no Man would Murder himſelf, ſo without the help of this Preſumption, it is prov'd moſt convincingly by ocular Inſpection, that he was Strangled, the marks of Strangling, viz. the congeal'd Blood, the Diſlocation of one of the Vertebræ in his Neck, &c. being viſible Signs prov'd in the ordinary way, and we have added to this the Opinion both of the Chirurgions and Phyſicians, who at once declared, that he was not Drown'd, and that he was Strangled; the outward marks likewiſe of his not being Drown'd, appearing as viſibly as that he was Strangled; ſo you muſt conclude that he was Strangled; except you can think, that after he had Strangled himſelf, and broke his own Neck, he drown'd himſelf.

In the next place, who could have Murdered this innocent and obliging Gentleman, except ſome Perſon who had acceſs to his Houſe, wherein he was Murdered, and had Malice againſt himſelf? And theſe two can meet in no Perſon, but this unnatural barbarous Son; for one of the things that heightens his Guilt is, that he ſhould abhorre a Father, who engaged meer Strangers to love him as a Friend: and we have prov'd that he not only hated his Father, and that he had done ſo for many years, but that he vowed he would take away his Life before Chriſtmaſs next, and that in many various, but clear expreſſions, and at many ſeveral times; for ſometimes he ſwore, if he made a Diſpoſition to his ſecond Son, he ſhould take his Life; ſometimes, that he ſhould be Maſter of all before Chriſtmaſs, and he ſhould uſe the Servants as they uſed him; that though his Mother was like to die, that his Father ſhould die before her: and he ſcarce ever ſpoke of his Father, without ſwearing he would ſtrike a Sword to his Heart; nor would his Paſſion ſo much as ſuffer him to diſſemble this even to his Mother; and he who durſt own it to her, durſt certainly do it whenever he had occaſion.

I proceed now to you clear to, that I have prov'd, that he not only design'd and vow'd in Paſſion, that he would Murder his Father, but that he actually attempted to Murder him, and for this I have led theſe Witneſſes, who prove, that when his Father came from the Leaden-Mines, he fled into Culter, as a trembling Partridge purſued by a Haulk, telling ſome Gentlemen, that he had been purſued ſeven Miles by his unnatural Son, who accordingly came to the Houſe, and ſhot ſeveral Piſtols in at the Windows, whereupon the Gentlemen, who now Depone, were forc'd to watch with his Father all the night, and were forc'd to Convoy him the next day near to Edinburgh. We have alſo produc'd other Gentlemen, to whom his Father declared, that he attempted againſt his Life: and who will not believe the beſt of Fathers Deponing againſt the worſt of Sons? Nor could any thing have drawn this from the Father, ſave the terrifying danger, to which he was hourly expoſed. All the Supream Courts of Europe have found the attempt to kill, ſufficient to inſer Parricide, this is a higher degree of Guilt than Curſing, and yet that infers Death; and to attempt to kill a Father is more villanous, than to kill a Stranger. What ſhall be ſaid then of frequent, and deliberate attempts? And thus you have this Son again prov'd guilty of Death, and even of Paricide. That which haſtened the perpetrating this Crime was, that his Father wearied out with his Villanies, was at laſt forc'd to diſpone his Eſtate to his ſecond Son, and tho' there be nothing more ridiculous than to ask, What Reaſon the Son had to kill his Father, as he now does? For there can be no Reaſon for ſo barbarous an Action; yet this was a Motive to him, and may be a Proof to you; for ſo kind a Father, who had tryed all Means and Methods to reclaim his licentious Son, had never proceeded to this, unleſs he had been driven to it by thoſe frequent Attempts made by his Son upon his Life, in hopes to enjoy his Eſtate by the Death that he was to give. To diſappoint which hopes his Father deſign'd to ſettle the Eſtate on the ſecond Brother, after which Settlement he could gain nothing but the Gallows by killing his Father. Whereupon he to prevent the delivery of the Diſpoſition, did aſſociat to himſelf Thomſon, whom himſelf uſed to call the Devil's Taylor, Thomſon's Wife, and Janet Johnſton, who was his own Concubine, and his Father's known Enemy, whom he could never have frequented, except upon ſo barbarous a deſign. Thomſon denyed that he was in the Houſe for eight days before, and yet it is prov'd he was in Sir James's Houſe, the night the Murder was committed; Johnſton deny'd alſo before the Council, that ſhe was out of her Houſe after nine a Clock that night, and yet it is prov'd that ſhe ſtay'd abroad till after twelve, ſo that her Husband was forc'd to ſend for a Stranger, to give ſuck to her Infant. Why did they both deny, or ſhe abandon her Child, at ſo ſuſpect a time? And it is ridiculous to pretend as they do, that they forgot ſo extraordinary a circumſtance in ſo extraordinary a night, eſpecially being examined upon it, within two or three days thereafter. By their aſſiſtance the Murder was deſign'd to be upon Saturday, the day of January; but God to diſcover, and revenge a Murder (which he thought fit to ſuffer to be committed, for the puniſhment of ſo many preceeding horrid Crimes) inſpired Sir James to bring with him that night, a devout Miniſter, for preparing the Father, and proving againſt the Son; and this pious and grave man, whoſe Merit may be laid in Ballance with many Witneſſes, Depones, that he heard that night, the noiſe of many People within the Houſe, which was inconſiſtent with Sir James's drowning himſelf without it: And Depones, that his attention followed this noiſe until it died out towards the River, into which he was thrown by them; and the Brink is prov'd to have been broken, and beat by many Feet, which fortifies much this Depoſition. It is alſo prov'd, that he refuſed that night to come to publick Prayer with his Father, ſwearing that he could not look upon him, and that the next morning, when all went to find out his Father, he confeſſed he had firſt found him; but that he came away, without diſcovering that he had found him, nor did he ſhew the leaſt grief when he was found by others; whereas if Nature had not been quit devour'd by Vice and Guilt, he had certainly thrown himſelf upon his dead Father, and had lamented that fatal Death, which no man, except he, ſaw with dry eyes; but whilſt others were mourning for his Father, this Miſcreant would not ſuffer him to be carried in to his own Houſe, ſaying that he died like a Dog. O criminal Moderation that never appeared in this paſſionat Creature ſave upon the Death of his Father. O curſed Juſtice, never ſhowen or pretended to, ſave in aſſerting, that his Father deſerved no reſpect, becauſe he drown'd himſelf. Upon this villanous pretext, he cauſed throw him into a remot Houſe, where none were allowed to ſee the Body, ſave his own Accomplices, to prevent all Diſcovery by Inſpection of it, and for the ſame reaſon cauſed bury him very ſuddenly, in ſpight of a Countermand from his Freinds at Edinburgh. But they fully perſwaded, that Sir James was was Murdered by his own Son, ſent out ſome Chirurgions and Freinds, who having raiſed the Body, did ſee it bleed miraculouſly upon his touching it. In which God Almighty himſelf was pleaſed to bear a ſhare in the teſtimonies which we produce; that Divine Power, which makes the Blood circulat during Life, has oft-times, in all Nations, opened a paſſage to it after Death, upon ſuch occaſions; but moſt in this caſe, for after all the Wounds had been ſewed up, and the Body deſignedly ſhaken up and down, and which is moſt wonderful, after the Body had been buried for ſeveral days, which naturally occaſions the Blood to congeal; upon Philip's touching it, the Blood darted and ſprung out to the great aſtoniſhment of the Chirurgions themſelves, who were deſired to watch this Event, whereupon Philip aſtoniſhed more than they, threw down the Body, crying, O God! O God! and cleanſing his Hand grew ſo faint, that they were forc'd to give him a Cordial. But leaſt any ſhadow of difficulty might remain with you, his Divine Providence, which oft-times reveals it ſelf by the mouths of Babes and Sucklings, has brought us two little Witneſſes, whom as no body could be ſo unworthy as to corrupt, ſo none can be ſuch Infidels as not to believe, eſpecially ſince they Depone againſt their own Parents, and have owned firmly in their preſence, what they now De-pone in yours; from them ye have an account how Philip that night came into the Houſe of their Parents, and there ſwore, He would be rid of his Father that very Night; how they went out at midnight, and after their return made their reflections, how eaſily Sir James had died, and how briskly Philip had behaved, by guarding the door with a Piſtol in his one Hand, and a Sword in the other, how they had hung a Stone about his Neck, but had thereafter taken it away, and how the Mother durſt not ſtay in her own Houſe, while Sir James's Coat was there, and if you had ſeen this little Boy upon his knees, begging his Father to confeſs with ſo much Affection, ſo much Judgment, ſo much Piety, you had needed no other Probation but himſelf; the Father himſelf before his Death was convinced, and frequently foretold, that his Son would kill him, and the Mother how ſoon ſhe heard of her Husband's death, and ſome of the circumſtances, now inſiſted upon, and remembred what ſhe had heard her Son ſay to her ſelf, and what he had ſaid at Nunland, concluded he was the Murderer, in ſpight even of that criminal kindneſs which ſhe had for him; almoſt the whole Nation was convinced of this before any Probation was led: and the Lords of the Privy Council, among whom many of our Judges ſit, did declare, that they thought that half of the Probation which was led before them, ſufficient to convince an Inqueſt. How then ſhould the leaſt ſcruple remain with you, before whom ſo full, ſo clear, and ſo legal a Probation has been led, that like a Bend, every part of it ſupports another, and like a Chain, every Link draws on another?

I need not fortifie ſo pregnant a Probation, by laying out before you how often he and his Complices have contradicted one another, and even how often he has contradicted himſelf, in the moſt obvious and material points, and how he denyes every thing with Oaths, and with equal confidence, though never ſo clearly prov'd: Albeit ſuch as theſe are the chief things that make up the Probation in other Caſes, nor how he ſuffered the greateſt Indignities imaginable from his Complices, in preſence of the Privy Council, though this convinced many of their Lordſhips, that he was at the mercy of thoſe Complices, who were too far upon his Secrets, not to be ſlaviſhlie ſubmitted to. But I cannot omit, how that ſince he came into Priſon, he has lived ſo Impiouſlie, and Atheiſticallie, as ſhewes, that he had no awe upon his Spirit, to reſtrain him from committing any Crime from a love to God, or a fear to Hell, and that he conſtantly filled and kept himſelf drunk from morning till night, thereby to drown the voice of his Conſcience, and to make himſelf inſenſible of the Terrors of the Almighty.

The Judges have declared what was neceſſary to be prov'd, and you are only to judge, if we have prov'd what they thought neceſſary; and therefore there is no place to doubt, if a man's life may be taken upon meer preſumptions; for the Judges have eaſed you of that ſcruple, by finding the grounds in this qualified Libel relevant: and his own Advocates have acknowledged this Probation to be ſo ſtrong and unanſwerable, that before the half of it was led, they went away and deſerted a Client, whom they found they could not defend, nor ſhould any man doubt of a Probation, which ones own Advocats think invincible. If then ſuch amongſt you as are Fathers, would not wiſh to be murdered by your own Children; or ſuch of you as are Sons, would not wiſh the World to believe that you are weary of your Fathers, you will all concur, to find this Miſcreant guilty of a Crime that God has taken ſo much pains to detect, and all mankind has ſuch reaſon to wiſh to be puniſhed. May then the Almighty God who form'd your Hearts, convince them; and may this poor Nation Cite you, as the remarkable Curbers of Vice, to all ſucceeding Ages.

Thereafter His Majeſties Advocat proteſted for an Aſſiſe of Error againſt the Inqueſt, in caſe they ſhould aſſoilzie the Pannal.

The Perſons who paſt upon the Aſſiſe of Philip Standsfield, returned their Verdict in preſence of the ſaids Lords, whereupon the Tenor follows.

The whole Aſſiſe called upon the Jury of Philip Standsfield, upon the three Points following, particularly lybel'd againſt him, to wit, the Crime of Treaſon, the Curſing of his Father, and acceſſion to his Father's Murder, they unanimouſly in one voice by the Mouth of William Baillie of Lamingtoun their Chancelor, finds the Pannal guilty of the foreſaid three Crimes. Sic ſubſcribitur, William Baillie of Lamingtoun Chancelor.

THE Lords, Juſtice General, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, having conſidered the Verdict of the Aſſiſe returned againſt Philip Standsfield, they by the Mouth of John Leſlie Dempſter of Court, decerned and adjudged the ſaid Philip Standsfield, to be taken upon Wedneſday next, being the fifteenth of February inſtant, to the Mercat Croſs of Edinburgh, and there betwixt two and four a Clock in the Afternoon to be hanged on a Gibbet till he be dead, and his Tongue to be cut out, and burnt upon a Scaffold, and his right hand to be cut off, and affixt on the Eaſt Port of Haddingtoun, and his Body to be carried to the Gallowlie betwixt Leith and Edinburgh, and there to be hanged up in Chains, and ordains his Name, Fame, Memory, and Honours to be extinct, his Arms to be riven forth, and delet out of the Books of Arms, ſwa that his Poſterity may never have Place, nor be able hereafter to bruik or joyſe any Honours, Offices, Titles, or Dignities within this Realm in time coming, and to have forfaulced, amitted and tint all and ſundry his Lands, Heretages, Titles, Offices, Tacks, Stedings, Roums, Poſſeſſions, Goods and Gear whatſomever pertaining to him, to our Soveraign Lord, to remain perpetuallie with his Highneſs in Property; which was pronounced for Doom, whereupon His Majeſties Advocat asked, and took Inſtruments. Sic ſubſcribitur,

Extracted forth of the Books of Adjournal, By me Mr. Thomas Gordon Clerk to the Juſtice Court.

Sic ſubſcribitur, Tho. Gordon.

Which Doom and Sentence above-written, was accordingly put to due Execution upon the Perſon of the ſaid Philip Standsfield, in manner above preſcribed.

PRO-

Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons againſt the Earl of Caſtlemaine. 1 W. and M. 1689.

THE Attorney General [Sir Geo. Treby] being (on Saturday the 26*th* of October, 1688.) inform'd, that the Earl of Caſtlemaine, Sir Edward Hales and other Priſoners of the Tower, were brought by their Habeas Corpus to the Hall to be bail'd, deſir'd to know the Pleaſure of the Houſe in that Affair; who order'd that they ſhould preſently be ſent for to their Bar; which was done accordingly; Only the ſaid Earl was not there; for he remain'd ſtill in the Tower, having (it ſeems) made uſe of no ſuch Writ; However the Houſe directed the Governour to bring him up (as he did) the Monday following; And then the Speaker ſaid to this Effect.

Mr. Speaker to my Lord.

MY Lord, the Houſe having underſtood, That You went Embaſſador to Rome; and alſo took your place at the Board as a Privy Councellor without taking the Oaths (which are great Crimes, and againſt Law.) They have ſent for you to know what you have to ſay for your ſelf.

His Lordſhip's Anſwer.

IT cannot (Mr. Speaker) but put me into more than an ordinary Confuſion, when I find my ſelf in this place as a Criminal; eſpecially, ſeeing (through the whole courſe of my Life) the Glory and Welfare of England has been my chief Aim and Endeavour. You are pleas'd Sir to lay ſo great a Charge upon me, that (without ſhuffling or impertinence) I might ask time to conſider it; Yet ſince I well know how much you value your time, and ſince time alſo may make what I ſay ſuſpected more of Artifice than Candor, I ſhall now (without further delay) let you and this great Aſſembly ſee (where ſo many of Birth and Quality are met) how far I am from deſerving either cenſure or reproach. But (Mr. Speaker) before I go further, I muſt humbly beg theſe few Favours of you. Firſt, that you would Pardon all Tautologies or want of Method, as beginning perchance in the middle, and ending again where I ſhould have begun. Secondly, That you would not take any advantage at my Anſwers, for I ſhall be Ingenuous to the utmoſt, and heſitate at nothing you ſhall ask. And Laſtly, if (through inadvertency or haſt) I ſhould ſay what might ſhock you, that you would not ſtand upon the rigor of the Words, but upon the ſincerity and clearneſs of my Explanation.

Be pleas'd then to know, Sir, I was ſo far from ſeeking this Employment, that I did not ſo much as dream it was deſign'd me; And when I knew it, I us'd my utmoſt endeavour to avoid it. My ignorance of the King's Intentions appears by this, that (in the Year I went to Rome) returning out of the Country (according to my uſual cuſtom) after Michaelmas, I found a Proteſtant, a Perſon of Note at my Houſe, who told me, that before I ſpoke with any Man, he was to bring me to my Lord Sunderland, and from thence I was to go to his Majeſty; Nor would he (ſcarce) afford me time to put my ſelf in a tolerable order to attend them. My Lord Sunderland ſoon hinted to me, what the King's intentions were; And when I recurr'd to his Friendſhip, I had this Anſwer, or Words to this purpoſe; That if Subjects ſhould refuſe their King's Service in every thing that was troubleſom or Contre-Cœur, all Kings would be in an ill Condition; that my requeſt was beyond his Power; and that he believed I ſhould find his Majeſty very poſitive; and ſo I did Mr. Speaker, I'll aſſure you. Nay to ſatisfie you yet more fully of my backwardneſs to this Journey; can you think, Sir, that I, that had been at Rome more than once; that had ſeen the Grandeur of ſo many Roman Embaſſies; and knew they exceeded in Splendor and Expence three times thoſe to any Crown'd Head whatſoever, ſhould not be extraordinarily concern'd at an Employment, which had for its Subſiſtance (as the Lords of the Treaſury well know) no other Eſtabliſhment than to Spain or France, which (being 100 l. a week) amounts only to 5200 Pounds per annum?

or can be enacted (let the Commerce or Intercourſe between Nations be never ſo much broken and prohibited) but that a Commander in Chief, a General, and much more a King, may beat a Parley, diſpatch a Trumpet, nay, ſend and receive Letters as often as occaſion does require?

Now (Mr. Speaker) for Religion, I neither had any Commiſſion concerning it, nor Tranſacted with his Holyneſs about it; And as no body ever did, or could lay any thing of that nature to my charge, ſo for ſome confirmation of it, I will appeal even to the Aqua freſca Houſes of Rome, and to all the Proteſtant Gentlemen of our Nation there during my Embaſſie; for though what I tell you, Sir, be a Wonder, yet the Honourable Perſons, who have reſided in thoſe parts, know it to be true, that for a Diſh of Chocolate or a Diſh of Limonade, one may know the meaſures and particulars of an Embaſſy in that City, as well as we do what paſſes within theſe Walls at our Coffee-houſes. I am ſure my under Servants have often ſmil'd at the Grimaces and Myſteries which my Secretaires us'd in the beginning to make before my Audiences; for they have told them (within few hours after my return) almoſt Word by Word what had paſs'd. Give me alſo leave, Sir, to add one truth more, which will aſſure you that I had no dangerous intreague in hand; and this is, that notwithſtanding his Holyneſs never had the leaſt imagination or thought, but that I was as real and ſincere a Catholic as any Man living; and the ſame thing alſo I can ſay of all the Cardinals; and in fine, of the whole Court in general; Yet none of them (and every Engliſh-man in Town knew it) but look't upon me as one, that if any Immunity of the Crown were in queſtion, or any Temporal Concern of the Kingdom touch't, would ſtand as much in the Gap, and be in as Diametrical an oppoſition, as any Perſon of the Reform'd Religion whatſoever.

You ſee then Sir, both how, and why I went; nor have I done any thing certainly to merit any Man's unkindneſs or ill-will; nay to lay yet further before you the hardſhip I am under, I ſhall ſtate you a Caſe, not fetch't out of old forgotten Records, or Tranſacted in an Age diſparate from ours, but of a Man attainted in this very Houſe, in the memory of ſeveral now ſitting, and even whil'ſt I my ſelf had the Honour to be a Member of it. The Caſe Mr. Speaker is Axtels the Regicide; one whoſe Crime (I dare ſay) my greateſt Enemies think I abhor in the higheſt manner; no do I mention the thing in favour of the Criminal, but in Honour of his grave and worthy Judges. Axtel you know (Mr. Speaker) was Indicted for the Murther of Charles the Firſt; And to ſhew that he maliciouſly contriv'd and abetted it, the Kings Council urged his Commanding in the Hall at the Tryal; his placing the Sentinels all about; and in ſhort, his performing there the whole Office of Captain of the Guard. The Priſoner anſwer'd; but pray Mr. Speaker, let me beg Pardon, if the Interval of almoſt Thirty Years has made me forget his Words, I am ſure the ſenſe of them I have not; I ſay, Sir, the Priſoner anſwer'd; My Lords I am under great oppreſſion, I am hardly dealt with. Has Charles the Second been ſo gracious as to paſs over the ordinary tranſgreſſions of his ſtrayed Subjects, and to look upon the Obedience of Soldiers to their then Superiours, as if the Authority had been more Legal? And ſhall I now dye (who was under Military Diſcipline) for that, which I muſt have preſently died for, had I not done it; to wit, had I not drawn up my Regiment, kept the Poſt order'd me, and perform'd the other duties, the Concourſe being great and troubleſom? Upon this the Judge reply'd; I confeſs (conſidering the Kings merciful Reſolutions) that your Argument is ſtrong; it has great weight in it; But Mr. Axtell, did you no more? Did you only perform the Duty of a Commanded Soldier? Who was it (I pray) that animated the Rabble? Who beat the Soldiers for not crying Juſtice? Who encourag'd ſpitting in the King's Face? And who barbarouſly revil'd and threatned a Noble Lady, that in the tranſports of her zeal (when ſhe ſaw her Sovereign abus'd, when ſhe heard ſuch Blaſphemy againſt him, and all this Father'd upon the Nation) made a noiſe or ſtir in the Court? Theſe things therefore Sir, being prov'd againſt him; He was convicted, condemn'd, and ſo paid a Debt to Juſtice, and to the Sacred Aſhes of that great and juſt Man.

Now Mr. Speaker to application; And firſt, (after a little glance on the tenderneſs of theſe Judges, when any neceſſity could be pretended) let me with your Pardon ask you, ſhall I ſuffer as a Tranſgreſſor of the Law, were there any, when I muſt have ſuffer'd by the Law, had I refus'd his Majeſties Orders and Commands? But Sir, if you demand, did I no more than carry a Letter, or go with a Ceremonious how dye from the King? I muſt anſwer yes, and a great deal more too. For my Houſe was an Aſylum, a Place of Refuge to all diſtreſt or oppreſt Fellow Subjects. If Seamen mutiny'd or had any conteſt with their Captains, here a Reconciliation was made, and here they return'd to their Obedience, if the Captains themſelves (fraught-ed for the Camera) were delay'd their Money, or miſus'd by under Officers, they quickly found Redreſs, and often (by my intereſt) receiv'd more than they themſelves expected; And if the queſtion happened about quantity, or how Goods were condition'd at delivery, the Verdict I am ſure went ſtill on their ſide. Nor was my care confin'd to Rome only, but reach't to all the Factories of Italy: For the Conſuls themſelves, nay every private Perſon found both an eaſie acceſs to me, and an indefatigable Zeal in their concerns; ſo that the Merchants in general that had to do in thoſe Parts, were far from being behind hand in their thankful acknowledgments. Nay one of the greateſt Companies of our Nation, I mean that for Turkey, not only return'd me their thanks very heartily by Letter, but did it again by Word of Mouth after my Arrival home.

I am ſure (Mr. Speaker) if the Employment I ſubmitted to were a fault, I have already not a little ſuffer'd for it; for I never put bounds (as our Travellers, as well as my own Officers, fully know) to any Expence that could be imagin'd for the Dignity of the Nation; And give me leave to tell you alſo Sir, that though the Name of Rome may be harſh and ungrateful to your Ears, yet what I did, was with a good intention, and like a true and faithful Engliſhman. For had I been ſent with a Character to Conſtantinople, where they are Mahometans; or to China, where Gentiles; the Eclat or Figure which I ſhould have endeavour'd to make, would never be conſider'd by you as an Honour to their Religion, but our Country; therefore ſince it is a Diſparagement and great Reflection to a Kingdom, to come below or ſhort of others in any thing that is public and of note, I cannot but have (at leaſt) faint hopes, that you will have ſome Conſideration, ſome Opinion of an Embaſſador (though at Rome) that kept up (to his Power) the Glory and Grandeur of England.

But Mr. Speaker, not to trouble you longer on the preſent Head, I'll end when I have told you this; That if I have done amiſs in obeying the King's Commands, no Conſul that has purſu'd a Pirate or Bandite to Rome; no private Factor that has follow'd a Debtor thither; Nor in ſhort any Man that has written ſo much as one Letter to that City, though it were to demand his own, but is a far greater Criminal than my ſelf, and lyes at the Mercy of every Enemy to be indicted as a Contemner and Breaker of the Laws.

Your ſecond Charge, Mr. Speaker, is my being a Privy Counſellour, without taking the appointed Oaths; To which I can truly ſay, they were never offer'd me; though I muſt alſo confeſs (for I ſhall be ſincere with you in every thing) that I believe, nay that I am certain, I ſhould not have taken them, had they been offer'd; ſo that I do acknowledge the Omiſſion a fault againſt Law——

Here the Speaker, thinking that his Lordſhip had made an End, deſir'd him to withdraw; but being inform'd that he had not done; He excus'd the Interruption, and then his Lordſhip went on.

I ſay (Mr. Speaker) I acknowledge this a fault againſt Law, were there not ſeveral things of weight, that will (I hope) juſtify me to you; And here, Sir, I muſt entreat you, not to conceive that I come now to defend or make good the Diſpenſing Power, but only to ſhew you how neceſſarily I was driven and induc'd to the aforeſaid Omiſſion; for (Mr. Speaker) in Controverſies and Diſputes, what can one do, but recur either to his own Obſervation, or to the Opinion of learn'd Men, and Profeſſors in the Science?

In the firſt place then, when I began to examine my ſelf as to the Right the King claim'd and aſſerted; I ſaw Non obſtantes deem'd Legal, which ſignified to me Diſpenſing; I found the Power of continuing Sheriffs own'd for many Ages to be undoubted Law, and yet I knew there was a poſitive Statute againſt it; Nay I remember'd an Act, which I my ſelf had in this Houſe given my Vote and Conſent to, viz. That about the Regulation of Carriages and Waggons; Or if this be not the exact Title, I muſt beſeech you to pardon my Treacherous Memory, and 'tis I'll aſſure you the only Traytor I ever yet ſuccoured or ſupported; I ſay Sir, I remember'd this very Act (almoſt as ſoon as made) ſuſpended by Charles the Second's Proclamation without the leaſt Queſtion or Murmur; and I took ſo much notice of it, as to make even then this Reflection (and I do aſſure you upon my Honour 'tis true) That though our Monarchs could not impoſe and abrogate Laws of themſelves, yet they had the Power (I perceiv'd) to reſpite them.

In the ſecond place (Mr. Speaker) if I went abroad; I mean if I conſulted the Thoughts and Sentiments of others, I found not only Great Men of the long Robe, but the Judges alſo themſelves declaring in favour of this Prerogative; and the Interpretation or determination of theſe Sages was always told me to be Law, till a new Law or a new Explanation ſhould be enacted. What would you then (Mr. Speaker) have me to do, who was call'd to the Board by the King; who could not in Conſcience take the Oaths; and yet had no reaſon to think I committed (in not taking them) a Crime; ſeeing the Law was thus openly expounded and publiſh'd?

And now, Sir, ſince I have been forc'd to mention my Religion which, I know is a legal Fault, and of a high Nature; I muſt not forget alſo to celebrate the Goodneſs of this Houſe, which has pardon'd the Fault, even in the ſolemneſt Way, and by the ſolemneſt Act that ever paſt ſince Magna Charta; to wit, The great Act of Oblivion. Give me leave, Sir, to ſay this too, for I can juſtly do it; That being ſo faithful and ſo true an Engliſhman, I neither ſhould nor could (I am ſure) have ever, during my Life, offended my Country, but in my Religion. Pardon alſo I humbly beſeech you this Digreſſion, and together with it the Incoherences and Disjunctions all along; Nor ſhall I any ways doubt of it, ſince you ſo well know how uneaſy and troubleſome a long Diſcourſe (which my Circumſtances have now required) muſt needs be to one, that wants both Eloquence and Practice.

But (Mr. Speaker) to return where I left, and ſo conclude; How, Sir, I pray you (and I demand it again of you with great reſpect) could I think the Omiſſion (as I ſaid) of the Oaths a Breach of the Laws, when our Guides, who had the Laws in their keeping, told us explicitely, and without reſerve the ſaid Oaths were not neceſſary? Shall I then ſuffer that had neither Buoy nor Mark to direct me? certainly no; for if there were a fault, 'tis not I muſt ſuffer, but the Judges, and thoſe knowing and deputed Pilots, that hung out (it ſeems) the wrong Flag and Signal. I have Sir, but one Word more to trouble you with, and this I ſpeak in behalf of all here; Nay, in behalf of all the People of England; That if I now undergo your Severity, and that ſingle Perſons (notwithſtanding the Determinations and Judgments of our Courts of Juſtice) muſt be ſtill reſponſible; No Man can be ſafe, no Man can be at reſt; for no body that acts can know (as accidents will often happen) whether he be innocent or guilty.

Mr. Speaker, I am in great diſorder for impoſing thus on your Patience; and eſpecially ſeeing I muſt yet preſume to do it, one thing more occurring to me (as I hope) for your further Service, or at leaſt Satisfaction; And 'tis to let you know how I came to be a Priſoner, and why I continued ſo thus long. Be pleas'd then, Sir, that I tell you, that as ſoon as the King firſt left White-Hall, I thought it decency to go out of Town; and therefore three days after I took Coach for Montgomery ſhire, where of late I us'd to reſide in the Summer time. On the Borders of that County, at a ſmall Corporation called Oſweſtree, I was firſt ſtopt by the Rabble, and afterwards detain'd (with a ſtrong Guard) at my Inn by the Major; though no body (as he confeſt) made any Oath againſt me; and tho' he had no Orders (as he ſaid) from London for it; Nay, (after a Months reſtraint reſtraint) he deny'd me my Liberty upon Bail, notwithſtanding two Neighbouring Lawyers (whom I ſent for) aſſur'd him he could not juſtify the refuſal by Law. I do not Sir, complain of any Incivility, either from him or the People; for I was us'd with reſpect enough; But I judge it extremely fit to let you ſee how the Liberty of a Subject was wilfully invaded by a Magiſtrate, and how little conſcious I was of any Guilt, ſince inſtead of flying, I went to a place where I was known by every body.

In fine, Mr. Speaker, after a confinement of Seven Weeks, I was ſent for up, and brought hither by a Party of Horſe; Nor was I ever queſtion'd or examin'd by any body, but kept (upon the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus Act) at a Meſſenger's Houſe for Three Months; And when the ſaid Act was ſuſpended the laſt time, I was Committed by my Lord Shrewsbury's Warrant to the Tower, for Suſpicion of treaſonable practices.

His Lordſhip having ended, retir'd with the Serjeant at Arms to his Room, where after a little ſtay, he was ſent for in again; And then the Speaker told him; That ſince he ſaid his Journey to Rome was with a Letter of Civility to a Temporal Prince, and not about Religion, The Houſe (to be more fully ſatisfied of it) deſir'd to ſee his Inſtructions. To which his Lordſhip thus anſwer'd.

I hope (Mr. Speaker) though I ſhall readily acknowledge my own natural Weakneſs, you will not yet think me ſo imprudent, as that (in a time of ſuch troubles and diſtraction) I would keep Papers by me, and eſpecially about Rome, to render my ſelf lyable to every malicious Man's Extravagancy and Comment. This therefore caus'd me Sir (the Night before I went towards Wales) to burn all Papers that came to hand; and truly ſome among the reſt, that I have ſince wanted; Nay this I can alſo juſtly aver, that I remember not now one Word of thoſe Inſtructions, having (I'm confident) never read them twice; only this I remember, they were Things of Courſe; Words of Form; and needed no further conſideration. Yet Sir, that you may plainly ſee my Sincerity, and how far I am from any deſign of illuding and deceiving you, I ſhall ſhew you how you may retrieve them, when I tell you, that Mr. Monſtevens brought them me, and that they were drawn (as I take it) by Mr. Bridgman; For I'm certain they came from my Lord Sunderland's Office.

But my Lord (reply'd the Speaker) had you no private Inſtructions? None; Anſwered his Lordſhip. What none at all, ſaid Mr. Speaker again. None I'll aſſure you Sir, reply'd his Lordſhip; unleſs the Kings Orders, to demand a Cardinals Cap for Prince Reinaldo of Eſte, were private Inſtructions; Nor do I certainly know, whether thoſe Commands were in my forementiond Inſtructions, or whether I had them by Word of Mouth.

My Lord, ſaid the Speaker, I have another queſtion to ask you; to wit, who of the long Robe told you of the Kings Power of Diſpenſing, and that there was no neceſſity of taking the Oaths?

I am Sir (anſwer'd his Lordſhip) infinitely troubled, if I have through want of Care, or by any improper Expreſſion given you occaſion to miſapprehend me; For I never askt any particular Man of that Profeſſion about this Affair; But my meaning was (and I hope my words are not contrary to my meaning) that the ſaid Power was manifeſtly and openly declar'd to be Law by Judges and Lawyers; So that I deem'd it no Solecism in Diſcourſe to mention it as if they themſelves had told it me.

Then his Lordſhip retir'd again, and after a long Debate, the Houſe paſt this Order. That the Earl of Caſtlemaine ſtand committed to the Tower by a Warrant from this Houſe of High Treaſon, for endeavouring to reconcile this Kingdom to the See of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

As ſoon as his Lordſhip was inform'd of this Vote, he entreated a Member to let the Houſe know, that he had a Word or two more to trouble them with; So that being brought in, the Speaker told him, that the Houſe having notice (he had ſomething further to acquaint them with) was very willing to hear him.

Mr. Speaker (reply'd his Lordſhip) I have nothing more to ſay about the former Matters; but underſtanding your Pleaſure, I thought it my Duty to let you know, how the cuſtom of the Tower as to Priſoners is chang'd; for in courſe heretofore (unleſs there were a particular Order of State to the contrary) they had the Liberty of the Tower; that is to ſay, they could walk about at ſeaſonable hours with a Warder; But now as ſoon as one is committed (though it be upon bare ſuſpicion, as I was) he is confin'd to his Lodging, and hindred from the Conſolation of ſeeing his Friends, till (after much ſollicitation and trouble) leave be granted by the Secretaries. Therefore Sir, being morally certain that I ſhall be confin'd again aſſoon as I return, I humbly deſire the Favour of this Freedom; It being alſo what I hitherto enjoy'd after I had been reſtrain'd for ſome days in the aforementioned Manner.

This ſaid, his Lordſhip went out, and then was carried to the Tower, where he was made a cloſe Priſoner, as he foretold, though what he moved, occaſion'd the following Vote.

That a Committee be appointed to bring in a Bill for the better regulating the Impriſonment of the Subjects of this Kingdom, and to ſettle the Fees of Goalers; And it was likewiſe referr'd to them, to examine into the abuſes of Goalers towards their Priſoners which have been heretofore Committed.

On Wedneſday the 5*th* of the following February, His Lordſhip mov'd for his Habeas Corpus, and was brought by the Lord Lucas, (the preſent Governour of the Tower) to Weſtminſter, on the 10*th*; So that appearing at the King's Bench, his Commitments were read, and Mr. Attorney having nothing to object againſt his being Bail'd, the Court awarded it upon the Security of Thirty Thouſand Pounds; that is to ſay, a Recognizance of Ten Thouſand for himſelf, and Five Thouſand a piece from his four Sureties; which were, John Earl of Bath, Thomas Earl of Ayliſbury, Thomas Earl of Suſſex, and Charles Lord Landſdown.

THE

The Tryal of John Price, Esq; late Receiver of Ireland, and One hundred other Protestants at the Town of Wicklow in Ireland.

John Price, Esq; Receiver General to the late King Charles the Second, having his Countryhouse in the County of Wicklow, at Ballinderry, twenty four miles from Dublin, did for the safety and preservation of himself and Family, obtain the Lord Deputy Tyrconnels Protection, (as many more of the English Protestants living in the Country at the same time did) for the late King James going away for France, and the Administration of the Government being put into the hands of his present Majesty; the Lord Tyrconnel gave out Commissions (for the raising a mighty Army) to any Irish Papist that would take one, and promise to subsist, Maintain, and Cloath their Men for three Months; most of these new Officers are men of mean Fortunes, not capable of subsisting themselves; their men live altogether on the English, coming into their Houses in the day time, and commanding from them their Meat and Drink; and often Robbing them in the night, stealing away their Cattle. Likewise the Priests of every Parish obliged all their people to furnish themselves with Half pikes and Skeanes, and bring them to Mass, or not presume to appear there, on the penalty of Excommunication, or a severe punishment; which caused all the Irish to Arm themselves with the aforesaid Weapons; upon which Robberies, Thefts, and other Outrages were daily committed upon the English; particularly in the County of Wicklow, where some Hundreds were got together for that purpose, who gave themselves the Name of Merry Boys, and had very great success in their theivish attempts upon their Protestant Neighbours, that lived hitherto secure in their own Houses; it is observable, what great power the Romish Clergy have over the Irish, they Arm themselves immediately at their Command, and yet to this day have neither kept them from Robbing of the English, nor restored them any thing taken away, which if they had been so minded, they might have done by the same Power; several of Mr. Price's Neighbours repaired to Ballinderry, to preserve themselves and Goods; but an order coming out soon after, for the taking away all Horses and Arms from the Protestants, both in City and Country; Colonel Toole with a Party of his Men came to demand what Arms and Horses they had at Ballinderry, Mr. Price and the rest having the aforementioned Protection, refused to obey their orders; and complaint coming to Dublin, Colonel Sheldon was immediately sent away with a Body of Horse and Foot, against Ballinderry; Mr. Price upon his Approach presently submitted to him, who thereupon was made Prisoner, and all the rest of the Men that were in the House; but the Prison of Wicklow not being able to contain them, several of them were admitted to Bayl, until the following Assizes, which began March the fifth last past, and ended the eighth.

After they were Sworn as uſual, they received the following Charge:

L. C. Juſt. Keating's Charge to the Grand-Jury.

GEntlemen, You that are here Returned to Serve on this Grand-Jury, you have this day before your Eyes the greateſt Example, and the firmeſt Proof that a Gracious Prince can give to the beſt of Subjects; you ſee his Sacred Majeſty, King James the Second, (whom God long preſerve for the Protection of all his good and dutiful Subjects, and for the ſubverſion and irradicating of all thoſe who deſire the Subverſion of his Government, either by Foreign Force, or inbred Conſpiracy) notwithſtanding the great Troubles on his own Perſon, yet he is not wanting in his care towards you; and I dare boldly ſay, it is the laſt thing he will relinquiſh in the World, after that of his own Conſcience, the care of his Subjects: He hath ſent us with his Commiſſion to enquire into all the Maladies, Diſeaſes, and Sores within your County. He has likewiſe given us Command to apply the healing Balſam of the Laws, which will preſerve the Subject moſt entirely in his Property. And I am ſorry, I muſt tell you, that there was never more need than now at this time: I am glad at the ſame time that I can ſay, that the Miſchiefs fallen on a great part of this Kingdom, and on no part more than on this County, that is under the very Eye of the Government; I ſay, I am glad it can be ſaid to have ariſen, for the moſt part, from a Rabble of People, who have arm'd themſelves without any direction from the Government, and that with unuſual Weapons; I mean Half-pikes and Skeans: Gentlemen, I muſt tell you plainly, it looks rather like a Deſign to Maſſacree and Murder, than any elſe. They do not belong to the Army, neither are they any part of them; but theſe are the Vultures, Kites, and Ravens that follow Armies. Souldiers that have travelled abroad, ſay, Such are not known among them there: I am told, and very well aſſured, That in Foreign Parts, where theſe Vultures and Birds of Prey are, it is hard for an Army to lie conceal'd, without being diſcovered by them; for it is odds, but that a Horſe or a Man drops where ſuch multitudes of People are. I am very far from laying this to the Charge of any that are under Command; tho' it is poſſible, that ſome of them, under the ſcarcity they are in, do give their aſſiſtance, or at leaſt encouragement to theſe Robbers; otherwiſe it could not be, that whole Flocks and Droves of Cattle are daily driven away, and yet no one taken or brought to Juſtice for it. The King is not wanting in his Care, he has given Directions to have the Laws put in execution, that Criminals may be brought in and puniſhed; and the Government has iſſued out many Proclamations; but they are grown too familiar with them. You are to enquire into this Matter, in order to bring to puniſhment, not only them that ſteal, but thoſe that receive. I am told that open Markets are ſet up in this County of Wicklow: A fat Bullock for 5*s.* and a fat Sheep for 1*s.* but it will fall heavy on them at laſt. Divines ſay, That God Almighty oftentimes makes the very Crime to become their own puniſhment: And I verily fear, that a few Months will produce a Famine in this Kingdom: And what ſucceeds, a Peſtilence, and the worſt of all Peſtilences; for it is obſerved, that a ſtarved Rot is the worſt of all Rots; it falls out unhappily at this Seaſon of the Year, when the Cattle are breeding: Under the Old Law the Jews were not to ſeeth the Kid in the Mother's Milk; but theſe unmerciful Wretches go further than that, ſparing none, but deſtroying old and young, the increaſe and all. Pray Gentlemen, conſider of it, and ſearch the Houſes of ſuch as you have reaſon to ſuſpect, that had not any thing to eat the laſt Year, go now into their Houſes, and you will find whole Carcaſes of Beef powdered up; nay, it may be, for want of Salt, or Money to buy it, lying rotting and ſtinking. Let me tell you, it will be your turn next, when they have robbed and ſpoiled your Proteſtant Neighbours, they will come to you, unleſs you take ſpeedy care to prevent it. The King has done what he can, and the Government what they can; in vain is the Law made, if Offenders be not brought to condign puniſhment. You all know there has been an Invaſion in England of a Forreign Enemy, the Prince of Orange; and the ſame is deſigned on this Kingdom: The effects of an Invaſion is not known: Defence is natural to all Kingdoms and States, and therefore the Government has given Directions for raiſing a greater Army than at any time heretofore this Kingdom ever had: It was ſo among the Romans of old, who in caſes of neceſſity did things clear contrary to the Fundamentals of their Laws. The ſame neceſſity has put the King on arming here; (in France they have their Ban, and with us our Commiſſion of Array, from ſixteen to ſixty) but without any deſign that the effects ſhould be to arm the Country with Half-pikes and Skeans; they are fit indeed for the Mountains, or to guard a Man's Houſe, but not to go abroad with at Noon day. Gentlemen, you that are Juſtices of the Peace, and Officers of the Army, where ever you meet, you ought to ſecure them, and bind them over, and know by what Authority they dare go abroad with ſuch Weapons. I need not ſay any thing to you in Defence of the King, for it is really and truly your own Defence; and therefore I ſhall proceed into the Heads which are prepared for your Enquiry at this time: our buſineſs here is like to be very great, and our time ſhort, and therefore I ſhall not trouble you with ſmall things, we have greater matters than Aſſaults and Batteries. We have Deſolations and Ruines to ſhew you and ſet before you, and without your care we are like to fall into the Gulph of Miſery and Deſtructions. The firſt thing we have to ſpeak of, is High Treaſon, we have no Petty Treaſon in Ireland. If any ſhall go about to Conſpire the Death of the King, Queen, or the Heir Apparent, the Prince of Wales, this is High Treaſon at all times, it was ſo at Common Law, you muſt look to this betimes, for if a blow be once ſtruck here, there can be no retrieving of it. If any one ſhould go about to Seize the Kings Perſon, or Impriſon him, this Gentlemen is Treaſon, there is but few ſteps between the Priſons and Graves of Kings; and by all the obſervation that I can make out of the Engliſh or Scotch, or Iriſh Hiſtories, where we have had ſwarms of Murdered Kings, that if once they went into Priſon, they ſeldom ever eſcaped with Life. Our King has more reaſon than any to dread this, his Father who now is a glorious Martyr in Heaven loſt his Life, and the King himſelf ever ſince his Eſcape with Colonel Bamfield from St. James's, has had ſo many miraculous Deliverances both by Sea and Land, that we may conclude he is preſerved for ſome mighty matter, or elſe Providence had not done ſuch great things for him; and 'tis but of late that he himſelf is eſcaped out of Priſon. I am told by Authority, and am ordered to tell you, that he is expected in this Kingdom very ſuddenly, as a Place of Refuge. He is the firſt King I think, ſince Henry the Second, except Richard that has been in this Kingdom. It is a great misfortune that he ſhould be forced to it, but we may look upon it as a great Bleſſing, that he ſhould think himſelf ſafe here, when he cannot be ſo elſewhere.

To ſeize any of the King's Forts or Ships of War, for theſe are the Bulwarks to defend him againſt his Enemies, this Gentlemen is Treaſon.

To hold Correſpondence with any of the King's Enemies, or with Rebels in actual Rebellion, or to joyn with them, this is Treaſon; you are not to enquire into the Puniſhment, but to open a Door for the Petty Jury to enquire into the matter of Fact, and what the Law is, ſhall by the Bleſſing of God be our buſineſs.

To Counterfeit the King's Coin, or Clip it, and you have very little of it at this time, therefore you had need be careful in a more eſpecial manner, this likewiſe is Treaſon

It is likewiſe Treaſon to counterfeit the Great Seal of the King, for 'tis the common Security, by which many hold their Eſtates, and ſome their Lives.

The killing of the Chancellor or any of the Judges or Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer in the doing of their Duty, this likewiſe is Treaſon, not ſo much with regard to their Perſons, as to the work that they are about, they repreſenting the King's Perſon. The meaneſt Conſtable there, if he has his Staff in his Hand, and doing his Duty, he that kills him ſhall dye the ſame death, as he that kills the beſt Man that wears Scarlet on the Bench. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you another Crime, and it looks like a mark of Infamy on this Kindom. Murder in England is but Felony, but it has been thought fit to make it Treaſon here, and they that go out on burning and robbing Houſes, they ſhall be indicted for Treaſon. And, Clerk of the Crown, if any ſuch be here, now take notice I will have them indicted for Treaſon.

The next thing for your Enquiry is Felony, that concerning the Life of the Subject; for a Man to kill his Fellow Subject, this is Felony, if he does it on a ſudden paſſion and heat, a Man may kill another in his own Defence; for 'tis natural for a Man to kill rather than be killed, and therefore he ſhall have his Pardon of courſe. But Gentlemen, this is not in favour of Duels, and only where there is a great Provocation, there is not a Man but has ſome paſſion about him, but for a Man to go to bed with Malice, and ariſe the next Morning and go meet his Fellow Subject and kill him, this is Murder and Treaſon in Ireland.

The next thing that is Felony, is concerning the Goods of the Subject, for an honeſt labouring Man, that by the induſtry of his whole Life has gotten a fair ſtock for the maintenance of himſelf, ſelf, his Wife and Children, at night goes to bed, and next Morning when he ariſes, he is a Beggar and wants Bread. Gentlemen, it would make every honeſt Man's Heart bleed to hear what I have heard ſince I came into this County, it is ill in other parts of the Country, but here they ſpare not even the wearing Clothes and Habit of Women and Children, that they are forced to come abroad naked, without any thing to cover their Nakedneſs; ſo that beſides the Oath you have taken, and the Obligation of Chriſtianity that lies upon you as you are Chriſtians, I conjure you by all that is Sacred, and as ever you expect eternal Salvation, that you make diligent Enquiry, let it never be ſaid by any of you, that it was your Neighbour, or your Neighbour's Servant did it, and you are ſorry for it, but will not trouble your ſelves, I tell you it is every Man's buſineſs, and I beſeech you look into it.

To break into any Man's Houſe after night fall is Felony, it is a ſound ſleep that the labouring Man takes, but the idle Rogue that lies lurking and ſleeping all the Day, at Night he ariſes and ſeeks whom he may devour. If you were to do the moſt charitable Work, as building of a Bridge or Chappel, or mending a High-way, how many do you think of theſe Men with half Pikes and Skeines would come to your aſſiſtance? not one of them I'll engage. But if a Houſe or Town be to be Plundered, they all run thither. All Riots and Routs are to be enquired into, numbers of People may meet for their own Defence, if they ſhould hear or ſee the Country robbing and ſpoiling. By a riotous Multitude coming to burn and rob their Houſes, in this Caſe they may meet and defend their Goods, and apprehend the Robbers, in order to bring them to Juſtice; but after all this, they are not to conteſt with the Government, nor do any thing to the Prejudice of that; I told you, I would not trouble you with unneceſſary Matters, all are loſt in the greateſt of Crimes and Outrages that are committed daily in the Country round about.

If I ſhould go through all the Heads of this Charge, it would take up more time than we have to ſpend here, and therefore I ſhall ſhut up all and ſay no more than this, that every Man do apply himſelf to his Husbandry and Tillage, to prevent that imminent danger of an approaching Famine, that ſeems to be coming upon us, and that you make it your buſineſs to ſearch after, and bring to Judgment thoſe Robbers that live on the Mountains, and while you continue to do your Duty, you ſhall have all the Protection the Government can give you. So upon complaint of any Juſtice of the Peace, that ſhall be backward or unwilling to appear againſt them, care ſhall be taken to puniſh ſuch and make them Examples. Go together Gentlemen, and conſider of theſe things.

The Priſoners brought into Court.

Clerk of the Crown. Set John Price to the Bar, Tho. King to the Bar, W. Lewis, James Beacon, William Heatly, Tho. Burroughs to the Bar, &c.

Hold up your Right Hands.

Cl. John Price, Tho. King, &c. You ſtand here indicted for that you on the 25th day of February, in the 5th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, at Ballindery in the County of Wicklow, with divers others wicked Traytors and Rebels, in a warlike manner, then and there did aſſemble your ſelves, and a cruel and open War and Rebellion againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, and his faithful Subjects of this His Majeſties Kingdom of Ireland, did raiſe and levy, and did intend our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and Deſtruction, to bring, and to depoſe him from his Kingly Authority and Government of this his Kingdom of Ireland, and to fulfil and accompliſh this your ſaid traiterous Intentions and Deſigns, you the ſaid Perſons, with others the ſaid wicked Traytors and Rebels, the Day, Year, and Place aforeſaid, did arm your ſelves with divers Warlike Weapons, as well offenſive as defenſive; and did move and excite divers others the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, to joyn themſelves wickedly and traiterouſly, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Duty of your Allegiance, and the Statute in that Caſe made and provided, &c.

Cl. How ſayſt thou John Price, art thou guilty of the Treaſon that thou ſtandeſt here indicted, &c. or not guilty?

Mr. Price. Not Guilty.

Cl. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Priſoner. By God and the Country.

Cl. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Note, The Priſoners were brought into Court in ſeveral Parties, to be Arraigned, as many as the Dock would hold at one time.

The ſecond time the Dock was filled.

Cl. Cr. Set William Fulham to the Bar, &c.

Thady Brine, the High-Sheriff, ſtood up and ſaid, My Lord, Fulham was cleared.

Bar. Lynch. Pray, Sir, who cleared him?

High Sheriff. The Chief Commiſſion'd Officer that was here, Colonel Sheldon did acquit him.

Lynch. He acquit him, how could that be? If there be nothing againſt him, we ſhall acquit him.

J. Keating. Clerk of the Crown, is he indicted?

Cl. Yes, My Lord, a Bill of Indictment is found againſt him.

Pendergaſs the Sub Sheriff. My Lord, I will tell you, Mr. Sheriff is miſtaken; there was ſome Boys diſcharged, and he thinks Fulham is one of thoſe Boys.

Lynch. Sir, you do well to reflect on your Imployer.

High Sheriff to the Sub-Sheriff. You have done this to get Money for your ſelf: My Lord, Fulham was not concern'd at all, and therefore was diſcharg'd.

Priſoner Lewis. My Lord, we are ſo crouded with a File of Muſqueteers and a Serjeant, that they take up our Chairs, that we cannot ſit down; and they come with their lighted Matches to our very Noſes, and laſt Night a Piece went off in the Room among us, we have not the conveniency of quiet Repoſe, nor our Friends the liberty of ſeeing us. My Lord, we were not born Lawyers, therefore deſire we may have our Friends come to us, and Council to adviſe with.

This Lewis and Lord Galmoy are Brother and Siſters Children, and was offered a Troop if he would turn Papiſt.

J. Keating. Mr. Lewis, you have been bred to the Law; but you ſhall have Council allowed you; And you, Mr. Sheriff, you are not to keep them with Fire-Arms, nor with Souldiers. I ſaw a Centry at this Door Yeſterday, and forbad it—

I

I remember that when Warren, Jephson, and Thompson were tryed in 1663. for a Design to surprize Dublin-Caſtle, becauſe this was a great matter, forſooth, they muſt be guarded with Souldiers——— (They were tryed at the King's Bench; and ſeveral Perſons deſirous to ſee or hear, being gotten up into the Arch in the Wall next the Court of Common-Pleas,) as they were going up ſtairs, a Piece went off, and ſhot a Man through the Head. I tell you Mr. Sheriff, that Brown Bill is your Guard (pointing at one in Court) the Law knows nothing of Fire Arms; (ſpeaking to the Priſoners) Gentlemen, I muſt tell you plainly, that I received Directions from my Lord Deputy (by the Attorney General) that you ſhould have all the Juſtice imaginable.

Bar. Lynch. Mr. Sheriff, you muſt Command thoſe Souldiers to be Civil, they are your Guards when you employ them.

Seventy Priſoners were Arraign'd and return'd back to Priſon; 31 more that were indicted, and upon Bail, did not appear.

Next day———Thurſday March the 7th they were again brought to Court to their Tryals; and the Jury was Impannel'd, whoſe Names were as followeth, Papiſts marked thus † viz.

Jaylor, ſet the Priſoners to the Bar.

Cl. Cr. You good Men that are to try the ſeveral Iſſues between the King and John Price, &c. and other Priſoners at the Bar, that ſhall be given you in Charge, &c. Jury, look at the Priſoners; Priſoners, look at the Jury, &c.

Cl. Cr. Thomas Cowdell, to the Book.

Priſoner Lewis. I challenge him.

Cl. What is your Cauſe of challenge?

Lewis. I challenge him peremptorily.

Deputy K's Council, Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, before they begin their Challenges; let us know whether they will all agree in their Challenges; otherwiſe we muſt be forc'd to Try them ſeverally.

It was at length agreed, That if any one made a peremptory Challenge, the other Priſoners were to be ſatisfied with it.

Coll. Tool on the Bench, ſpeaking to the L. Chief J. Keating. My Lord, Mr. Lewis has been Sub-Sheriff of the County, and knows all that have Freehold.

J. Keating. It is the better for himſelf that he does know them.

Priſoner Lewis continued to Challenge, until they had gone through the Pannel, and only two Gentlemen that were Proteſtants, Mr. Cradock, and Mr. Pew, were Sworn.

Cl. Cr. Mr. Sheriff, a New Pannel ——The Sheriff gave in another of Eleven in number, which were all likewiſe challeng'd by Mr. Lewis. ——Whilſt both the High and Sub-Sheriff were looking about the Court, for to make up a third Pannel. Says

L. C. J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, How many Freeholders have you on the Grand-Jury?

Sheriff. Six or Seven, my Lord.

J. Keating. You have been ſparing enough of your Freeholders. The Law requires that all the Grand-Jury ſhould be Freeholders, and have you but ſix?

Sheriff. —— There is but very few Freeholders in the County, My Lord.

C. Fitz-Patrick. — In Caſes of neceſſity, my Lord.

J. Keating. You know the Law is ſo.

C. Fitz-Patrick. Yes, there is a Statute for it.

J. Keating. — The Priſoner for his Life may challenge Twenty peremptorily, without ſhewing cauſe; and the whole World for want of Freehold —— And ſhall I put ſuch a one on for his Life? Sir, I will not be hang'd for any Body.

Fitz-Patrick. Was ever a Judge hang'd?

Mr. Handcock, Council for the Priſoners. Yes, above twenty in a few Years.

J. Keating. Mr. Fitz-Patrick, I will not be hanged with Juſtice Belknap, nor Treſſilian neither.

C. Handcock. My Lord, they were hanged at Tyburn.

J. Keating. I think they were.——The greateſt part of this County is in the hands of two or three Men, my Lord Strafford and Roſs.

J. Keating. Who is here that is concern'd for my Lord Strafford, and my Lord Roſs?

Court. Here is Dr. Hall on the Bench, for the Lord Strafford, and the Sheriff is concerned for my Lord Roſs.

J. Keating. Dr. Hall, and you Mr. Sheriff, let me tell you, I do not know but that their Lordſhips have forfeited their Eſtates, for this day's work. In the Act for Plantation, there was proviſion made for Freeholds, and there were enough before the Wars. I fear theſe great Lords have ſwallowed up the Freeholds their Anceſtors made. I only tell you this.

The Sheriff by this time had drawn up a third Pannel, being eight in number.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, have you all your Freeholders here?

Sheriff. My Lord, we ſummoned all here.

J. Keating. On the firſt Pannel you might have Return'd forty, becauſe you do not know how far Peremptory Challenges will run; and you are obliged after to Return a fewer Number when you enlarge your Pannel, but you can never enlarge it farther than it was at firſt.

Cl. Cr. Birne, to the Book.

Priſ. Lewis. I Challenge him for want of Freehold.

J. Keating. Mr. Birne, have you a Freehold in this County?

Birne. My Lord, I have a Leaſe of Lives.

Priſ. Weſtland. I Challenge him peremptorily.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you begin to Challenge? This ſhall not be allowed you, to Challenge one upon another.

C. Hancock. My Lord, you are Council for the Priſoners.

Lynch. Sir, you are not to tell me my Duty; I will have you to know, Sir, I ſhall give an Account for my ſelf. I am Judge for the King too, as well as Council for the Priſoners; and I am concern'd for the King.

J. Keating. (turning towards him.) And do you think I am not concern'd as well as you?

Lynch. Yes, my Lord, I ſpeak for you as well as my ſelf.

Coun. Fitzpatrick. My Lord, they agreed at firſt, that one Man ſhould Challenge for them all — At this rate we are never like to get a Jury for them; it is but an ill ſign of their Innocency, that they are not willing to come to a Tryal.

Mr. Handcock, Council for the Priſoners. } In the Peremptory Challenges they agreed (but not in the Challenges for Freehold) and this peremptory Challenge we will ſtand by.

J. Keating. I will tell you how I underſtood it; that in their Peremptory Challenges, if any one of them Challeng'd, the reſt ſhould be concluded by it; Mr. Weſtland has made a Peremptory Challenge, and they are willing to ſtand by that—however, Mr. Birne, ſtand by, do not go away, we may call you again. Clerk of the Crown, proceed, — &c. — which he did, until he ended the Third Pannel.

Sub-Sheriff calls Will. Baker. My Lord, he has a Free-hold.

Baker. My Lord, I have no Free-hold.

Keating. You ſee the Sub Sheriff is a fit Man to be an Officer; he is blind — he is indifferent.

High Sheriff calls Peter Ayris. An. He is on the Grand-Jury.

Keating. Mr. Sheriff, why do you call ſuch?

Sheriff. I ſaw him in Court, and ſo I called him, my Lord.

J. Keating. There is already but five Peremptory Challenges made, ſo that they may Challenge fifteen more peremptorily; and there is but two Sworn, ſo that there wants ten.

Cl. Cr. Sheriff, ſee if you can get any more.

Sheriff. I ſee never a Free-holder in the Court.

C. Fitz-patrick. My Lord, the Sheriff ought to be puniſhed for his Neglect.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, why did you not take care to Return a Jury of Free-holders? You ſhall be Fined for it.

High Sheriff. My Lord, I have Return'd all the Free-holders there is in the County (I ſent yeſterday above Twenty Miles for one Gentleman here;) They are all gone out of the Country;—I hope you do not expect I ſhould go to the North, or Iſle of Man, or England, or Scotland, among the Rebels, to Summon them.

J. Keating. I do really believe you, Mr. Sheriff, you have done like an honeſt Man; —— Mr. Fitz patrick, what do you ſay in this Caſe?

Fitz-patrick. My Lord, I cannot tell what to ſay.

Deputy King's Coun. Hamond. } What if there was not one Freeholder in the County, muſt not Juſtice be done?

J. Keating. Can we make a Law for it?

Hamond. My Lord, I know that in caſe of an Ejectment, a Tryal has been removed from one County to another.

J. Keating. Can you by Law go to another County in Caſe of Life?

Hamond. It appears there is not ſufficient Free-holders in this County, the Lands being in ſome few hands.

J. Keating. You know the Law is otherwiſe, and what would you have us that are Judges, do? Pray tell us, Sir, what you would be at?

Hamond. We would have it removed to the next County, or another County.

J. Keating. For Gods ſake, Mr. Hamond, do not put us on making Law.

Lynch. Mr. Hamond, when did you hear, that ever a Matter Capital was tryed in a Foreign County? In matters Civil, by Rule of Court, or Order of Chancery it may be, but of a Capital Offence it was never known; and we are by our Commiſſion to Try Offences committed againſt the Law in the Counties where the Fact was committed. — We muſt Try them in this County, and cannot remove them from one County to another.

J. Keating. Mr. Hamond, becauſe I would take you off of this new Law that you ſo much inſiſt on, that in caſe of an Ejectment it may be Tryed in a Foreign County —— I tell you it cannot be Tryed in a Foreign County: We have no Law for it but that of K. James, and the Reaſon was, becauſe of the Story that was here on foot, for an Heir Male, if Collateral he carried it againſt the Heir general. K. James he gave direction that in that caſe it ſhould be Tryed in a different County. And that my Brother tells you of Trying in a different County, by order of Chancery is this, A perſon comes in Chancery, and he ſuggeſts, that ſuch an one was too potent in ſuch a County, and therefore he deſired it might be Tryed in an indifferent County, or get ſuch a Rule of Court on ſuch a ſuggeſtion. And this was the caſe of the Archbiſhop of——, when he was Biſhop of Limerick. And if Walcot might be believed, he ſaid, was the occaſion of his running into Rebellion.

C. There is a Caſe in Hobart, &c.

J. Keating. I would undeceive you in that particular. As in the Caſe of Auſten and Collonel Garret Moor. If in the County of Galloway it was Auſtens, if in the Kings County it was Colonel Moors. So that you ſee in diſputable Caſes, the Law has regard, that it be Tryed by Juries in proper Counties. And truly I think it one of the moſt reaſonable Laws in the world, that a man ſhall be Tryed by his Country, by the Neighbourhood; and it has given ground to a good Engliſh Proverb, He that has an ill Name is half Hanged. A Mans Repute among his Neighbours goes a great way in this matter. When his Neighbours ſhall ſay they never knew ill by him. And this Man to be carried out of the County of Wicklow, to be Tryed at Wexford, you may by the ſame rule bring a Jury from Tyrone, or the fartheſt part of Connaught. There is nothing like what you ſay in the Law.

Hamond.

Hamond. I do not ſay that ever I met with ſuch a thing in the Law.

Lynch. And do you think that we will make the Precedent?

Hamond. That two or three perſons ſhould have almoſt the whole County.

J. Keating. Before God I believe they think they have little enough, whatever you may think of their having too much.

Lynch. What you ſay Mr. Hamond, if there be any thing in it, we ſhall adviſe with all the Judges. The Judges declaring their Opinion, that the Priſoners after being Arraigned, could not be admitted to Bayl.

C. Suxborough, to Baron Lynch. My Lord, you took Bayl for Captain Ruth at Kilkenny, after his Arraignment.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you reflect on me? There was no Evidence appeared, and my Brother bayled him as well as I.

Suxborough. I ſay he was Bayled.

Hancock. My Lord, Mr. Cooper at Galaway was Bayled by your Lordſhip likewiſe.

L.C.J. Keating ſent privately to Dublin to the Deputy, acquainting him, that if they were left in priſon untill the next Aſſizes, they would certainly periſh, they having loſt all they had, and the County was not able to maintain them; upon which he received Orders to Bayl all but Seven of the Principal, viz.

John Price Eſq;	James Bacon.
Tho. King.	Joſeph Crichley.
William Lewis.

Who are kept cloſe Priſoners in order to their Tryal the next Aſſizes, which will be in this Month of July. Upon the taking theſe Gentlemen Priſoners, the Souldiers and Rabble plundered and ſpoyled all the Engliſh Families in Balinderry, Redrum, Balina-Claſh, &c. and the Iriſh Women with their Skeans came afterwards and ſtript the Women and Children Naked, leaving them in a moſt miſerable and deplorable condition, having not left them either Bread, or any Food in ſeveral Towns, but carried all away with them. And as an Iriſh man a Tanner declared to ſeveral at the Aſſizes, in the hearing of this Relator, That one Captain Toole had for his ſhare Twenty ſix Horſe Loads (or more) of Plunder; and the Lord of Lowths Troop of Dragoons that were quartered in Wicklow Town, had great quantities of Woollen and Linen Cloth, Womens Cloaths, Pewter and other Goods in abundance. But the L. C. J. Keating coming there to the Aſſizes, and having an account of the extream poverty and miſery the Proteſtants thereabouts were reduced to, did encourage their Petitioning, and where they could find their Cloaths, &c. he endeavoured to help them in the recovery of them. And Mr. Richard Lamb having Ten fat Bullocks taken away by Collonel Tooles men, and brought to Wicklow, and there killed and eaten by the Souldiers. He preferred a Petition to the Court, Colonel Toole being preſent on the Bench.

L. C. J. Keating Collonel Toole, you heard the Petition read; do you know any thing of theſe Oxen Mr. Lamb had taken from him by your Soldiers?

C. Toole. My Lord, I will tell you how it was; Mr. Lamb had ſold the Bullocks to Mr. Price, and as they were driving them to Balenderry, the Soldiers met them and took them away.

L. C. J. Keating. But Mr. Lamb was at home at his own Houſe, and not at Balinderry, the Bullocks were to be paid for upon Mr. Lambs delivering them to Mr. Price at Balinderry, your Souldiers took them away from his Servant ſeveral miles from Balenderry; I ſee no reaſon why Mr. Lamb ſhould not be paid for them.

C. Toole. My Lord, Colonel Sheldon came down ſoon after with the Kings Army, and I adviſed with him, and he ordered they ſhould be killed for the Army, which was done accordingly.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Colonel Toole however, Mr. Lamb ought to be paid for them; he was not concerned with Balinderry, but kept his own Houſe.

Council Fitzpatrick. My Lord, his Houſe was a Garriſon too.

Mr. Hancock. For ſhame Mr. Fitzpatrick, a Thatcht Cabin a Gariſon; I find you are for making all Proteſtants Rebels that live peaceably at home in their own Houſes.

C. Toole. My Lord, I have no more to ſay to the matter.

Clerk of the Crown. Calling over the Gentlemen of the County, called one —— Savil Gent.

Savil. Here I am, my Lord, God knows, a poor Gentleman, being Robb'd of all, and not a penny left me to buy a pint of drink.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Sir when were you Rob'd?

Savil. The laſt Wedneſday they came and took away what little they had left untaken before, my Wife and Childrens Cloaths, Robbing me of all.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Sir, what value may your loſs be?

Mr. Savil. Truly my Lord, I have not yet computed my loſs, but they have taken away all; I deſire your Lordſhip will diſcharge me from attending the Court, for I have not wherewithal to ſubſiſt while I am here.

L. C. J. Keating Sir I am ſorry for you, I diſcharge you.

L. C. J. Keating. Colonel Toole, Let the Officers be ſent for into Court, to hear this Proclamation read, that is ſent down here by the Government.

Toole. My Lord, they are here moſt of them, here is Captain Archbold, Captain Toole, &c.

Clerk of the Crown. Read the Proclamation, the ſubſtance whereof was, That they ſhould reſtore the Proteſtants ſuch of their Horſes again, as were not fit for the Kings Service, &c.

J. Keating. Calls for it from the Clerk, and giving it to Colonel Tools hand, who ſtood next him on the Bench, Sir, Pray take this Proclamation, and I hope you will take care that obedience be given to it.

Toole. My Lord, we have received other Orders, Colonel Sheldon who is our Chief Commander, has given directions to have them kept for Draught for Carriages.

J. Keating. Nay, Sir, if Colonel Sheldon muſt be obeyed before the Government, I have no more to ſay, I have done.

Toole. My Lord, I ſhall obey it.

J. Keating. Pray then Col. Toole, let the Horſes be ſent for, while that I am here, that what Horſes are not muſterable may be return'd: I cannot in my Conſcience go about to fine Men, Men, for not appearing at the Aſſizes, when they have not a Horſe left them to ride on.

The further Proceedings at the Aſſizes at Wicklow, in Ireland: Being an account of the Tryal of ſeveral Felons, &c. March, the 6th and 7th, 1688-9.

SEveral were Arraigned for ſtealing conſiderable Numbers of Cows, Sheep, &c. but the Evidence againſt moſt of them durſt not appear to proſecute.

Leaghlin Birne Indicted for ſtealing Nine Head of black Cattle, from one Colwell: No Perſon appearing to proſecute, ſays,

J. Keating (to the Jury): Gentlemen, you have nothing againſt this Man; he was born in the ſtate of Innocency: But the truth is, the Parties dare not appear againſt him.

Witneſſes came in againſt three Fellows, (viz.) Maurice Cavenagh, Edmond Poor, William Bowland.

Clerk of the Crown, calling them to come and proſecute and they appearing.

J. Keating. You that are Evidences againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, I charge you as you will anſwer it before God, that you neither for favour or affection be inclined to ſpare any of theſe Villains; and likewiſe, that you will conceal nothing of the Truth, as you will anſwer it at the Great Day; for I tell you, the Cries and Groans of the poor Women and Children, and the many Families that are ruined, and in great Diſtreſs, will go up to Heaven againſt you.

Evidence againſt Ed. Poor. My Lord, when I came to him, and asked him, why he ſtole my Cows? He ſaid, The Devil did make him do it. I ſpake him fair, and he gave me Money for my Cows.

Poor. I, my Lord, and he promiſed not to trouble me.

J. Keating. It was an unlawful Promiſe, the Law would not juſtifie him in it; he has done like an honeſt Man: If you paid the Money out of Conſcience, you did well; but I fear it was your danger of the Halter made you part with your Money; for if 22 s. and Damnation ſtood in the way, I believe you would have kept the Money: I am ſure without Satisfaction you cannot expect Abſolution; the Prieſt that gave the other Advice, for the Maddoge or Skean, will, I ſuppoſe, tell you ſo.

Two Proteſtant Evidences againſt Maurice Cavenagh, for ſtealing ſeveral Head of black Cattle, hearing Judge Keating ſpeak againſt Skeans, ſaid, Evidence. My Lord, when we ſeized him, we took a Skean away from him.

J. Keating. Sir, How durſt you carry ſuch an unlawful Weapon?

Cavenagh. My Lord, I am a Butcher, it was a Butcher's Knife.

J. Keating. Ay, I do not queſtion but thou canſt butcher upon occaſion.

One Hicky ſpoke. My Lord, he is no Butcher; but one of the greateſt Rogues in the County round us. I have been in purſuit of him ſeveral times.

Cavenagh. He is a Murderer, my Lord, do not believe him.

Evidence. My Lord, it was near ten Inches long, thick at the back, and ſharp point, every way a Skean.

J. Keating. Is that your Butcher's Knife? you are a great Villain, for carrying ſuch a Weapon.

Cavenagh. I was order'd to have a Skean, my Lord.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, who order'd you?

Cavenagh. The Prieſt of the Pariſh.

J. Keating. A Prieſt, Sir, (turning to his Brother Judge) Do you hear that Brother?

Bar. Lynch. What Prieſt, Sir? What Prieſt? What is your Prieſt's Name?

J. Keating. Hold Brother. Come, Sir, I ſhall not ask your Prieſt's Name; I believe you will have occaſion to ſee your Prieſt ſoon, to do you a better Office, than to adviſe you to carry Skeans.

(And looking towards Coll. Tool, and two Prieſts on the Bench, next Sheriff Birne.)

J. Keating. A Prieſt, Gentlemen; a Prieſt is a Miniſter, and a Miniſter of the Goſpel, his Doctrine ought to be Peace, for the Goſpel is a Doctrine of Peace: When our Saviour came into the World, Peace was proclaimed; and when he went out of the World, he left it for a Legacy to his Diſciples: My Peace be with you. And pray, Sir, tell your Prieſt ſo from me, when you ſee him. It is not for Prieſts to arm or animate ſuch Villains as you are for Miſchief. I ſhall not ask your Prieſt's Name.

Clancy an Iriſh Gentleman. My Lord, he belies the Prieſt; he is a Rogue.

Cavenagh. I do not: The Prieſts of every Pariſh did give Orders to get Half-pikes, and Skeans; and they were getting together in Companies, in every Pariſh.

J. Keating. Who were they that were gotten together; ſuch Fellows as you?

Cavenagh. No, my Lord, better Men than I; a great many that are here in Court.

The Jury withdrawing, and returning ſoon again, brought Poor and Bowland in guilty, Cavenagh not guilty.

J. Keating. Gentlemen, you have acquitted the greater Villain; at your Door let it lie.

The Ordinary being called to give Bowland and Poor the Book, for their Clergy.

J. Keating. Sir, I expect as true a Return from you, as if I were there my ſelf: The Times are ſo that Men muſt forget Bowels of Mercy. Ordinary, do your Duty: What place do you ſhew them?

Ordinary. My Lord, I ſhew them the 50*th Pſalm.*

J. Keating. Let them read the 5th Verſe—This is an Act of Mercy; and I know not why it ſhould not be in Iriſh rather, the Country Language; it was formerly in Latin, becauſe the Romiſh Church hath their Worſhip in Latin.

The Ordinary return'd them both (Non Legit).

J. Keating. You William Bowland, and you Edmund Poor, you have been Arraigned for ſtealing of Cows, two ſeveral Thefts: It is a great misfortune and ſin to be guilty of ſuch Crimes at any time; but yours is ſo much the worſe, becauſe it falls in a time when there are ſuch general and vaſt Depredations in the Country; that many honeſt Men go to Bed poſſeſt of conſiderable Stocks of black and white Cattle, (gotten by great labour and pains, the Induſtry of their whole Lives) and in the Morning when they ariſe, not any thing left them; but turn'd out of all, to go a begging, all being taken away by Rebels, by Thieves and Robbers, the Sons

Sons of Violence, that make every thing they lay their Hands on their own. On this side the Cape of Good Hope; (where are the most brutish and barbarous People we read of) there is none like the People of this Country; nor so great a Desolation as in this Kingdom, at this day, any where to be found, and particularly in this County: It is come to that pass, that a Man that loses the better part of his Substance, chuses rather to let that, and what he has besides go, than come to give Evidence: And why? Because he is certain to have his House burnt, and his Throat cut, if he appears against them. Good God! what a pass are we come to! For what has any Man, if the stronger Hand can take it from him; it is better to live under no Law, than in such a place. We have lived to see twenty nine Years of Peace pass over our Heads: And I have sat on this Bench before now; I pray God, that my Lenity and others, has not given Encouragement to these Thieves and Robbers; there may be a Rogue in the Court, or one that is evilly inclined (I know none) but take notice of this, the Government is at length tyr'd with Mercy, they see it does no good; and Examples and Punishments of this kind, are not intended so much in a great part for the Punishment of the Offender, as for discouraging of others; to make them take warning by their Example, that, seeing what evil Courses bring Men to, they may reform.

I will not take up time to tell you how the benefit of Clergy came; whether in the room of the Cities of Refuge that were in the old times; I know that Restitution was under the Jewish Law sufficient Satisfaction; and if the Thief could not make Restitution, he was to be sold for a Slave, and the Money given to the Party. But as the World grows old, it grows worse, and those Lenitives signifie nothing for preventing Thieving and Robbery; for Thieves and Robbers are like a Gangreen in the Commonwealth, they are worse than Drones in the Hive. I cannot tell my self, that under the Circumstances we are in, I should advise to pardon any that are taken in this general Depredation that we are under, and therefore you Bowland and Poore, that might have lived as safely under the Laws, as the biggest Man in the Kingdom, and none of your fellow Subjects durst lay his Hand upon you, but he was liable to answer for it; and thus you might have lived to a fair old age, and ended your days in Peace, but you have chosen the quite contrary, for the Law provides likewise for the Punishment of wicked and offending Persons, among which number you are found by a Jury of Twelve able Men of your Country; and therefore the Sentence of the Law is this, That you be both and each of you taken from this place, to the place from whence you came, and there your Irons to be struck off, and from thence to the place of Execution, and there you shall be Hanged by the Neck till you are dead, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

And now let me give you advice, your time is short, spend it well, and flatter not your selves with the hopes of a Reprieve or Pardon; and for you Poore, you have shortned the work of your Life, you have gone a great way towards Heaven, if that Restitution you made was out of Conscience. Mr. Sheriff, let them have a Confessor sent to them, for Saturday is the day of their Execution. The Women their Friends setting up the Cry in the Court.

J. Keating. They did not cry thus when the Cows were brought home to them, they were busied then in the killing and the powdring them up.

The Copy of a Protection or Pass, given by an Irish Officer to some notorious Robbers of the County of Wicklow.

I James Byrne, Ensign to Captain Charles Byrne, do hereby certifie to you, Terlagh Kelly, Patrick Byrne, and Patrick Mac-Teige, and William Doyle, to save you harmless from any Misdemeanors whatsoever. As witness my Hand this 24th of April, 1689. James Byrne.

The following Letter being sent by the Lord-Deputy to the Judges of Assize, was read in Court to the Grand-Jury, &c.

By the Lord-Deputy, General, and General Governour of Ireland.

After Our hearty Commendations, We Greet you well. As His Majesty was graciously pleased to entrust us with the Government of this his Kingdom, so upon the Invading of England, and upon receiving certain Information, that the Prince of Orange doth intend also to invade this Realm. We have, for the Defence thereof, raised a considerable Army, far above what could be maintained by the King's Revenue at the best of Times, and when the Trade of this Country was in the most flourishing Condition; this we have done by the King's Command, to support his Regal Authority, Crown and Dignity, and to preserve the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of all his Liege People within this Kingdom. And since our Dangers are at hand, and that we may daily expect the Landing of an Enemy, who intends the Subversion of His Majesty's Government, the total Destruction of all his good Subjects. Here we find our selves under an absolute Necessity to keep the King's Army still on foot, in order to our Preservation from the approaching Dangers. And tho' we have hitherto with all the Care and Industry imaginable, and by the generous Concurrence of the Officers, supported the new raised Forces, without being a Burthen to any of His Majesty's People. Yet considering the decay of Trade, the great fall of the Revenue in these distracted Times, the great Charges the Officers have been at in subsisting Men, it cannot be expected that the standing Forces can hereafter be maintained without Supplies; and since the same cannot be done by Parliament, We cannot think of a more effectual Expedient, than by voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the People; which if generously done, with what may be made of the Revenue, may support the Army, and will stop all the Disorders that may be committed by the Souldiers, which we shall always endeavour to prevent with all the Care and Industry possible. By this Husbandry may go on as formerly, and we shall be in a Capacity to form the Army so, as that, with the Assistance of Almighty God, we do not doubt to put this Kingdom in a perfect posture of Defence. We do therefore pray your Lordships to Recommend this weighty Matter effectually at the open Assizes in every County when you sit, to all the Inhabitants of such Counties, and to appoint the respective Sheriffs of such Counties, to procure voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the Inhabitants of such

Counties,

Counties, of ſome certain Sum of Money from each, to be ſubſcribed to their Names, to be afterwards ſatisfied by them reſpectively, in Money, Wheat, Oats, or Oatmeal, towards the Maintenance of the Army, to be paid in, or delivered to the reſpective Sheriffs, or their Order, and in ſuch places as the ſaid Sheriffs ſhall reſpectively appoint, from whom we expect an account of their Proceedings herein, and a Copy of ſuch Subſcriptions as ſhall be made. We do not doubt but every True and Loyal Subject will, according to his Ability, and the Excellency of the Subject matter, generouſly and chearfully Contribute towards the carrying on of ſo great, ſo neceſſary, and ſo glorious a Work. We expect your diligent Care herein, and ſo we bid you heartily Farewel. From His Majeſty's Caſtle of Dublin, the Second Day of March, 1688. Your very Loving Friend, Tyrconnel.

An Anſwer to the foregoing Letter being drawn up by the Grand Jury, and entred into their Book, and preſented to Sir Henry Lynch, ſetting forth the extream Poverty of their County, occaſioned by the daily Ruin of the Engliſh, &c. That they were not in a Capacity to ſubſiſt themſelves, and therefore not capable to raiſe any thing conſiderable for the Army; (Chief Juſtice Keating returning to Dublin, and leaving Baron Lynch to go on to the other Counties, &c.) the ſaid Lynch told the Grand Jury before he diſcharged them, that the Writing they had drawn up, was a Reflection and Scandal to their Country, would be taken very ill by the Government, and did not queſtion but it would be brought in hereafter as an Evidence againſt them; and therefore order'd it ſhould be torn out of the Book, which was done accordingly.

Anno Regni Domini Willielmi & Dominæ Mariæ, Angl. &c. Secundo. Die Veneris, 16. die Januarii, Anno Dom. 1690. The King and Queen's Writ of Habeas Corpora was ſent to the Governour of the Tower of London, to bring up the Bodies of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, Viſcount Preſton in the Kingdom of Scotland, John Aſhton and Edmund Elliot, Gent. to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, London; where they were brought between the Hours of Ten and Eleven in the Forenoon; and being placed at the Bar, were Arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treaſon, found the Day before by the Grand-Jury for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's-Hall, in manner following.

Cl of Arraignments. SIR Richard Grahme, hold up your hand, (which he did, and ſo the other two.)—You ſtand indicted by the Names of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Pariſh of St. Anne within the Liberty of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Baronet; John Aſhton, late of the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden in the County aforeſaid, Gentleman; and Edmond Elliot, late of the Pariſh of St. James within the Liberty aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Gent. for that you, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent Princes William and Mary, King and Queen of England, Defenders of the Faith, &c. your Sovereign Lord and Lady, not having the fear of God in your Hearts, nor weighing the duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which every true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, towards them our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen ſhould, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and contriving, practiſing, and with all your ſtrength intending the Peace and Common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb; and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, change and alter; and our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, from the Title, Honour, and Royal Name of the Imperial Crown of this their Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen to death, and final deſtruction to bring and put; you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot, the nine and twentieth day of December, in the ſecond year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are; and and divers other days and times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforeſaid, Falſly, Maliciouſly, Devilliſhly, and Traiterouſly, with Force and Arms, &c with divers falſe Rebels and Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did Conſpire, Treat of, Compaſs, Imagine, and intend our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, (your ſupreme and natural Lord and Lady) from the Royal State, Crown, Title, Power, and Government of their Kingdom of England, to Deprive, Depoſe, and Caſt down; and the ſame our Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Kill, and bring and put to Death; and the Government of this Kingdom of England to Change, Alter, and wholly to Subvert; and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within their Kingdom of England, to Cauſe and Procure; and an Inſurrection, War, and Rebellion againſt Our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to Move, Procure, and Aid; and the ſame your moſt evil, wicked, and Devilliſh Treaſons, and Traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmond Elliot, as falſe Traitors, then and there, to wit, the ſaid Ninie and twentieth day of December, in the ſaid ſecond Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and divers other days and times, as well before, as after, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterouſly, did Propoſe, Conſult, and agree to Procure and Prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen, within this Kingdom of England to Levy and Make; And that you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, afterwards, to wit, the ſame Nine and twentieth day of December, in the aforeſaid ſecond year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, at the Pariſh of St Clement Danes aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, did Prepare, and Compoſe, and then and there did Cauſe, and Procure to be Prepared, and Compoſed, ſeveral Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in writing, to ſhew and inform Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and very many other evil-diſpoſed Perſons, and falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for, and on the behalf of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, then, and there deſigned and prepared for the defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies aforeſaid to repel and reſiſt; and how ſome of the ſame Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of ſeveral of the ſaid Ships; and how the Caſtles and Fortreſſes of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, called Portſmouth, South-Sea, and Goſport, within this Kingdom of England, were ſtrengthened and fortified, and how the ſame Caſtles and Fortreſſes, into the hands and poſſeſſion of Enemies and falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, might be taken and ſeized; as alſo of the time, places, ways, manners, and means by which, when, and where the ſame Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, this Kingdom of England might invade and infeſt; and the ſame Enemies, and the Ships of the Enemies of this Kingdom of England, ſhould fight againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects; as alſo to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, Aſſiſtance and Armed Men, our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, from their Royal State and Government of this Kingdom of England to caſt down and Depoſe, and to ſtir up, promote, and procure the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, (then, and yet an Enemy of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen) this Kingdom of England to Invade; and to ſend Ships within this Kingdom of England, the City of London, of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Plague; as alſo to cauſe very many Subjects of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Riſe, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen within this Kingdom of England to move, procure, make, and levy. And you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott afterwards, to wit, the ſame day and Year, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex, of and for the ſame your Treaſons and Traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to execute, fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect into your Hands, Cuſtody, and Poſſeſſion, then and there ſecretly, Knowingly, Unlawfully, and Traiterouſly did obtain, procure, detain, had, concealed, and kept two ſeveral Bills of Exchange then before made, for the Payment of ſeveral Sums of Money to the Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are; as alſo very many Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in Writing, then and there compoſed and prepared with that intent to ſhew and inform Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, and very many other Evil Diſpoſed Perſons, and Falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force and Condition of the Ships, for and on the behalf of them our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen of England, then and there deſigned, and prepared for the Defence of their Kingdom of England, and to Repel, and Reſiſt their Enemies, and how ſome of the ſame Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of divers of the ſame Ships, and how the Caſtles and Fortreſſes of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen called Portſmouth, South-Sea and Goſport, within this Kingdom of England, were Strengthned, and Fortified; and how the ſame Caſtles and Forts into the Hands and Poſſeſſion of Enemies and falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen, might be taken and ſeized; as alſo the Times, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when, and

'where the ſame Enemies of our ſaid Lord and 'Lady the King and Queen, this Kingdom of 'England might Invade, and Inſeſt, and the 'Enemies, and Ships of the Enemies of this 'Kingdom of England ſhould Fight againſt the 'ſame our Lord and Lady the King and Queen 'of England, and their faithful Subjects; as alſo 'to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain a-'gainſt our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and 'Queen, Aſſiſtance and Armed Men, to Invade 'this Kingdom of England, and our ſaid Lord 'and Lady the King and Queen that now are, 'from their Royal State and Government of this 'Kingdom of England, to caſt down and depoſe, 'and to ſtir up, promote, and procure the afore-'ſaid Lewis the French King then, and yet an 'Enemy of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King 'and Queen, to Invade this Kingdom of Eng-'land, and to ſend Ships within this Kingdom of 'England, the City of London, of our ſaid Lord 'and Lady the King and Queen to plague; as 'alſo to cauſe very many Subjects of our ſaid 'Lord and Lady the King and Queen, to Riſe, 'and War, and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord 'and Lady the King and Queen, within this 'Kingdom of England, to move, procure, make, 'and levy. And you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, 'John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, afterwards, to 'wit, the Thirtieth day of December, now 'laſt paſt, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St Cle-'ment Danes, in the County of Midâleſex, con-'cerning, and for the ſame your Treaſons, and 'Traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and 'Purpoſes aforeſaid, to execute, fulfil, perfect, 'and bring to Effect, for One Hundred Pounds 'in Moneys, numbred by you the ſaid Sir Rich-'ard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, 'then and there paid, and depoſited, unlawfully 'and Traiterouſly did hire and prepare, and 'then and there did cauſe and procure to be hi-'red and prepared a certain Ship, and three 'Men; you, the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John 'Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, with the ſaid Bills 'of Exchange, and the aforeſaid Traiterous 'Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructi-'ons in Writing, into the Hands, Cuſtody and 'Poſſeſſion of you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, 'John Aſhton*, and Edmund Elliott, ſecretly, un-'lawfully, and traiterouſly, kept concealed and 'detained, from this Kingdom of England, unto, 'and into France, in Parts beyond the Seas, then 'and yet under the Rule and Government of the 'ſaid Lewis the French King, then and yet an 'Enemy of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King 'and Queen, ſecretly to carry and tranſport, 'with that intent the ſaid Bills of Exchange, 'Traiterous Letters, Notes and Memorandums, 'and Inſtructions in Writing there in parts be-'yond the Seas, to the Enemies of our ſaid 'Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and o-'ther Evil-diſpoſed Perſons to deliver and diſ-'perſe. And the ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, 'and Traiterous Compaſſings and Imaginations 'aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, 'as alſo to cauſe, promote and procure the afore-'ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady, the 'King and Queen, to invade this Kingdom of 'England with Ships and Armed Men. And 'you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, 'and Edmund Elliott, afterwards, to wit, the '30th Day of December now laſt paſt, at the 'aforeſaid Pariſh of St Clement Danes, in the 'County aforeſaid, concerning, and for the 'ſame your Treaſons, and Traiterous Compa-'ſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, 'to execute and fulfil, maliciouſly, traiterouſly, 'and adviſedly, then and there, and diverſe o-'ther days and times, as well before as after, 'took upon your ſelves to very many other 'Traytors to be aiding and aſſiſting in the Exe-'cution of the Treaſons, and Traiterous Com-'paſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; 'and then and there, to wit, the ſame 30th 'day of December now laſt paſt, at the Pariſh of 'St. Clement Danes, in the County aforeſaid, ma-'liciouſly, ſecretly and traiterouſly did hire, and 'prepare, and then and there did cauſe and pro-'cure to be hired and prepared a certain Boat, 'and one Man, to the Jurors aforeſaid un-'known; you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John 'Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, from thence to, and 'into the aforeſaid Ship, ſo as aforeſaid, hired 'and prepared to carry and convey. And you 'the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and 'Edmund Elliott, maliciouſly and traiterouſly into 'the ſame Boat, then and there did enter; and 'your ſelves from thence, in and by that ſame 'Boat, unto and into the Ship aforeſaid, then 'and there unlawfully and traiterouſly did cauſe, 'and procure to be carried with the intention 'aforeſaid. And you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme 'John Aſhton*, and Edmund Elliott, with the ſame 'Bills of Exchange, and the aforeſaid traiterous 'Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Inſtruct-'ions in Writing, and in your Hands, Cuſtody 'and Poſſeſſion then and there, in and with the 'Ship aforeſaid, did ſail, and depart towards the 'aforeſaid Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond 'the Seas; the ſame your moſt wicked, evil 'and traiterous Intentions, Purpoſes, Compaſ-'ſings and Imaginations aforeſaid, to fulfil, per-'fect and promote, againſt the Duty of your 'Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord 'and Lady the King and Queen that now are, 'their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the 'Form of the Statute in that Caſe made, and 'provided. And the Indictment further ſets forth, 'that long before the aforeſaid Nine and Twen-'tieth day of December now laſt paſt, open War 'between our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and 'Queen, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French 'King was begun, declared, and waged, and 'yet is; Which ſaid Lewis the French King, and 'his Subjects, and the men of thoſe parts, then 'and yet, were, and are, Enemies to our ſaid 'Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now 'are, and to their Kingdom of England: And 'that in the time of the aforeſaid War between 'them our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and 'Queen, and the aforeſaid Lewis the French 'King, you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John 'Aſhton, and Edmund Elliott, being Subjects of 'our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen 'that now are, as falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid 'Lord and Lady the King and Queen, during 'the War aforeſaid, to wit, the Nine and 'Twentieth day of December, in the Second 'year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord and Lady 'the King and Queen that now are, and diverſe 'other days and times as well before as after, at 'the Pariſh of St Clement Danes aforeſaid, in the 'County aforeſaid, with force, and Arms, &c. 'To the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord and 'Lady the King and Queen that now are, un-'lawfully, and traiterouſly were adhering, and 'aſſiſting, and in Execution, and performance of the ſame adhering you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Ellyott, then, and there, to wit, the ſame Nine and Twentieth day of December in the Second year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, aboveſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County aforeſaid, falſly, Maliciouſly, and Traiterouſly did prepare, and compoſe, and then and there did cauſe and procure to be prepared and compoſed, as alſo into your Cuſtody, and Poſſeſſion then, and there unlawfully ſecretly, and Traiterouſly did obtain, detain, conceal, and keep, divers traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in writing, to ſhew and inform the aforeſaid Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for and on the behalf of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen of England, then and there deſigned, and preparing, for their defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies aforeſaid to repel, and reſiſt; and how ſome of the ſame Ships were manned, and of the Names of ſeveral of the Captains of the ſaid Ships; and how the Caſtles, and Fortreſſes of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen, called Portſmouth, Southſea, and Goſport within this Kingdom of England were ſtrengthened, and fortified, and how thoſe ſame Caſtles and Fortreſſes into the hands and poſſeſſion of the ſame Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen might be taken, and Seized, as alſo of the Time, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when and where the ſame Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are this Kingdom of England might invade, and Infeſt, and they the ſaid Enemies, and the Ships of the ſaid Enemies of this Kingdom of England ſhould fight againſt our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects. And that during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the aforeſaid Thirtieth day of December now laſt paſt, you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Ellyott, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County aforeſaid, unlawfully, and Traiterouſly did hire, and prepare, and then and there did cauſe and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Ship, and three men, you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Ellyot, with the ſame Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in writing, from this Kingdom of England, unto, and into France in parts beyond the Seas, then and there under the Rule and Government of the aforeſaid Lewis the French King, then and yet an Enemy of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen, ſecretly, during the War aforeſaid, to carry, and tranſport, to the intent the ſame Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in writing there, in parts beyond the Seas, to the aforeſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to deliver, and diſperſe during the War aforeſaid, in aid of the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen in the War aforeſaid: And that you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton and Edmund Elliot, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the aforeſaid thirtieth day of December now laſt paſt, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforeſaid, concerning, and for the ſame your Treaſons and traiterous Adhearings and Purpoſes aforeſaid to execute and fulfil, maliciouſly, traiterouſly, and adviſedly, then, and there did hire and prepare, and then and there did cauſe, and procure to be hired, and prepared a certain Boat, and one Man to the Jurors unknown you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot from thence to and into the Ship aforeſaid, by you as aforeſaid, hired and prepared to carry and convey: And that you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly into the ſame Boat then and there did enter, and your ſelves from thence ſecretly in and by the ſame Boat unto and into the ſame Ship then and there did cauſe and procure to be carried in Proſecution of the adhering aforeſaid. And you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot then and there with the ſame traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in writing, in your cuſtody and poſſeſſion being, during the War aforeſaid, to wit, the ſame day and year, in and with the Ship aforeſaid did ſail, and depart towards the aforeſaid Kingdom of France, to the intent the ſame traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Inſtructions in writing, in parts beyond the Seas to the ſaid Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to deliver, concerning and for Aid, Intelligence, and Council by you the ſaid Sir Richard Grahme, John Aſhton, and Edmund Elliot to the ſame Enemies of our ſaid Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to give and yield, during the War aforeſaid, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. How ſay you Sir Richard Grahme, are you guilty of this Felony, and High Treaſon whereof you ſtand indicted, or not guilty?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I have ſomething humbly to offer to your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it your Lordſhip would ſay?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I find I ſtand indicted by the name of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, but I do take my ſelf to be intituled to another way of Tryal, as being a Peer of England, by vertue of a Patent before the Vote of Abdication was made; and it was in a time when all your Proceſſes, and all your Writs went in the late King's Name, and all Officers acted by vertue of his Commiſſions. My Lord, this is a matter that concerns me in point of Life, Eſtate, Poſterity, and all that's dear to me; and therefore I deſired to know whether your Lordſhips think fit to allow me my Peerage; I offer it, my Lord, with all the reſpect and modeſty imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I apprehend your Lordſhip to offer againſt your being tried here, that you are a Peer.

L. Preſton. I take my ſelf to be ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you muſt make that out to the Court.

L. Preſton. I told your Lordſhips the Ground of my Claim and Apprehenſion; it is from a Patent I received before the Vote of Abdication, when all Commiſſions, and all Proceſs, and all the Courts of Judicature run in that Name.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Patent, my Lord?

L. Preſton. It is in the Hands of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, we cannot take notice of that Patent; if your Lordſhip plead that you were made a Peer by a Patent under the Great Seal of England, you muſt produce it under the Great Seal, that the Court may ſee what it is, and whether it be ſufficient to juſtifie your Plea.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip and this Court will enable me to do that, by ſending an Order to the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords, to bring the Patent hither; for it is in his hands.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that is not in our power: If your Lordſhip take your ſelf to be a peer, and would thereby ſtop this Court from proceeding to try you, you muſt be ready to make it out.

L. Preſton. I am ready to make it out, if I had my Patent here, that would make it out. Certainly there is ſome Authority now in being (I humbly offer it with all Submiſſion and Reſpect) that may order the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords to attend this Court, and produce this Patent.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, we are not to enable you to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court:

L. Preſton. My Lord, I offer it with all reſpect to the Court: I am concerned in it for my Life, and my All, and if that be over-ruled, this I hope you will do before you go on, you will hear me by my Council.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is nothing that you have ſaid; for if your Lordſhip plead this Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, it ought not to be received without ſhewing your Patent.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire my Council to be heard to this matter.

L. C. J. Holt. I know your Lordſhip has had the benefit of Council, and I know your Council muſt tell you, that what you ſay goes for nothing, unleſs you put in your Plea, and produce your Patent, that the Court may judge upon it.

* Sir John Somers. * Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have obſerved what my Lord Preſton has mentioned——

L. Preſton. Pray Mr. Sollicitor will you ſpeak out, that I may hear what you ſay?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I ſay, I have taken notice of what your Lordſhip has offered: It has been moſt truly obſerved by the Court, that it is your Lordſhips part to make good your Plea, and it ought not to be expected that any Court ſhould help a Perſon to plead to its Juriſdiction: But becauſe it ſhould not be pretended that an advantage was taken againſt the Priſoner for a defect in point of form, or that any thing was inſiſted on which ſhould have the leaſt appearance of a hardſhip, and that we may proceed in the moſt clear and unexceptionable manner that can be, I muſt beg leave to obſerve to your Lordſhip and the Court, how far this matter which my Lord Preſton has inſiſted on has been debated and determined in another place.

L. C. J. Holt. So; on Mr. Sollicitor:

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, upon the 11th of November 1689. My Lord Preſton did make ſome claim in the Houſe of Lords that he was a Peer of the Realm; the Houſe of Lords demanding of him upon what he founded his pretence; he ſaid he claimed by Letters Patents from the late King James, which paſſed the Great Seal before the time of the Vote of Abdication. The Lords required that thoſe Letters ſhould be produced, which being done, and my Lord Preſton inſiſting upon his Claim to be a Peer of England, the Lords thought fit that day to commit my Lord Preſton to the cuſtody of the Black Rod. The next day being the 12th of November, upon ſolemn debate of the validity of theſe Letters Patents, and conſulting with the Judges then preſent, the Lords nemine contradicente did adjudge and declare thoſe Letters Patents to be void and null: And by another Order of the ſame date, they did order Mr. Attorney General to proſecute my Lord Preſton in the King's Bench for a High Miſdemeanour in preſuming to claim Peerage by thoſe Letters Patents. And by a third it was ordered that the Letters Patents ſhould remain in cuſtody of the Clerk of the Parliament. Thus you ſee, my Lord, this matter hath had already a ſolemn Determination in a Court which had the moſt proper Conuſance and Juriſdiction of Claims in this Nature. And they having pronounced their Judgment, I did not think it would have been urged again in this place. I thought it proper to mention theſe things to ſhew how it comes to paſs that my Lord Preſton has not his Letters Patents to produce, and to ſatisfy every Man that there is no hardſhip put upon my Lord Preſton, by trying him here when he ought to be tried by another Judicature. The Lords have given Judgment againſt theſe Letters Patents, and have ordered that they ſhall remain in cuſtody of the Clerk of the Parliament, and my Lord Preſton is not a Stranger to theſe Tranſactions, and therefore if my Lords Council had been of Opinion he could have made any uſe of them, they would have inform'd him he muſt have taken another courſe to have got them, and could not expect this Court ſhould make an Order for him, contrary to the Order of the Houſe of Lords, to take the Letters Patents out of the hands of the Clerk of the Parliament, and this, to help him to a Plea againſt their own Juriſdiction. I omitted one thing, that upon the 27th of the ſame Month of November, upon my Lord Preſton's humble Submiſſion and Petition, his Lordſhip was diſcharged of his Impriſonment, and the Houſe of Lords were pleaſed to remit the Order given to Mr. Attorney, for Proſecuting him in the King's Bench for the Miſdemeanour. So that I cannot but wonder to hear of this Claim of Peerage after that Submiſſion. But there is nothing offered to the Court by my Lord that the Court can take any legal notice of. If my Lord will plead any thing to the Juriſdiction of the Court, he ought to have his Plea in Form, and be ready with his Proofs to make it good.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord Preſton upon this laſt Order of the Houſe of Lords has diſclaimed any right of Peerage when he made his Petition, otherwiſe he had not been diſcharged. ——

L. Preſton. My Lord I beg leave——

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Beſides, my Lord, what my Lord Preſton offers is a matter of Record as all Letters Patents are, and tho' out of his hands he might have had recourſe to the Record of the Inrolment.

L. Preſton. For that, my Lord, I muſt humbly beg of your Lordſhips a little time to put my ſelf in a Capacity to plead it in Form. If you will over rule it, I can ſay nothing to it; I offer it with all the modeſty and reſpect imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. It ſhall do your Lordſhip no prejudice, my Lord, God forbid but that you ſhould make uſe of all advantages that you can invent for your defence. But, my Lord, we muſt tell you what you have offered is nothing that we can take any notice of, unleſs you had your Patent to produce, and we cannot give your Lordſhip time to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

L. Preſton. Then if your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over rule this matter I ſubmit, but I hope you will give me leave to make all the juſt defence I can for my ſelf. Does your Lordſhip over rule me in it?

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe we are all of the ſame Opinion, if not, I ſuppoſe they will declare their minds.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That which has been ſaid by Mr. Sollicitor, was only that you and all the World may be ſatisfied that there is nothing of hardſhip put upon you. But the Court, if this had not been ſaid, yet could take no notice of what you ſay, unleſs it were pleaded, and pleaded in legal Form. But if the matter be, as the King's Council have repreſented it, that this Patent you now pretend to have, hath already had its determination in a proper place, this Court (which is an inferiour Court to that of the Lords in Parliament) cannot intermeddle with it. We cannot help you, nor can we ſet up what was condemned there. So that you can entertain no hope or expectation of our doing any thing for you in this matter, or any relief or help by ſuch a Plea.

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preſton, you may remember, (I am ſure ſome of us that were there preſent do,) that you did decline further inſiſting upon this matter in the Houſe of Lords, and thereupon you had that great favour from the Houſe ſhewn you, as the King's Council have opened.

L. Preſton. I did decline it, 'tis true, my Lord; when they had declared it a Miſdemeanour, I made my application to the Court, and therein declared I was ſorry for having miſdemeaned my ſelf.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, we will read the very Orders of the Houſe of Lords, to ſatisfie my Lord Preſton, that we put no hardſhip upon him.

L. Preſton. If there be any thing of hardſhip upon me in this Caſe, it is becauſe I think I have a right to inſiſt upon this matter, and cannot have an occaſion or power to have that which I would make my Defence by.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip ſhall have a fair Tryal, if you will pleaſe to put your ſelf in a Condition to be tryed, by pleading to the Indictment.

Mr. B. Lechmere. The Lords in Parliament have diſclaimed you for being a Peer, and we cannot make you one.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhips will put no hard thing upon me, but give me leave and your Lordſhips help to make my defence.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall by the Grace of God have all the liberty you can deſire to make your Defence; but you muſt firſt plead.

L. Preſton. Since your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over rule me in this Caſe, I ſhall ſay no more of it. I did not intend to offer any thing that might be an Offence to the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. As I told your Lordſhip before, ſo I aſſure you now again it ſhall do you no prejudice.

L. Preſton. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, ſince the Language is different in which the Indictment is written from that in which it was read, and ſome things may be of different Signification in both Languages, I deſire the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it in Latin.

L. Preſton. I have one thing to beg of your Lordſhip before it be read.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it you deſire, my Lord?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly deſire, becauſe I cannot retain all the Contents in my Memory, that my Sollicitor may have leave to ſtand by me.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. Do you all joyn in this deſire, for if you ſhould each of you ſeverally, have it read a great many times over, they that take Notes in Short-hand may take a Copy of it as it is read, and a Copy not to be allowed.

L. C. J. Holt. If we find they deſire to be troubleſome, we can over rule them.

L. Preſton. I would be guilty of nothing that may give the Court Offence, nor offer any thing that ſhould take up the time of the Court unneceſſarily.

L. C. J. Holt. If they would have it read in Latin, let it be read.

L. Preſton. If it be troubleſome to the Court, I wave it my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. No, we do not think it troubleſome.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot, do you deſire to have it read again?

Aſhton, Elliot. We all joyn with my Lord, and deſire it may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it. (Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. Juratores pro Domino Rege & Domina Regina: ſuper Sacramentum ſuum preſentant quod—— & contra formam Statuti in eo caſu editi & proviſi.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am ſorry I have taken up ſo much of your time, I thought the difference of Language might have made ſome miſtake, which I thought would be of advantage to me in my Tryal: And for the ſame reaſon I humbly requeſt you will pleaſe to order me a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that we cannot do; it hath been frequently demanded upon theſe occaſions, but always denied. I have always known it denied.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip will give me leave to ſay what your Lordſhip muſt needs know much better than I, there is a Statute in the 46 of Ed. 3. that doth order a Copy of any Record to any Priſoner, or other Perſon if he demand it: And it has been granted, as I am informed in other Caſes, particularly in the Caſe of Colonel Sidney.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, it was denied in Colonel Sidney's Caſe.

L. Preſton. If I miſtake I beg your Lordſhips pardon. It is a Reaſon in a late Law made for the Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder. The Parliament do there ſay that it was not a legal Tryal, becauſe he had not a Copy of the Indictment, and time given him to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I do not know how that matter ſtands: That Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder is but a private Act of Parliament. I never ſaw it, nor heard it read, nor can we take notice of it. But your Lordſhip is to be tryed by the ſame methods of Law, that all Perſons that have gone before you have always been, it has always been the courſe, that the Priſoner ſhould not have a Copy of his Indictment, Colonel Sidney had it not, and I remember in the Caſe of Sir Hen. Vane in the year 1662, he demanded a Copy of the Indictment, and it was denyed him, and it has been conſtantly denyed ever ſince in ſuch Caſes.

L. Preſton. I humbly deſire to know whether it was not granted in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel.

L. C. J. Holt. No indeed my Lord, my Lord Ruſſel had it not, I can take it upon me to ſay that. for I know all the Proceedings in that Cauſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. No my Lord, never any Man had it in all my Experience.

L. C. J. Holt. Some of us that are here were of Council for my Lord Ruſſel at that time, and we did not adviſe him to demand a Copy of the Indictment, for we knew he could not have it by Law.

L. Preſton. I am very tender of taking up your Lordſhips time unneceſſarily, but it ſtands me upon to do all I can to defend my ſelf, may not I have my Council heard to that point? becauſe if it be a point of Law, though your Lordſhips are of Council for the Priſoner, yet I beg that I may have my Council heard to argue it.

L. C. J. Holt. To what point would you have your Council heard?

L. Preſton. To that point, whether I may not have a Copy of my Indictment according to the 46. of Ed. 3. that is the point I would have my Council heard to.

L. C. J. Holt. There is no ſuch Statute as your Lordſhip mentions, that gives the Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment.

Mr. Jones. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to hear me for my Lord Preſton.——

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, Mr. Jones, you are miſtaken in this matter: If my Lord himſelf will ſhew that there is any ſuch Statute, we will conſider of it, and if it be a matter that requires debate, we may aſſign my Lord Council to argue it, but till then Council are not to be heard. My Lord Preſton, if your Lordſhip can ſhew us that Statute, pray do?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire none if it be not ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. I have heard a Diſcourſe concerning ſuch a Statute, but I could never find it.

L. Preſton. I ſuppoſe my Sollicitor is here with it, there is ſuch a Statute my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court over ruled it in the Caſe of Sir H. Vane.

L. C. J. Holt. And ſo it was I remember in another Caſe, and in none of the Tryals that have been ſince King Charles the Second came in, was ever a Copy given that I know or heard of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this Statute that my Lord Preſton mentions, the 46 of Ed. 3. is printed at large in the Preface to my Lord Coke's 3*d* Report; and has been inſiſted upon in ſeveral Caſes in the King's Bench, where the Priſoner has deſired a Copy of his Indictment, but a Copy has been always denied, and this Statute has been taken to extend only to Records, which may be Evidence for the Subject.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. 'Twas always ruled that it did not extend to this matter.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 'tis a miſconſtruction of that Statute that your Lordſhip thinks that it gives the Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment: For that Statute ſays that all Perſons ſhall be free to make uſe of the Publick Records, and take Copies of them, becauſe oftentimes the Records are Evidences of Mens Eſtates, and their Titles.

L. Preſton. My Lord, an Indictment I ſuppoſe is a Record.

L. C. J. Holt. But not ſuch a Record as is within the intent of that Statute.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am tender of taking up your Lordſhips time, but ſince all that is dear to me is at Stake, I deſire to this point I may be heard by Council.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am ſatisfied you have had Council with you, I have heard a great many. Does any one of them tell you that this has been done? If ever any one of them will come and ſhew us when it has been done, you ſay ſomething, but I dare ſay none of them will or can. Mr. Jones there, is as like as any body, but I believe he will not ſay it ever was done.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I cannot ſay my Council has told me ſo, but I have read ſuch a Statute my ſelf, for it ſtands me upon it, and I believe there is ſuch a Statute, and it will be produced before your Lordſhips. If your Lordſhips will inſiſt upon not allowing me a Copy, I deſire I may be heard to it by my Council, for I take it to be a point of Law, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we muſt not hear Council to debate plain points that have no manner of Queſtion in them; It has been always diſallowed, and 'tis a ſettled point at Law, and as plain as any whatſoever, that no Copy of an Indictment ought to be allowed to a Priſoner in Felony or Treaſon.

L. Preſton. My Lord there is a Statute that ſays it ſhall be allowed to all Perſons to have Copies of Records, as well for, as againſt the King, and certainly the Indictment is a Record, and a Record of great conſequence to me at this time; and though my Council has not told me when it was done, yet thoſe that I have adviſed with, do ſay that the Statute is expreſs.

L. C. Baron. If any doubtful words be in ſuch a Statute, yet the conſtant practice muſt expound it, and ſince it has been ſo often denied, nay always, the Law is now ſettled that it is not within the meaning of that Statute.

L. C. J. Holt. We muſt go in the way of our Predeceſſors we received the Law from them, and muſt not contradict the received practice of the Judges in all Ages, nor alter the determinations tions that have been made in all Caſes of the like nature.

L Preſton. I hope your Lordſhips intend, and I don't queſtion it, that my Tryal ſhould be a legal Tryal; If there be ſuch a Statute that gives me a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court deny it me, I am not legally tryed.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. If you pleaſe to name the Statute my Lord, It ſhall be read to you, but you are miſtaken if you think there is any thing in that Statute that will do your Lordſhip ſervice in this point.

L. C. J. Holt. See the 46 of Ed. 3. Read it.

L. Preſton. Here is a Copy of the Record in Court.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. It is not Printed, but it is mentioned in the Preface to my Lord Cokes third Report, and 'tis mentioned no where but there that I know of; but whether there were any ſuch Statute or no Non conſtat, for it is not printed. But if it be a Statute it does not meddle with things of this nature, ſuch as Indictments; for you muſt conſider, my Lord, yours is not a Caſe different from all other Caſes of like nature as to this; But it is the Caſe of all men that are Tryed as you are to be. And if all people were to have Copies of their Indictments to make exceptions out of them before they plead, inſtead of days of Gaol delivery, the whole year would not be ſufficient, but would be ſpent before they could be brought to their Tryal.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am to defend my ſelf as I can by Law, and not to conſider what other peoples Caſes are. It is my particular Caſe now, what the Caſe may be as to any other hereafter, or what the general conſequence may be is not to be conſidered, but if there be any thing that is legal that can give me an advantage in making my defence, I know your Lordſhips are too juſt to hinder me from taking advantage of it.

L. C. Baron. My Lord it is no new thing to demand it, it has been frequently demanded, but it has been always over ruled.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is now deſired, and a reaſon is given you that perhaps was not given before; there is ſuch a Law. My Lord Chief Juſtice ſays well it is not printed, but it is a Record, and there is a Copy of that Record in Court. I deſir'd there ſhould be, I am ſure.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Copy of any Record of an Act of Parliament, it ſhall be read, if it be proved.

L. Preſton. Nay we offer nothing if we don't prove it, but there is ſuch a Record, and the Sollicitor is ready to atteſt it. Pray ſwear Mr. Whitaker.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Swear him.

Cl. of Ar. You ſhall true anſwer make to all ſuch queſtions as ſhall be demanded of you by the Court. So help you God. Is this a true Copy?

Mr. Whitaker. It is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord it is a true Copy of the Record, I examined it at Mr. Pettyts Office in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollixfen. Upon what Number Roll is it?

Mr. Whitaker. There is the Number Roll and all upon the Book.

Clerk reads. Item pria les Commons que come record & queconque choſe en la Court le Roy de reaſon devoient demurrer illeoques pur perpetuel evidence & eide de touts parties a ycelly & de touts ceux a queux en nul manner ills atteignent quant, meſtier lour fuit. Et ja de nouvel refuſent en la Court noſtre dit Seignior de ſerche ou evidence encounter le Roy ou diſadvantage de luy. Que pleaſe os deiner per Eſtatute que Serch. & Exemplification ſoit faitz as touz Gentz de queconque Record que les touche en aſcun manner auxy bien de ce que chiet encountre le Roy come autres Gentz. Le Roy le voet.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is only Copies of Records that they ſhall have for Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, your Lordſhip hears by this Record, you may as well pray that an exemplification be made of this Indictment as a Copy, for ſo the words of this Act run, it is only meant of thoſe Records that were to be given in Evidence. But this Indictment that you would have a Copy of, is not now to be given in Evidence nor to be exemplyfied, and ſo it does not reach your Caſe.

L. Preſton. My Lord, this Indictment is a Record, and a Record againſt me, and I think it is given in Evidence againſt me.

Mr. J. Eyres. No my Lord, it is no Evidence but an Accuſation, it is no proof at all.

L. Preſton. It is always ſworn unto.

Mr. J. Eyres. The Witneſſes are Sworn that Teſtifie the matter of it to the Grand Jury, but the Indictment it ſelf is no Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. Suppoſe a Statute be doubtful, as truly I do not take this to be, we are to expound the Statute as it has been expounded in all Ages: It was never thought by any Judges in any Reign, that this Statute did entitle a Priſoner to have a Copy of his Indictment, but always held the contrary.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed then to allow me Council to be heard to it?

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not Council in a plain Caſe: If the Court apprehend there is any Matter that may be debateable, or whereupon a Doubt may be made, we may aſſign Council, and ſhall; but never in a plain Caſe, where there is no manner of Queſtion.

L. Preſton. My Lord, here is a Doubt in this Caſe.

L. C. Baron But, my Lord, it's not the Doubt of the Priſoner, but the Doubt of the Court that will occaſion the aſſigning Council.

L. Preſton. But the Priſoner may offer his Doubt to the Court, and your Lordſhips are ſo juſt, that you will take care that the Doubt may be legally reſolved.

L C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is our Duty to ſee Juſtice and Right done, and God willing, it ſhall be.

L Preſton. And I am bound in Duty to my ſelf in ſuch a Caſe to inſiſt upon all Advantages I can have by Law.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, no Body blames you, though your Lordſhip do urge things that are unneceſſary, or improper; and we ſhall take care that it ſhall not tend to your Lordſhips prejudice. We conſider the Condition you are in; you ſtand at the Bar for your Life; you ſhall have all the fair and juſt Dealings that can be; and the Court, as in Duty bound, will ſee that you have no Wrong done you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, for this thing that you now mention, in all Ages, in all our Books, it is the ſame thing, and has been in all Mens Caſes that have been for their Lives, denied; and this Statute that you bring is quite of another intent: For it is ſaid, the Records ſhall remain in Court for perpetual Evidence, and the Aiding of all Perſons to whom they ſhall belong. My Lord, this is none of your Caſe; for God knows, you expect no Aid from this Indictment: But this is meant of all Copies that concern the Eſtates of Men, that they may have recourſe to their Records to make out their Evidences to their Eſtates, or to have them Exemplified under the Seal of the Court for Evidence: But to have a Copy of an Indictment, thereby to be enabled to conſult with Council, how to make Exceptions to that Indictment, is a thing that has been denied in all Ages by all the Judges that ever were. If any one can ſay to the contrary, it were ſomething; but ſhall we now admit Council to debate a thing that has been in all Ages denied, and never admitted ſo much as once? That cannot be expected from us.

L. Preſton. The Act ſays, That it ſhall be all Records that ſhall be in Aid to any Perſon that ſhall deſire it. Here is no diſtinction made of what kind the Records are to be: If it be for the Aid of any Perſon, it ought to be granted, and I may be aided by this Record, if I have a Copy of it; and I think it is hard, when I am ſo much concerned in this Record, that I cannot be helpt to it by this Law.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Conſtant Experience has gone according to what we ſay.

L. Preſton. If that be Law, and it has not been demanded, then they are not entituled to have the benefit of it: But now I demand it, ſure it is good Law.

L. C. J. Holt. It is no queſtion a good Law, but not applicable to your Lordſhip's Caſe: I ſuppoſe we are all of the ſame Opinion; if any think otherwiſe, I deſire they would ſpeak.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I ſubmit to the Court, but then I deſire one Thing, you know my Life, my Fortune, my Reputation, my Poſterity, and all are at Stake, and all that is Dear to me muſt fall with me if I miſcarry. Therefore I take leave to repreſent, That I have had very ſhort Notice of my Tryal, I aſſure you I have not had above 6 or 7 days Notice, I hope you will not refuſe me a little longer time before I come to my Tryal, and I have had no Copy of the Jury yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If my Lord pleaſe to Plead to the Indictment, that will be time enough to move afterwards, and till Iſſue is joyn'd, it cannot properly be moved for.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not proper to deſire time yet, till you have put your ſelf upon your Tryal by Pleading to the Indictment.

L. Preſton. It was granted in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, he had 8 or 10 days granted him after he had Pleaded; and in the Act for the Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder, it is given as one Cauſe for the Reverſal, that he had not time to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 7 days is very fair Notice, your Lordſhip knew when the Seſſions would be, and your Lordſhip might reaſonably expect, that you ſhould be Tryed here, I think truly you have had very fair Notice.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, we have had 7 days Notice of our Tryal 'tis true, this day Seven night at Night we had Notice we were to be Tryed as this day, but 3 days of the 7 we had not the Liberty of ſeeing any Friend or Council, or any Body, not till Tueſday Night, and that we got with great Application, and great Charge to get an Order for Council to come to us, ſo that though we have had 7 days Notice, yet we have had but 3 days in all to conſult with any Body, and we never have had a Copy of our Jury till this Minute.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We ſee the Nature of the Thing, and I am ſorry that I muſt ſay it is fit that we ſhould take notice of it, perhaps the thing that you are accuſed of is not true; but if it be true, you ſee what it is, that there are Letters and Papers preparing for a Deſign to ſet all the Kingdom in Confuſion: Men that will venture upon ſuch ſort of Things are not to Condemn the Law if it be a little hard upon them, for 'tis the common Preſervation that is principally aimed at in Proſecutions of this Nature; and if this Accuſation be true, 'tis but Juſt and Reaſonable, that all ſpeed ſhould be uſed to enquire into and prevent it, and as it falls out in this Caſe, it is not in our Power to do it. This Seſſions is ſet before this Buſineſs is known, and this is an Act done in this County, and therefore the Seſſions is the proper place for the Tryal, and ſo you have the ſame ſort of Proceedings that all other Criminals have, which are very many, though I hope not many of ſo high a Nature, 7 days Notice you have had you acknowledge; if my Lords pleaſe we will Indulge you as far as we can, and give you time for your Tryal till to morrow, but you muſt Plead preſently, L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we debate the time of your Tryal too early, for you muſt put your ſelf upon your Tryal firſt, by Pleading.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope I ſhall always carry my ſelf as becomes me towards the Court, but I do not really think, you have any Tryals that are of ſo great Concernment, and this ſure is a fit time for me to offer it, for it may be, I have a great many Witneſſes in the Country, and at a diſtance from this place and one another.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we cannot diſpute with you concerning your Tryal, till you have Pleaded, I know not what you will ſay to it, for ought I know there may be no occaſion for a Tryal, I cannot tell what you will Plead, your Lordſhip muſt Anſwer to the Indictment before we can enter into the Debate of this matter.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to move it afterwards?

L. C. J. Holt. You may offer any thing then concerning your Tryal, if you can ſhew any Reaſon to defer it, it will be proper to do it then.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, I think one Reaſon why my Tryal ought to be put off, is, Becauſe I have Privilege of excepting againſt ſo many of my Jury, but if I have not time to look into the Pannel I ſhall loſe that Privilege.

L. C. J. Holt. We are not to come to that yet, you are to Plead now.

L. Preſton. Then your Lordſhips are pleaſed to over-rule my Claim of Peerage.

L. C. J Holt. My Lord, we are of Opinion you ought to Plead to this Indictment.

C. of Ar. What ſays your Lordſhip, Are you Guilty of this High Treaſon, or not Guilty.

Lord

L Preſton. Not Guilty.

Cl of A. Culprit. How wilt thou be Try'd?

L Preſton. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

John Aſhton, What ſayſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not Guilty?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have only this to obſerve, beſides what my Lord Preſton has offered, as to the Buſineſs of the Act of Parliament, your Lordſhips have been pleaſed to over-Rule that Plea; But, my Lord, I am told, That if an Indictment be faulty, but even in a Letter, we cannot be found Guilty upon that Indictment. Now, if we never have a Copy of that Indictment, how ſhall we know whether there be any ſuch Fault in it? Your Lordſhips, who are our Council, I ſuppoſe have never ſeen the Indictment, and ſuppoſe there be Twenty Faults, we have not the advantage of them, by not having a Copy, and how ſhall we come to have any Advantage, if neither your Lordſhips, who are our Council, nor we our Selves can ſee them. It may turn upon that.

L. C. J. Holt. But we will ſee it when you come upon your Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is a Miſ-Information, for it may be ſuch a Letter as is not Material, and it may be ſuch as is Material; as, ſuppoſe, your Name being Aſhton, the A ſhould be left out, it would then be a Queſtion, What there would be to Charge you.

Mr. Aſhton. We know that it has been ſo in ſeveral Inſtances.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be ſuch an Omiſſion that may make it no Crime, but we muſt not preſently conclude that it is ſo, but you have heard it Read, and ſo have we; if there had been any ſuch Letter miſtaken, it would have been taken Notice of.

Mr. Aſhton. As to the Reading, there may in the Reading of the Indictment be many Words not nicely obſerved; I ſuppoſe the Indictment be Right, I ſay it is poſſible, it may, or it may not; but if your Lordſhips never ſee it, who are our Council by Law, nor you will allow us Council to look into it; if there be Forty Faults in it, we can have no advantage of it.

L. C. J. Holt. We muſt not allow you Council to pick holes in the Indictment, that never was done. If you aſſign any Reaſon, we may aſſign you Council to debate any matter of Law that may ariſe, but never was Council allowed to find out Faults in an Indictment, when you come to your Tryal we ſhall try you upon your Indictment, and if there be any thing conſiderable, you are to ſuppoſe we ſhall obſerve it for your advantage.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, We never had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, I pray we may have it.

L. C. J. Holt. That you cannot have till you have Pleaded.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Aſhton, We have over-ruled my Lord Preſton about a Copy of the Indictment, Do you think we ſhall Grant it you when we have denied it him?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire we may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt Plead firſt.

C. of A. Are you Guilty of the High Treaſon, or not Guilty?

Mr. Aſhton. Not Guilty.

C. of A. How will you be Tryed.

Mr. Aſhton. By God and my Country.

C. of A. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Edmund Elliot, How ſay you? Are you Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not Guilty?

Mr Elliot. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. How will you be tryed?

Mr. Elliot. By God and the Country.

C. of A. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope now it may be time to pray that my Tryal may be deferred.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you have it deferred?

L. Preſton. Becauſe of the diſtance of my Witneſſes, and other Things that would be neceſſary for me to have to prepare me for my Defence; and beſides, we have not had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, and the Reaſon of the Law does Order, that becauſe it gives us liberty to except againſt them, and that we cannot know how to do, unleſs we inform our ſelves of the Men; and therefore I beg, that I may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. As for having a Copy of the Pannel, the Court grants it. Let them have a Copy of the Pannel.

C. of A. Here is one ready for you.

Mr. Sol Gen. There was Direction given that there ſhould be one ready.

Mr. Aſhton. We have demanded it every day ſince we had notice of our Tryal.

L. C. Baron. You could not have it till there was an Iſſue joyned, and that could not be till you had Pleaded.

L. C. J. Holt. And as to the putting off your Tryal, I know not to what time to put it off.

L. Preſton. My Lord I am willing to have this matter Tryed as ſoon as poſſible, for it cannot but be uneaſie to me to lie under theſe Accuſations; but ſome of my Witneſſes live in the Country, at a remote diſtance; if it may be next Term my Lord, or the next Seſſions; for, if I have a Copy of the Pannel to Night, and am to be Tryed to morrow Morning, How can I provide for my Defence? I cannot be prepared to except againſt the Jury, and I am ſure you will be tender, and conſider the Caſe of a Man, whoſe Life and Fortune are concerned in this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Holt. To put it off till the next Term is to remove it out of this Court, that we cannot do, and to put it off till after the Term will be too long a time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We cannot ſit here after Monday, becauſe the Term begins on Tueſday.

L. Preſton. My Lord, this Term is always a ſhort Term, and if I be Tryed to morrow, it is Trying me without giving me time for my Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there has been all the care taken that the Nature of the Thing was capable of, to prevent any complaint of this kind. Order was given, that my Lord and theſe Gentlemen ſhould have notice as early as was poſſible. As ſoon as ever Mr. Attorney General had had an opportunity of looking into the Evidence, notice was given them, that they ſhould be Tryed, and that this was the day appointed for their Tryal. But there ſhall be no contending in a Matter of this Nature, for a day. If it be deſired, and the Court pleaſe to put it off till to morrow, we are contented, but there can be no reaſon to put it off for a longer time. As there is always a tenderneſs to be uſed, and I know will be, and as far as I am concerned, always ſhall be towards Perſons in theſe Circumſtances, ſo there is a regard to be had towards the Government and the Publick. I am ſure if the Accuſation that is againſt theſe Gentlemen is true, the Government is highly concerned that this Matter ſhould come to a ſpeedy Examination, and that Perſons that enter into ſuch Deſigns be brought to Judgment: The Charge in the Indictment is of ſuch a Nature as draws very great Conſequences along with it, it concerns no leſs than the Life of the King and Queen, the Deſtruction of the Fleet of the Kingdom, and the Invaſion of the Realm by the Forces of a Declared Enemy. Theſe are the things that the Priſoners are charged with, and certainly there ought to be no delay in the ſearching into ſuch Matters as theſe. They have had a Weeks notice of Tryal already, and for many days of that week at leaſt they have had as many Council to aſſiſt them as they deſired, and all the Sollicitors that they had a mind to, have had free acceſs to them, ſo that they have wanted no opportunity to prepare for their Tryal that Men in their Circumſtances could have. As to what has been ſaid with relation to the Jury, the Law indulges them in the Number of their peremptory Challenges without being put to ſhew Cauſe, and the Court hath granted them at the very inſtant of their Pleading a Copy of the Pannel, and there is a reaſonable time between this and to morrow for their making ſuch Enquiry into the Jury as is juſtifiable and fit to be made. But if by time to look into the Jury, it be meant, that there may be a time for tampering, that I am ſure your tenderneſs of the Government will not permit, you will take care as much that no ſuch thing be done, as you will, that they ſhould not be ſurprized. If your Lordſhips are pleaſed, that the Tryal be put off till to morrow, we will be ready to morrow to attend it.

L. Preſton. My Lord, 'tis a very hard preſumption that Mr. Sollicitor makes of our asking a Copy of the Pannel, that it is with a deſign to tamper with the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I did not ſay ſo, but I ſaid till to morrow was time enough to make a Juſtifiable Enquiry.

L. Preſton. But if I be to be tryed to morrow, I am willing to be tryed to day, for I am as ready now as I ſhall be then.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be ſo, and as ready as you will be after the Term: But I know not what your Lordſhip means by expreſſing ſuch reſentment, that becauſe you can't have what time allowed you would, therefore you will have none, but be tryed now.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You may have time enough to prepare your ſelf as to the Jury certainly between this and to morrow.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, we that are for the King have given theſe Gentlemen notice long enough to be prepared, if we ſhould try them now, for that's the time we gave notice for, but becauſe we would indulge them as far as we could, we are willing that they ſhould have till to morrow, and intending them that kindneſs, are not ready to try them to day, and there can be no pretence for them to put off their Tryal any longer, for there can be no want of Evidence as to the Fact we charge them with, for all the Evidence that we ſhall bring againſt them was taken from themſelves, or the greateſt part of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what time will you be ready then?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. To morrow morning.

L. C. J. Holt. Then to morrow at Eight a Clock you are to be tryed.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, do but conſider you have had ſeven days notice, and to morrow makes eight.

L. C. J. Holt. You had notice for this day this day ſevennight.

Mr. Aſhton. But we have had only three days time to conſult with our Council, though we deſired we might have our Council come to us that day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were told, they muſt apply themſelves to the King for that at the ſame time.

Mr. Aſhton. We did ſo that night to my Lord Sidney, then Sunday interven'd, which was no day for Buſineſs, and we could not have our Order. On Monday we could not have it till night; ſo that it was Tueſday before we could get any Body to us. My Lord it is a weighty concern, and all ſuch haſty Proceedings were thought very hard in the late Times, and particularly the denying Mr. Corniſh time, and 'tis one of the Reaſons given in this Kings Declaration for his coming here into England, the hardſhips that the Law laid upon Men in their Tryals, which he came to prevent.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The hardſhip that was upon Mr. Corniſh was, that he was taken upon the Tueſday off from the Exchange, and tryed before that day ſevenight, and that was hard indeed; but beſides, he was taken about his Buſineſs off from the Exchange, I know not whether you were about your Buſineſs, your Lawful Buſineſs, when you were taken, God of Heaven knows that. And pray conſider here is a matter of very great conſequence on the one ſide and on the other: For if Men be Plotting againſt the Government, to give them time to carry on their Plots will be miſchievous on that ſide.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, till that be legally proved before your Lordſhips, that is but a ſuppoſition.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That will lie upon them to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, we are to ſuppoſe you not Guilty, till you are proved Guilty.

Mr. Aſhton. Then my Lord, the Law ſays we may except againſt ſo many Perſons, what is the end of the giving us a Copy of the Pannel? 'tis not to be preſumed we can do it by their Faces, for what can I ſay to the Face of one I never ſaw? We muſt enquire concerning the Men, and that is a work of time, for ſome of theſe Gentlemen I preſume live eight or ten miles out of Town, Is it poſſible for me before to morrow morning eight a Clock to ſend to 35 Men to enquire after them?

L. C. J. Holt. No, nor is it intended you ſhould.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Nay, if you intend to ſend to the Jury-Men, we have no reaſon to give you time.

Mr. Aſhton. I mean to enquire after the Men, their Lives, what Religion they are of, what ſort of Men they are.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe they are all Proteſtants of the Church of England, but ſuppoſe they are all Strangers to you, and yet good and lawful lawful Men of the County, and there be no difference between you and them, then they are fit to try you.

Mr. Aſhton. 'Tis true my Lord, but if I have liberty to except againſt 35, I ought to know ſomething of them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Yes, and inform your ſelf as well as you can of them, but not to ſend to them, that is not to be permitted.

L. Preſton. There is another Point to enquire of them, and that is, Whether they be Freeholders or not?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We have neither your Lordſhips Affidavit, nor the Oath of any other Perſon, only an Allegation.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you muſt expect your Tryal to Morrow Morning, we cannot put it off, we are limited in time, the Seſſions can hold no longer than Monday, becauſe of the Term.

Mr. Aſhton. Then will your Lordſhip pleaſe to put it off till Monday?

L. C. J. Holt. No, we ſhall not have time to do it, it may be a long Tryal.

L. Preſton I proteſt to your Lordſhips I cannot be ready to Morrow to make that Defence I deſire, and deſign to make, and which I may make if your Lordſhips give me a longer day.

Clerk of Arraignments. Here is a Copy of the Pannel for your Lordſhip.

It was delivered to the Lord Preſton, who gave it to his Sollicitor.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, we ſhall not have time to enquire into the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, we are not bound to do this, but you have it as ſoon as you have Pleaded.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, it will take up 5 or 6 Hours in writing of it out, and we muſt each have a Copy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They are all joyned in one Indictment, and have joynt-Council, and joynt-Sollicitors, as we are informed.

Mr. Aſhton. Then I hope you will allow us liberty till Monday for our Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court cannot allow longer time; the Court here can Sit no longer than Monday, and here muſt needs be a great deal of Buſineſs to do of the ordinary Buſineſs of the Seſſions, and when that day comes, perhaps it will not ſerve to go through with the Tryal, and then it muſt be Adjourned till after the Term, and in the mean while ſome are in hopes the King of France may come and determine the Matter.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray my Lord, Let no Suggeſtion againſt us, prepoſſeſs the Opinion of the Court before we be Tryed.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I don't Suggeſt any thing, but 'tis in the Indictment alleadged againſt you, and that you are to be Tryed upon, and if ſuch things be there Suggeſted, as we would give you all reaſonable time for your Defence, ſo we muſt take care that the Government ſuſtain no hurt by delays.

L. C. J. Holt. It is obſerved by the King's Council, that they are Things of very great Conſequence, and therefore they preſs for the Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I cannot believe but that you will be as ready to Morrow, as you can be on Monday.

Mr. Aſhton. The Government cannot be prejudiced by putting of it off till Monday, ſure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Evidence that is to Convict you, lies all on their Side that are for the King, and I cannot imagine, where your Witneſſes ſhould be, unleſs they are in France; but you had reaſon to expect your Tryal, being apprehended in the manner as you were, and to provide for it.

L. C. J. Holt. The want of Witneſſes is only a Surmiſe, and a Pretence, for there is no Oath of any Witneſſes that they want, or who they are; indeed if we had Oath made that they wanted material Witneſſes, and to material Points for their Defence, that might be occaſion for our further Conſideration; but ſhall we put off a Tryal upon a bare ſuggeſtion of the want of Witneſſes? ſure that was never done.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Name any one particular Man that is your Witneſs, and the particular thing that he can prove, for if any of your Witneſſes do know any thing of this kind, it muſt be Particulars and not Generals; If you will not name them, it is plain, it is only a pretence you inſiſt upon for delay.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I inſiſt upon the point of the Jury, that we have not time to look after them.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that of the Witneſſes is waved.

L. Preſton. 'Twas I that deſired Time for my Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you neither name them, nor bring us any Oath about them, or of any thing they can prove for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray don't ſpend the time of the Court, nor your own time unneceſſarily, you muſt prepare for your Tryal to Morrow.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, there is not a perſon in Court, I believe, but will think it hard that we are ſo ſtraitned in time.

L. C. J. Holt. The time you have had notice to prepare for your Tryal, is ſufficient.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Corniſh's Caſe has been complained of as a very hard Caſe in this very reſpect, and we would hope, the King, that now is, came to reform ſuch abuſes.

L. C. J. Holt. You have been already told, wherein the hardſhip of that Caſe lay, I am ſure yours is not like it; but take notice, we will be Sitting here punctually at Eight.

L. Preſton. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to let us have our Council come to us, and our Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes ſure, you ſhall have all that is neceſſary for your Defence, that we can allow you, but unneceſſary Delays muſt be avoided.

Then the Priſoners were taken away by the Keeper of Newgate to the Goal.

Sabbati xvii. January 1690.

THis Day between the Hours of Eight and Nine in the Morning, the Court being ſat, and thoſe Perſons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances Recorded; then the Priſoners were brought to the Bar.

Clerk of Arraignments. You the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and you upon tryal of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; if therefore you, or any of you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip will inform me, whether if I have any thing to offer to the Court, it is proper before the Jury be impannelled, or after.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I don't know what your Lordſhip has to offer, I think you have nothing to offer why the Jury ſhould not be ſworn, for now your Lordſhip has put your ſelf upon your Tryal, and are going to proceed in that Tryal, and the Jury are going to be ſworn; if you have any thing to offer, as to them, you may challenge them.

L. Preſton. Truly my Lord, I have ſomething to offer, but it is only what I did humbly offer Yeſterday, and that is, That my warning was ſo ſhort, that I am not prepared for my Tryal. We had not above three or four days wherein we might conſult about it, all the former time we have been kept cloſe Priſoners; we are now brought here to be tryed, without having time to look into the Pannel of our Jury. The Pannel we had not till Yeſterday, and I humbly beg, that I may have ſome time to prepare for my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, this is that which you inſiſted upon Yeſterday. Your Lordſhip ſaid you wanted Witneſſes, and your Lordſhip did not then mention what Witneſſes you wanted, nor was any Oath made of any one that you wanted; and therefore the Court over-rul'd you, and wiſhed you to prepare for your Tryal, and would not put it off: For if it ſhould not be to Day, but ſhould be put off till another time, it muſt be the putting of it off till another Seſſions; for we are ſtreightned with it in point of time, for the Seſſion can laſt no longer than Monday, and you have had convenient Notice.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, I think it is hard when my Life and Fortune, and all are concerned, that I ſhould be hurried on to a Tryal, only becauſe the Court is ſtreightned in point of time; and yet that is the only Reaſon that I can perceive, why ſuch haſte is made. I deſire a little more time to prepare my ſelf; and I think it very hard I ſhould be denied; I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips: if you will not allow me time, I cannot make my Defence as I would.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the Shortneſs of the time, that is no Objection; you have had convenient Notice, as much Notice as the Law requires, and as much time as without particular cauſe ſhewn, hath here at any time been given in ſuch a Caſe. If indeed there had been any particular Reaſon offered for putting off the Tryal, and you had made it appear by Oath, the Court poſſibly might have put off the Tryal; but becauſe your Lordſhip only ſuggeſted you wanted a Witneſs, naming neither Perſon, nor Place, or Matter ſuch Witneſs ſhould prove, they are of Opinion no cauſe appears for ſuch delay of your Tryal.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I aſſure you I am not prepared for my Tryal.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Court overruled this Matter Yeſterday, it cannot be put off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would humbly offer your Lordſhip one thing before the Jury be called and ſworn. By the Law, theſe Gentlemen at the Bar have the Privilege to challenge peremptorily to the Number of 35; which is ſo great a Number, that if each of them ſeverally take advantage of it, (as they may do by Law, and God forbid they ſhould be denied any advantage the Law gives them) it will be next to impoſſible to have a ſufficient Number of Jurors appear ſo as that we may proceed in the Tryal.

L. Preſton. Truly, my Lord, we don't hear what Mr. Sollicitor ſays.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you not? Then I'll tell you what he ſays when he has done: Go on, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, all that I would know of them is, Whether they intend to take the Advantage that the Law gives them, of ſingle and particular Challenges; for then they muſt be tried ſeverally: Or whether they will be content that the ſame Perſons that are challenged by any one, ſhall ſtand challenged for all three. I leave it to them to take their own choice; let them do what they pleaſe in it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, Mr. Sollicitor tells you what the Law is, that every one of you may challenge five and thirty without Cauſe; and if the Court ſhould proceed to try you all together, and every one of you ſhould challenge five and thirty, perhaps a ſufficient Number will be wanting to try you, the Number challenged will then amount to 105 in all. If ſo be you agree in your Challenges, that what one challenges ſhall be challenged by the other two, then the Court will go on, and try you all together, otherwiſe they will be forced to ſever you; therefore he deſires to know, whether you will joyn or ſever in your Challenges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Take your own choice, Gentlemen, and do what you think beſt.

L. Preſton. My Lord, the matter of challenging is ſo great an Advantage to a Man upon his Life, that for my part I muſt inſiſt upon that which the Law gives me, to challenge as many for my ſelf as I think fit, to the Number that the Law allows me.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton ſays, he will, as 'tis fit he ſhould, take all Advantages he can; What ſays Mr. Aſhton to it?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I expect the ſame Advantage.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt have it; it is not propoſed to preclude you from any Advantage that the Law allows you: If you inſiſt upon that Advantage, you muſt have it, and then you muſt be tryed ſeverally.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then my Lord, ſince they are pleaſed to declare they will ſever in their Challenges, we muſt deſire to ſever them in their Tryal, and to begin with the Tryal of my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire the Liberty to be by when my Lord is tried.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, that is not to be permitted.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. If you had joyned in your Challenges, then you had been tried all together.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That advantage you loſe by ſevering in your Challenges; you loſe the Aſſiſtance of each other at your Tryal.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Conſequence; but do as you pleaſe; ſet them by.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be they do not ſo well weigh the Conſequence, therefore call them them again. Gentlemen, Do you conſider the Conſequence of your not joyning in your Challenges? You muſt not be by if my Lord Preſton be tried by himſelf, but muſt withdraw, and thereby you will loſe the Advantage of helping one another.

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, I deſire to be tried alone.

Mr. Aſhton. And ſo do I, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Captain Richardſon, take them away.

Afterwards the Court was informed that Mr. Elliot deſired to be tryed with my Lord Preſton, and thereupon they were called again.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, Do you deſire to be tried alone, or with my Lord Preſton?

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I deſire to be tried with my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does Mr. Aſhton deſire it too?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord, I deſire to be tried by my ſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preſton by himſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Elliot, the King's Council do not think fit to try you with my Lord Preſton, without Mr. Aſhton; and unleſs you will all join, you muſt all be tried ſeverally.

Mr. Elliot. I can only anſwer for my ſelf.

Mr. Aſhton I am for being tried alone.

L. C. J. Holt. Then my Lord Preſton muſt be tried alone.

The other two were carried back to Newgate, and the Lord Preſton was bid by the Clerk to look to his Challenges.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Goddard Nelthorp, Baronet. Challenged.
Sir Thomas Cooke, Knt. Challenged.
Sir William Hedges, Knt. Challenged.
James Boddington, Eſq; Challenged.
Thomas Johnſon, Eſq; Challenged.
Ralph Bucknal, Eſq; Challenged.

Thomas Smith, Eſq; Challenged.
William Withers, Eſq; Challenged.
Richard Cradock, Eſq;

Mr. Cradock. My Lord, I know not how I came to be ſummoned upon this Jury; for I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. Then ſet him aſide.

Cl. of Ar. John Cane, Eſq; Challenged.
William Jacomb, Eſq;

Mr. Jacomb. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you not been a Freeholder?

Mr. Jacomb. Near this four Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Give him his Oath. (Which was done.)

Have you no Freehold in the County of Middleſex in your own Right, nor in the Right of your Wife?

Mr. Jacomb. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you muſt go on to the next.

Cl. of Ar. Joſeph Dawſon, Eſq;

Mr. Dawſon. My Lord, I am an ancient Man, and not fit to ſerve upon the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now you are here, for this time ſerve; we will excuſe you hereafter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to know when any one is challenged for the King, whether they muſt not ſhew cauſe.

L. C. J. Holt. By and by, if there be not enough, they ſhall ſhew cauſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You ſhall have all that the Law allows you certainly, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Auſtin, Eſq; Not appeared.
Richard Paget, Eſq;

L. Preſton. Has this Gentleman any Freehold?

Mr. Paget. Yes, my Lord, I have in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. I do not except againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly deſire they may ſhew their cauſe.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, Cauſe is not to be ſhewn by the King's Council till all the Pannel be gone through; and then, if there be not Twelve left to try, then they are bound to ſhew Cauſe; that is the Law.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is a thing of a very tender concern to me; I deſire to know, if it be not uſual that they ſhould aſſign the Cauſe, when they Challenge any for the King: For if it be not according to Law, it may be a prejudice to me; and I deſire I may have Council heard to that point.

L. J. C. Holt. My Lord, ſhall we aſſign Council to diſpute Matters not diſputable? There is not any more clear Caſe in all our Law, than that: If your Lordſhip pleaſe, you ſhall have a Book to read, that the King is not bound to ſhew Cauſe till the Pannel is perus'd.

L. Preſton. Then I don't inſiſt upon it.

Cl. of Ar. Walter Bridal, Eſq; Challenged.
Samuel Hodgkins, Eſq; Challenged.
Thomas Elton, Eſq;

L. Preſton. I do not challenge him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. John Milner, Eſq; Not appeared.
Richard Page, Eſq;

L. Preſton. I do not except againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then we challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Marſh, Eſq;

Mr. Marſh. My Lord, I deſire to be excuſed; I am not fit to ſerve upon a Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Why?

Mr. Marſh. I am thick of hearing.

L. C. J. Holt. Methinks you hear me very well.

Mr.

Mr. Marſh. Truly, my Lord, I do not hear well.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, you may ſpare him, if there be enough.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I do not challenge him; I deſire he may be ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We challenge him for the King.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made, as uſual.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grahme, Hold up your Hand —— (which he did) —— Gentlemen, you that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Pariſh of St Anne within the Liberty of Weſtminſter Baronet, together with John Aſhton, &c. —— prout in the Indictment mutatis mutandis —— and againſt the form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of this Felony and High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and High Treaſon Committed, or at any time ſince: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it, if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt my Lord Preſton, who is Indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme Baronet, and ſtands now Priſoner before you at the Bar; and the Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner, together with one John Aſhton and Edmund Elliot, as falſe Traitors againſt our Soveraign Lord and Lady King William and Queen Mary, not weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, the 29*th* of December, in the Second year of their now Majeſties Reign, at the Pariſh of St Clement Danes, in this County of Middleſex, did Conſpire, Conſult and Imagine to Depoſe their Majeſties from the Throne and Government of theſe Kingdoms, and to bring the King and Queen to final Death and Deſtruction, and to Levy War within this Kingdom, and procure an Invaſion to be made here; and that to bring their Treaſons to paſs, they did prepare and compoſe, and cauſe to be prepared and compoſed divers Treaſonable Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions in Writing, which were to inform the French King and his Subjects, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number, Force and Condition of their Majeſties Ships, and how ſome of them were Mann'd, and the Names of ſeveral of the Commanders of them, and how the Caſtles and Forts of Portſmouth, South-Sea and Goſport within this Kingdom were fortified, and how they might be Seized and Surprized by the King's Enemies; as alſo to inform them of the time, places, ways and means how they might Invade this Kingdom, Depoſe their Majeſties, and Fight with their their Ships againſt their Majeſties Ships, and cauſe and procure great Forces to be raiſed againſt the King and Queen, and ſend Ships to plague the City of London, and War and Rebellion within the Kingdom to procure; and that they did knowingly and ſecretly prepare and conceal two ſeveral Bills of Exchange for the payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and got theſe Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes and Memorandums into their Cuſtody; and afterwards, the 30th of December, for the Sum of One Hundred Pounds, by them, or ſome of them paid, they did hire a Ship to carry them and the ſaid Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Inſtructions, into parts beyond the Seas, to, and among their Majeſties Enemies; and did alſo prepare a Boat, which was to carry them to the Ship, and accordingly they went into the Boat, and went on Board the Ship with the Bills of Exchange, and Papers aforeſaid, and being on Board they ſet Sail, and made away towards France with thoſe Bills of Exchange and Papers, with intention to diſperſe them, and to perfect their ſaid Treaſons. And the Indictment further ſets forth, that there was, and is a War between our King and Queen, and the French King, and the People of thoſe parts, under his Dominions, who are Enemies of the King and Queen; the Priſoner, together with thoſe other two named before, as falſe Traitors, did adhere to the Enemies of the King and Queen, and to bring about this Treaſon, they did procure ſuch Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Inſtructions, and did hire ſuch Ship and Boat to carry them and thoſe Papers into France, and did go on board the ſaid Ship, and Sailed away for France, with intention to aid and aſſiſt the King's Enemies in Counſel and Intelligence, by thoſe Papers, and Bills of Exchange, as I before opened unto you, and this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of their Majeſties, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, the Priſoner Pleaded he is Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon his Country, which you are; if we prove him Guilty, it is your Duty to find him ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment hath been opened to you at large, and I do not doubt but you have obſerved it: It conſiſts of two Parts, which are formed upon two ſeveral Branches of the Statute of the 25*th* of Edward 3. the one is for compaſſing and imagining the Depoſing and Deſtruction of the King and Queen; the other, aiding and aſſiſting the King and Queens Enemies.

Treaſon, Gentlemen, conſiſts in the imagination of the Heart, but becauſe that imagination of the Heart can be diſcovered no other way but by ſome open Act; therefore the Law doth require, that ſome Overt Act, manifeſting that Intention and Imagination, be aſſigned and proved. I doubt not but you have obſerved that there are ſeveral Overt-Acts of both theſe kinds of Treaſon, aſſigned in this Indictment.

Gentlemen, the general Deſign of the Conſpiracy (as will appear by the Evidence) was this: The King and Queen were to be Depoſed, and this was to be effected by a French Army and a French Fleet.

It will be eaſily Granted, that nothing more dreadful can enter into the Imagination of an Engliſh-man, than the deſtruction of our Fleet, and the Conqueſt of the Kingdom by the Arms of France.

But yet it will be part of the Evidence that we ſhall offer to you, that the Priſoners, and others of the Conſpirators ſeem to be of another Mind, for amongſt the Papers which were taken with the Priſoners, you will ſee one, which is ſtyled, The Reſult of a Conference, wherein they pretend to ſhew the poſſibility of Reſtoring King James by the Power of the French King, and yet to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. They themſelves went no farther than to think it poſſible, and I believe it will be hard to perſwade any other Engliſh-man, that it is poſſible, unleſs one Inſtance could be given, that the French King ever employed his Arms for ſetting up any Body but himſelf, his own Religion, and his own Government. I never heard that he did pretend to Form any part of his Glories upon the virtue of Moderation, or Self-denial. And there can hardly be imagined a greater Inſtance of Self-denial, than for the French King, after he had deſtroyed the Dutch and Engliſh Fleets, and ſubdu'd our Forces at Land, not to make uſe of his Succeſs, ſo as to add theſe Three Kingdoms to his Conqueſts, and poſſeſs himſelf of the uncontеſted Dominion of the Sea for ever, but only to Intitle him at ſo great Hazard and Expence, to become a Mediator between King James and the People of England, and by his Mediation, to eſtabliſh the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of the People; And yet as abſurd as this ſeems, you will find this to be the Reſult of one of their Conferences. I did never think it was the part of any who were of Council for the King in caſes of this Nature, to endeavour to aggravate the Crime of the Priſoners, by going about to put falſe Colours upon Evidence, or to give it more than its due weight; and therefore I ſhall be ſure to forbear any thing of that Nature. But I think it my Duty to give ſome ſhort Account of the Nature and Courſe of the Evidence to be produced to you, which conſiſting of ſeveral ſorts, it will be in ſome ſort neceſſary to open it, that you may the more clearly apprehend it, and with more eaſe make your Obſervations upon it.

Gentlemen, we ſhall produce in Evidence, as well living Witneſſes, as Papers and Writings, which by a ſtrange kind of Providence were taken upon my Lord Preſton, and the other two Perſons named in the Indictment when they were Apprehended; and therein this Deſign that I have opened to you, will be made Evident beyond all contraction.

As to the living Witneſſes, the courſe of the Evidence will be this. One Nicholas Pratt is the Owner of a Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, he does uſually entruſt his Wife Jane Pratt with the Hiring out of this Smack; William Paceley is Maſter of the Veſſel, and has of late been made a Part-owner, to protect him from being Preſs'd; for it is a Priviledge that the Owners of Veſſels claim, not to be Preſs'd.

Some time ſince, (the Witneſſes will tell you the preciſe time) this Jane Pratt was ſent for to one Mr. Burdett's Houſe in the City, where ſhe met with Mr. Aſhton, who deſired to know, whether ſhe could undertake to Convey him and ſome others, with ſafety into France. She ſaid, ſhe did not doubt but ſhe could do ſo; and thereupon Mr. Aſhton told her, That he and his Friends were Merchants and Traders, and that they ſhould make great advantage, to the value of a Thouſand Pounds at leaſt, if they could be there quickly; their Diſcourſe went no farther at that time, but Mrs Pratt was appointed by Mr. Aſhton to bring the Maſter of the Veſſel along with her, for he had a mind to Diſcourſe himſelf with the Maſter, and they were to meet at the Wonder Tavern in Ludgate ſtreet; and becauſe there ſhould be no miſtake about the Meeting, Mr. Aſhton gave the Woman a Note of Direction in Writing, ready to be produced.

Accordingly by the 29*th* of December, Mrs. Pratt and the Maſter came to the Wonder Tavern, where Mr. Aſhton met with them, and there they treated of the Price to be given for the Hiring of this Veſſel to carry them to France, and I think 150 Guineas was the Sum then inſiſted upon, but no Bargain was made at this time, but there was a new Appointment to meet the next day, which was the 30*th* of December, at Mr. Burdett's Houſe.

The next day when ſhe and the Maſter came thither, they found there together Aſhton and Ellyot, the two other Perſons named in the Indictment, and there this Matter was treated of with great ſecreſie in Mrs Burdet's Bed-Chamber.

And they came to an Agreement, that 100 l. ſhould be the Sum to be paid to Mrs Pratt for conveying into France, Aſhton and Ellyot, and two other Perſons; So the Contract was Originally made for others beſides Mr Aſhton and Elliot, and the Money was actually depoſited by Mr Aſhton and Ellyot in Mrs Burdet's Hand, and a Six-pence was broken, one half of which was delivered to Mrs Burdet to keep, the other half Mr. Aſhton was to take along with him, and when the Maſter had ſafely landed them in France, Mr. Aſhton was to deliver his half of the Six-pence to the Maſter; which being brought to Mrs Turdet either by him or Mrs Prat, upon the joining of the two pieces together, the Maſter was entituled to receive the Hundred Pounds.

The next Appointment was to meet at one Mr. Rigby's Houſe in Covent Garden, and that was to be on the One and thirtieth of December, when the Voyage was to be begun: And the Tide not ſerving to go through-Bridge till late, the appointment was to meet the later. When they, Mrs. Prat, and the Maſter came there, they found only Mr Aſhton and Mr Ellyot, but before that time care was taken to provide a Sculler at Surrey-Stairs to be ready to carry them on board the Smack, and the Waterman was appointed to ſtay in a little Ale-Houſe thereabouts to be ready when he ſhould be called.

About ten a Clock at Night four Perſons came down together, and went into this Sculler with the Maſter of the Smack, and made what haſt they could through-Bridge till they came to Pickleherring Stairs over-againſt the Tower, where the Smack lay, and there went aboard the Maſter and theſe four Perſons, my Lord Preſton, a Servant of my Lord Preſton's, Mr Aſhton and Mr. Ellyot.

The Smack ſet ſail immediately after they were on Board, and their haſt made them carry away the Watermans Coat which he had lent them whilſt they were in the Sculler, and that accident was the occaſion of diſcovering who the Waterman was that carried them from Surrey-Stairs.

After they were on Board the Smack, they were poſſeſſed with great fear of being ſurpriſed, they knew the nature of the Buſineſs they were about, and the danger they were in if they ſhould be diſcovered, and therefore when they were to paſs by the George Frigat, a Man of War that lay in the River, they deſired the Maſter to hide, which he did, by putting them under the Quarter Hatches, a place where they could not ſtand or ſit, but muſt lie along on the Ballaſt. When they were paſſed by the George Frigat they quitted that place, but when they were near the Block Houſe at Graves, they grew apprehenſive, and they deſired to be hid a ſecond time, which was accordingly done.

And they continued to lie in that place till they were taken, and it was a happy thing they did ſo, the place was ſuch that they had not any poſſibility of throwing away their Letters and Papers, though they had made preparation for it in caſe of any Accident, having tied them together, and fix'd a piece of Lead to them, that ſo if they ſaw themſelves in danger of being taken, they might eaſily ſink the Pacquet; But being ſo cloſe ſhut up in this place, that they could not execute their Purpoſe, the Papers were taken, and will be offered to you in Evidence.

Gentlemen, Captain Billop, by the Order of a noble Lord now preſent, was directed to uſe his utmoſt diligence to ſeize ſome dangerous Perſons, of whoſe deſign of going beyond Sea for ſome very ill Ends, an Intimation had been given. He got ready a Pinnace well Mann'd, and went in purſuit of them down the River, and both as he went and return'd, he took care to ſearch ſuſpected Veſſels; when he came to this, he demanded of the Maſter what number of Men he had on Board, pretending he came to preſs Men; the Maſter told him he had but three, and for thoſe he had a Protection. But the Captain ſaid he muſt be better ſatisfied, and muſt ſearch the Veſſel, and in the ſearch he found theſe four Perſons lying concealed in this ſecret place, under the Quarter-Hatches.

As they were taken out one after another, one of the Seamen obſerved Mr. Aſhton to take up a Bundle of Papers from off the Ballaſt, and put it in his Boſom, and near the place where Papers lay, he took up two Seals, which after proved to be my Lord Preſton's Seals when he was Secretary. Captain Billop being inform'd of this by that Seaman, he put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and took away from him the Bundle of Papers with the Lead fix'd to it.

When they were put on board the Captain's Pinnace, they all preſſed him much, that he would let them go on ſhore at Graveſend, pretending want of Refreſhment, they not having eaten, and the Night having been cold, but he did not think that proper, nor ſafe, but told them, they ſhould go on Board the George Frigat, and refreſh themſelves there.

When they came on Board the George Frigat, all the three Gentlemen, and my Lord Preſton in particular, were very earneſt with Captain Billop to diſpoſe of the Bundle of Papers, mixing extraordinary Promiſes, with great Complements.

Not

Not prevailing there, when they were return'd to the Pinnace, they renew'd their Sollicitations, and one of them told him, it would be eaſie to remove all Suſpicion by fixing the Lead to ſome other Papers of little Signification, which were found in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, which he might produce, and they would without difficulty paſs for the Papers that were taken.

But the Captain was too juſt to comply with this Propoſal. When they found he was not to be moved, you will find from the Witneſſes, that their Promiſes were turned into Threats, and they uſed another ſort of Language.

When they were brought to Whitehall Stairs, upon their landing they gave Money to the Maſter and the Seamen, deſiring them to ſay, they were hired to go for Flanders, and not for France.

Gentlemen, theſe things which I have opened carry a ſtrong Preſumption of Guilt, for Engliſhmen eſpecially one of that Quality of my Lord Preſton, to go into the Country of an Enemy without any manner of Paſsport, and in ſuch a manner as they could not expect but to be ſeized for Spies, unleſs they were aſſured, that their Character was ſo well known there, that they ſhould be look'd upon not as Perſons coming to get Intelligence, but to give it, unleſs they were well aſſured of a good Reception, when they came there.

But there is no occaſion to leave any thing to Conjecture in this Caſe, what is contained in theſe Papers makes the Deſign of the Voyage beyond diſpute. I think, Gentlemen, after you have heard the Evidence, you will be very well ſatisfied, that my Lord Preſton and the other two who ſtand indicted, were equally concerned in the Papers; they were all alike earneſt to preſerve them from being ſeen, they all ſollicited for the diſpoſing of them, and promiſed Rewards if they might prevail.

Gentlemen, theſe Papers are of various Natures.

One I mentioned before, is Entituled, The Reſult of a Conference between ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the Poſſibility and Methods of Reſtoring King James by a French Power, without endangering the Proteſtant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

Another contains Heads for a Declaration to be prepared, in order to be publiſhed when the French have had Succeſs at Sea, and are landing, and that is filled with ſuch Pretences as they thought moſt ſpecious, and moſt likely to amuſe and delude the People.

There is another ſort of theſe Papers which conſiſts of Letters. Theſe Letters are directed in falſe Names, and are not ſubſcribed, and it is not to be imagin'd it ſhould be otherwiſe. Yet, Gentlemen, (though that is not the preſent Buſineſs) the Hands of the Writers of theſe Letters are very well known, and the Subject Matter of them will eaſily reveal to you for whom they were intended, for though theſe Letters are moſt of them Written under divers Cants, ſome under the Colour of Trade, ſome of them under the Colour of a Law-Suit for the Redeeming of a Mortgage, others under the Notion of a Match, and a Settlement to be made upon that Match, yet the real Buſineſs is ſo plain, that you need but hear them read to ſee through the Diſguiſe.

Though they begin generally in the Stile of Merchants writing to one another, or the like, yet towards the end of the Letters you will obſerve Expreſſions of Duty and Reverence (Terms which do not uſually paſs in Correſpondence between Perſons of that ſort) ſufficient to ſhew, that ſomewhat elſe was intended to be covered in what went before.

Gentlemen, It will appear to you, that ſome of the Writers of theſe Letters were of the number of thoſe who were ſecured the laſt Summer when the French Fleet was upon our Coaſts, and you will obſerve they complain, that by reaſon of that Reſtraint, the Deſign was very much hindred, though they have endeavoured to redeem that loſs of time ſince their Diſcharge, and have carried on the Buſineſs with more vigor than ever.

In ſhort, The deſign of theſe Letters is to importune the ſetting out of the French Fleet with all poſſible Expedition: They ſay they muſt not ſuffer ſuch a fit Seaſon to be ſpent unprofitably; That the beſt time is between this and the firſt of March to come to a good Market; and if they come not before the 10th of March, all will be loſt. In another of their Letters they ſay, If the Suit be well ſollicited and managed, it may come to a final hearing before the end of Eaſter Term.

They complain that there are ſeveral indiſcreet Letters came from St. Germains, that turn to the prejudice of the Deſign. Thoſe Letters are not enough diſguis'd to deceive the People here, but ſpeak too plainly what is to be expected from themſelves, and from the French. You will take notice, that the Letters which all you will hear are all Bills with high Characters of the Bearer: for which reaſon they write in ſuch general Terms, becauſe the Bearer was intruſted with the whole. Some of the Letters ſay, no Particulars are or need be expreſſed, becauſe he will inform them of every thing. Others, That they could not write ſo much as he could ſay; and that nothing was wanting but to allow him a full and fit Seaſon to give an account of all the Buſineſs; and that they intirely depend upon his account of them and their Condition.

And, Gentlemen, in one of the Letters the Bearer is ſtyled a Lord; and to whom can that be applied, unleſs to the Priſoner at the Bar?

In another Letter, when they ſpeak of ſending the Copper and the Linen (the Goods pretended for carrying on the Trade) it is added, And what the meaning of that is, they muſt refer to the Bearer, who was able to give them a particular account.

I have mention'd ſo much of the Papers, only that you might have a general Notion of them; that ſo when you hear them read, you may more readily make your Obſervations. I aſſure you I have been as careful as I could, not to exceed the Truth in opening any part of the Evidence. But it is your part to ſee whether what I have opened be made out in Proof.

There is another Paper that gives an account of their Majeſties Fleet to be ſent out this Summer; and there is an Obſervation at the end of it, that it was hoped it may be out in March. But you will find by other Papers (and particularly by one of my Lords own Hand-writing) that he was of another mind, that the Fleet will not be out before June.

Gentlemen, the laſt ſort of Papers which I will mention to you, are ſome Memorandums and Notes, written by my Lord Preſton; wherein he gives an account of ſeveral things of great moment; which as his memory ſerved him, are put together without Connexion or Method, being only to remind him of them when he ſhould have occaſion to mention them.

He therein gives an account of the number and ſtrength of the Engliſh Fleet, how they are manned, and who are the Principal Officers and Commanders, and in what time they will be out.

He likewiſe gives an account of the number and ſtate of the Dutch Fleet, and how that is to be divided and diſpoſed of.

And with relation to the French Fleet, there is a particular Memorandum, That they muſt be out at fartheſt in April; That they muſt be out ſo as to ſeparate the Dutch Fleet and ours; That they muſt be ſure to look in at Spithead as they come by, and ſecure what Ships ſhould be in that Harbour from joyning the reſt.

There is alſo a hint given of thoſe that were moſt likely to come in to them. And there is Advice in what place their Fleet ſhould fight ours. They muſt not come ſo high as Beachy, where they fought the laſt year, but rather chuſe to fight in the Chops of the Channel.

There is an account of Portſmouth, how fortified and garriſon'd, that it had but 500 Men; that Goſport had nothing but Palliſadoes about it; and Southſea Caſtle very weak.

There are Memorandums of other Heads proper for a Declaration.

There are the Names of ſeveral Perſons, ſome of them with particular Characters, and ſome without; and amongſt the reſt, there is this Character given of the Clergy of the City of London, that they are the worſt of all others.

Gentlemen, we ſhall proceed to the Evidence, and firſt call the Living Witneſſes, and then read the Papers; and when you have heard what the one can ſay, and what the other contain, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, and ſubmit all to the Direction of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſwear Mrs. Pratt.

Jane Pratt.

Who was ſworn with Seven or Eight more.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs Pratt, Pray will you tell us what you know concerning the hiring of a Veſſel, and whither it was to go? and by whom it was hired, and for what? Pray tell your whole Knowledge in this Matter.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, ſent for me to his Houſe, to hire a Veſſel to go for France, and asked me if I could carry them ſecure; I told them I could let them have a Smack that would carry them; and if it pleaſe you my Lord, we met ſeveral times at his Houſe, and at laſt there was Mr. Aſhton there, and Mr. Aſhton appointed to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-hill; I think they call it the Wonder-Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. Miſtreſs, Pray begin again, and ſpeak out.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet ſent for me to hire my Smack to go for France, and they asked me if I thought it would carry them ſecure; I told them yes, I thought it would. And I came ſeveral times about it to Mr. Burdet's Houſe; the Smack was not then come to the Tower, as it did afterwards; and then after they ſent for Mr. Aſhton, and he met me at Mr. Burdet's, and meeting at Mr. Burdet's, he gave me a Note, to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgatehill, and there Aſhton met, but Mr. Burdet did not come.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was with Aſhton when you met at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. None but a Man of his, as Mr. Aſhton ſaid; there we ſat about an hour and an half and did nothing: At length we went away, and appointed to meet at Mr Burdet's Houſe the next day at ſeven or eight a Clock, and there we met, and the Bargain was made.

Mr. Serj Tremain. What Bargain?

Mrs. Pratt. I askt 150 l. and they told me that was too much; ſays Aſhton, I will give you Fourſcore: Says Mr. Burdet, pray encourage them, offer them 100 l. thereupon he did offer 100 l. and we agreed for 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What day was that, can you remember?

Mrs. Pratt. We met on the Monday, and the Tueſday we agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Ninety three Guineas and Six-pence.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Who was by when the Bargain was made?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Elliot was along with them; Mrs. Burdet and the Maſter of the Veſſel at the Agreement.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What is the Maſter's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. His Name is Paſely, and there was Six-pence broken, and Mr. Aſhton took one of the Six-pences, and Mr. Burdet ordered him to give his Wife the other, and ſo he did; and when the money was paid, Mr. Aſhton brought it in a Paper wrapt up, and ſaid, we ſhould ſee it told out, and he told it out there, and it was Ninty three Guineas and the Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who did they tell you they were to carry into France?

Mrs. Pratt. Truly my Lord they ſaid Three, that was all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What followed then? Did they give you any Note where you were to come for them?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton bid Mr. Elliot write a a Note where they ſhould come; it was at Mr. Rigby's in Covent-Garden, at the Seven Stars, and there we were to meet at Eleven a Clock at night; and when we came there, Mr. Aſhton was within, and went out and fetch'd in ſome Company, Mr. Elliot came and two other Gentlemen that I never ſaw in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Miſtriſs, you ſpeak of the breaking of a Six-pence, what was to be done with that?

Mrs. Pratt. My Maſter was to bring the half of the Six-pence that Mr. Aſhton had, to Miſtriſs Burdett, and then we were to have the 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had Mrs. Burdet the other Piece?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, Mr. Aſhton had one half, and ſhe had t'other.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. Was there any Proviſion carried on Board this Smack?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, there was a Hamper and a Trunk, which were fetch'd from Mr. Burdet's Houſe; my Man John Fiſher carried the Trunk, and a Porter carried the Hamper, and I took care to ſee it put in the Veſſel.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came to Covent-Garden that Night, what Diſcourſe had you? and what Inquiries were there made, and by whom?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Aſhton comes in, as ſhe ſaid Mr. Aſhton was her Husband, and ſaid there was ſome News from Court, of having Papers in a Hat, and that they had choſen ſome Lord or other: Something it was I remember, I can't tell what; but ſays one Gentleman that ſtood by, and ſaid, I was choſen the laſt Year, that ſignifies nothing; and another ſaid, I miſſed it; It is only a Chriſtmas Gambal, it ſignifies little.

Mr. Serj Tremain. What further diſcourſe had they?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Aſhton ſaid ſhe was afraid they ſhould have no very good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any diſcourſe what advantage they ſhould get by going, or you by carrying of them?

Mrs. Pratt. They ſaid they would help us to the earning of 1000 l. before Lady-day, if they went this time ſafe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray Mrs. recollect your ſelf; were they to go to Flanders? or where?

Mrs. Pratt. They were to go for France: they were not to go for Flanders.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What time of Night did you depart from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. About Eleven a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. How did they go away from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not go with them: Mrs. Aſhton kept me, and gave me the Leg of a Gooſe and ſome Drink.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know any thing further?

Mrs. Pratt. No; I think I have told all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were you hired for France, or Flanders? I ask you once again.

Mrs. Pratt. We were hired for France; any place there where we could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any particular Port mentioned?

L. C. J. Holt. If you have done with her, will my Lord ask her any queſtion?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be askt, whether ſhe ever ſaw me before?

Mrs. Pratt. No; never, my Lord, but in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But, ſhe ſays, when they were at Rigby's there came in two Gentlemen with Mr. Ellyot that Night.

L. Preſton. I deſire to know of her whether I was one of them two.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, ſhe does not ſay your Lordſhip was one of them.

Mrs. Pratt. No, my Lord, you were not one of them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up Paſeley. Paſeley, what do you know about hiring of this Smack to go for France? I think you are Maſter of the Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, are you not?

Mr. Paſeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then pray give an account of the whole matter.

Mr. Paſeley. The Smack was hired of the Woman, and not of me; and when I came up to London ſhe told me ſhe had got a Voyage over to France, if I was minded to go; I ſaid, yes: and ſhe appointed me to go along with her to this Miſtris, what do ye call um's Houſe, this Mrs. Burdet, and when he came to this Houſe, there was no body within but Mr. Aſhton: preſently after came in Mr. Ellyot; after they came in they told us the things were not ready yet, but they would be ready preſently to carry on Board; when theſe things were ready, John Fiſher carried the Trunk down, and the Porter carried the Hamper, and I went with them along to Billingſgate and carried them on Board; and when I carried them on Board I went to Billingſgate again, and ſo we went along to this Mr. Burdet's Houſe; and ſo when we came up to Burdet's Houſe, Aſhton and Elliot were not there preſent, but we had been there but a little time e'er they came in, and then they came and ſaid to my Owner and me, You ſhall ſee the Money told; it was all in Gold but one Six-pence; there was Ninety three Guineas: And, after the Money was told, there was a Six-pence that was broken in half, and the Guineas he rolled up in a Paper, and gave them to Miſtreſs Burdet, and bid her lay them up; and he gave her one half of the Sixpence, and kept the other half himſelf; and when I brought that other half that he had, or my Owner, then ſhe was to give the Money to her or me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray what Room of the Houſe was this in at Mr. Burdet's?

Paſeley. It was on the Left-Hand going in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was it a Bed-Chamber?

Paſeley. Yes, 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What time of Night was it pray?

Paſeley. About Eight a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What diſcourſe had you with them there, pray?

Paſeley. They asked me if I thought they might get well over? I told them yes, I believed they might.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they tell you what part of France they were to go to?

Paſeley. No, they named no place, but any part in France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, go on, tell us what they ſaid further.

Paſeley. So, Sir, they gave us direction to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's in Covent Garden: when we came there it was Eleven a Clock at Night, and they were not in the Houſe when we came in, except 'twere Mr. Aſhton; but preſently after Aſhton and Ellyot came in, and they ſate down; and ſo in came two Gentlemen more, but what they were, or who they were, I don't know, and they diſcourſed about Papers ſhaking in a Hat, and ſaid they ſhould have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed: And after this Ellyot and Aſhton came out of the Houſe and called me to go with them, and after we were gone out, Mr. Aſhton leaves Ellyot and went away from him, and Ellyot bid me go along with him, ſays, come Maſter, come along with me; he did not name any place whither they were to go, but it happened to be Surry-Stairs, and going down, he calls in at the corner Houſe, which is an Ale-houſe, for the Water-man, and bid me go before to the Waterſide; and when we came thither the Water-man ſteps into his Boat, and I after him; and when I was in the Boat I went into the Stern, and by that time I was ſeated in the Stern there came down four Men; but I never ſaw my Lord and his Man before they came into the Wherry.

L. C. J. Holt. Who came into the Wherry?

Paſeley. There was all thoſe four, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Ellyot, my Lord, and his man.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this do you ſay?

Paſeley. At Surry-ſtairs, there the Boat was.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Was the Priſoner at the Bar one of them?

Paſeley. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what did you do then?

Paſeley. After we were ſeated in the Boat at Surry-ſtairs we put off, and went down through Bridge, and going through Bridge we came on Board; the Veſſel, riding juſt againſt the Tower almoſt, and we went all on Board; and when we came on Board, my men were all aſleep, and being aſleep, I called them out of the Cabin to hale up the Anchor; and there being very little Wind ſtirring, we could not go very far, but came juſt below the half-way Tree, and then we ſtopt, and I order to drop the Anchor for fear of the Veſſels in the River: and the next morning about Eight a Clock we weighed our Anchor again, and went on till we came near to the George Man of War, and there they all of them hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn: Who?

Paſeley. All of them, my Lord. There was Aſhton, and Ellyot, and my Lord Preſton, and his man.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. In what place did they hide?

Paſeley. In the Quarter-hatches, under the Hatches where we lie.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they deſire you to hide them?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they ſay?

Paſeley. They ſaid, that if there ſhould come any Boat on board to preſs, I ſhould ſhew them my Protection; and ſo there came no Boat then.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. How big is this place that they hid in?

Paſeley. 'Tis in the Quarter under, near the Cabin-hatches.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. I ask you what kind of place it is?

Paſeley. They cannot ſit upright, nor ſtand upright, but they are fain to lie along, or lean upon their Elbows.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, go on, what happened afterwards?

Paſeley. After that we were paſt the man of War, they came up and ſate in the Cabin where we uſed to eat our Victuals; and when we came to Graveſend, over againſt the Dock-houſe, they would go down again and hide, and did ſo till we paſſed the Block-houſe, and then they were for coming up again, and then I ſaw a Boat coming about Tilbury which made towards us, and thereupon they ducked down again, and the Hatches were laid down upon them, and there they remained till they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Where were they taken?

Paſeley. They were taken between the North Block-houſe and the Little——

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. But I mean in what part of the Ship?

Paſeley. They were taken in that little place where they were hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Were the Hatches ſhut down upon them?

Paſeley. Yes, they were.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. How long had they been hid before they were taken?

Paſeley. A quarter of an Hour, or thereabouts.

Sir W. W. Did they deſire to be hid there?

Paſeley. Yes, they did, and they were hid there.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Now tell us, after ſuch time as they were taken, what they ſaid, and what you obſerved.

Paſeley. After they were taken, they ſaid nothing to me, my Lord, nor none of them did ſpeak to me after the Boat had taken them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. But what happened after they were taken?

Paſeley. After they were taken, Captain Billop ordered them to go into the Boat, and us with them; and when we came to White hall-ſtairs, one of them ſaid to me, Maſter, when you come upon your Examination, ſay you were bound to Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Which was that that ſaid ſo?

Mr. Paſeley. 'Twas Ellyot, and he gave me half a Crown to bear my expences that Night, and ſaid he would remember to take care of us afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they give any money to the Seamen?

Paſeley. Yes, Aſhton gave one of my men half a Crown, and bid him ſay he was bound for Flanders, and not for France; and my Lords man gave my other man half a Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. Was my Lord Preſton by when that money was given?

Paſelet. My Lord was upon the Bridge, but not near me.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. If my Lord have any Queſtions to ask him, we have done with him for the preſent.

L. Preſton. No, my Lord, I have no Queſtions to ask him.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was my Lord Preſton by when the directions was given you to ſay you were to go to Flanders, and not to France?

Paſeley. I ſay he was upon the Bridge, bnt was not near me.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. What diſcourſe had you on board with any of them?

Paſeley. Very little. They askt me if I thought they ſhould go clear, and I told them yes, I thought they might.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Clear of what?

Paſeley. Clear of the Veſſels ſearching: They examined me that Night I was at the Seven Stars, if I knew the way of the Swing on the back of the Channel, to go clear of the Town. I told them I did not know the way by the Back of the Sands by Margaret's, but the Swing would not keep them clear of the Town.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Was there a Note written whither you were to come?

Paſeley. Yes. There was a Note written to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Whereabouts is Burdet's Houſe?

Paſeley. That is in Queen-ſtreet in the City.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. You Paſely, Did the Waterman that brought them on Board, leave two Coats behind him?

Paſeley. Yes, the Waterman did leave two Coats;

Coats; and I put them into my Cheſt, and afterwards they broke open my Cheſt, and took them out, and brought them to my Lord Chief Juſtices.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Then we will next produce that Waterman. Set up Charles Betſworth.

Mr. Serj Thompſon. Come, will you give us an Account who you carried on Board a Smack, and what hapned.

Betſworth. I was going over the Water from Surry Stairs about Seven or Eight a Clock, and a Gentleman at the Stairs call'd Sculler, and ask'd me if I would carry him down the River; ſaid I how far, ſays he to the Tower; ſaid I 'tis againſt Tide, and I can't carry you down ſo low; he ſaid he would ſtay till the Tide turn'd; ſaid I, if I be out of my Bed ſo long, I deſerve to be well paid for it; If you will give me Half a Crown I'll carry you down; ſays he I'll give it you; ſo then I came a-Shore, and he ask'd me what my Name was, I told him Charles Betſworth; ſays he, will you be ſure to ſtay for us; Yes, ſaid I, if you will be ſure to come: If I be not at the Stairs, I'll be at that Ale-houſe there in the Corner; ſo I ſtaid, and carried over a Fare or two over the Water; and about Eleven a Clock, as I was ſitting in the Houſe a Gentleman comes, and calls Charles, and ſo out I went to my Boat, and took them in. There was one man, as I ſuppoſe, in the Stern, and he that called me out followed me down, and by and by came three more into my Boat; one of them had a Whitiſh Cloak on, and the other a gray looſe Coat, and a red Bag, of the quantity of a Peck; and ſo we put off, and rowed away; and juſt under the Temple Wall, which was all the Words I heard from them, that I can remember, ſays one Gentleman, When do you hear the King goes away? and another made anſwer and ſaid, a Tueſday: So we rowed down through Bridge, and when we were through Bridge, they asked where the Veſſel lay; and he that was in the Stern ſaid, it was Southwark ſide, over againſt the Tower, and bid me row over thither. And when we came juſt below Battle-Bridge, that man ſaid, that is ſhe that rides a Head of us. I look'd, and ſhe had a Pennant up; ſo they were put on Board; and as ſoon as they were on Board, ſhe went off, and I rowed up to the Bridge, and went through Bridge, and came up as far as

and there I ſtaid and took my Scull and my Staff out of my Boat; and when I took them out, I miſſed my Clothes; ſays I, God bleſs me, I have loſt my Clothes; but then I thought it was but a ſtill Tide, and therefore I would try if I could overtake them; for I thought they could not be got far, there being little or no Wind; ſo I went down to the Place where the Veſſel lay, and ſhe was gone; and I enquired of ſeveral Smacks that lay there, but could hear nothing, and I rowed as low as Limehouſe Reach; and about Black Wall and Limehouſe Reach, I came up to a Smack, that I ſuppoſed was ſhe, and I cry'd out, Ho the Smack, and they anſwered me So; I asked them if I did not bring a Fare a board that Smack a while ago; then they ſaid no; I told them I had brought a Fare on Board ſome Smack that lay about Horſleydown and Pickle-herring Stairs, and they had got two Coats of mine, which I had forgotten, and it had a Pennant up when they went on Board, but this had none; ſo I rowed on further, till I came as far as Berking Sherf; and I thought there being ſo little Wind that none could be gone beyond me; and therefore waited to ſee a Smack with a Pennant coming down, but I could not meet with it, and there I lay all Night in my Waſtcoat; and the next day I came back to Greenwich, and as I came along, I went on Board ſeveral Veſſels to enquire, becauſe I took her for an Attendant upon a Man of War, but I could not hear of my Clothes, till laſt Friday was Seven-night, two Watermen came, and brought me the Clothes I loſt.

L. C. J. Then you have your Clothes again?

Betſworth. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thomſon. Pray look upon that Gentleman there, my Lord Preſton, are you ſure that he was one of them that was in your Boat?

Betſworth. I can't tell that ever I ſaw him in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You Paſely, I ask you, was my Lord Preſton one of the Gentlemen the Waterman brought on Board your Smack?

Paſely. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Waterman?

Paſely. Truly my Lord I can't tell; but the Waterman's Coat was left on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then let me ask you another Queſtion, Had you a Pennant?

Paſely. Yes, I had when I came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pennant?

Paſely. Yes, I did afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Why did you take it in?

Paſely. They asked me if there was a Pennant; and I told them yes; and they bid me take it in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who bid you take it in?

Paſely. Ellyot did; ſo we took it down.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will my Lord ask Betſworth any Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No, I have nothing to ſay to him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did they carry a board with them, Paſely?

Paſely. They had nothing a board but the Trunk and Hamper, that were brought down before from Burdet's Houſe: and there was nothing brought in the Boat but only a Leather Bag.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up Fiſher. I think his Name is John Fiſher. You were one of the Seamen that did belong to the Smack, I think.

Fiſher. Yes. I was.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray then tell us, who were brought thither; and what happened upon it.

Fiſher. About ſix Hours before they came on board us, our Maſter came himſelf on Board, and took me along with him; but whither I was to go then I did not know. He carryed me to a Houſe in the City, and there gave me a ſmall Trunk to carry, and a Hamper to a Porter: and we went away with them; and he bid us, at Billingſgate, carry them a Board, which we did.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Trunk and Hamper brought on board?

Fiſher. About ſix or ſeven a Clock at night, on Wedneſday, I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, and what followed?

Fiſher. My Lord, and Mr Aſhton, and Mr Ellyot, and my Lords man, and the Maſter came on Board between eleven and twelve: There was no more came on Board that I know of; but we were aſleep when they came on Board:

Board; and immediately our Maſter ordered us to hale up the Anchor. Now there was but little Wind ſtirring; and by that time we were ſain down as low as half-way Tree, it being ſtill Flood, we could go no farther: ſo there we were ordered to ſtop, and we lay by till morning; and about eight in the morning we weighed Anchor again, and about nine, when we came to the George Man of War, they hid, they deſired to go down into the Quarters, and we laid the Hatches upon them.

Mr Serj. Tremain. What kind of place is it that they hid in?

Fiſher. They could not ſtand upright, nor ſit upright, but they muſt lie or lean upon their Elbows. So when we were got below the Ship, they came up again into the Cabbin: And when we came at Graveſend near the Block Houſe, then they hid again till we were below the Block-Houſe; and then we ſpyed a Boat coming, which made them to keep below; and there they continued till Captain Billop took them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were they all four there?

Fiſher. Yes all four.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After they were taken, what ſaid they?

Fiſher. After ſuch time as they were taken, and come up to Whitehall Stairs, Captain Aſhton gave me a Half-Crown piece, and bid me ſay they were going to Flanders and not to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But whither were you going?

Fiſher. Truly, I did not know where we were to go, till ſince we came on Shoar. I underſtood nothing till they hid; and then indeed I thought we were going to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did any Body tell you you were to go to France?

Fiſher. Since we came on Shoar.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will my Lord ask him any Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then the next Witneſs we call is one Amonds, Pray tell us what you know of this Matter.

Amonds. May it pleaſe you my Lord, I know nothing concerning my Maſters Buſineſs, but all that I know of this Buſineſs is, That they came on Board about Twelve a Clock at Night, and I was then aſleep in the Cabin, and hearing ſome come on Board, and my Maſter call, I looked out, and there were three or four Gentlemen and my Maſter, and he ordered us to ſet ſail immediately, and make our way down as faſt as we could; there was little or no Wind; ſo that when we came down to the half way Tree, we were forced to come to an Anchor, and there we rid at Anchor till it was broad day, when there was a brave Gale to the Weſtward, and by that time we got down to Long Reach; about Nine a Clock we came to the George Frigat, a Man of War, and they underſtanding that, deſired to hide theſe Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentlemen?

Amonds. My Lord Preſton, Mr Aſhton and Mr Ellyot, and the other Gentleman that was with them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look upon my Lord there, was he one?

Amonds. Yes, that Gentleman was one.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, go on.

Amonds. And ſo Sir, after we were paſſed the Frigat, they came up again, and did not deſign to go down any more till they ſee ſome other danger. When we came almoſt to Graveſend, they went down again: When we were paſt the Block Houſe I was at the Helm and they were reſolving to go to Dinner, and bid that Man, my Fellow, to reach them ſome Victuals out of the Hamper: And while he was reaching them ſome Victuals, I ſee the Pinnace coming towards us; ſaid I, here is a Pinnace coming a Board; ſays my Lord and they, we muſt go down again and hide, and ſo they did go down again; we apprehended that they were coming aboard to preſs us, and they had no mind to be ſeen. When the Pinnace came near, they waved to us in this manner, as much as to bid us ſtay; ſo we laid the Sail by, and ſtaid for them till they came up; and when the Captain came on Board, ſays he, this is worth our coming on Board, here are a couple of briſk Seamen will do the King Service; I muſt have them, I think; ſays I, I hope not ſo, Noble Captain; ſays he, have you any thing to keep your ſelves clear? Yes, ſays our Maſter? I am ſorry for that, ſays the Captain; what is it? ſays the Maſter, I have a Protection; ſays the Captain, let us ſee your Protection: ſo the Maſter pulls out his Protection, and ſhews it: Well, ſays the Captain, I muſt look a little further, and away he goes into the Cabin, and takes up the Hatches where theſe Gentlemen were; ſays the Captain; Hye, hye, who is here? Turn out, ſays he; but I ſuppoſe they did not make ſo much haſt as the Captain expected; ſo he called ſome of his men on Board; and when they came on Board, my Lord came out, and the reſt of the Gentlemen and ſays my Lord to the Captain, I hope you will be ſo kind as not to take any thing from us: Says he, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers, 'tis Papers I look for, and put his Hands in both his Pockets and pulled out Papers, and put them into his own Pocket, but whether they were new or old I can't tell; and there was a Watch likewiſe, but that he gave my Lord again, and ſaid, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers: then he ſearcht Mr. Ellyot, and Mr Aſhton was the laſt that came out, and there was one of my Lords Watermen in the Cabin with him; and, ſays he, and pleaſe you Noble Captain, That Gentleman puts ſomething in his Boſom: Says the Captain, What did you put in your Boſom, Sir; nothing, ſays he, but my Handkerchief.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Amonds. Mr. Aſhton, and ſhews him his Handkerchief, and afterwards the Captain put his Hand in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled it out.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did he pull out?

Amonds. A Roll of Papers with a Piece of Lead to it.

Mr. Serj. Thomſon. Did you ſee the Lead fix'd to the Papers.

Amonds. I did ſee it fix'd to the Packthread that tyed the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What ſort of Place is it in which they were taken?

Amonds. They could not ſit nor ſtand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any money given you?

Amonds. I had half a Crown given me by my Lord's man.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it gave you the money?

Amonds.

Amonds. It was my Lord's man, he that was on Board the Ship; he gave me half a Crown in Whitehall, and ſaid, I ſhould ſay we were bound for Flanders, and not for France, but who the half Crown came from I can't tell, my Lord ſaid nothing to me at all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you hear any Diſcourſe as they came down?

Amond. No, I did not mind any thing of diſcourſe, for I never came among them, unleſs it were at the Hour of Watching.

L. Preſton. Pray did I ſay any thing to you at Whitehall?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your way is to propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will ask them for you.

L. Preſton. My Lord I deſire to ask him if I ſaid any thing to him at Whitehall.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you? Did my Lord Preſton ſay any thing to you at Whitehall?

Amond. No my Lord, he never ſaid any thing to me at all; it was his man that gave me the half Crown, and ſpoke to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Will your Lordſhip ask him any other Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then call your next Witneſs.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Swear Captain Billop.

Which was done.

Mr. Serj Thompſon. Come, Captain Billop, Pray will you tell my Lord and Jury, where you did apprehend my Lord Preſton, and the Circumſtances of what happened at their taking.

Capt. Billop. Sir, I met with them at the upper end of the Hope.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray give us an Account from the beginning to the end, what paſſed, how you came with the Boat, and all that happened at that time.

Capt. Billop. About Two a Clock, or between One and Two, upon the laſt of December, my Lord Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the Houſe of Lords, and told me his Father would ſpeak with me; and he carried me to my Lord Linſey's Chamber, where immediately my Lord Preſident came, and told me there were ſome Perſons were going for France about Buſineſs of dangerous Conſequence, and he deſired me to uſe ſome means to get them apprehended; I then propoſed what I ſhould have to enable me for the Undertaking. My Lord Danby ſaid there was ſuch a Boat, that he would procure for me, and my Lord Preſident gave me a Letter to another Perſon, who was to inſtruct me further about this Matter: My Lord Danby got the Boat ready, and ſome Men and Arms in it; but I thought there was not Arms enough, ſo I borrow'd ſome Arms of my Lord Lucas, and about Eleven a Clock as near as I remember we put off from Tower Wharf, it being very calm; I thought we ſhould be ſwifter than any Veſſel, and ſhould have the advantage of them all; and therefore run down as far as Graves-End; and I brought ſeveral Veſſels by the Lee, in which time I preſſed ſome Barkin men, two or three of them; and amongſt them, one that knew the Veſſels that lay in the River, having been on Board ſeveral; and we did board divers, and took out ſome Men, having a Preſs Warrant; and he that I had taken of the Barkin Men, after he had paſſed by ſeveral Veſſels, ſeeing this Veſſel ſailing, told me that was the Thomas and Elizabeth; whereupon we made up to them, and waving towards them, they ſtaid for us: when we came up, there was ſtanding by the Maſter two luſty Sailors, and I told him I would take but one of them; he ſaid he had a Protection, I bid him ſhew it me; when I was come on Board, and had looked upon his Protection, I told him I muſt look a little further, and I went down into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there I found them all four lying together.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What four?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preſton. I did not know him then, nor till afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who elſe was there?

Captain Billop. Mr. Elliot was there, and Mr. Aſhton, who were both my former Acquaintance, but my Lord Preſton I had forgotten, till one of them called him my Lord, and I asked them what Lord it was; and they ſaid it was my Lord Preſton; ſo then I ſaluted my Lord, ſo we rowed up.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray Captain tell us what happened in the Veſſel before you went out of it, after you found them there?

Captain Billop. I handed my Lord Preſton up firſt, and after he came out of that little place, which he was forced to creep out of on his Knees, I turned my Lord about, and told him I muſt ſearch him; he ſaid, he hoped I would not meddle with any thing; I told him I would meddle with nothing but Papers, ſo I put my Hand in his Pocket and took all the Papers I could find, and put them in my own Pocket, and taking out a Watch, I delivered it to my Lord again. The next was Mr. Elliot, and I ſearcht him, and found nothing at all upon him. After that Aſhton came up, and one of my Men told me that Gentleman had put ſomething in his Boſom; whereupon I gave him a ſudden turn, his Back being towards me, and asked him what was that he put in his Boſom? he told me nothing but his Handkerchief, and pluckt his Handkerchief out; with that I clapt my Hand in and got the Packet, and took it out, with the Lead fixt to it; I have the Lead now in my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray will you produce it, Sir. Which he did.

Captain Billop. This is the Lead, ſeveral of my Men ſaw it when 'twas fix'd to the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon What did you do with the Packet?

Captain Billop. I put it immediately into my Pocket, as ſoon as I had ſearcht Mr. Aſhton further, and then commanded theſe Gentlemen all into my Boat, and took all the People that belonged to the Smack with me, after I had brought her to an Anchor, and left two of my men on board of her, and there ſhe rid till next Day, when I ſent two more of my men to bring her up, and thoſe two men I order'd to ſearch all the parts of the Veſſel, and take what they could find, and whatſoever they found they ſhould carry it to the Tower to my Lord Lucas; which, I ſuppoſed, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, Captain Billop, after ſuch time as you had taken theſe Papers, and brought theſe Gentlemen into your Boat, pray what diſcourſe had you with them? What ſaid they to you concerning the Papers?

Captain Billop. It was a pretty while before we talked of any thing; the beginning of our talk was, I remember, they deſired to go aſhore at Graveſend to refreſh themſelves, for it was cold, and they had not eaten any thing: it was my

Lord

Lord that desired it; but I begged his pardon for that, and told him there was a Man of War that lay at Long-reach, where as I believed his Lordship would be very well accommodated with any thing he wanted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, what said they afterwards?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston, after I had saluted him upon knowing who he was, and Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot telling him I was of their Acquaintance, he said he was glad he was fallen into a civil Gentleman, and they said they were glad they were fallen into the hands of an Acquaintance. I told my Lord I hope he should never find any thing otherwise than civil from me; my Lord was very civil to me in Complementing, and assuring me he would acknowledge my favour and kindness to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Ay, what did he say to you?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston told me, if ever it lay in his Power to do me service he would, and he did not doubt but he might, and he used a great many Words and Expressions of Kindness, and his readiness to do me service; and amongst the rest, my Lord said once to me, if I would dispose of the Packet——

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray speak that again.

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston, in one of his Discourses of his Kindness in doing me service, had this Expression, as near as I can remember, if I would dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What he would do for you if you would dispose of the Packet?

Captain Billop. He did not come to any particular instance of what he would do: but he said he would serve me in any thing that lay in his Power; Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton discoursed me several times about it; they courted me, and desired me to throw the Packet over board; but I told them I would not do any thing of that kind; and Mr. Elliot said that I might take the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket and tie the Lead to them, and say that was the Packet, and throw the t'other over-board. I told him he took the King's Council to be odd People, and very indiscreet, that could not find out such a thing as that: After this was over, we had a little interval, and there was a Hamper in the Boats Stern, and there was some Bottles of Wine taken out, and we drunk several times; and by and by we had some discourse a little further about the same thing, and they pressed me to throw the Packet away; and one time particularly Mr. Ashton I remember, said it would be a generous thing, Billop, if you would go along with us, I think you may do as well there as here.

Mr Serj. Tremain. Whither would he had you gone with them?

Captain Billop. He did not name any place, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What promises did they any of them make you?

Captain Billop. Mun Elliot whispered me several times, Dear Billop throw the Packet over-board, what good would it do you to injure so many honest Gentlemen? And Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot said, I had it now in my Power to make my self as great and as rich as I would be.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did any of them say about the Tide turning?

Captain Billop. Mun Elliot also said, It was impossible the Current or the Tide could run long this way, or always this way.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you had refused this that they desired of you, notwithstanding their Promises, pray tell us how they turned their discourse into Threatnings

Captain Billop. Elliot told me, when nothing would prevail, that every Dog had his day; but I answered, I hoped never to see it your day; but however, said I, pray desist from any such Language, for I can't bear it. After that they never askt me any thing about it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us what you did with these Gentlemen, and these Papers afterwards?

Captain Billop. I brought these Gentlemen up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, and delivered the Packet with the Lead fixed to it, and stood by my Lord Nottingham in the Room till he had opened the Papers, except while my Lord Preston was examined, and when he opened the Papers I stood by, that I might see him make them up again; and, I think, I took some of them in my hand, and said I might read them, but I was uneasie, and not disposed at that time to read many of them, so I did not read them all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. They were all by when Ashton said you would do generously to go along with them, were they not?

Captain Billop. Yes, they were all in the Boat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did not one of them say to you, I know if Captain Billop do serve us, he will do it generously.

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was it?

Captain Billop. It was Ashton.

L. Preston. I desire I may ask Captain Billop a Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, put your Question to the Court and they will ask it him.

L Preston. I desire to know my Lord, where it was, I said this to Captain Billop, that he would dispose of the Packet.

Captain Billop. Just after I had first saluted your Lordship, you said, you were glad you were fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman.

L. Preston. Was it aboard the Boat that I desired you to dispose of the Packet?

Captain Billop. Yes, and before we came on board the George Frigat, when we drunk about, upon the opening of the Hamper, it was in the Boat I am very sure, and before we came on board the George.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston said to you, you say, he would do you all the Kindness that lay in his Power if you would dispose of the Packet; how would he have you dispose of it? What did he mean by it?

Captain Billop. I don't remember he used any other Word, but that dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But Ashton and Elliot did desire of you a great many times to throw it over board?

L. Preston. I desire he may be ask'd this Question. You said you carried these to my Lord Nottingham: Did you see them opened?

Captain Billop. Yes, I did see them opened, and I saw my Lord as he opened, lay them one by one, and read them over, and put them up again. And I looked upon several of them, while my Lord Nottingham was reading others; and and I ſtood by the Fire, and I ſee my Lord make them up, and he tied them with a piece of Twine, and he clapt his Seal upon them, and delivered them to me; and I went immediately and delivered them to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſton. Were you all the while by, while my Lord Nottingham was reading the Papers?

Captain Billop. Yes, I was by when he opened them, and read them, and ſtaid till he put them up again; and as they came from his hands, I preſently carried them to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſton. Are you ſure, or can you ſwear that theſe are the ſame Papers which were taken on board the Smack, that you carried from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord Danby?

Captain Billop. So many of them as I looked into, I marked; and all that I marked I can ſwear to, and no more than them I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. I think you ſay all thoſe Papers that you delivered to my Lord Nottingham, you ſaw my Lord Nottingham ſeal up, and all them you carried to my Lord Preſident.

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did ſo; all that my Lord opened at that time, were put together again, and his Seal put to them.

L. C. J. Holt. But my Lord asks you, whether you can ſwear the particular Papers?

Captain Billop. What I read, I marked, and them I can ſwear to.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſay you carried all thoſe Papers my Lord Nottingham ſealed, after he had opened them, to my Lord Preſident.

Captain Billop. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee my Lord Nottingham open them, I ſee him make them up again; and when they were made up, he put his Seal to them, and I carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Jury-man. My Lord, I deſire Captain Billop may be asked one Queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; What is it you would ask him?

Jury-man. I deſire to know whether the Papers were ſealed when he took them and brought them to my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. No; they were all tied up together with a Tape, or a Twine, I think with both, very faſt together.

Jury-man. There was no Seal on them when he took them,

Captain Billop. No; but there were ſeveral Letters within the Pacquet that were ſealed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the out-ſide of the Pacquet ſealed?

Captain Billop. I don't remember, the out-ſide was ſealed; there was a Cover, but as near as I remember, they were folds of Paper faſt tied together.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You delivered them as you took them, to my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. Yes: I never took them out of my Pocket after I had taken them from Mr. Aſhton till I came to my Lord Nottingham's Office, where I deliver'd them to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Had you ever opened them, or ſeen them opened, before they came to the Hands of my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. No indeed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up Johnſon. (which was done.) Pray tell us what you know of this Matter?

Johnſon. I was in my Lord Dunblain's Barge, and I went down with this Captain Billop, and we were on board ſeveral Veſſels; and we light upon a Ketch, where we preſſed ſome Men, we thought it had been only ſome Seamen that were to be preſſed, we did not know of any thing elſe. When we had rowed down as far as you have heard, we rowed up again, and ſearched ſeveral little Veſſels and Smacks that were in the River; when a Fiſher-man that we had preſſed, ſaid, That that was the Veſſel the Captain enquired after: And then the Captain bid us take ſome ſmall Arms; and I took a Piſtol, and I went aboard. The Captain read the Protection, and then ſaid, he muſt look further: When the Captain look'd into one of the Cabins, and took up the Hatches, I ſaw a great piece of Roaſt-Beef, and my Lord Preſton by it, and a Mince-Pye, and a Fowl; and we took the Beef out, but my Lord's Man ſaid, he miſſed his Knife, it lay upon the Bench: And then came my Lord up, and his Man, and Mr. Elliot; and when Mr. Aſhton (the Man with the Pock-holes) came up, he went down again and pretended to look for his Hat; but when he was down, I ſee him cram ſomething into his Boſom, and I told the Captain, I had ſeen him put ſomething in his Boſom; and the Captain took him hold by the Buttons of his Coat and turned him about, and asked him, what he put into his Boſom? He ſaid, nothing but his Handkerchief; and pulling it out of his Boſom, he ſhewed it the Captain: but the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom and pulled out the Pacquet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You ſay you ſee him put ſomething in his Boſom when he went down: Did you obſerve whence he took it?

Johnſon. It was upon the Gravel, and there were a couple of Seals which he afterwards took up lying by, and I believe he took up the Pacquet, and forgot the Seals.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let us ſee the Seals.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordſhip obſerves the Pacquet was not at firſt in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he took it up from the place where the Seals lay, and put it in his Boſom. Pray in what place did this Pacquet and theſe Seals lie?

Johnſon. Upon the Ballaſt, for they had ſhoved away the Board.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was my Lord Preſton upon the Ballaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, my Lord lay almoſt upon his Back, he was the firſt that we ſaw, and he came out firſt; they were all four lying together there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who lay next my Lord Preſton?

Johnſon. My Lord's Footman, Mr. Aſhton lay next, and Mr. Elliot lay next.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where were the Seals then?

Johnſon. My Lord was the firſt that I ſee come up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you where the Seals were?

Johnſon. The Seals were down upon the Ballaſt; whether they were my Lord's or no, I cannot tell, or whoſe they were?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now that we will ask Captain Billop: Are theſe the Seals?

Captain Billop. Yes, theſe are the Seals this Man gave me.

Johnſon. I took them from off the Ballaſt.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did my Lord own theſe to be his Seals?

Captain Billop. I did not ask him that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, Johnſon, go on, tell what you know further.

Johnſon. After we came to Long-reach, a Gentleman that had a long Perriwig, a black Gentleman, Mr. Ellyot I think they call him, had a pair of Whiskers on when he was taken; and he took a pair of Sciſſers and cut them both off; and he ſaid, if ever he liv'd, he ſhould remember me, having a Tooth out, becauſe I was ſo ſharp upon him to make him come out: And when we came on board the George Frigat in Long-reach, my Lord's Man came to me, and ſaid, he would give me ſomething to drink, if I would deliver him the Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Diſcourſe with my Lord Preſton himſelf about them?

Johnſon. No, it was his Footman that came to me, and ſaid there was no body there but my ſelf and him; I had them, and he would give me ſomething to drink if I would deliver them, but I delivered them to Captain Billop.

L. Preſton. My Lord, may I ask a Queſtion or two of this Witneſs?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, my Lord, if they have done with him. What ſay you, Brother Thompſon?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We ſhall have done with him preſently, my Lord. Pray had you any Money given you?

Johnſon. No, but my Lord gave the Ship's Company ten Shillings to drink, and one piece was a Braſs Half-Crown.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they ſay as they went along, as you remember?

Johnſon. They had a great deal of Diſcourſe while we rowed; I was at the next Oar to them, but I cannot tell what 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who did diſcourſe?

Johnſon. Aſhton, Elliot, and the Captain.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Cannot you remember what they ſaid any of them?

Johnſon. They did talk together ſeveral times, Elliot ſaid he was a cold; and came and rowed at the Oar a while, and Elliot ſwore an Oath, ſays he, they row all as if they were rowing to Priſon; but truly I did not much mind their Diſcourſe, I minded my rowing. There were ſome Victuals handed to us which we did eat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot ſeem to be angry? What did he ſay?

Johnſon. Elliot wiſhed that a Thunderbolt might drop into the Boat ſeveral times, and ſink it; and when we went through Bridge againſt Tide, he wiſhed that London-Bridge might have fallen upon our Heads.

L. Preſton. Now I would ask him, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, Did you ſee Aſhton take up the Pacquet?

Johnſon. Yes, I did, as it lay by the Seals.

L. Preſton. I perceive there ſeems to be ſome ſtreſs laid upon my lying next to Mr. Aſhton, and my Seals lying by the Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, here has been no Inference made from that yet by the King's Council.

L. Preſton. My Lord, it is in vain to deny we were all together there.

Johnſon. You were the firſt that I ſee, my Lord.

L. Preſton. We were all together, but there is no ſuch thing to be gathered from thence as they would inſinuate; but I ſuppoſe 'twould be deduced from hence, as if this Pacquet, becauſe it lay near theſe Seals, ſhould be my Pacquet.

L. C. J. We have not yet heard, my Lord, what uſe they will make of it.

L. Preſton. But I deſire to take notice of it, my Lord, and I think it is a very hard Preſumption becauſe we were in one place and the Seals at a little diſtance from the Pacquet, therefore the Pacquet muſt be preſumed to be mine, I hope it ſhall not be preſumed againſt me.

L. C. J. Holt. Since your Lordſhip mentions it, I will take notice a little of it too: It is only a circumſtantial Evidence that is made uſe of againſt you; how far it will weigh, is to be left to the Jury when all the Evidence is heard. The Pacquet is found in the place where your Lordſhip lay, and by it Seals that belong to you; one is the Seal of your Office, as Secretary of State, the other is your own proper Coat of Arms.

Jury-man. With Submiſſion, my Lord, I deſire this Witneſs may be asked this Queſtion, Whether he ſaw Captain Billop take the Pacquet out of Aſhton's Boſom?

Johnſon. Yes, I did.

Jury man. And, whether he ſaw Billop deliver the ſame Pacquet to my Lord Nottingham?

Johnſon. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. You Gentlemen of the Jury, conſider this, he was not then by: Captain Billop tells you, that very Pacquet which he took out of Aſhton's Boſom he carried to my Lord Nottingham, and he tells you my Lord opened it in his preſence, and he is ſure he put all the Papers together again and ſet his own Seal upon them, and then he took them from my Lord Nottingham, and carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Johnſon. As ſoon as I came to White-hall, I was ſet Sentinel over thoſe three Men that came out of the Smack, and was not admitted into the Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we muſt deſire my Lord Nottingham may be ſworn.

The Earl of Nottingham ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where are the Papers?

Earl of Nottingham. Mr. Bridgman, I think you have the Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, does your Lordſhip remember Captain Billop brought a Bundle of papers to you, and what became of them? Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to give the Court and the Jury an account of it?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all that I have to ſay in this matter is, Captain Billop brought to me a Bundle of papers tied about with a Packthread, to which was fixed a piece of Lead, I believe the ſame piece that was now produced, at leaſt it was one very like it, he brought alſo a Signet which I preſume I can know again when I ſee it.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſhew my Lord the Seals. (which was done.)

Earl of Nottingham. This is the Signet I preſume which he brought to me, I am ſure he brought juſt ſuch a one, if not the ſame: thoſe Papers when he delivered them to me, I opened in his Preſence, and when I had ſo done, I read them and put them up together again and ſealed them with my own Seal, and delivered them to him him back again. What the Papers are, and what he did with them, I ſuppoſe he will give you an account.

L. C. J. Holt. But your Lordſhip ſays the Bundle of Papers he delivered to you, you ſealed up and delivered to him again.

Earl of Nottingham. All thoſe Papers that he brought to me, I did ſeal up, and deliver back to him again.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, were they ever out of Captain Billop's ſight while your Lordſhip had them?

Earl of Nottingham. Not after they were opened: there was a little Paper that was tied to the Bundle which fell looſe upon the taking away the Lead, and I opened that while he was by, and the Bundle lay upon the Table while I examined my Lord Preſton, and after my Lord Preſton was gone out, I called in Captain Billop (who went out while I examined my Lord) and I opened that great Pacquet in his ſight and read the Papers, and he read ſome of them, and all the Papers in the great Pacquet, and the little Paper that was ſtuck in, I delivered ſealed up to Captain Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, were the Letters in the Pacquet ſealed?

Earl of Nottingham. Yes, there were ſome of them ſealed, and all that I received from him I delivered to him, and no more.

L. C. J. Holt. The Gentlemen of the Jury hear what my Lord ſays.

Earl of Nottingham. The very ſame, all, and no more, I ſay.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Captain Billop, when you had them back from my Lord of Nottingham, pray to whom did you deliver them?

Captain Billop. To my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we muſt deſire my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to be ſworn.

The Marqueſs of Carmarthen, Lord Preſident of the Council, was ſworn.

Mr. Sol Gen. We muſt deſire the favour of your Lordſhip, to acquaint the Court when Captain Billop came to your Lordſhip, what he ſaid, and what he brought with him.

L. Preſident. Captain Billop did bring me a bundle of Papers, and he told me he brought them from my Lord of Nottingham, and they were ſealed, wrap'd up with a Packthread, and ſealed with a Seal, which I knew to be my Lord's Seal; he delivered them to me my ſelf; and theſe Papers I kept till I ſhew'd them the King the next morning. And after I had ſhewed them the King, the King delivered them up back to me, having read ſome of them, and commanded they ſhould be delivered to the Cabinet Council. A Cabinet Council was called, and accordingly there I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked by my Lord Sidney, and ſome I think by my Lord Marlborough; and ſo I delivered them all together to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we deſire my Lord Sidney would pleaſe to be ſworn.

The Lord Sidney Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to acquaint the Court and the Jury what Papers were delivered to you, and by whom, and where thoſe Papers are?

L. Sidney. The Papers that were delivered by my Lord Preſident, I have kept them, my Lord, ever ſince: As ſoon as I had them, I read them, and marked them with a Letter of my own Name, the Letter H. I have kept them ever ſince, only one morning I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to be copied out as ſoon as he could; and he delivered them me back again, and they have not been out of my Cuſtody ſince, only the night before laſt Night they were ſent to Mr. Sollicitor to read, and brought immediately to me again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. To whom did your Lordſhip deliver them to be copied?

L. Sidney. To Mr. Bridgman, I tell you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So that they were never out of your Lordſhip's Hands till now, but only in Mr. Bridgman's Hands?

L. Sidney. No, I kept them in my Pocket ever ſince, only the Night before laſt Night when they were ſent to you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did your Lordſhip mark them before they were delivered to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sidney. Yes, I marked them when I received them.

L. Preſton. My Lord Chief Juſtice, your Lordſhip does obſerve that Captain Billop ſwears that they were never out of his Poſſeſſion till he delivered them to my Lord Nottingham; my Lord Nottingham ſays he never opened them, but left the Pacquet upon the Table while I was examining.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, will you ſpeak a little louder that I may hear you?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I am ſaying, my Lord Nottingham ſays, That while he was examining me, the Pacquet lay upon the Table unopened, and were never out of his Eye till he ſent them ſealed by Captain Billop, and ſo they come to my Lord Preſident, and they were kept by my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident ſays, my Lord Churchill ſaw the Papers, and they were in his Poſſeſſion.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, your Lordſhip does miſtake my Lord Preſident, he does not ſay that they were in my Lord Marlborough's Hands; but he did communicate them at the Cabinet Council where my Lord Marlborough was; he ſaid indeed, they were in the King's Hands, but he was by all the while.

L. Preſton. From that time they came out of my Lord Preſident's Hands, I know not what may be put in, nor what taken out, theſe Papers are not ſealed, as I hear of, afterwards; and paſſing through ſo many Hands, no body knows what may be done to them: Truly, I think it very hard to ſwear, after all this, that theſe are the Papers that were taken aboard the Smack.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you pleaſe to ask any Queſtions to ſatisfy your ſelf of any of theſe Noble Lords?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I'll put your Lordſhip right.

L. Preſton. With all my Heart, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip hears what Captain Billop ſays; he ſays, he brought them, as he took them out of Aſhton's Boſom, to my Lord Nottingham: My Lord Nottingham opened them before him, and did deliver them to him again, having made them up. My Lord Nottingham ſays, the ſame Papers Captain Billop delivered him, he delivered back again, all, and no more; and Billop ſays, he carried them to my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident ſhewed them to the King, and afterwards carried them to the Cabinet Council; there the ſame Papers were opened, and there they were marked, ſome by my Lord Marlborough, and all by my Lord Sidney.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve this; my Lord Nottingham was pleaſed to ſay, he opened no Papers till I was called in and examined, and then Captain Billop withdrew. Now, my Lord, I don't know whether the Captain can ſay that theſe were the very ſame Papers that he took in the Smack?

L. C. J. Holt. Captain Billop ſays, that he ſaw the Papers opened by my Lord Nottingham.

Captain Billop. My Lord Preſton obſerves a thing that is very right, my Lord, that after I had delivered the Pacquet to my Lord Nottingham, while my Lord was examined, I withdrew; but my Lord Nottingham has given your Lordſhip an account, that he had not opened the Pacquet then, but only the ſmall Letter or Note that lay apart from the reſt: But, my Lord, the Pacquet was in the ſame condition when I came in again, upon the Table, as when I left it; my Lord Nottingham, as I believe, had not opened that Pacquet, for I found it juſt as I left it, upon the Table.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Nottingham ſays, he delivered back to Captain Billop all the Papers that he received from him; they were never out of my Lord Nottingham's preſence; nor were they opened, as my Lord ſays, but in Billop's preſence, nor opened till after my Lord's Examination, except the little Paper that was ſtuck in, and was looſe upon taking away the Lead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Bridgman.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, when you received the Bundle of Papers from my Lord Sidney, to whom were they carried, and to whom were they delivered?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord Sidney gave me theſe Papers to have them copied; and I copied ſome of them with my own Hand, the others I delivered to Mr. Poultney, and were copied in my preſence in the Office: They were never out of my ſight, and as ſoon as ever they were copied, I carried them back to my Lord Sidney, and delivered them to him my ſelf.

L. Preſton. Were any of them taken from you, Sir?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I ſay I copied ſome of them my ſelf, the others were copied in my ſight and preſence, in the Office.

Mr. Serj. Thomſon. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion; Were the ſame papers that were delivered to you by my Lord Sidney, re-delivered back again and altered?

Mr. Bridgman. I am very ſure I gave them all the ſame back again, becauſe I read them every one before they were copied.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did you obſerve my Lord Sidney had marked them before you had them?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were all marked before I had them.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to ask Mr. Bridgman this Queſtion, Pray, Sir, were they ſealed up when you ſent them to my Lord Sidney?

Mr. Bridgman. No, they were not ſealed, they were tied up, but about the Seals I remember when I was in my Lord Sidney's Office ——

L. C. J. Holt. The Queſtion is ask'd you, Whether you carried them back ſealed or no?

Mr. Bridgman. No. They were not ſealed when they were delivered to me, but I can ſafely ſwear they were never out of my Cuſtody till I delivered them back again; for what I did not copy my ſelf, were copied in my ſight.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. But your Lordſhip is pleaſed to obſerve they were all mark'd by my Lord Sidney before they were delivered unto him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done with our living Witneſſes for the preſent, and will read the Papers.

Mr. Bridgman. One thing, my Lord, I do remember, as ſoon as my Lord Sidney received the Papers back again, he looked over every one of them and read them, and looked upon the Marks.

L. Preſton. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I would beg the favour to ask one Queſtion of my Lord Sidney; Pray, my Lord, did your Lordſhip number the Papers?

L. Sidney. No, my Lord, I did not number them.

L. Preſton. But your Lordſhip ſays upon your Oath and Honour, that thoſe are the very Marks upon them that your Lordſhip ſet there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are indeed to produce them, and then we ſhall ask that particular Queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Sidney will ſee them, and then he will anſwer your Lordſhip's Queſtion.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preſton, my Lord Nottingham is here a Witneſs, and his Occaſions call him away, have you a mind to ask him any more Queſtions?

L. Preſton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What ſay you, Gentlemen, have you any further occaſion for my Lord Nottingham?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we muſt beg his Lordſhip's Patience, we do not know what occaſion there may be; I deſire this Paper may be ſhewn to my Lord Sidney.

(which was done)

L. Sidney. That is my mark, that Paper I know is one of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here are two of them, one of theſe is the Copy of the other, both were taken in the ſame Packet, the one is fairer written than the other.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Gentlemen, the Paper we are now offering to you is that which I mentioned before, it is the Reſult of a Conference; there were two of them taken in this Bundle, the one of them ſeems to be the firſt Draught, the other is a Copy more fairly written; but I think they are both in effect the ſame; however they were both taken in the ſame Pacquet, and you ſhall hear them read.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire that before it be read, it may be ſhewn to Capt. Billop, to know whether it be the very Paper that he took.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let Capt. Billop look upon it.

Capt. Billop. My Lord, I do not remember that Paper.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip obſerves that Capt. Billop cannot ſwear that this was one of the Papers that he took.

Capt. Billop. All the Papers that I looked into I marked, and all the Papers that I mark'd I can ſwear to, and no others.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you look into all the Papers?

Capt.

Capt. Billop. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. But he ſwears all that he brought to my Lord Nottingham were ſealed up by my Lord Nottingham, and carried by him from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident ſwears he delivered them all to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney ſwears this is one of thoſe Papers.

L. Preſton. Certainly, my Lord's ſwearing to a Paper in this manner cannot be a good Proof: my Circumſtances, my Lord, are very hard, and your Lordſhip, I have heard, ought to be of Council for me in any Point of Law; and, my Lord, I humbly deſire to know, whether this can be a Proof of a Paper, that he ſays was taken in a Pacquet, and yet he can't ſwear it?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, he does not ſwear that this was one of the Papers; but the Queſtion is, Whether all theſe Witneſſes together do not prove it? You ſee how the Evidence runs; All the Papers taken were delivered to my Lord Nottingham: All that were delivered to him were ſent back by him ſealed, and delivered to my Lord Preſident; my Lord Preſident brought them all to the Cabinet-Council, and delivered them to my Lord Sidney, and this my Lord Sidney ſays is one of thoſe Papers;

L. Preſton. My Lord, I have a very great Honour for that Noble Lord, and I am ſure, if he had not been upon his Oath, he would have ſaid that which was truth; but in this condition that I am in, I muſt crave leave to obſerve every thing I can for my ſelf, and I cannot but ſay theſe Papers are very oddly managed, and delivered up and down from one hand to another; I deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to obſerve that theſe Papers are here brought after a very odd manner.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord Preſton, you are not to ſum up the Evidence to the Jury till we have done, nor to make your Obſervations.

L. C. J. Holt. Brother, my Lord oppoſes the reading of the Paper, as not well proved.

L. Preſton. I do ſo, my Lord, and I hope your Lordſhip will adviſe me whether you do think it a ſufficient Evidence and Proof of theſe Papers; they are Papers that have been copied out, and ſent unſealed from hand to hand by ſome Meſſengers from one to another, and which now appear to be unſealed, and ſome of which he that took them cannot ſwear to.

Jury-man. My Lord, we cannot hear one word that is ſaid.

L. Preſton. That is my misfortune: but I am urging to my Lords the Judges, whether this Paper ought to be read, and I deſire your Lordſhip to adviſe me, whether it can be admitted as Evidence, being thus oddly proved?

L. C. J. Holt. It is Evidence ſurely, my Lord: but the Queſtion is, What Credit the Jury will give to this Evidence, the Jury are Judges of that; but certainly it is Evidence to have the Paper read.

L. Preſton. I doubt not but your Lordſhip will do me Juſtice, and I readily acquieſce in what your Lordſhips do appoint.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, ſee how the Evidence ſtands about this matter; firſt it is ſworn by Billop, that he took a Bundle of Papers, tho 'tis true, the Particulars he does not undertake to ſwear to; Well, what is next? why, ſays he, all that was in that Bundle I carried to my Lord Nottingham, and I received from my Lord Nottingham all that I carried to him. What ſays my Lord Nottingham? he ſwears I delivered back again to Capt. Billop the ſame Papers he delivered to me, and all and no more, ſealed up with my Seal. When he has it ſealed up, what does he do with it? why he carries it to my Lord Preſident. Is there any poſſibility of creeping out of this Evidence? Well, he delivers them to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney ſays this is one of thoſe Papers: Can there be a plainer Evidence than this? when he ſays, all he had he carried to my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Nottingham ſwears all he did receive he ſent back ſealed by him to my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident ſwears all he received ſo ſealed he gave to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney ſwears this is one of thoſe Papers.

L. Preſton. But your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve they were carried to the King, and they were in the hands of my Lord Marlborough.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not out of the ſight of my Lord Preſident: My Lord Preſident ſays my Lord Marlborough marked ſome of them, but they were delivered to my Lord Sydney, and my Lord Sydney does ſay they are the ſame Papers that he had from my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident ſays, they are the ſame that were brought him by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Nottingham ſwears he ſealed them, the ſame Papers, all and no more than he received from Captain Billop.

L. C. Baron. Your Lordſhip ſhould obſerve where the defect of the Proof is, and then it may be ſupplyed; for truly, put it altogether, I cannot ſee how there could be a plainer Proof given.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I deſire to be heard as to this, my Lord Preſident was pleaſed to ſay, that ſome of them were delivered to the King.

L. C. J. Holt. No, they were ſhewn to the King, but my Lord Preſident was by all the while that the King did read them.

L. Preſton. My Lord, where a Mans Life lyes at ſtake, and all that is dear to him, your Lordſhip will certainly allow him to make what obſervations he can for himſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, in God's Name, by all means: You ſhall have all the Liberty you can deſire.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire my Lord Preſident will be pleaſed to look upon thoſe Papers.

Which was done.

L. Preſident. This is one of the Papers that I received from Captain Billop, and which I ſhewed to the King, and which I brought to the Cabinet Council; and this is another of the Papers.

L. Preſton. Pray my Lord, was your Lordſhip by when His Majeſty read thoſe Letters.

L Preſident. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I ask it for this end, to know whether they were out of your Lordſhips ſight.

L. Preſident. No never; I was in the Kings Cabinet, His Majeſty read ſome of them, and then put them up again, and gave them me, and I delivered them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire this Paper may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

The Result of a Conference between some Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the possibility and method of restoring by a Fr. Power, without endangering the Protestant Religion and Civil Administration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

'1 F. Must either Oblige or Conquer us: If 'F. the last, he will find few helps here, but 'a bloodyer resistance than ever the Romans, 'Saxons, or Normans found: It being incredible, 'how unanimous and obstinate that very thought 'renders the Peop e, so that it may make us a 'heap of ruin, but no Nation that can ever help 'or import any thing to F.

'2. If K. L. desires to oblige Us, and make 'the Work easie, that he may be at leisure to 'ply the Empire or Italy, or to have an advanta-'geous Peace, he must take off the frightful 'Character we have of him, and shew us he has 'no such design, as returning our Offended K. 'a Conqueror upon us, but that he can and will 'be our Friend and Mediator; upon which 'terms he will find that many Lords and Gen-'tlemen will speedily shew themselves to his Sa-'tisfaction; especially, if he makes haste, and 'loses no approaching Opportunity.

'3. If he incline to this sort of Sense, he 'must over rule the Bigotry of St. G. and dispose 'their Minds to think of those Methods that are 'more likely to gain the Nation; for there is one 'silly thing or other daily done there, that comes 'to our notice here, which prolongs what they 'so passionately desire. The Methods thought 'upon are these,

'First, To prevent dangerous and foolish In-'telligence, by forbidding all in that Court to 'write any News hither, and that K. J. only 'have his Correspondence by whom to hear 'from, and speak to People here; since Letters 'so often miscarry, and are filled with nothing 'but what we should not hear; and what we 'have are Arguments for the most part against 'the K's Restoration.

'Secondly, Since there is a great Body of Pro-'testants that never defected, and that many 'Thousands are returning, and that they are 'the Natural Weight and Power of these King-'doms, by having the Heads, Hands and Wealth 'of their side, to the odds and advantage of at 'least Two Hundred Protestants to one Catho-'lick; the K. may think of nothing short of a 'Protestant Administration, nor of nothing 'more for the Catholicks than a Legal Liberty 'of Conscience; for much e mutt is against all 'other Notions, to which all private Passions, 'and artificial Frames in Government must yield 'or break. He may Reign a Catholick in De-'votion, but he must Reign a Protestant in Go-'vernment. Cromwel could not, yet on a broad-'er bottom, with a Victorious Army, subsist or 'keep what he had got.

'Thirdly, He must give us a Model of this at 'St. G. by preferring the Protestants that ate 'with him above the Catholicks; one being 'Loyal upon less tyes of Interest, and to tell 'the Nation here what they are to hope for 'when he comes.

'Fourthly, He must give Incouragement to 'Lords and Gentlemen here to come to him, at 'least Seven or Nine for a standing Council, 'which will make us here think he is in some 'degree ours again, and that we have a relation 'to him, and some interest and share in him, by 'the Men of Quality of our own Religion that 'are with him. This will incomparably facili-'tate the matter here, nor will they, when they 'come, come empty, and in their own Names, 'which is still better, and will be more 'satisfactory there.

'Fifthly, To induce this, English Protestants 'should be encouraged by an Edict of Liberty 'from the K. of F. to have Chappels at their own 'Costs, in which to Worship God after their res-'pective ways, by which that K. will make us 'reflect upon his Conduct towards his Hugonots, 'rather to flow from the hazard he thought him-'self in by their Antimon. and resisting Princi-'ples, than a desire of Persecution.

'Lastly, All other requisite Measures depend-'ing upon the acceptance this finds, an Answer 'hereunto is impatiently desir'd by those that 'have Discoursed the K's Business to this Matu-'rity. So ended with an Unanimous Consent, 'both Tories and Whiggs upon this Occasion, that 'are in a way of closing in his Interest.

L. Preston. I can very safely swear, my Lord, that I never saw that Paper in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is another Paper of the same, but the Words that are written short in that are written at length in this.

The Paper was read accordingly, and in the first blank there was written K. J. in the first Paragraph (France) twice, in the third Paragraph (St. Germains) in the Fifth, (Mathemat. for Much e mutt) the rest are obvious, and need not to be supplied.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew my Lord Sidney that Paper, what says your Lordship to it?

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers that I marked, and that I received from my Lord President.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will my Lord President be pleased to give himself the trouble to cast his Eye upon that, and see if that be one of the Papers.

L. President. My Lord, I remember it well, it is one of the Papers I received from Capt. Billop.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. This Paper is what Mr. Sollicitor mention'd as heads of a Declaration.

L. Preston. My Lord, I think it necessary to offer one thing to your Lordships before it be read, I desire Capt. Billop should swear it to be one of his Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship pleases, you observe what has been done already. My Lord President says 'tis one of those Papers that was sent him by my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Sidney has sworn it is one of the Papers he had from my Lord President.

L. Preston. I shall not give your Lordship any more trouble than needs; I only offer it to your Lordship: I wave it.

L. C. J. Holt. There is Evidence enough to have the Paper read.

Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

'That the King will return with a design of 'making an Entire Conquest of his People, is so

'ſo ridiculous as well as difficult, that it needs 'not be ſpoken to.

'That the Kings Declaration be worded in 'General Terms, That he will Govern by the 'Laws, that they ſhall be the Rule of his Acti-'ons, that he will Endeavour to ſettle Liberty 'of Conſcience by Law, that whatſoever things 'were formerly done by him, which occaſioned 'Jealouſies in the minds of his People, ſhall be 'left to the determination of a Parliament, to 'be formally and regularly called as ſoon as is 'poſſible.

'That he has given ſufficient Evidence of his 'unwillingneſs to bring an Army of Strangers 'into his Kingdom, by refuſing the Succours of 'the King of France offered him, and which 'were even ready to be Embarked upon the firſt 'Notice of the P. of Oranges intended Invaſion.

'That he brings with him ſuch an Army on-'ly as is neceſſary for his own defence, and for 'the ſecurity of ſuch of his Loyal Subjects as 'ſhall reſort to him, that he will diſmiſs them 'as ſoon as he ſhall have rid the Nation of thoſe 'Foreigners who have Invaded it, and trampled 'upon the Laws and Liberties of his People.

'The Kings large exerciſing his Diſpenſing 'Power gave the great alarm to the People, 'and contributed moſt of all toward the General 'Defection. Yet when that Power came to be 'debated in the laſt Convention, there appeared 'ſo many difficulties in the limiting of it, (every 'Body, even the preſent Judges believing it ne-'ceſſary, That a diſpenſing Power ſhould be in 'the K.) That it was let fall, and that point re-'mains as it was. And without mentioning 'that, or any other particular, the K. can be in 'no danger by leaving all things which have 'been the occaſion of Jealouſies to the determi-'nation of Parliament, where beſides the Kings 'profeſſed Friends and Servants, there will not 'want others who will be glad of opportunity 'to ingratiate themſelves.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, If you deſire any thing to be read again, or any thing doubtful in it, ſhould be Explained, tell us, and it ſhall be done.

Juryman. No, my Lord, There is no occaſion for that. I believe we apprehend theſe three Papers that have been read.

L. Preſton. My Lord, It is neceſſary the Gentlemen of the Jury ſhould be ſatisfied in this point.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay in any point, and if they deſire any ſcruple ſhould be cleared, the Court will do it for them.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know whether Captain Billop Signed that Paper or no.

L. C. J. Holt. No, he did not ſign half of them, but unleſs it be proved, you ought to take it for granted, that it is not Signed by him.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I think it fit the Jury ſhould be ſatisfied in any ſcruple they raiſe.

L. C. J. Holt. They asked this Queſtion, Whether Captain Billop did ſign the Paper, and I told them Captain Billop did not ſay ſo, and therefore they are to take it for granted, that he did not.

Juryman. My Lord, We take this laſt Paper that was read to be a Paper that was delivered in the Bundle taken from Mr. Aſhton to my Lord Nottingham, but not Signed by Capt. Billop.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Then you take it right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next paper that we produce is a Liſt of the Engliſh Fleet that theſe Gentlemen were carrying over into France.

L. Preſton. That is printed, and to be found in every Coffee-Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew that paper to Captain Billop. (Which was done.)

Can you take it upon your Oath, Captain, That that paper was in the Pacquet that was taken in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom.

Captain Billop. That paper I have marked, and that paper I ſwear was in the Pacquet I took away from Mr. Aſhton aboard the Smack.

L. C. J. Holt. You are ſure of it.

Captain Billop. Yes my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew this Paper to Captain Billop. (Which was done.)

Pray was that paper there among the others that were taken with theſe Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. Yes it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that that paper was in the Pacquet that was in Mr. Aſhton's Boſom.

Captain Billop. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew him that paper too. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. And can you take upon you to ſay, That that was one of the papers in the Pacquet?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We deſire theſe may be read.

Clerk of the Peace reads, New-Years Eve, and it is directed for Mr. Redding.

'Sir, Though the Bearer of this will do us 'the Juſtice, to aſſure you, we are as full of 'Duty, as unfeignedly, and unconcernedly 'yours, as your ſelf could wiſh; yet this Gen-'tleman has undertaken. You will forgive the 'Preſumption, if I do my ſelf the Honour to 'give you this freſh aſſurance in a few words, 'which I hope we do by our Accounts; I ſhall 'omit no Occaſions, not neglecting the leaſt, 'and making zealous Wiſhes for the greateſt, to 'ſhew our ſelves ſuch as we ought to be'.

Si-

'Sir, I ſpeak in the plural, becauſe I write 'my Elder Brother's Sentiments as well as my 'Own, and the reſt of the Family, though 'leſſened in Number; yet if we are not mighty out in our Accounts, we are growing in 'our Intereſt, that is in yours: He that delivers 'this, will I hope, intirely to your Satisfaction, 'repreſent us and me in particular, as with all 'the Devotion imaginable, and unchangeable 'Affection'.

Yours, God grant the happieſt New Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Read the other paper.

Cl. of Peace. This is dated Dec. 31. 1690. I muſt not let this Bearer depart, Madam, without aſſuring you——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, Don't read that yet. Here, ſhew this paper to Captain Billop.

(Which was done.)

What ſay you Captain Billop? Is that one of the papers taken from Mr. Aſhton.

Captain Billop. Yes, This is one that I read and marked.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then read it.

Cl. of Peace, reads: This is directed for Miſtreſs Redding.

'As 'tis impoſſible for me to expreſs that Extraordinary great Satisfaction it gave me this 'time Twelve Month, when I had the Honour 'to receive that mark of your Favour and 'Goodneſs under your own hand; ſo I have 'lived in ſome pain for an Opportunity to write 'you my humbleſt Acknowledgments and trueſt 'Duty, from which by the Grace of God, I am no 'more capable of ſwerving, than of renouncing 'my hopes of Heaven: I ſay this in behalf of my 'Elder Brother and the reſt of my neareſt Relations, as well as for my ſelf: You may intirely depend upon us, not only for a conſtant adherence to ſo well choſen a Principle, but for 'our utmoſt Activity to promote your Intereſt, 'which are inſeparable from our own: I need 'come to no Particulars by this Bearer, who 'can and will tell our whole heart; and I wiſh 'you could ſee them, how ſincerely they are 'devoted to your Service. God grant you a 'moſt happy New Year, and many, very many, 'and very happy. Our young Maſter hath all 'our beſt Wiſhes, he daily gains more Friends, 'and we get ground of his Adverſaries.

New Years-Eve.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now read your other Paper of the 31. Dec. 1690.

Cl. of Peace. Reads, December 31. 1690. 'I muſt not let this Bearer depart, Madam, without aſſuring you of my beſt reſpects: I have 'written by him to a Friend of yours, but depend upon you to give my Note Credit.

'Though my Creditors were no Friends to 'the Match which has been ſo long in treaty, 'for your Relations have been very hard upon 'me this laſt Summer; yet as ſoon as I could 'go ſafely abroad, I purſued the buſineſs, and 'do beg you to believe, that no Endeavours of 'mine ſhall be wanting to perfect the Settlement. You once put me in hopes of ſeeing 'you before this Chriſtmas: Your Friends are 'ſorry for the Diſappointment, pray loſe no 'more time than is of abſolute neceſſity: The 'Bearer will tell you all things may be now 'eaſily ſettled, if the right way be taken. I 'long to hear how your young Daughter does, 'ſhe will find many Friends, and I hope her 'Portion will be well ſecured. God ſend you a 'happy New-Year, and that I may be merry 'with you before it be far ſpent, and I beſeech 'you, keep me in the good Opinion of your 'Friend, I will always make good what I promiſed to you. It is directed for Mrs. Charlton.

Jury man. My Lord, I deſire to know what that is directed to.

Cl. of Peace. 'Tis directed to Mrs. Charlton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew Captain Billop thoſe two Papers. (Which was done.)

What ſay you to them Captain?

Captain Billop. My mark is on the outſide, but there is nothing written in that, I believe it is taken off from the Inner paper.

L. Preſton. Pray my Lord is this any proof? I beſeech you for God's ſake to have a regard to a Man's Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſhew the paper to my Lord Sidney. (Which was done.)

Lord Sidney. This was one of the papers I received from my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Sol. Gen Then we muſt beg my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to look on it.

(Which was done.)

L. Preſident. This was one of the papers brought me by Captain Billop, from my Lord Nottingham, in that Bundle.

L. Preſton. Captain Billop does not know the paper, though his mark be to it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not indeed very material, whether he does or no, becauſe he did not read all; but I would obſerve that 'tis ſworn by my Lord Sidney, that this was delivered to him by my Lord Preſident, and ſworn by my Lord Preſident, that he had it in that Bundle from Capt. Billop.

L. Preſton. But, my Lord, it does ſhew that there may be ſome alteration in the papers, becauſe he having marked it, and marking none but what he read, he does not now own that to be the paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to take it as it is: Theſe are two papers; the one is only the Cover, the other is the Writing: Captain Billop has only marked the Cover, and not the Writing, but my Lord Sidney he has marked the paper it ſelf, as delivered him by my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident has given you an account, that it is one of the Papers he received in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preſton. I only mark, That there may be alterations made in theſe papers ſince they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray read it.

Cl. of Peace, December 31. 1690. it is directed to Mr. Jackſon.

'The Bearer can give you ſo full an account 'of all things relating to your Eſtate here, that 'I need not have troubled you at this time, but 'that I am deſirous to lay hold of any Opportunity I think ſafe to aſſure you of my Service, 'and that I will never quit your Intereſt whatever the reſt of the Freeholders do: Your Adverſary has been ſo hard to his Neighbours, 'that he has extreamly diſoblig'd all the old 'Tenants, and a little matter would redeem the 'whole Eſtate, if you would appear in Weſtmin-

ſter

'fter Hall your ſelf, the beſt Council have a 'good Opinion of your Title, and will zea-'louſly purſue your Inſtructions: I only beg you 'wou'd haſten them to us, and that you will ap-'pear your ſelf as ſoon as is poſſible, no time 'ſhould be loſt, and the Cauſe may be brought 'to a final hearing before the end of Eaſter 'Term, if it be well ſollicited. I heartily wiſh 'you a happy New-Year, and beg you to tell 'Mr. Charlton that I long to know wherein I 'may ſerve him, and that I will follow his Dire-'ctions to the utmoſt, while I live. God keep 'you and yours.

L. Preſton. Pray, Sir, to whom is that Letter directed?

Cl. of Peace. To Mr. Jackſon, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew that paper to my Lord Sidney. (Which was done.)

L. Sidney. This is one of the papers I receiv'd from my Lord Preſident.

Then it was ſhewn to my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. This is one of the ſame papers that I received in the Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Cl. of Peace. Reads, 31*ſt. December.*

'The Interruption of the former Correſ-'pondency had a very ill Effect many ways, but 'for that reaſon, no Opportunity ought now 'to be loſt, and I hope this will prove a happy 'one.

'In Trade as well as in Government Schemes 'muſt be laid, for there is no living from hand 'to mouth any more in Commerce than in 'Politicks. Lay therefore your deſigns pro-'bably, and purſue them diligently, and with 'Vigour, though it be a hazardous time, yet by 'venturing boldly, where venturing is adviſe-'able, it often returns great profit.

'There is nothing more to be ſaid, but to 'give the Bearer fit and full Seaſons to tell what 'he knows, both as to Goods fit for our Market 'and when and where to be ſent; the Sea will 'quickly grow ſo troubleſome, that unleſs you 'diſpatch what you intend for us, you will 'loſe a great opportunity of advantage. I 'hope the account he has to give of our Nego-'tiations here, with the Merchants that deal 'with us, eſpecially thoſe that have lately 'brought us their cuſtom, will both encourage 'a larger Trade, and excite the utmoſt dili-'gence; I will ſay nothing of my ſelf, it ſhall 'be enough that I can live in the good Opinion 'of one I bear ſo great a reverence and affecti-'on for; but for this honeſt Factor, I muſt own 'I can hardly ſay enough. Truth and Boldneſs 'are excellent qualities in a Servant, and he has 'ſhewn both, as occaſion has required him to 'ſhew them.

'I have but one word to add, and pray take it 'as the trueſt mark of unalterable reſpect, chuſe 'well, but have to do but with a few, for a 'multitude may give, but can never keep 'Council.

'I ſhall with more impatience than becomes 'me, wait the reſult of this, and it will be a 'great mark of Goodneſs, to let us have it the 'beſt and ſafeſt way.

'Once more, let not the Seaſon ſpend unpro-'fitably, for a more likely one can hardly come 'than between this and the 1ſt of March. In-'terpret this I pray, as no private intereſt of my 'own, or partial motion of any other Perſon. 'It is my Senſe, my Duty, and my Friendſhip, 'which will not let me prevaricate, nor ſuffer 'thoſe I love and honour to loſe ſo happy and 'preſſing an occaſion of advantage. With the 'the beſt Wiſhes I cloſe up this, and am &c.

L. Preſton. Pray, my Lord, who is that Paper directed to?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This is directed to no body at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to my Lord Sydney.

(Which was done.)

Lord Sydney. This was one of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident.

Then it was ſhewn to my Lord Preſident.

Lord Preſident. This is one of the Papers I had from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. This is Dated December 31. but is not directed to any Body at all.

'IT is a preſumption incident to thoſe that 'are any where upon the ſpot, to think that 'they know better than thoſe that are not, what 'is fitteſt to be done in any Occurrence. This 'makes me ſay, that now is the time to make 'large advantages by Trading; the Sea being 'freer than two Months paſt, or we can hope 'it will be two Months hence. This Gentleman 'is well inſtructed in our Markets, and what 'the Goods are we want, and when and where 'they ſhould be ſent: It is moſt earneſtly deſired 'that this happy opportunity may not be loſt, 'eſpecially by the late Undertakers, and I would 'not for much, they ſhould receive the leaſt 'diſguſt. They are ſomewhat poſitive in their 'terms; but they alſo ſay, they will be good 'and conſtant Cuſtomers; and I have more than 'once ſeen the miſchief of over-rateing and 'over-ſtaying the Market. Opportunities are to 'be uſed, they cannot be given by Men.

'The Bearer needs nothing from me to re-'commend him, but he is deſerving in our Opini-'on here, and many will take their meaſures by 'the uſage he finds there; and indeed the preſ-'ſing poſture of our Trading Affairs will not 'permit more Experiments. If the ſeveral Par-'cels arrive not, that have been promiſed, be-'fore the 10th of March at furtheſt, (eſpecially 'the Copper and Linnen, of which the Bearer 'will be more particular) I am ſatisfied we ſhall 'loſe this Summers profit. I am the more preſſing 'becauſe I am well aſſured of what I write; 'and if ever I judged right it is upon this oc-'caſion.

'I have ſaid nothing of another Gentleman 'that takes this Opportunity to ſee thoſe parts, 'but he has ſhewn a zeal and a ſincerity in this 'affair equal to moſt. Jo. is not yet gone, by 'a misfortune, but he will follow with a good 'Poſtſcript in this affair. Of my ſelf I will ſay 'nothing, I hope I need not, for no body with-'out Vanity can be more ſincerely and affection-'ately a Friend and Servant to the Company 'than my ſelf. I writ at large yeſterday, and 'cannot write what the hand that gives this 'can ſay; and therefore will write no more, 'but that with the greateſt Reſpect, I am, &c.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray ſhew this Paper to my Lord Sydney.

(Which was done.)

Lord Sydney. This is one of thoſe Papers I received from my Lord Preſident.

Then it was shewn to the Lord President.

Lord President. This was one of the Papers in the Bundle I received from Capt. Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

'SIR, I vow to you, I do not repine at having lost all for your sake which I got by your favour, but it grieves me extreamly that there is not that left which can secure me from being troublesome to you; for that is the thing in the World I would not be. I have told my Lord my condition. What I desire of you he thinks very moderate, I hope you will. Pray Sir be not backward in setling my little affair, for I have deserved your Care. Your Daughter and I must starve, if this Government can make us. I hope our Interests are not divided, that is, you have an equal tenderness at least for both. If you think fit to speak what I would have you to this Bearer, he will give me a just account of it. You know he is obliged to be my Friend, and I believe him grateful, since he ventures so boldly for you. He brings with him some merry Papers. Adieu, for I dare write no more; but pray send a Messenger on purpose to me, that I may know exactly what you will do, and would have me do. If you send upon no other business, there will be no danger. Pray Sir ask my Lord, and he will tell you how I have been used, and upon what account; I believe you know it not.

'Dec. 29. Your Daughter is very well,

'very tall, and very pretty, as I am told.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is not directed to any body neither.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray then shew these Papers to my Lord Sydney and my Lord President; (which was done). They were two.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. These Papers my Lord Sydney swears he received from my Lord President, and my Lord President swears he received them in the Bundle from Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We pray they may be read.

Clerk of the Peace. Dec. 31. 90.

'WAs my Condition more desperate and uneasie than it is, I desire no greater satisfaction than to have done my Duty to so good a Master, I wish it was of more use to him; that is not my fault, nor of those I have acted with: Let it be looked into what has been foretold both as to Engl. Scot. and Irel. and see if most of it is not come to pass already, and the rest will follow if not prevented. I wish it may also be considered what usage we have met with from men imployed, and how they have left your Business and Friends; how they managed it, you will know from all hands; things they could not do, nor durst not undertake were better undone than not done by them. Men in this Place, and in these Times, must have some Courage as well as Sense to do any thing with People here. It is not my own ill usage makes me say this, but my concern for one I wish the best to in the World, and will give my Proofs of this upon all occasions. I need not enlarge, since all our Grievances are known to him that brings this. For my own part I will stay here, so long as I can be safe, if with ne're so great trouble; but it would be some Comfort to know Men (when driven from hence) may be so; therefore the reports of Peoples usage are terrible, as well as of the indiscretions of St. Germ. Family, we feel the smart of it by ridiculous Letters falling daily into the hands of the Government. Their Master and Mistress are little obliged by it no more than we: If there is any thing, Sir, you do particularly command me, or depend upon me for, let me know it. I cannot undertake much, nor furnish more. I have still helped every Body, and paid to every thing I could; and if a twelve month ago my condition was what I then represented, you best know if it has been mended. Use, and considering that of others, makes me grow more contented; and if the prospect of misery to us us all was any satisfaction, that is now plainly seen.

'Pray God bless us all, by restoring every Man his own, and you with long Life.

'He that gives you this, hath furnisht for your use to me, &c. Two Hundred Pounds, which I desire may be repaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the t'other, it is in the same hand, and was enclosed in the former.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. 'I only beg Madam, no ill malicious Report may take any place in your Thoughts, in regard to me. I value your good Opinion, and will endeavour to deserve it. I can do little towards, but wish most heartily for your Happiness. I know no Interest, Madam, but my Masters and yours, nor do I think they are to be made two: If you command me any thing, I will faithfully obey you, as I have ever done him.

'We all depend upon this Bearers accounts of us and our Condition. His Faith and Courage hath been enough experienced.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here is another Paper, shew that to Capt. Billop.

(Which was done.)

Capt. Billop. This Paper I did mark, and this was one that was in the Bundle.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What is it Brother, pray open it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. 'Tis a draught of a Cypher, with an Alphabet of Names for carrying on the Correspondence.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Your Lordship observes these matters were designed to be carryed on under several sorts of Cants.

L. C. J. Holt. What says Captain Billop to that Paper?

Capt. Billop. That was one of the Papers that I read at my Lord Nottingham's, and markt it there.

L. C. J. Holt. Then Read it.

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were I remember very well.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, they are in French, and therefore we muſt Swear a Gentleman that we have here, to interpret: Call Mr. Humphry Levermere.

J. Berionde.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray how much do they all come to?

Mr. Levermere. They come to 500 l. wanting but Twelve pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. My Lord, we have ſhewn your Lordſhip part of the Papers that were taken in this Pacquet, but we have reſerved three of the Papers till the laſt place; and theſe three Papers, if we had no other, were ſufficient to maintain this Indictment, for they are written all with my Lord Preſton's own Hand, wherein he gives an Account how the French ſhould Invade us, how the Forts may be taken, how London ſhould be plagued, and what a ſort of Raſcals the Clergy of London are; theſe are the Contents of the Papers among other things. Pray ſhew them to Captain Billop.

(Which was done.)

Captain Billop. Theſe were two Papers that were in the Pacquet, and the other little one with them.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I would deſire your Lordſhip to obſerve one thing, to the beſt of my remembrance, Captain Billop ſaid, he only mark'd ſix of the Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. How many has he ſworn to?

L. Preſton. I believe he has proved more.

Capt. Billop. I never ſaid ſo; I mark'd a great many, tho' not all, but I did not ſay how many.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were theſe Papers taken in the Pacquet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, all three.

L. Preſton. Juſt now he ſaid but two.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you look'd upon them all, Sir?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I marked but two of them, but the other little Paper was with them, I read them my ſelf. I remember it very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then we pray the Clerk may read them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, we would open this piece of Evidence before we read it, that it may be underſtood, and we ſhall prove it to be my Lord's Hand afterwards. It conſiſts of many Heads and Particulars, without Order or Method; and ſeems to be no more than Memorandums made by my Lord Preſton, to put him in mind what he was to enlarge upon when he came thither.

L. C. J. Holt. Well Gentlemen have you any more Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we ſhall now prove theſe Papers to be my Lord Preſton's own Hand. Pray call Mr. Warr, Mr. Townſend, Sir Henry Johnſon, and Mr. Bland.

Mr. Townſend ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſhew Mr. Townſend that Paper. (Which was done) Pray, Sir, whoſe Hand writing is that?

Mr. Townſend. I believe this to be my Lord Preſton's hand; I did not ſee him write it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Are you well acquainted with my Lord Preſton's hand?

Mr. Townſend. I have ſeen his Lordſhip's Hand ſometimes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. How often?

Mr. Townſend. Not very often, but I have ſeen it ſometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray were you Clerk in any Office?

Mr. Townſend. Yes, I am in the Office of the great Wardrobe, where I have had occaſion to ſee his Lordſhip's Hand ſometimes, and I believe this to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Thomſon. Look upon the t'other two.

Mr. Townſend. I do believe theſe three Papers are my Lord Preſton's hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Thoſe are the three Papers that have been read laſt, which he ſays are my Lord's Hand.

Mr. Townſend. I do believe it, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray look upon that Paper, with the little one within it; Do you know whoſe Hand that is?

Mr. Townſend. I did not ſee it written, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you believe you know who Writ it, by the Hand?

Mr. Townſend. The latter part looks like my Lord Preſton's Hand; but I cannot well ſay any thing to the other, it is written ſo ſmall.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſwear Mr. Bland.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Give him the Papers. We ask you, Mr. Bland, Whether you were well acquainted with my Lord Preſton's Hand?

Mr.

Mr. Bland. I have ſeen my Lord's Hand ſometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Have you looked upon thoſe Papers, Sir?

Mr. Bland. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray whoſe Hand are they?

Mr. Bland. I do believe theſe three Papers are my Lord Preſton's Hand-writing.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we pray Mr. Warr may be ſworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Do you know my Lord Preſton's Hand?

Mr. Warr. I have ſeen my Lord Preſton write, but not very often; moſt commonly it was only his Name: but I have ſeen him write ſome Letters too.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, look upon thoſe Papers; whoſe Hand are they do you believe?

Mr. Warr. This Paper ſeems to be like my Lord Preſton's Hand; the other I cannot ſay much of, becauſe that which I commonly ſaw him write was a large fair Hand, and this is a little Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Mr. Warr, look upon theſe Seals; whoſe Seals were they?

Mr. Warr. I believe the Seals to be my Lord Preſton's; one of them was his Seal when Secretary of State.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You were under him in that Office, were you not?

Mr. Warr. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and ſhall reſt here till we hear what my Lord Preſton ſays to it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſton, you have heard what has been ſaid concerning the matter you have been indicted for; What has your Lordſhip to ſay for your ſelf?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If the Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to ſee the Seals, they may have them.

(The Seals were ſhewn to the Jury.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have done for the preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, you may make your Defence.

L. Preſton. My Lord, in the firſt place I muſt refer my ſelf again to my Indictment, for I find, my Lord, that the Treaſons of which I am accuſed, were none of them done in the County of Middleſex, and they are laid to be done within this County; I find nothing of that kind proved upon me to be done here, for any Memorandums that they ſay may be in that hand, I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, that there was nothing followed upon any of theſe things, that may be found in thoſe Papers: And in the next place, I deſire to know, whether they are ſufficiently proved to be mine; that is, whether ſimilitude of Hands is proof or not againſt me in ſuch a Caſe. I humbly offer theſe things to your Lordſhip, and hope your Lordſhip and the Jury will conſider of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Lordſhip's Defence, my Lord?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I leave theſe things to the Conſideration of the Court and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip inſiſts upon it firſt, that there is no act of Treaſon proved in the County of Middleſex; and then, whether ſimilitude of Hands be a good proof to prove theſe three Papers, or any of them to be your hand.

L. Preſton. No body ſaying they ſee me write them, if I did write them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, have you no Witneſſes, nor nothing that you would uſe of Evidence for your ſelf?

L. C. J. Holt. Would your Lordſhip diſprove any thing of the matter that has been proved againſt you?

L. Preſton. I muſt deny the whole Fact; but I have no Witneſſes or Evidence to offer you.

L. C. J. Holt. Then your Lordſhip has no more to ſay?

L. Preſton. I have not. I muſt leave it ſo with your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ſhall offer nothing farther, but leave it wholly to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip has done then?

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip obſerves none of the Witneſſes have declared that I was going into France, nor knew any thing of it. I did not hire the Ship, nor any thing of that kind; tho' I ſuppoſe if they had, it is not Treaſon; but your Lordſhip obſerves there is no ſuch thing has been ſworn.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the firſt matter that your Lordſhip makes a Queſtion upon, Whether there be any act of Treaſon proved in Middleſex, that does depend upon the proof of your Lordſhip's being concerned in the papers, for if your Lordſhip had an intention in carrying theſe papers into France, which ſpeaks a deſign to invade this Realm, your Lordſhip took Boat in Middleſex at Surrey-Stairs, in proſecution of that Intention, there is an Overt-act in this County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. Your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury obſerve theſe papers were not found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord; but if it be proved that your Lordſhip had an intention to carry theſe papers into France, and took Boat in order to go with them into France, in the County of Middleſex, where-ever your Lordſhip acted in order to that deſign, that is Treaſon, and there you are guilty. It is a Treaſon complicated of ſeveral Facts, done in ſeveral places.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know, whether they have been proved to be my papers?

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Queſtion that muſt be left to the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preſton. No body ſwears they are mine, nor were they found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. But what I am ſpeaking to your Lordſhip, is in anſwer to your Queſtion about the place, for you ſay, that there is nothing proved done in the County of Middleſex; now the Queſtion is, Whether your Lordſhip had a deſign to go to France with theſe papers; if you had, and if your Lordſhip did go on Ship-board in order to it, your taking Boat in Middleſex in order to go on Ship-board, is a Fact done in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. It is not proved by any Witneſſes that I deſigned to go into France.

L. C. J. Holt. That is before the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip, and the Jury will obſerve 'tis not proved, and in the next place, there are no papers taken upon me, with humble Submiſſion, there is no proof of any ſuch thing.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, how far your Lordſhip was concerned in theſe papers, and whether you were going with them into France, is to be left upon the Evidence that hath been heard, to the Conſideration of the Jury.

L. Preſton. But I humbly ſubmit that.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to ſay?

L. Preſton. As to what I offer, that nothing has been proved in Middleſex, I hope your Lordſhip will take it to be a point of Law, and then it ought to be argued; and I deſire I may have Council.

L. C. J. Holt. No, 'tis a Matter of Fact only; but if you pleaſe, the reſt of my Lords the Judges may give you their Opinion; for this is a Queſtion upon a Suppoſition that your Lordſhip was guilty of a Deſign of going into France, and this with a purpoſe to depoſe the King, and alter the Government; then the Queſtion is upon ſuch a Suppoſition that you were guilty of that Deſign, whether you were guilty in Middleſex or no.

L. Preſton. My Lord, they have not proved that Deſign.

L. C. J. Holt. We do not ſay, it is taken for granted now, but 'tis a Queſtion upon a Suppoſition. Now my Lord, I'll tell your Lordſhip in ſhort my Opinion, the reſt of the Judges will tell you theirs, I am of Opinion, if your Lordſhip had ſuch a Deſign to go with theſe papers into France, and theſe Papers were formed by you, or you were privy to the Contents of them, then it is plainly proved, that you went into a Boat in the County of Middleſex, in order to carry on this Deſign, and that will make it a good Indictment, and here is a plain Overt-act of High-Treaſon in Middleſex.

L. C. J. Pollexfen I am of the ſame Opinion; for your Fact as to this particular point in Law ſtands thus: You are indicted of High-Treaſon in two points; one is, For conſpiring to depoſe the King and Queen, and alter the Government: and the other is, For aiding and aſſiſting the French King, and his Subjects, declared Enemies, and in open War againſt the King and Queen, and to invite the Enemies of the Kingdom to invade the Kingdom. Now this Deſign, and this Help and Aſſiſtance, are written in theſe papers; for they are Inſtructions for the carrying on of this Deſign. You my Lord are the Perſon that is charged to go with theſe papers to help on this Deſign; you began your Journey in the County of Middleſex, for according to the Evidence, you took Water at Surrey Stairs, which is in the County of Middleſex, and every ſtep you made in purſuance of this Journey, is Treaſon, where-ever it was: So then here is a ſufficient proof of a Fact in Middleſex.

L. Preſton. That, my Lord, is a point of Law, and I humbly deſire your Lordſhip, that I may have Council in this Caſe. It is not proved by any Body, that I ſaid I would go into France; and in the next place, it is not proved that I had theſe papers about me; there has been no Evidence given that I did take Water with an intention to go with theſe papers into France.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury are to be Judges of that.

L. Preſton. Then my Lord, what have I done? I have not done any thing within the danger of any Statute upon which I am indicted; beſides, Lord, what I have to offer further, is this, I think I ought to have two credible Witneſſes to prove every Fact, and I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, there is nothing but Suppoſition as to me; and I hope I and my Family ſhall not be ruined upon a Suppoſition.

L. C. J. Holt. Has your Lordſhip any more to ſay?

L. Preſton. All the Judges have not given their Opinion.

L. C. J. Holt. The reſt will give their Opinions, if you deſire it

My Lord Chief Baron, what ſay you?

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preſton, I am called upon, it ſeems, to give my Opinion in this Caſe, but this I take it muſt be left to the Jury, what credit they will give to the proof. Your Lordſhip makes a Queſtion, as the proof ſtands, whether here be any thing done in this County; here are Inſtructions given to the French King how to invade England and carry on the War againſt us. Theſe Inſtructions are contained in ſeveral papers, and theſe papers in a Pacquet are carried to the Smack, which Smack was hired to go to France. You are found taking water at Surrey-Stairs, which is in the County of Middleſex, in order to go to the Smack: You did go to the Smack; the papers were taken in your Company, and were ſeen lying by your Seals; and the Witneſſes ſwear, they believe ſome of them to be your Hand; you took care to deſire to have them diſpoſed of. Now how far the Jury will believe this matter of Fact, that is thus teſtified, is left to them; this ſeems to be the Proof, and if the Jury do believe it, here is a plain Evidence of an Overt Act in the County of Middleſex.

L. Preſton. I do inſiſt upon it, with humble Submiſſion, it is not proved that theſe papers were taken upon me, or that I did take water at Surrey Stairs to go to France.

L. C. Baron. That muſt be collected out of all the Circumſtances; the Credit of which is left to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. All the reſt of my Lords the Judges are of the ſame Opinion, as they tell me? Have you any more, my Lord?

L. Preſton I muſt ſubmit.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Preſton ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, in imagining and compaſſing the Depoſition, Death, and Deſtruction of the King and Queen; and for that purpoſe, did write, or cauſe to be writ, ſeveral treaſonable Papers and Letters, deſigned to go into France, and there to correſpond with the French King and his Subjects, who are Enemies to the King and Queen; and to carry with him thoſe treaſonable Papers and Letters, containing a Project and a formed Deſign how this Kingdom ſhould be invaded by Foreigners.

There is another Treaſon in the Indictment mention'd, and that is for adhering to and abetting the King's Enemies, there being open War declared between the King and Queen, and the French King.

You have heard, Gentlemen, a very long Evidence, Witneſſes have been produced viva voce, and ſeveral papers have been read to you; ſome of the papers that have been produced, tho' they may ſeem miſterious and canting, yet they are not ſo very obſcure and unintelligible, but if you conſider them well, the meaning of them will appear. Others of them are more expreſs, and do plainly demonſtrate a Deſign, that this

King

King Queen ſhould be depoſed, and that there ſhould be another Prince ſet upon the Throne, and reſtored to the Government of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, There are two other Perſons mentioned in the Indictment with my Lord, and tho' my Lord is only now upon his Tryal, yet the evidence which doth affect them, doth alſo concern my Lord.

You have heard how there was an Intention of ſome Perſons to go to France, and how Mr. Aſhton, one of the two others that ſtands indicted with my Lord, did treat with one Mrs. Pratt, one of the Witneſſes, to hire a Veſſel for that purpoſe, and it was by the means of one Mr. Burdett, that lives in the City; they had a Meeting at Burdett's Houſe, where they treated about the Price that ſhould be given for the Hire of this Ship to go to France, but at that time they did not agree. It was concluded, that the Woman and Aſhton and Burdett ſhould meet at the Wonder Tavern, but Mr. Burdett not being there, nothing was concluded upon then.

After that the Woman, Mr. Burdett, and Aſhton, and Elliot, met at Mrs. Burdett's; the Woman inſiſted at firſt upon 150 l. After they had been treating for ſome time, the Bargain was made to go to France for 100 l.

Then the next thing conſidered was, how this Money ſhould be paid, by agreement, 93 Guineas and 6*d.* which made up the 100 l. was depoſited in Mrs. Burdett's hand; a Six-pence broken, one part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other part of the Six-pence Mr. Aſhton had; and when either Mrs. Pratt, or the Maſter of the Veſſel did bring back that part of the Sixpence that Aſhton had to Mrs. Burdett, the Money was to be paid.

After this Agreement, they were appointed to go to the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, to the Houſe of one Mr. Rigby, and there the Woman, Mrs. Pratt, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, Aſhton and Elliot met, and they were that Night to go away and to take Water at ſome place near to go on Ship-board; and having ſtayed there till it was about ten a Clock at Night, then they went away into the Strand and ſo into Surry ſtreet, and took Water at Surry-ſtairs.

But before that they came from Mr. Rigby's, ſome Perſons went to Surry Stairs to ſee for a Boat, and met with that Fellow that was here produced, who was a Sculler, and did hire him to go through the Bridge when the Tide ſerved, and to carry ſome Gentlemen on Ship-board; they agreed with him for half a Crown, and he was to ſtay in an Houſe near the Stairs until they came.

And at the time appointed, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot and the Maſter of the Veſſel came to that place, and my Lord Preſton and his Man with them to take Water. My Lord Preſton was not at Burdett's Houſe at the hiring of the Ship, nor at Mr. Rigby's; but it is proved by the Maſter of the Veſſel, that he took Water with the reſt of them at Surry-ſtairs, that he went with them on Ship-board, and was to go along with them.

Being on Board the Ship, they did appear to have ſome Apprehenſions of Danger, and paſſing by a Man of War, my Lord Preſton, his Man, and the other two went under the Quarter-Hatches, where they lay down to prevent themſelves from being taken or diſcovered; and they hid another time when they came near Graveſend, and coming up they ſeeing a Boat coming towards them, they hid themſelves again. Captain Billop, who it ſeems, was ſent to apprehend them, pretended he was to preſs Seamen, and when he came on Board the Smack he ſaid he would preſs the Mariners, who anſwered they had a Protection: But he being upon his Search pulled up the Boards of the Quarter-Hatches, and there was my Lord Preſton and the other Perſons lying down: It was not a place that was very proper for Gentlemen, or indeed for any Paſſengers, to repoſe themſelves in; it was an uneaſie place, no body could ſtand or ſit upright in it, nay, there was no convenient place for lying down, but they muſt lean upon their Elbows, which poſture thoſe Gentlemen were in; ſo that their purpoſe was plainly to conceal themſelves, and their concealing themſelves muſt be becauſe of ſome Deſign they were about, which they would not have diſcovered.

They being taken out from under the Hatches, one of the Witneſſes tells you he ſaw a Pacquet lying there, and Aſhton pretending to fetch his Hat, went down, took it up, and put the Pacquet into his Boſom; and the Witneſſes informing Captain Billop thereof, he cauſed Aſhton's Coat to be ſearched, and from thence took the Pacquet and a piece of Lead tyed to it, which was produced here in Court.

When they were bringing away in Cuſtody, they ſeemed all of them to be very much concerned about this Pacquet; ſome of them, that is, Aſhton and Elliot, would have had it thrown with the Lead over-board. My Lord Preſton did not ſay ſo much, but Complimented Captain Billop in this manner, He was glad he was fallen into the hands of a Civil Gentleman, a Perſon of worth, and he ſhould always acknowledge his Kindneſs, and would do him all the ſervice he could if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet.

My Lord Preſton was ſearched at that time, and Letters of no great moment taken about him. Aſhton and Elliot would have had Captain Billop to take thoſe Letters which were taken in my Lord Preſton's Pocket and tye the Lead to them and have thrown the Pacquet over-board, and to report to the King and Council, That thoſe Letters were the Pacquet that was taken with the Lead, and ſo have perſwaded him to be falſe to the Truſt that was repoſed in him.

And Aſhton and Elliot uſed many Expreſſions to induce him to that Compliance; they told him the Government was unſtable, and every Dog had his Day, and the Tide would turn; and that he would deſerve very well if he would change ſides and go with them where they were going, and that he had opportunity to get any Preferment he would have.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip obſerves that I ſaid none of all this.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I do not ſay you did; my Lord Preſton did not ſay any thing of all this, but only about diſpoſing of the Pacquet that his Lordſhip ſpoke of to Captain Billop, and Complimented him, and promiſed him Kindneſs if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet.

But, Gentlemen, as there was a Pacquet taken, ſo there were two Seals taken at the ſame time and in the ſame place, which have been produced and ſhewn to you; they lay both of them upon the Ballaſt under the Quarter-Hatches, near the Pacquet: the one of them is the Seal of my my Lord Preſton's own Coat of Arms, the other Seal belongs to the Secretaries Office, which Office my Lord once held in the late Reign.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to obſerve that the Papers were not taken upon me, and it can be no Treaſon to have Seals, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Good my Lord, I will not do your Lordſhip any wrong; I do not ſay that the Papers were taken about you; no nor the Seals; but only that they lay upon the Ballaſt from whence the Pacquet was taken: And I ſay further, That theſe Seals are not denyed by your Lordſhip to be your Seals; the one is your own Seal of your Coat of Arms which was taken at that time, and ſo I do not your Lordſhip any wrong, and by the Grace of God will not.

L. Preſton. It is no Crime, I hope, to have Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. I do ſay, my Lord, the Papers were taken about Aſhton and not about your Lordſhip; but they lay upon the Ballaſt where the Seals were, and where your Lordſhip lay: But how far my Lord Preſton is concerned in this matter, is to be conſidered by you of the Jury by and by.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard how earneſt Mr Aſhton and Mr. Elliot were; one of them, to wit, Elliot, wiſht a Thunder-Bolt might ſtrike the Boat under Water as they were coming back; and when they came through Bridge he wiſht that London Bridge had fallen upon them and knockt them upon the head.

L. Preſton. But I hope that is not to lye upon me neither, for I ſaid no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Holt. No: But Aſhton and Elliot did ſay theſe things, and how the caſe ſtands as to that in Relation to your Lordſhip is to be conſidered. It is proved they afterwards gave Money to the Seamen, half a Crown a piece, to two of them, to ſay they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Now Gentlemen, that my Lord was on Board this Veſſel, that my Lord was under the Hatches, and that the Papers were taken in this manner, is beyond all contradiction: So likewiſe that the Ship was hired for France; that my Lord took Water at Surrey Stairs, and was taken in this Veſſel in that manner that you have heard.

The next thing Gentlemen is about the Papers: I muſt tell you though there are ſeveral of them that do ſeem myſterious, yet they are Papers that do ſhew a very great deſign of Depoſing the King and Queen, and a purpoſe of altering the preſent Government.

But Gentlemen, I will mention to you thoſe Papers that are very plain, and leave you to conſider what conſtruction to put upon thoſe that are obſcure. There is one Paper that ſeems to be inſtructions and heads for a Declaration, that is to ſay, That the King of France muſt not come with a deſign to make an intire Conqueſt.

L. Preſton. My Lord, with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, I hope you will pleaſe to remember and obſerve to the Jury, that Paper is not proved to be mine.

L. C. J. Holt. No my Lord, I'll do your Lordſhip no wrong, but I cannot ſpeak all my words at once.

L. Preſton. I am ſure you will not my Lord, but I beg leave to put your Lordſhip in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. Well then Gentlemen the Paper begins, That the King's Declaration is to be formed in general Terms, that he will govern by the Laws, that they ſhall be the Rule of his Actions, that he will endeavour to ſettle Liberty of Conſcience by a Law, and that whatſoever was done by him that gave any occaſion of Jealouſy, ſhall be ſetled by Parliament. That the hath given ſufficient Proofs and Evidence of his not being willing to bring an Army of Strangers into the Kingdom, by refuſing the Succours the King of France offered him, and that were even ready to be Embarqued upon the firſt notice of the Prince of Orange's coming. That he brings ſuch an Army only as is neceſſary for his own Defence, and ſecuring ſuch of his Loyal Subjects as ſhould come to him; and that he will diſmiſs them as ſoon as he ſhall have rid the Nation of thoſe Foreigners that had invaded us, and trampled upon the Laws.

So that Gentlemen, here is a Paper in this Pacquet, that has plainly laid open and proved the Deſign, and ſhews the meaning of it was to ſeduce their Majeſties Subjects from their Allegiance; it was to be in ſuch general Terms, making general Promiſes, hoping thereby that People would be the more eaſily impoſed upon to renounce their Allegiance to their preſent Majeſties.

But Gentlemen, the Declaration imports farther, that the Realm was to be invaded by Foreigners, and to palliate it, it is pretended that Foreigners were only brought in to rid the Nation of Foreigners, and you know who are meant by that: So that this Project was only to colour a Foreign Invaſion; and this Declaration was to direct them how and upon what pretences they ſhould invade this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there is no manner of doubt but this is a Treaſonable Declaration, and if any Perſon had this in his Poſſeſſion, and was going into France to carry, with an intention there to make uſe of it, that is Treaſon, though it be coucht under ſpecious Pretences of reſtoring People to their Liberty: It was plainly a Deſign to invade England by a French Army.

L. Preſton. My Lord, that Paper was not found about me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it was not; but good my Lord give me your favour, I will certainly obſerve every thing that is fitting; but I tell you I cannot do it all at once.

Then Gentlemen, there is another paper found in the Pacquet, that is ſaid to be the reſult of a Conference that was had between divers Lords and Gentlemen, as well Tories as Whiggs as they call them, to prove it poſſible to reſtore the late King by French Arms; and how this may be effected, were Propoſals made: Yet ſtill it was pretended to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration according to Law.

And that it might be brought to paſs, the credulous were to be impoſed upon, and made to believe that the French King would not conquer England for himſelf; no, but he would conquer it for the late King; he would be at that vaſt Charge, that great Expence of Men and Arms to reſtore King James, and make no Profit of it himſelf.

And it was propoſed how to ſeduce the People of England into a belief of the French King's Kindneſs; He was to indulge the Engliſh Proteſtants in France, and let them have the exerciſe of their own Religion there at their own Charges; and this to ſatisfy the Engliſh Proteſtants, that that his Perſecution of the Hugonots in France, was not out of averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only becauſe of their Antimonarchical and reſiſting Principles. So that they were propoſing among themſelves what they were to do to make the People believe the French King had no dangerous Deſign againſt our Religion and Liberties; and if they could meet with Perſons to believe this, that was a probable way thought upon in this Conference to get a great many Adherents to the French King, thereby this Invaſion to be facilitated, and the whole Project rendred more ſucceſsful.

There is another thing Gentlemen, in this Paper, and that is this; they complained of the miſmanagement of their Affairs at St. Germains; that though they did earneſtly deſire the Reſtitution of the late King, yet there was always ſome fooliſh thing or other that came from St. Germains that obſtructed their Deſign.

What that fooliſh thing is, I can't ſay, it does not appear; but whether it were not too great a Diſcovery of their Zeal for Popery, and the advancement of the Popiſh Religion, is worth your Conſideration.

And ſomething is to be done for Satisfaction of the People as to that; and it is adviſed that there ſhould be Seven or Nine, or ſuch a Number of Engliſh Men that ſhould go over, and be received into favour at St. Germains, and they ſhould be of the Council there, and theſe were to be Proteſtants; and that was to be a colour and pretence that the late King was reconciled to the Proteſtant Intereſt, becauſe he choſe Proteſtant Counſellors, and had received them at St. Germains, and was adviſed by them.

This, ſays the Paper, will make the World believe, he is ours, and that we have gained him; which was to delude a great many of the People of England, that they ſhould not be affrighted in caſe there ſhould be ſuch an Invaſion of England, but invited rather and encouraged to joyn with the French when they came.

But, Gentlemen, the three laſt Papers that have been produced to you, are Papers that do ſomewhat more nearly concern my Lord Preſton.

The firſt Paper contains ſeveral Memorandums; It begins with Lady D. 2000 l. who that Lady D. is, I muſt leave it to you to imagine, tho' perhaps it may not be hard to gueſs.

It takes notice that the Engliſh and Dutch were like to joyn; and theſe Memorandums do alſo ſhew a deſign and purpoſe of ſomething to be done for the prevention of that Conjunction. They ſeem alſo to be Inſtructions to be made uſe of upon going into France to negotiate or tranſport ſome matters of dangerous Conſequence.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope that your Lordſhip will obſerve, that theſe Memorandums are broken kind of Notes, incongruous and incoherent.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, my Lord, they are ſo, they are but broken things; but I ſay ſtill, they are Memorandums that were to be uſed for ſome purpoſe: Now I leave it to the Jury to conſider of the matter of them: What can be plainer than what is there expreſſed? The French are to come in time, before the Dutch and the Engliſh joyn; they are to watch their Opportunity and come betimes, and they are to fight at the Chops of the Channel, and not to come ſo far as Beachy.

L. Preſton. This is all but preſumptive Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I appeal to your Lordſhip if it was not in the Paper, and I appeal to the memory of the Jury whether I miſrepeat it or not.

The Paper mentions Gennings and Strickland and Trevannion, that they were to come from St Malo's in one Night; the King (meaning the late King) was not to be on Board; and there were Ships to lye at Newcaſtle, to plague London: It is eaſy to underſtand what they meant. Among theſe Memorandums, it is made as a remark, that the London Clergy are the worſt. It gives an account how Portſmouth was fortified, and Goſport, and what number of Men were in them; and of the ſtate and condition of our Navy; what rates our Ships were, and how many, and who were to be the Commanders.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip to obſerve this is not Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſhall tell you that my Lord, by and by; I am now ſtating the Evidence.

Gentlemen, my Lord Preſton inſiſts upon it, that theſe Papers were not found about him: It is true, they were not, but it does not therefore follow that they were none of his Papers: But you have Three Witneſſes, Mr. Townſend, Mr. Bland, and Mr. Warr, produced to prove theſe Papers to be my Lord's Hand; Mr. Townſend ſays he was acquainted pretty well with my Lord Preſton's Hand; he was one of his Clerks in the Office of the Wardrobe; he ſays he has ſeen my Lord write ſeveral times, and does believe the Writing to be his Hand; and to the ſame purpoſe ſays Bland; and Mr. Warr ſwears to one of the Papers, that he believes it to be my Lord Preſton's Hand.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve to the Jury, That this is only a proof of Similitude of Hands, no body ſee me write them.

L. C. J. Holt. They only ſay they do believe it to be your hand; no body ſays they ſaw you write them; if I omit any thing, pray tell me when I have done.

Gentlemen, there are other Papers which have been produced and read, that are writ in Canting Terms, which yet plainly ſhew the general Deſign; they tell the Party that Council are of Opinion, he has a very good Title; they hope he will appear himſelf, and if the Cauſe be well ſolicited it may come to a hearing before the end of Eaſter Term.

There is another matter mentioned in another Letter which is under the diſguiſe of Trade, That the Goods muſt come before the firſt of March. And another of them ſays, That unleſs the Copper and the Linnen come before the tenth of March they ſhould loſe this Summers Profit.

Gentlemen, what can be the meaning of all this?

L. Preſton. I know not indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. In another of the Papers it is ſaid, 'Tis thought our Fleet will be ready by March or April, but they believe not till June.

Truly, Gentlemen, I have not been able to take particulars of every Letter, but I muſt leave it to your Obſervation; only there is one of them that makes mention of acquainting my Lord with the condition of the Writer, and direction is therein given to ſpeak to the Bearer; and what other Lord was there, but he in the Company?

L. Preſton. I deſire to obſerve, my Lord, that I was not the Bearer.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell who was meant; I muſt leave it to the Jury to judge of that; but there was no other Lord in that Company.

L. Preſton. I give your Lordſhip thanks for obſerving that it was not proved that they were taken upon me before; but I beg your Pardon for interrupting of your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Holt. Interrupt me as much as you pleaſe, if I do not obſerve right; I will aſſure you I will do you no wrong willingly.

Now, Gentlemen, the Queſtion is in the firſt place, Whether this be Treaſon? and I told you before, without queſtion, if any Perſons do go into France to Negotiate ſuch a deſign as this, or do purpoſe to go into France, and do any Act in order thereunto, that is High Treaſon; and theſe Letters do import High Treaſon as great as can be committed, a Treaſon againſt the King and Queen, a Deſign to invade the Realm, to ſubvert the Government, to reſtore another Prince to the Throne by the aſſiſtance of Foreign Force.

There was a Deſign to delude and impoſe upon a great many People, and thoſe that would not be deluded into a belief by theſe fair Pretenſions of Friendſhip, they were to be ſubdued by an Army of Foreigners.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Queſtion will be, how my Lord Preſton is affected by this Evidence, and whether you have ſufficient proof from what has been offered, to ſatisfie you, that he is Guilty of this Treaſon or no.

Firſt my Lord tells you, there has not been a clear proof that theſe are the Papers that were taken; for (ſaith he) they have been conveyed from hand to hand, ard therefore poſſibly there might be ſome Alteration made in them. You, Gentlemen are to conſider, notwithſtanding this objection, whether the Identity of the Paper be not proved.

Captain Billop tells you he took them, and in what manner; and afterwards carried them to my Lord Nottingham, who laid them by for a little while upon his Table, and Captain Billop withdrew (that is part of my Lords Objection) while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preſton: after that, my Lord Nottingham called in Billop again, and Billop ſwears the Pacquet was not opened, but remained intire in ſuch manner as they were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; and ſo ſays my Lord Nottingham. Then Captain Billop ſaw my Lord Nottingham open it at that time, and he ſaw all theſe Papers every one put up again by my Lord Nottingham; ſo that he could not be deceived: and my Lord Nottingham delivered them to him, and he carried them to my Lord Preſident all ſealed up with my Lord Nottingham's Seal: And my Lord Preſident tells you he opened them, and brought them to the King, and had them back from the King; but they were never out of his ſight while the King read ſome of them, but he took them all and brought them to the Cabinet Council, where my Lord Sidney received all theſe Papers that have been read, and marked them. You have my Lord Sidney's Oath that theſe are the Papers he had from my Lord Preſident; you have my Lord Preſident's Oath that he had them from Billop ſealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; you have my Lord Nottingham's Oath that he had them from Billop; and Billop ſwears that they were taken in the Smack.

So that it is plain, if you believe this Evidence, that they are the ſame papers. Beſides, as to ſeveral of them, Billop marked them, and ſwears directly to them. If you believe theſe Witneſſes, as you have no reaſon I think, to the contrary; it is plainly proved theſe are the very Papers which were taken from the Boſom of Aſhton, and taken up by him from under the Quarter-Hatches in the Smack.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhips pardon for one thing.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what ſay you, pray? Say what you will

L. Preſton. With humble Submiſſion, there is one thing that I think the Jury ought to take notice of, That when the papers were ſent from Mr. Bridgman to my Lord Sidney, they were ſent by a Meſſenger.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you are miſtaken as to that Objection, for my Lord Sidney did not ſend them to Mr. Bridgman by a Meſſenger, but he delivered them with his own hand, and after he had ſet his own Mark upon them; and Mr. Bridgman ſays they were never out of his ſight, he copied them all but two or three, the other Mr. Poultney copied in his preſence, and ſo he ſwears he re-delivered them to my Lord Sidney.

L. Preſton. With humble ſubmiſſion, my Lord, if I remember right, they were in a third hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Never, never.

L. Preſton. Did not my Lord Sidney ſay ſo, or Mr. Bridgeman?

L. C. J. Holt. No: neither my Lord Sidney, nor Mr. Bridgman ſaid ſo; I ſuppoſe the Jury are apprehenſive of the matter; I would not miſlead them, I'll aſſure you, nor do your Lordſhip any manner of Injury in the World.

L. Preſton, No, my Lord, I ſee it well enough that your Lordſhip wou'd not; I am for my Life, and beg your Lordſhips pardon for interrupting of you.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, the next thing is to conſider, Whether my Lord Preſton be anſwerable for theſe Papers or a Party in this Treaſon.

Firſt, Gentlemen, I would have you to conſider that there was the hiring of a Veſſel for France: It is true, my Lord Preſton was not preſent at the bargain; but you obſerve that my Lord Preſton, his Servant, Aſhton and Elliot took Water at Surrey-Stairs on purpoſe to go on Board that Smack.

Now, Gentlemen, Whether or no you can intend any other ways than that my Lord Preſton was privy in the hiring of this Veſſel, though he was not preſent at the hiring of it; for how ſhould my Lord Preſton be ready to take Water with them at Surrey-ſtairs? Can you imagine my Lord came there by chance, and took a ſuddain Reſolution? If you can imagine that he came only to go a Ship board without knowing the previous Deſign, truly you imagine a very great thing for my Lords advantage.

It is plain he went voluntarily without Compulſion; truly, I think the Evidence is very ſtrong to induce you to believe he was privy to this deſign, and that he did know of hiring the Veſſel.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip will obſerve at the ſame time, that I was never ſeen before we took Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord I have obſerved it, and I lay that weight upon the Evidence, that I think it will naturally bear, and no more; and leave it to the Jury to conſider, whether your Lordſhip was privy to the Deſign or no, when they they weigh the Circumſtances of the Evidence together.

L. Preſton. I hope I ſhall not be condemned upon Preſumption and Argument.

L. C. J. Holt. What weight the Evidence has they will conſider.

And then, Gentlemen, there is another thing that I would obſerve; Why ſhould my Lord Preſton, a Noble Man, a Perſon of his Honour and Quality, put himſelf in ſuch a place as he was found in, and that twice? It muſt ſure be out of an Apprehenſion of ſome Danger. As for the Seamen they were ſecure enough; they were not frightned, becauſe they thought they were protected, and my Lord Preſton knew he was not lyable to be preſt; the Maſter of the Veſſel tells you they were fearful, and therefore hid themſelves in a place they could not ſtand in, nor ſit in; there was the Gravel and Ballaſt, it was uneaſie to them, dangerous to their Health to be there.

Gentlemen, why do Men avoid the light and put themſelves under covert, unleſs they have ſome evil deſign? Perſons that are innocent ſeek not obſcurity.

The Seals were found there, and my Lord does not deny they were his Seals.

L. Preſton. I do not deny that, I hope it is no Crime to have ſuch Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay but, ſays my Lord, that does not affect——becauſe the Papers were not found about me, but were found about Aſhton. Gentlemen, if you can imagine my Lord Preſton had a different Deſign from the reſt of the Company that were with him, then you may acquit my Lord, and find him Not Guilty. But it is left to you to conſider whether he had not the ſame Deſign with them. Beſides there's mention made in one of the Letters, My Lord, and there was no other Lord but he; and here are Papers proved to be my Lord's own hand, containing ſeveral of the matters of which he ſtands Indicted, and he would have had the Captain to have diſpoſed of the Papers.

Now, Gentlemen, what account does my Lord give you where he was going? it ſeems they did pretend at the time they were taken, and they would have had the Maſter of the Veſſel ſaid, that their deſign was for Flanders; but the Witneſſes tell you poſitively, That the Veſſel was hired for France.

Truly, Gentlemen, I muſt leave the matter to your Conſideration whether my Lord be Guilty of this Deſign or Not Guilty.

There is another thing that my Lord has urged (for I would not willingly omit any thing material on the one ſide or the other) he ſays his Indictment is laid in the County of Middleſex, but the Papers were not taken there, the Ship they went on board lay at Anchor in Surrey; and when they were taken it was in the County of Kent, and ſo there is no Proof of Treaſon in Middleſex.

Ay, but Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, if you are ſatisfied upon this Evidence, that my Lord was privy to this Deſign, contained in theſe Papers, and was going with them into France, there to excite an Invaſion of this Kingdom, to Depoſe the King and Queen, and make uſe of the Papers to that end, then every ſtep he took, in order to it, is High Treaſon, whereever he went; his taking Water at Surry-ſtairs, in the County of Middleſex, will be as much High-Treaſon, as the going a Ship-board in Surrey, or being found on Ship-board in Kent, where the Papers were taken.

Gentlemen, I have failed of recollecting ſeveral of the Particulars of the Evidence, becauſe they are many; and you will not depend upon my Recollection of things ſo very incoherent as ſome Parts of the Evidence in the Papers are, but upon your own Notes and Obſervations.

If you do think, having heard this Evidence, That my Lord was not concerned in this Matter, That my Lord had no Deſign to go into France with theſe Papers, but that he was an utter Stranger to all theſe things, then you are to acquit my Lord. But if you believe my Lord was privy to, and knew of the hiring of this Veſſel, and that he went to carry on the Deſign, contained in theſe Papers; and that he wrote ſome of theſe Letters, and with the others he was acquainted, then you are to find him guilty.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I would obſerve one thing, to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, by all Means my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſhall ſay but a few Words to you, becauſe indeed my Lord has ſum'd up the Evidence very fully, for matter of Law: I am fully of Opinion there never was a more black nor horrible Treaſon than is in this Plot that is now diſcovered; for I think Engliſhmen have no greater Enemies than the French and the Papiſts, and you ſee this is a Plot to bring in both; and therefore I think there was never any thing of greater Conſequence to the Government and the Nation than to have this Plot detected and puniſhed; tho' perhaps never any thing was more improbable than this ſame Plot, that it ſhould ever take effect, whatſoever they promiſed to themſelves, and their Deſire of having it effected might perſwade them to the contrary.

But, Gentlemen, the thing that I would mention about the Matter before you now, is this; Here are three Papers that by three ſeveral Witneſſes, acquainted with my Lords Hand-writing, are teſtified, as they believe, to be his Hand-writing; if ſo, then there is an End of all, for therein is a horrid deal of Treaſon contained. If theſe Inſtructions, theſe Memorandums, theſe Heads that were written down were my Lords, and he did intend to go with theſe in a Voyage towards France, that will be ſufficient of it ſelf, if there were nothing elſe in the Caſe, to maintain this Indictment.

But, Gentlemen, you have in the reſt of the Papers, that were taken, a great Character of the Bearer; that the Bearer had done great things; that the Bearer could inform them fully of every thing; and there ſhould be full and intire Confidence put in the Bearer, and a great ſuch many Phraſes.

But, ſays my Lord, I was not the Bearer, it was Mr. Aſhton that the Papers were found about; it does not appear directly who the Bearer was; and they were not found about me.

Now, Gentlemen, pray let us look a little how this Evidence ſtands: Pray where was this Bundle found? even upon the Gravel, where my Lord Preſton and Mr. Aſhton lay; there was it found, and my Lord's own Seal with it.

How, in the Name of God, came my Lord's Seals to be found with other Peoples Papers, if they did belong to any body elſe? How came they together in that place? It may be he had a mind to leave his Seals behind him. becauſe they would diſcover his Quality. But why ſhould my Lord Preſton have all this fear upon him? Why ſhould two Men go and take a Ship for themſelves and two others; and when they came to take Boat, take in my Lord and his Man, if they were not the two others that were deſigned? and this to be done at Night in the Dark? Why ſhould my Lord be under ſuch terrible Apprehenſions as to creep into a hole ſo unfit for one of his Quality?

Why do you not hear from my Lord ſome good Account upon what occaſion my Lord and his Man were going to France? Or whither elſe my Lord was really going? for ſome where or other it was plain he was going.

Gentlemen, no Man goes into an Enemies Country without ſome Licence, unleſs he go upon ſome ill Deſign: Fear ſeldom is without ſome Guilt; and there appears, throughout the whole management of the Story, that there was a great deal of fear upon theſe Gentlemen.

Beſides afterwards, when he is taken, and the Letters taken with him in the ſame Company, you hear what endeavours there were to ſuppreſs the Truth, even by my Lord's deſiring to have the Pacquet diſpoſed of; and my Lord's Man gave one of the Seamen half a Crown to ſay they were going to Flanders, not to France. I ſuppoſe the Man knew how unfit it was to be known that they were going to France: And my Lords two Companions ſpared for no Pains to get the Pacquet thrown over-board; tho' all that my Lord ſaid was what great Kindneſs he would do him when it lay in his Power, if he would diſpoſe of the Pacquet; I ſuppoſe that is very eaſily intelligible.

Gentlemen, there is one thing which is mentioned in one of the particular Letters that I deſire particularly to obſerve to you, and that is all I ſhall ſay to you; Here is a Letter in my Hand that in divers places has ſomewhat remarkable, it ſays, Your Daughter and I muſt ſtarve, if this Government can make us: That the Party did not repine at all for having loſt all for your ſake, which your favour had beſtowed. And in another place this Letter doth ſay, Your Daughter grows very tall, and very pretty, as I am told. But that which I chiefly mention it for, is, it's twice mentioned, My Lord will tell you all my Condition, how I have been uſed; and I have told my Lord my Condition: what I deſire of you, he thinks very moderate.

And pray conſider and remember, that the firſt Article of my Lord's Paper, that is taken to be under my Lord's own Hand, there is two thouſand pound to the Lady D.

Now if any body ſhould put theſe together, do they lack any great Interpreter for? for my part I leave them to you.

Then in another place, towards the end of the Letter, it is ſaid, Pray, Sir, ask my Lord how I have been uſed.

Now this Letter being thus taken, and there is never a one of the reſt that was a Lord, do you think any of the reſt was meant? I muſt leave it to you.

If my Lord Preſton had produced any Teſtimony to prove his own good Carriage and Behaviour towards the preſent Government, it had been very much for his advantage, and might have had great weight with you; but when things appear only in this manner as they do now, I muſt leave it to you.

Gentlemen, 'tis a great Matter, and of great Moment; if thoſe that conſpire againſt the Kingdom, againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and againſt the preſent Government, may do it with impunity, it will be worth the conſidering what the Conſequence of that may be. Your own Conſciences require you to do Right and Juſtice on both ſides; and if you are ſatisfied he is not guilty, you will find him ſo; if you are ſatisfied that he is guilty, you will find him ſo.

L. Preſton. My Lord, may I have the liberty to ſay any thing before the Jury go out?

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordſhip ſhould have ſaid what you had to ſay before. It is contrary to the courſe of all Proceedings in ſuch Caſes to have any thing ſaid to the Jury after the Court has ſummed up the Evidence, but we will diſpence with it. What has your Lordſhip to ſay?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordſhip; I am not acquainted with ſuch Proceedings.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you know I permitted your Lordſhip to interrupt me as much as you wou'd, which was never done before in any ſuch Caſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is contrary to the courſe of the Court: But yet if you have any thing to ſay to the Court or the Jury, for this once we permit it.

L. Preſton. Gentlemen of the Jury.——

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what you have to ſay, pray direct your ſelf to the Court, that we may hear what it is.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I only deſire the Jury may be informed that I am a Proteſtant, that I was baptized in the Religion of the Church of England, and have always lived in it, and hope to dye in it. My Lord, 'tis true, things have been urged with Severity againſt me that are a little hard; in making that, which I hope will amount to but a Preſumption, to be a Proof; as in the Caſe of the Letters that are written in a Cant, and my Intention to go to France, and thoſe words in the Letter, where my Lord the Bearer is named. But your Lordſhip obſerves, That that Letter is not directed to any body, and that is full of Cant as well as all the reſt; Why ſhould I be ſuppoſed to be the Bearer any more than either of the others, and they were found about one of them? But, my Lord, for the reaſon of my going beyond Sea, it was this; I deſigned to go to Flanders or any place I could be driven to, and that ought not to be wondred at; for really I who had lived quietly after the loſs of my Places, upon this Revolution, and ſuffered great Inconveniences in my Eſtate, and was retired to my own Houſe, with a Deſign to live a retired Life, was impriſoned twice in the Tower, and proclaimed a Traytor in every Market Town, without any Indictment; and my Impriſonment tended greatly to the impairing my Health and my Fortune; all this made me very uneaſie here: and, my Lord, I went under a fixed Reſolution to go to Flanders or any place where I thought I could be quiet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Lordſhip ſhould have ſaid all theſe things before, for it is not the courſe to reply upon the Court; if you had had any thing to ſay, you know we heard you out of Courſe, and I let you interrupt me as much much as you did think fit, though that has not been allowed at any time before. But, my Lord, pray let me ſay one thing more: Suppoſe your Lordſhip did think your ſelf hardly uſed, though I know not any reaſon you had to think ſo; yet your Lordſhip muſt remember it was in a time of danger that your Lordſhip was taken up before, and you had ſhewed your Diſſatisfaction with the preſent Government, and therefore they were not to be blamed if they ſecured themſelves againſt you; but if you had a mind to retire into the Country, or to go abroad, was France the only Country you could chooſe? a known declared Enemy's Country at open War with the Government?

L. Preſton. My Lord, I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, if I give any Offence.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, you give me no Offence at all; but your Lordſhip is not right in the courſe of Proceedings; I acquaint you with it not by way of Reproof, but by way of Information.

L. Preſton. Then I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, that all that is alledged againſt me is but Preſumption; my Life and Fortune, my Poſterity and Reputation, are all at Stake; I leave all to the Jury's Conſideration, and the God of Heaven direct them.

L. C. J. Holt. If you go on thus to reflect upon the Court, you will make the Court to reflect upon you. The Jury hear how the Evidence has been ſtated: I think it has been done very impartially, and without any Severity to you: Why ſhould you think we would preſs the Evidence further than it ought to go againſt you? You are a Stranger to moſt of us, and I am ſure we do not deſire your Life; but ſtill we muſt take care that Juſtice be done to the Government and the Kingdom, as well as to any particular Perſon; and Evidence that is given muſt have its due Weight and Conſideration: If any one can deſign innocently to go into France, at this time of day, with ſuch Papers, and in ſuch a manner, that I leave to the Jury's Conſideration.

Then the Jury withdrew, to conſider of the Evidence, and the Court adjourned for a little while, and returned in half an hour; and the Jury came in and were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Fore-man.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand, (which he did) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods and Chattels had he?

Foreman. None at all that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I think, truly, Gentlemen, you have done according to your Evidence; and though it be a hard Caſe upon particular Men that have brought themſelves into theſe Incoveniences; yet it is neceſſary Juſtice ſhould have its due courſe, or elſe there is no longer living for any Man in any Society or Government.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and the Court Adjourned till Monday Morning following at ſeven a Clock.

Die Lunæ, xix Januarii, 1690.

The Court being Sate, the Jury was called over, and the Appearance of thoſe who anſwered Recorded. Then Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Ellyot were brought to the Bar; but Mr. Ellyot was ordered to be carried back to Newgate, the King's Council reſolving to try Mr. Aſhton by himſelf.

JOhn Aſhton, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and you upon your Tryal of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to ſpeak as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray ſtay a little.

L. C. J. Holt. What ſay you, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly deſire your Lordſhip will allow me the benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray let him have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. Aſhton. And likewiſe that you would give my Sollicitor leave to be as near me as poſſibly he can, only to refreſh my Memory, if I ſhould forget any thing.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a thing you cannot of right demand, the other of Pen, Ink, and Paper you may.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſhall acknowledge it as a very great Favour.

L. C. J. Holt. That is an Innovation that ought not to be, the Court cannot allow it.

Mr. Aſhton. I acknowledge it a Favour, but if the Court thinks it not fit to allow it, whatſoever your Lordſhip ſhall order I readily ſubmit to.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have Pen, Ink and Paper; and what is fit for the Court to do they will do it.

L. C. Baron. If the Witneſſes ſay any thing that you do not hear, you muſt ſpeak to the Court, and you ſhall have them ſay it over again.

Pen, Ink, and Paper was given to the Priſoner.

Cl. of Arraign. Sir William Hedges, Knight. (He appeared)

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I would not trouble your Lordſhip and my ſelf with unneceſſary Challenges; I intend to put my ſelf with an intire dependance upon the firſt Twelve Men that that appear, be they who they will.

L. C. J. Holt. What you pleaſe for that matter, you have your own choice.

Mr. Aſhton. Whoever they are, I ſubmit to them; I know them not.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Sir William Hedges.

Which was done.

And ſo were the Eleven next ſucceeding in the Pannel; and the Names of the Twelve Sworn follow.

Sir William Hedges, Knight.
John Wolſtenholm, Eſq;
James Boddington, Eſq;
Thomas Johnſon, Eſq;
Ralph Bucknall, Eſq;
Lucy Knightley, Eſq;
Thomas Cuthbert, Eſq;
John Herbert, Eſq;
John Tully, Eſq;
Thomas Smith, Eſq;
William Withers, Eſq; and
Daniel Thomas, Eſq;

Then the Jury were Numbred, and Proclamation made for Information and Evidence in the uſual manner.

Mr. Aſht. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you deſire Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope the Court will take care to provide them for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, let the Gentlemen of the Jury have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

(Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton, hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands Indicted by the Name of John Aſhton, late of the Pariſh of St. Pauls Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that he, together with Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Pariſh of St. Ann, in the Liberty of Weſtminſter, Baronet, who ſtands Convicted of High Treaſon, and Edmund Ellyot, late of the Pariſh of St. James, in the ſaid Liberty, Gent. For that they as falſe Traytors, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis,) and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned, and thereunto hath Pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is, to enquire whether he be Guilty of the Felony and High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty; If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire, what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and High Treaſon Committed, or at any time ſince; If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; If you find that he fled for it; you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; If you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it; you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knap. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt John Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and the Indictment, Gentlemen, Charges him, That he as a falſe Traytor againſt their preſent Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, his Supreme and Natural Lord and Lady, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, did upon the Twenty Ninth of December laſt paſt, together with Sir Richard Grahme, who ſtands Convicted, and one Edmund Ellyot, and divers others ill diſpoſed Perſons unknown to the Jury, did Conſpire, Imagine, and Intend to depoſe, and deprive the King and Queen, and to bring them to Death and Deſtruction, and to ſubvert and alter the Government; and to cauſe War and Rebellion within this Kingdom againſt their Majeſties; and to bring theſe Intentions and Purpoſes to paſs, the Priſoner, with the reſt of them, did prepare divers Notes, Papers, Letters, and Memorandums in Writing, which were to inſtruct the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the number of their Majeſties Men of War, how they were Mann'd, and the Names of the Commanders of ſeveral of them, and to inform them how the Caſtles and Forts of Portſmouth, Southſea, and Goſport were fortified, and how they might be ſurpriſed by the King's Enemies, and of the Times, Ways and Means how they might invade the Kingdom, in order to depoſe the King and Queen; and to Procure and Incite ſuch an Invaſion, and further to bring theſe Purpoſes to paſs, the Priſoner and the other Traytors did ſecretly conceal, and detain in their cuſtody ſeveral Bills of Exchange for the payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and the ſeveral Letters, Notes, and Memorandums before mentioned, which were for the purpoſes I before opened to you; and further to bring theſe Purpoſes, and Treaſonable Intentions to paſs, they did for one Hundred Pound hire and prepare a Ship, which was to carry them ſecretly out of this Kingdom into France, with an intent there to deliver theſe Inſtructions, and Memorandums, and Bills of Exchange into the Hands of their Majeſties Enemies; and did hire a Boat to carry them to the Ship, and did enter into it at St. Clement Danes, within your County, and rowed to the Ship, and went on Board the Ship, and there with the Bills of Exchange, Notes, and Memorandums, they ſet ſail to go to France, in order to deliver them to the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen; and the Indictment does further ſet forth, that there hath, and ſtill is a War between the French King and our King and Queen, and that he and his Subjects are Enemies to the King and Queen and their Subjects; and that during this War, the Priſoner, together with the reſt that were before named, were adhering to the King and Queen's Enemies in this War; and in purſuance thereof, did prepare ſuch Letters and Inſtructions before opened, and had, and concealed in their cuſtody, and hired a Ship and a Boat, and went into the Ship, and ſet ſail in order to go for France, to aid and aſſiſt the King's Enemies there with Money, Intelligence, and Counſel; and this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in that caſe made and provided. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove him Guilty, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of a very heinous Offence, no leſs than High-Treaſon, the greateſt Offence that can be committed againſt any Humane Law. You have heard the Particulars in the Indictment read. I will not trouble you with any Repetition, but go to open the Evidence according to the Steps that are obvious in the caſe. You have heard in general the Deſign was to depoſe this King and Queen, which the Law expounds pounds to be to bring them to Death and Deſtruction: You have heard it was to alter the Government, and cauſe a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to bring in Foreign Power; and theſe are laid to be the Heads of the Offences that the Priſoner ſtands charged with.

Gentlemen, the firſt ſtep that was made in this matter was by the Priſoner at the Bar; for there was one Mr. Burdett, which it ſeems had been one of his Acquaintance, and had undertaken to bring him acquainted with a Perſon that could furniſh him with a Ship; and in order to that, one Mrs. Pratt, that had the management of the Smack which belonged to her Husband, ſhe by Burdett's means was brought to Burdett's Houſe, where ſhe met Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and they had ſome Treaties about the hiring of a Ship; the purpoſe declared by the Priſoner then was to hire a Ship to go to any part of France, and he would give a conſiderable Reward for it; he ſaid it was for himſelf and Three more. They did not come to any concluſion about the Ship; but there was an Appointment made to have the Maſter of the Ship to meet with them at the Wonder Tavern in Ludgate-ſtreet, and in order to that, Paſeley that is the Maſter, and the Woman came there, and met with Mr. Aſhton; but becauſe Mr. Burdett was not there, they came only to this propoſal, one Hundred and Fifty Pound was demanded for the Hire of this Veſſel; but there being no concluſion then made, they thought it better to do it at Burdett's Houſe, and about a day after they came to Mr. Burdett's, and then it hapned that Elliot, one of the Perſons that is Indicted, but not one before you, came thither too; and at that time it was agreed to give one Hundred Pounds for the Hire of the Ship. Ninety Three Guineas were depoſited in Mrs. Burdett's Hands; and there was a Token paſt betwixt them by the breaking of a Six-pence, one part whereof was to ly with Mr. Aſhton, and the other with Mrs. Burdett; and whenever the Maſter of the Veſſel brought back the broken piece of Six pence that Mr. Aſhton had, then ſhe was to pay the Money, that being the ſign that they had attained their Ends, and were ſafely landed in France.

The next ſtep they take, is this, they appoint to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, thither the Maſter of the Veſſel and the Woman were to come, and that was near the time, that very day that they deſigned to go down, and there was Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot, but the other Perſon did not appear as yet, there the Sea-men were ordered to go along with them, and thence they went down to the Water ſide, to Surry-ſtairs, and the Waterman was called, and in the mean time came my Lord Preſton and his Man to them, and they four did go in that Boat, by the Direction of the Maſter, and were carryed on Board his Smack.

After they came on Board (for I would note the particular Circumſtances) they were very apprehenſive of Danger, for they knew what they went about, their own Guilt gave them Reaſon of Fear, and when they came near a Man of War, which lay at Anchor in Long-Reach in the River, they deſired the Maſter to hide them, that they might be ſafe from any Search, and they were hid and put cloſe under the Hatches for ſome time; afterwards when they came to another place of Danger, it was by the Block Houſes at Graves-end, (as they apprehended) there they deſired to be hid again, and ſo they were put in that place were they were in very difficult Circumſtances under the Hatches, and there they remained till a Pinnace, that had been ſent to enquire after them, came and Boarded this ſame Veſſel.

Upon its Boarding of them, the Captain made a ſearch, and found theſe Gentlemen, my Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot, and I ſuppoſe his Man alſo, all hid under the Hatches.

Then the next thing which is obſervable, Gentlemen, and the great Matter that will ſhew where the Treaſon was, is this, there was a Bundle of Papers that was on Board, ready prepared, if they had not been ſurprized, but could have had an Opportunity for it, to have been caſt Over-Board, and there was Lead fixt to it, to have ſunk it, and Mr. Aſhton the Priſoner at the Bar, was the Perſon that concealed this Bundle of Papers, betwixt his Body and his Coat, and from thence it was taken by the Captain that took them.

When they were ſo taken, the Captain, according to his Duty, was bringing the Priſoners to Whitehall, they deſired to go on Shore at Graves-End, but the Captain did not think that ſo fit, but carryed them on Board the George Frigot, and then you will hear theſe Gentlemen did fall into a Treaty with the Captain, to ſuppreſs theſe Papers, and one Inſtance I remember they did tell him, that ſince there were a parcel of Papers that he had taken out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, he might take off the Lead and fix it to thoſe Papers, and ſink the others; and what ſhould he have for it? they promiſed him great Rewards, they told him he might be a great Man, he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune; and when that would not do, they uſed many Threatnings to him, all which will appear in the ſeveral Circumſtances that the Witneſſes will tell you of.

I come, Gentlemen, in the laſt place to ſhew you, That all the whole Conſpiracy, all this Treaſon, did lye hid under this Bundle of Papers that were taken from Mr. Aſhton, and ſo he might well be afraid of having them opened, for there you will find a formed Deſign, to alter this Government by a French Power and Aſſiſtance; and they contain ſo many Particulars, that in regard, I would not do the King's Evidence injury on the one hand, nor the Priſoner on the other, I will forbear repeating the Particular Inſtances.

Gentlemen, You will have all the Letters and Papers Read, but in the General, I muſt needs ſay, you will find it manifeſt, that there is a black and wicked Conſpiracy to introduce a Foreign Power, to Eſtabliſh the Proteſtant Religion, and that by a Popiſh Intereſt, and to ſettle our Laws, Liberties, and Properties, by a French Army. And let them pretend what they will for the Proteſtant Religion, when you hear theſe Papers read, no body will imagine it was to any other purpoſe, (if the Plot had taken Effect,) but to have what Religion, what Laws, the French King had pleaſed to impoſe upon us.

If the Priſoner be Guilty, Gentlemen, of theſe Matters, I know you will do your Duty; but if he be not Guilty, God forbid that you ſhould find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. Call your Witneſſes, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We begin with Mrs. Pratt.

She was Sworn.

Sir W.

Sir W. Wil. Look you, Mrs. Pratt, here is another Gentleman at the Bar to be Tryed, againſt whom you are called as a Witneſs.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, my Lord.

Sir W. Wil. Pray hear what we ask you. Pray do you give the Court and the Jury an account, what Treaty you have had with that Gentleman, about a Veſſel to go to France, and what was done in it.

Mrs. Pratt. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I was ſent for to Mr. Burdett's Houſe in Queen-ſtreet by Cheapſide, to know whether he could have a Smack to go for France; I told him yes, I could help him to one; he told me, there were two or three Gentlemen bound for France, as Merchants to fetch Silk, and I was at Mr. Burdett's two or three times, and at laſt Mr. Aſhton met me there.

L. C. J. Holt. Look upon the Gentleman, is that he?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that is the Gentleman, and he met me there, and meeting with Mr. Aſhton, he hired the Veſſel; but firſt of all, he deſired us to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, to make the Bargain, and we did meet there, and were there about an hour, or an hour and a half, and Mr. Burdett did not come; and the next Morning, Mr. Aſhton deſired me to meet him at Mr. Burdett's again; and the next Morning I met at Mr. Burdett's, and there we made the Bargain for 100 l. and there was Sixpence broke in two pieces.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Hundred Pound paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, but we agreed on the Tueſday Morning, and there was a Sixpence broken in two, and Mr. Aſhton had both the Six-pences in his hand, and the Tueſday night the Hundred Pound was paid at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by?

Mrs. Pratt. There was one Mr. Elliot, and the Maſter of the Smack, and Mrs. Burdett.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they pay the Money in Gold or Silver?

Mrs. Pratt. This Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton, told the Money, there was 93 Guineas and a Six-pence, and Mr. Aſhton gave one half of the broken Six-pence with the 93 Guineas to Mrs. Burdett; and when the Maſter of the Veſſel brought the other half of the Six-pence, or I, either of us, we were to have the 100 l.

Sir W. Wil. Pray to what Place did they hire the Ship to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To France.

Sir W. Wil. Who hired the Ship?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. To what hand was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. It was paid in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-Chamber, into her Hand.

Sir W. Wil. Who broke the Sixpence?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton, that day the Bargain was made.

Sir W. Wil. Who carried it away?

Mrs. Pratt. When the Money was paid, Mr. Aſhton had one, Mrs. Burdett had the other part.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. To which part of France were you hired to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To any part where they could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray did they give you any Note about any thing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, they gave me one Note to meet at the Dog Tavern, and another to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who gave you the Notes?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Look upon that Note.

(Which ſhe did.)

Mrs. Pratt. This to my beſt remembrance Mr. Aſhton wrote, I cannot well remember the Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Aſhton deſire to meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and he did meet at the Dog Tavern, but Burdett did not.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Monday Night before New Years Day.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Money paid?

Mr. Pratt. On Tueſday Night, at Mrs Burdett's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After the Money was paid, what did you do the next day?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton Ordered a Note to be written, to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, at one Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. At what time were you to go to Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. A Wedneſday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. But at what time?

Mrs. Pratt. Some time about Ten a Clock, and we came there accordingly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was with you at Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Maſter of the Veſſel, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot, and two Gentlemen more, that I never ſaw before, nor ſince.

Sir W. Wil. I ask you again, who firſt Treated with you about Hiring this Veſſel?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdett firſt treated with me about it.

Sir W. Wil. Who next?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. Who made the Bargain with you?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton.

Sir W. Wil. What can you ſay more?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let me ask you, when you came to Mr. Rigby's, in what manner did you go away from his Houſe, and what was ſaid at parting?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Aſhton was not there himſelf at firſt, but he and Mr. Elliot, and two other Gentlemen were there afterwards, and Mr. Aſhton's Wife ſaid ſomething about Papers hove in a Hat at Court, and about ſome bodies being choſen; and one of the Gentlemen ſaid there was nothing in that, I was one that was Choſen laſt Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Aſhton and Elliot go out together from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not ſee them go.

Mr. Trevor. Had you any directions from Mr. Aſhton, to ſend for a Hamper or a Trunk?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that was at Mr. Burdett's Houſe.

Mr. Trevor. When was that Hamper and Trunk to be ſent for?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Wedneſday Night before we went to Rigby's Houſe.

Sir W. Wil. Do you know one William Paſely?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes.

Sir W. Wil. Was he with them?

Mrs. Prat. Yes, he was with them.

Sir W.

Sir W. W. What occaſion brought him thither?

Mrs Pratt. I carryed him to Mrs. Burdett's Houſe.

Mr. Trevor. Pray did the Priſoner deſire to ſee the Maſter of the Veſſel, or ſpeak with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and when I brought him, he ſaid he liked him very well.

Mr. Trevor. What is the Maſter's Name?

Mrs. Pratt William Paſeley.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Aſhton's Wife after they went away?

Mrs. Pratt. We had little diſcourſe, only ſhe gave me ſome Victuals and Drink; and ſhe ſaid ſhe hop'd I would not tell of her Husband.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What elſe did ſhe ſay?

Mrs. Pratt. She hoped God would deliver them out of the Lyon's Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did ſhe ſay any thing about Cock Crowing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, ſhe ſaid ſhe thought ſhe ſhould have no good Luck for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by in the Chamber when the Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Maſter of the Veſſel by, and Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I heard her ſay ſomewhat of ſome Papers, which I do not very well underſtand. Does ſhe know of any Papers that the Priſoner had?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That was only about the Two Notes.

L. C. J. Holt. She talks of Papers being ſhaken in a Hat, but nothing can be made of it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you would ask her any Queſtions before ſhe goes, now is your time to do it.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may ſtand up again. Mrs. I ask a Queſtion, not ſo much in kindneſs to my ſelf, as Juſtice to another Gentleman. You ſay Mr. Ellyot writ one of the Notes.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, as I remember, it was that to meet at Mr. Rigby's.

Mr. Aſhton. I do it to juſtifie that Gentleman, I take that Note upon my ſelf; and you ſay I hired the Ship, and Mr. Ellyot was by.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Ellyot is not now upon his Tryal, it concerns you only to ask ſuch Queſtions as relate to your ſelf. What is ſaid now concerning Mr. Ellyot, goes for nothing againſt him.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do it only to do him Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are to ask Queſtions only for your ſelf.

Mr. Aſhton. Remember, good Woman, you are upon your Oath; and have a care of forſwearing your ſelf; my Blood is at ſtake.

Mrs. Pratt. I am ſure I ſay nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Aſhton. Did I ever ſpeak to you of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Aſhton. As I hope for Salvation I did not.

Mrs. Pratt. And another thing you told me more; if I help'd this well away, you would help me to the earning of 1000l. before Lady-day.

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, as to what was ſaid of that kind, of helping her to 1000l. is no great matter to the thing in Hand; for if I was minded to go out of the Kingdom, it was neceſſary to uſe all Arguments I could, to perſuade her to help me to go away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, you muſt ſtay your time before you ſpeak to the Jury; make your Obſervations upon the Evidence to your ſelf, you ſhall be heard at large all that you can ſay in your proper time.

Mr. Aſhton. I do aſſure my ſelf, my Lord, of all the favour that can be ſhewn to a Man in my Circumſtances.

L. C. J. Holt. You ſhall have all that is juſt, I do aſſure you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I am glad in the Circumſtances I am in, that I am to be tryed before your Lordſhip. But, good Woman, by Vertue of the Oath that you have taken, did I ever ſpeak to you directly or indirectly of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and you askt for a hole to hide what you might have occaſion to keep ſecret.

Mr. Aſhton. But I ask you about going to France; did I ſpeak to you about going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes you did.

Mr. Aſhton. Then, as I hope to be ſav'd, I never ſpoke directly or indirectly of going to France to her.

Mrs. Pratt. You were not to go for Holland nor Flanders, I am ſure.

Mr. Aſhton. Nay, I did take it for granted, that you did know before I met you, that we were to go to France; but I never ſpoke to you of it in my Life, that I am ſure of; but I only urge this to let your Lordſhip know, that Woman has forgotten her ſelf.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, You will have all lawful favour; but your time for arguing upon the Evidence is not come.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You muſt ask your Queſtions now, and make your Obſervations afterwards; you muſt reſerve your ſelf for that, till after we have done.

Mr. Aſhton. But then, my Lord, I ſhall have too many things for my Memory to retain; and therefore I beg leave, as they occur to my Memory now, and as the Witneſſes go along, to make my Obſervations.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, Pray, when the Veſſel was hired, and you were told it was to go to France, what Perſons did Mr. Aſhton ſay were to go with him?

Mr. Pratt. Three Perſons he ſaid were to go, but he did not name them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then ſet up William Paſeley.

(Which was done.)

Sir W. Williams. What can you ſay of any for the hiring of a Veſſel?

Paſeley. I did not know the Veſſel was hired before I came thither.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Prithee tell us what thou doſt know?

Paſeley. The Woman came to me when I was at Billingsgate, and ſaid I muſt go a little way along with her: and as we were going ſhe told me it was to go to Mr. Burdett's in Queen-ſtreet; and when we came there, Ellyot and Aſhton were not within: But by that time we had been there a little while, in came Mr. Aſhton, and preſently after him Mr. Ellyot; and Mr. Aſhton bid the Woman give him the Money out of the place where it was.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not hear him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray begin again, and ſpeak out.

Paſeley. I met with this Woman at Billingſgate, and ſhe told me I muſt go a little away along with her.

L. C. J. Holt. That Woman, name her.

Paſeley. Mrs. Pratt; and I went along with her, and askt her where ſhe was going; ſhe ſaid up into Queen-ſtreet: And coming to Queen-ſtreet, we went to Mr. Burdett's Houſe, I was never there in my Life before. When I came there Aſhton nor Ellyot were either of them there; after a little while in came Aſhton, and preſently after in came Ellyot, and he went up Stairs into the Bed Chamber; and being in the Bed-Chamber, they brought the Money out, rolled up in a half-Sheet of Paper, ſet up an edge, and told it out at the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told it?

Paſeley. Aſhton told the Money out; and after the Money was told, he pulled out two pieces of a Six-pence, and when he had pulled out the two pieces of a Six-pence, he gives one half to this Mrs. Burdett, and the other half he kept himſelf; and he bid her pay this ſame Money, when the other half Six-pence that Aſhton kept came to this Woman, to match that which ſhe had; and after the Money was told, we ſtayed but a ſmall while there, and came down Stairs; and when we came down Stairs we went down to Billingſgate. I think John Fiſher was there, and we carried away with us a Trunk and a Hamper; John Fiſher carried the Trunk, and another Man the Hamper; and after that we had carried the things on Board, I came up to the Houſe again; and after I came up to the Houſe, they directed us to go to the Seven Stars in the little Piazza, there was a Note written to direct us, which ordered us to go thither betwixt 10 and 11 at Night. When we came there, I think there was neither of them there preſent, but by that time we had been there a ſmall ſpace, in they both came, and ſat down; and a Gentleman came in and ſaid the Cock crowed; and therefore they ſhould have no good luck. And then they talkt about Papers being toſſed in a Hat, I dont know what, and in came two Gentlemen more, juſt before we went away, to ſee them; and after thoſe Gentlemen had ſeen them, they ſtaid but a little while. Says Ellyot to me, Maſter, come along with me; ſo I went along with him, and we came to Surrey Stairs; and on the Corner on the left hand, there was an Ale-houſe. He called the Waterman out of the Ale-houſe, and he bid me go before, and I went down; and by the time that I had gotten down, the Waterman came and halled his Wherry to, and I went in; and by that time I was gotten to the Stern, down came Aſhby and Ellyot, and my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. You mean Aſhton, not Aſhby?

Paſeley. Yes, my Lord, that is the Man. And after they had got into the Wherry, and were ſeated, they bid the Waterman put off from Land, and ſo we went through Bridge; and after we were through Bridge, we got on board the Smack, and they got into the Cabin; and when they were got into the Cabin, I called my Men, and bid them hale up the Anchor, and they did ſo; it proved to be but little Wind, but that Tide we got below half-way Tree, and were forc'd there to drop our Anchor, and ſtay till the next Morning: the next Morning we weighed Anchor, and by that time it was Nine a Clock, we got to Long-Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and there they hid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And how was the hiding, pray?

Mr. Paſeley. It was down in the Quarters under the Hatches.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did they hide?

Paſeley. We reckoned they would come on Board a Preſſing, and they bid me ſhow my Protection.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they deſire to be hid?

Paſeley. Yes, and after we came by the George Man of War, they came up again, and remained afterwards in the Cabin, till we came almoſt to Graveſend: a little before we came to Graveſend, they all hid again; and when they were hid, remained hid all, I think, but only Ellyot; I think, he popt up; and they were reſolved to go eat their Victuals; but then I told them, there was a Barge coming, and ſo he went down again, and there they remained, till they were taken, for the Barge was on Board preſently, and found them there.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of place was it, that they were hid in?

Paſeley. They could not ſit, nor ſtand upright in it, but lay all along, or lean'd on their Elbows.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they lie upon there, pray?

Paſeley. There was Ballaſt, and ſlit Deal a top of the Ballaſt.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Well, what happened when the Captain came on board?

Paſeley. When Captain Billop came on board, Maſter, ſays he, you have got a couple of ſtout young Men, I muſt preſs them, or to that effect. I hope not ſo, Captain, ſaid I. Why, what have you to ſhew, ſays he? I told him, I had a Protection. Let me ſee it, ſays he: So I ſhews him my Protection, and he looks in it. Well, ſays he, Maſter, I muſt look farther; and went to rights to the Place where they lay, and found them lying all together. After they were taken, and were come out, Captain Billop commanded them into his Boat, and commanded me, and my two Men, to go into the Barge; afterwards he ſet his Man on ſhoar at Hungerford Stairs; and when we came to Whitehall Bridge, the Gate was not opened, and we ſtayed a little while at Whitehall Bridge; and when we came a ſhoar, Ellyot gave me half a Crown, and bid me ſay, when I came upon my Examination, that we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were you bound for, pray?

Paſeley. They examined me in the Chamber, when they paid the Money, if I knew they went to France; and I told them, yes, very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Did they deſire you to go to any particular Port in France?

Paſeley. No, we were to touch at any Place we could.

Sir Willi. Williams. Did they mention any thing of Flanders to you?

Paſeley. No, they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Did any body mention going to France to you?

Paſeley. Yes, they did. They askt me, whether I could carry them to France ſafe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did ask you that?

Paſeley. Ellyot or Aſhton, one of the two, I cannot directly ſay which; but if I be not miſtaken, it was Aſhton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came from Rgby's at the Seven Stars, Who came away with you?

Paſeley. Aſhton and Ellyot.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Did Ellyot and Aſhton both come out with you?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. And did they part, after they were come out?

Paſeley. Yes. Aſhton did go away from us preſently after we were come out.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. When you came on Board, had you any Diſcourſe with Aſhton, about going to France?

Paſeley. No, not that I remember.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go on foot, from the Seven Stars?

Paſeley. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. And did they part, after you came out?

Paſeley. Yes, they did.

L. C. J. Holt. And who went with you, did you ſay?

Paſeley. Ellyot came with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Whither went Mr. Aſhton then?

Paſeley. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he ſay to you, when he went from you?

Paſeley. He bid me go along with Ellyot.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Aſhton there as ſoon as you?

Paſeley. Not quite; but by that time the Waterman had got the Boat to the Shoar, and I in the Stern, they were all come down.

L. C. J. Holt. When Aſhton came, who came along with him?

Paſeley. I ſaw them all upon the Stair-head; I was in the Boat when they came. I never ſaw my Lord, till he was upon the Stairs.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to ask him, What the Sum of Money was, that was paid at Burdett's?

Paſeley. It was 93 Guineas and Six Pence.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought it?

Paſeley. It was laid down in the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ask you, who brought it?

Paſeley. I did ſee Aſhton bring it, and lay it down in the Window, and he told it out, and put it up again, and gave it to Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire to know what is the uſual Rate to go to Flanders; What may a Smack and three Men deſerve?

Paſeley. Truly I cannot tell, I never went upon my own account in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Pratt, what ſay you, what is the uſual Rate to go to Flanders or Holland?

Mrs. Pratt I believe they may go for a matof 20 l. or 30 l.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear them Gentlemen, what they ſay.

Juryman. Yes; but, my Lord, he ſays, he gave them notice the Barge was a coming. I deſire to ask him. Did he know there was a deſign to ſearch him or no?

Paſely. Sir, I knew that there was a ſearch for Seamen.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you know there was to be a ſearch, in order to the taking theſe Gentlemen on board you? For that is the Queſtion, I believe, the Jury wou'd ask you.

Paſely. No, I did not know of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you ſay, theſe Gentlemen deſired to be hid?

Paſely. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you hid them according to their deſire?

Paſely. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before you went on Board, had you any diſcourſe of hiding? did they ask you for a place to hide in?

Paſely. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who did?

Paſely. Aſhton and Elliot both askt if there were a place in the Ship to hide them, and I told them, yes, there was.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire to ask him this Queſtion. Did we deſire you to come and hide us, or did you deſire us to go down?

Paſely You deſired this of us, that if we ſaw any Man of War's Boat we would tell you that you might be hid.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Pray repeat that over again, did they deſire you to give them Information when any Boat was coming, that they might hide, or did you deſire them to hide your Self?

Paſely. They deſired it of me.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up Charles Betſworth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Betſworth is examined, I would ask Paſely one Queſtion? was there any Coat left on board you?

Paſely. Yes, there were two Coats of the Waterman's left on Board, and I took them and lockt them up.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Is that the Man that own'd the Coats?

Paſely. Yes, it is.

Sir W. Williams. Then Betſworth, will you give an Account of what you know againſt the Priſoner at the Bar?

Betſworth. I cannot tell, my Lord, I never ſaw the Gentleman in my Life before, that I know of.

Sir W. Williams. Prethee hear, Friend, tell what you know of carrying any Gentlemen on Board the Smack.

Betſworth. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I was going home from our Stairs about 7 or 8 a Clock in the Evening; that is, from Surrey ſtairs, and a Gentleman called Sculler. Said I to him, Sir, where do you go? ſays he, As far as the Tower; ſaid I, 'tis againſt Tide, I cannot go; it will be ten a Clock before it be high Water. Says he, will you go with us at that time? Said I, what will you give me? Will you give me half a Crown? then I'll carry you down, for I cannot ſtay out ſo late for nothing. Yes, ſays he, I will give it you. Then I came and brought my Boat to the Shoar; he asked me then what my Name was; I told him Charles Betſworth. Says he, will you be ſure to ſtay till we come? Yes, ſaid I, if you will be ſure to come; and if I be not here, I will be at ſuch a Houſe, an Ale-Houſe, that was there by; the Sign of the Swan: So I ſtaid, and carryed a Fare or two over the Water, and about 11 a Clock comes a Gentleman down, and calls Charles; and I went out 2 doors down towards my Boat, and there comes one Gentleman down, and a kind of a Seaman, as I thought; and the Seaman went into the Stern, and the Gentleman ſat down at the Back-board, and there was three Gentlemen more came down the Stairs into the Boat; one had a whitiſh Cloak, and the other a looſe Coat; and they brought a Leather Bag that would hold about a Peck; ſo I put off with them, and rowed down the River, and all that I heard them ſay, was when we came under the Temple; ſays one of the Gentlemen, when do you hear the King goes away? Says another of them, he goes away a Tueſday; and when we got through Bridge, one of the Gentlemen askt where the Veſſel lay, and a Man in the Stern ſaid on Southwark ſide, over againſt the Tower, and when we came a little below Battle-bridge near Pickle-Herring-Stairs, the Maſter ſaid, there lies the Veſſel, and it had a long Pendant and a top Sail looſe; ſo they paid me before they came on Board, and when they were got a Board, away rowed I; and when I came to land to take out my Sculls and things, there I miſt my Cloaths; and I rowed after them, thinking they could not be got far; but when I came to the place where they went on Board, the Veſſel was gone, and I rowed down as low as Lime-houſe-Reach, and in Black Hall-Reach I overtook a Veſſel, which I thought was the Veſſel. I askt them who they belonged to, and they ſaid they came from Horſeleydown, and I made anſwer I brought two Fares on Board a Veſſel at Pickle-herring-Stairs; and had forgot to take my Cloaths that they had; they made anſwer, I brought no Fare on Board them, ſo I rowed on farther beyond Barkinſhelf, and becauſe there was no Wind, I thought none could have gone beyond that Place, and therefore reſolved to row back again when it was Flood; and I rowed up to Greenwich, but could not meet with the Veſſel; and I heard nothing of my Cloaths, till laſt Friday was Seven-night I had my Cloaths brought to me.

Sir W. Williams. Can you ſay this Gentleman Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar was one of them that you carryed on Board the Smack?

Betſworth. No, I know never a one of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But you ſay the Perſons that you took in at Surrey-Stairs carried away your Cloaths with them?

Betſworth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then I ask you, Paſely, Is that one of the Perſons that he brought on Board your Smack?

Paſely. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How many came on Board the Smack?

Paſely. Four; My Lord Preſton, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, and my Lord Preſton's Man.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pendant?

Paſely. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did you take it in?

Paſely. As ſoon as we weighed Anchor.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How came you to take it in?

Paſely. Elliot ſpoke to me to take it in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they mention how many were to go in the Smack?

Paſely. He ſaid, they were three of them, not four, as I remember, that were to go.

Sir Wil. Williams. Will you ask him any thing Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. No, Sir: But I deſire the Woman may not go out of Court.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no; ſhe ſhall ſtay.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then call John Fiſher, and James Amonds. (Fiſher ſtood up.)

Sir W. Williams. Pray do you acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of this matter, whether you carried any things on Board the Smack, and what; and who came on Board, and what hapned.

Fiſher. My Lord, a matter of ſix Hours before they came on Board, my Maſter carryed me a Shoar, and brought me to Mr. Burdett's Houſe, and gave me a Trunk, and I went with it, and another Man with a Hamper, and brought them on Board; and about 11 or 12 a Clock, my Maſter comes and brings Mr. Aſhton and the other aboard; and he bid me go forward, and heave up the Anchor, and ſo I did, and we went down the River; but we could go but a little way becauſe there was no Wind; and when we came to Half-way tree, the Tide Turning, we were forced to caſt Anchor again, and ſtay till the Morning; and in the Morning we weighed Anchor again about 8 a Clock, and about 9 we came into Long-reach, where lay the George Man of War, and then Mr. Aſhton and they hid; and when we came below them again, they came up again till we came almoſt near the Block-Houſes at Graveſend, and there they hid again; and Mr. Aſhton I think came up afterwards, and bid me go down to the Hamper, and fetch them up ſome Victuals for their Dinner, and I went down and fetch'd up ſome Beef, and Mr. Aſhton took hold of it; and I took a Bottle of Wine or two out; and juſt before I brought all the Victuals up, the Barge was ſpied a coming to us; and then he went down again: And there they hid, and the piece of Beef was a top of them. Captain Billop, when he came near, waved his Hat, to bid us lie by; and we did lie by, till he came up to us; and when he came up to us, ſays he, Maſter, you have gotten a couple of good likely Men, worth the coming on Board for. Says the Maſter, I hope Captain, you wont preſs them. What have you to keep you clear. Says he, I have a Protection. Have you ſays the Captain? Let me ſee it. So he ſhew'd him the Protection, and he read both our Names in it. Then, ſays he, Maſter, I muſt look farther; and he went down to the Quarter Hatches, and took them up, juſt where they lay. Firſt my Lord came out; and he ſearcht them all, as they came out. Mr. Elliot came out next, and Mr. Aſhton ſtay'd within, being the laſt Man. And after he had ſearcht them, and done what he pleaſed; he got all the Papers and Writings: then he commanded us all to go into the Barge; and they came on Board the George Frigate in Long-Reach. And at the Ship, Mr. Elliot came to us; and bid us ſay, we were going for Flanders. And after we came to Whitehall, Mr. Aſhton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me ſay, we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that after they were taken, or before?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was the firſt time, that they would have you ſay, they were bound for Flanders?

Fiſher. It was on board the George Frigat in Long-Reach.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that bid you ſay ſo?

Fiſher. Mr. Ellyot and Mr. Aſhton both, in the Ship's Steerage, where they came to us.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Where was the next Place, that they bid you ſay ſo?

Fiſher.

Fiſher. At Whitehall Bridge Aſhton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me ſay ſo.

Juryman. Did he ſpeak that aloud, or ſoftly at Whitehall?

Fiſher. He whiſpered it in my Ear.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they ever ſay they were bound for Flanders, till after they were taken?

Fiſher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place was this that they hid in?

Fiſher. An ugly hole, where a Man has no room to lie along at eaſe; he can neither ſtand upright, nor ſet upright.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you ſee the Waterman that brought them on Board?

Fiſher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any Waterman's Coat left?

Fiſher. Yes, there was two.

L. C. J. Holt. But didſt thou ſee the Boat?

Fiſher. We were aſleep when they came on Board, and the Boat was put off aſſoon as ever they came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then aſſoon as ever they were on Board, you got up the Anchor, and pulled in the Pendant?

Fiſher. Yes. We immediately hove up the Anchor, and took in the Pendant.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did any Sculler hale you afterwards, as you were going down?

Fiſher. Yes, as we were going down there did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did you ſay to him?

Fiſher. I was not ſteering then: but this other Man made anſwer.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, Will you ask him any thing?

Mr. Aſhton. When I gave you the Half Crown that you ſpeak of, what did I ſay to you?

Fiſher. You bid me when I came to be examin'd, ſay we were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Aſhton. What did I ſay elſe?

Fiſher. You bid me take that half Crown for to Night, to help to bear my Charges, and to Morrow you would take farther care of us.

Mr. Aſhton. I told you you were Priſoners now, and I gave you that; and told you I would take farther care of you.

Fiſher. You did not ſay we were Priſoners, but you ſaid you gave me that to help bear Charges for that Night, and on the Morrow you would take farther care of us.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſet up James Amonds.

Sir W. Williams. Are you ſworn Friend?

Amonds. Yes, Sir.

Sir W. Williams. Then let the Court and the Jury know what you can ſay in this matter.

Amonds. My Lord, they came on Board about 11 or 12 a Clock at Night, I was aſleep in the Cabin, and heard a Boat coming aboard, and I turn'd out, and before I could get out of the Cabin, they were got aboard, and I ſee no Boat, nor nothing. So, ſays the Maſter, go forward and heave up the Anchor; and after we had heaved up the Anchor, I goes into the Ship to tow the Veſſel down, becauſe there was no Wind, and we would not let the Veſſel go foul on the Ships that were in the River, and a little after we came on Board again; and when I came on Board again, they were all on Board, all four. After that comes a Waterman, and I was at the Helm ſteering, and he called out to us: Oh hoe, ſays he; did not I bring a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board this Smack? Not as I know of, ſaid I. Says he, I caaryed a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board ſome Smack, that had a Pendant out, and I know not where it is; they carryed my Cloaths on Board with them. Said I, I know nothing of it, nor I did not; for I ſaw neither Waterman, nor Boat; ſo away the Waterman goes, and we went down the River, and when we came to Half-way Tree, we came to Anchor, and my Maſter went and laid himſelf down, the Tide being almoſt done, and there being no Wind, and Mr. Aſhton and they lay in the Cabin; and ſays Mr. Aſhton to me, take care of us now, and we will take care of you hereafter; ſays he, we ſhall help you to many a Freight, and many a Pound. Ay, ay, ſaid I, you will be taken care of to be ſure at Day break, or when the Day comes on; about 8 a Clock, we hove up the Anchor again, and fell down as low as Long-Reach, where the George Frigate lay; and when we came there, they went down to hide in the Quarter Hatches. I ſteered it down ſtill; and when we were got paſt that Man of War, the Hatches were taken up, and they came up again out of the Quarters, and ſate in the Cabin again, and we had a freſh Gale of Wind, and run down to Graveſend quickly, and when we came near the Block Houſes, ſaid I, we are almoſt at the Block Houſes; then ſaid they we will go down and hide a little; and ſo they did till they were paſt there, then reſolving to go to Dinner.

L. C. J. Holt. What time a day was this?

Amonds. About 11 a Clock, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, they did go down to hide then, did they?

Amonds. Yes, they did go down and hide, and came up again, I am ſure ſome of them; I heard ſome of them in the Cabin.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, what followed?

Amonds. After they were gotten up, and paſt Graveſend, this Man was ſent for Victuals for them, and ſo he fetch'd them ſome Roaſt Beef, and ſome other things; and juſt as the Roaſt Beef was going into the Cabin, ſaid I, Here comes a Barge off to preſs. So when I cried, the Barge was a coming, they took the Victuals down into the Quarters, and there lay they, and the Victuals a top of them. And when the Barge came near us, the Captain waved his Hat to command us to lie by. Said I, We muſt lie by, for the Barge is coming up to us And we clapp'd the Helm-a-lee, and lay by; and after we were laid by, the Barge came on Board us. Says the Captain of the Barge, You have got a couple of likely, good Men, Maſter, ſaid he. Ay, ſays the Maſter; but I hope you won't preſs them. Says the Captain, Have you got any thing to keep you clear? Yes, if it pleaſe you, noble Captain, I have got a Protection. I am ſorry for that, ſays he, and comes on Board, for he ſtaid all this time in the Barge; and ſmiling upon him, he comes on Board, and ſays he, Come, let's ſee your Protection. And the Maſter ſhew'd it him, and he read it. Says the Captain, I muſt look a little farther. And he goes into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there lay all theſe Gentlemen. They were ſomething longer a coming up than he would have them; ſo ſays the Captain to his Men in the Barge, Come on Board, and ſee who is here. And ſo ſome of his Men did come on Board; and, to the beſt of my remembrance, my Lord was the firſt Man that came up: And when my Lord came up, the Captain run his Hands into his Coat Pockets, to feel for Papers, as I ſuppoſe; and my Lord deſired the Captain to be kind, and take nothing away. Says he, I'll take nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for: And he pull'd out a Watch, and gave it him again. After that, Elliot came out; and whether he found any thing upon Mr. Elliot, or no, I cannot tell. Mr. Aſhton was the laſt that came up; and when he came up, a Waterman of the Captain's calls to him, and ſays, That Gentleman that came up laſt has put ſomething in his Boſom, but what I can't tell. So the Captain took Mr. Aſhton by the Arm, and turn'd him about; and, ſays he, What did you put in your Boſom? Says Mr. Aſhton, Nothing but my Handkerchief; and pull'd out his Handkerchief, and ſhew'd him. Then the Captain put his Hand in, and pull'd out Papers, with a piece of Lead tied to them. And that is all that I ſaw.

the

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But tell us what happen'd afterwards.

Amonds. When that was done, the Captain commanded us all into his Barge; and I row'd, and ſome of the reſt row'd, it being cold Weather, till we came up to London. After we came up to London, they did not ſay any thing to me, becauſe I was a rowing till then. It ſeems they did give them ſome Money, but they gave me none, not till I came into Whitehall; and then my Lord's Man came to me, and call'd me a one ſide; ſays he, Here's Half a Crown, will ſerve you to Night; and be ſure, when you come to be examined, that you ſay, you were bound for Flanders, and not for France, and you will be taken farther care of to Morrow.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of place is that Quarter-Hatches?

Amonds. They could neither ſit, nor ſtand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What did they lie upon?

Amonds. There were three or four ſlit Deals that were laid over the Ballaſt, but it ſeems they had ſhuffl'd 'em on the one ſide when they were taken, for the Ballaſt lay open.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Did the Waterman that brought theſe Men on Board you, leave his Coat there?

Amonds. I did not ſee the Boat, nor the Waterman; and therefore I am not able to ſay any thing about it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came the Pendant to be taken down?

Amonds. I can't tell that, I was in the Skiff when it was taken down.

Jury-man. My Lord, I do not well underſtand how the Papers came to be taken away from Mr. Aſhton.

L. C. J. Holt. He tells you, Mr. Aſhton was ſeen to put his Hand with ſomething into his Boſom; and being tax'd with it, he ſaid it was his Handkerchief; and the Captain put in his Hand, and pull'd out a Bundle of Papers.

Jury-man. Did he ſee Aſhton take away the Papers from any other place?

Amonds. No, an't pleaſe your Honour, I did not ſee them till they were taken out of his Boſom.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you ſee Captain Billop take the Papers from out Mr. Aſhton's Coat?

Amonds. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Where were they before they ſpy'd the Barge a coming?

Amonds. If it pleaſe your Honour, I heard 'em talk; I thought they had been up, but it ſeems there was but one of 'em up when they ſaid, the Barge was coming a-board: I was at the Helm, and heard 'em talk.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you knew nothing of theſe Papers, but when you ſaw 'em taken out of Aſhton's Boſom?

Amonds. No, my Lord.

Sir Wil. Williams. If you will ask him any thing, Mr. Aſhton, now you may.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Friend, had not I been up firſt, and ſearch'd before the Papers were taken?

Amonds. Not as I know of.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not I go down into the Hold to take my Hat, and call to you, and deſired that I might go down for my Hat?

Amonds. I can't tell; for when I ſaw the Papers taken from you, I was in the Stern; I was not down.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not I been ſearch'd firſt?

Amonds. Not that I know of, till you were in the Stern.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſwear Captain Billop.

Which was done, he ſtanding up by the Sheriff.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Captain, I ſuppoſe you may be heard from that place.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I deſire the Witneſs may come down, elſe I ſhall not be able to diſtinguiſh what he ſays: It is the proper place for him I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Let him come down.

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly deſire, my Lord, that the Witneſſes may all be obliged to ſtay in Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all ſtay.

Sir W. Williams. You are ſworn, Sir: Are you not?

Capt. Billop. Yes. I am.

Sir W. Williams. Then, pray, will you give an Account where you took theſe Perſons, how you took 'em, what you found, and how you diſpoſed of it.

Capt. Billop. Muſt I begin from the Beginning?

Sir W. Williams. Yes; Tell your whole Knowledge, in Order of Time, as it fell out.

Capt. Billop. What, from the Time I went out?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Make it as ſhort as you can.

Sir W Williams. Yes, you muſt tell all; for you ſpeak now to a new Jury, and here is another Priſoner at the Bar to be tried.

Capt. Billop. The laſt of December, about Two a Clock, or between One and Two, my Lord of Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the Houſe of Lords, and told me, his Father muſt ſpeak with me; and he carry'd me up to my Lord Linſey's Chamber; and in a little time my Lord Preſident came there, and told me, he heard there were divers Perſons that had Papers of dangerous Conſequence, and were going to France, and deſired me to uſe my Skill for my ſeizing and ſecuring of the Papers. I began then to talk of what was proper for ſuch an Undertaking; and I told my Lord, I thought the beſt way, was to go to Woolwich or Deptford, and to take a Man of War's Pinnace with us: Upon that, my Lord of Danby being by, ſaid, he knew of a Boat that he could have, which was my Lord Duke of Grafton's; and my Lady Dutcheſs had had lent it him, and he would go, and get it ready: Upon this my Lord Preſident ſaid, he would give me a Note of the Name of the Veſſel, and where ſhe went out; and likewiſe a Letter to another Perſon, that would inſtruct me farther, and ſhew me the Veſſel; accordingly my Lord Preſident gave me the Letter, and I went away to look for the Perſon, but could not find him. My Lord Danby came to Tower Wharf himſelf with the Boat; and I left a Man there to bring me word, when the Boat came up at the Place where I was; and Captain Stringer, and Sir Thomas Taylor came there to me. After my Lord of Danby had told me what I had in the Boat, I told him, I thought there were not Arms enough; and therefore it were beſt to go to the Tower, to borrow ſome Arms from thence: When we came to the Tower, my Lord Lucas was not come in; and when I had ſtaid a little time, he did come in: And when I had acquainted him with my buſineſs, he ſent for an Officer of the Guard, and there we borrowed ſome Arms, a Blunderbuſs of his and a Carbine, and the like; and about Eleven a Clock, or ſomewhat paſt, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It was calm, and we rowed down towards Graveſend; and we went aboard a Veſſel or two, but I was not willing to loſe much time, becauſe I was reſolved to take them before they were gotten too far: So we rowed away for Graveſend, where I refreſh'd my Men, and afterwards went down into the Hope; and I did judge that no Veſſel that came from London that Tide could be a-head of me. I went on board ſeveral Veſſels that lay in the River, in order unto the preſſing of Men; and I went on board all ſorts of Veſſels, becauſe I would give no Suſpicion of what I was about; and having been on board of ſeveral, I preſſed two or three Barkin Men; and one particularly, that knew all the Veſſels upon the River; and I made him to row very near to me, that I might talk to him; I had got the Names of a great many Smacks, and gave it out that I would preſs a Smack to carry for a Tender to my Ship, when the Fleet went out; and naming this Smack that I was to go ſearch, I told him, I heard ſuch a Smack ſailed well, and I had Thoughts of preſſing her; he told me, She was old; but ſaid I, She will ſerve a Summer well enough; and that is it I intend to preſs, if I can find her. Says he, I'll ſhew you her, I know her when I ſee her; ſo we went on board ſeveral Veſſels as we went along. And as we were rowing along before, we came to the Neſt Point by Tilbury Fort, we ſaw ſeveral Smacks coming down the River; and when we came about the Point, the headmoſt Smack of all, the Fellow lookt out, and ſaid, Yonder is the Thomas and Elizabeth. Then I called to one of my Men to wave, and bring them to lie by, which they did, and they lay by till I came on board. When I came on board, I ſaw two luſty Men ſtand by the Maſter; ſaid I, Maſter, you have got two good luſty Fellows that would ſerve the King; but I'll be kind and civil to you, I'll take but one. Says the Maſter, I hope not ſo; for I have a Protection; with that, I came on board, and took his Protection in my Hand, and read it As ſoon as I had read it, I ask'd him, if he had no more Men upon Deck than what I ſaw. He ſaid, No. Then, ſaid I, I muſt look a little farther And I went into the Quarters, and took up the Scuttle, and the Hatches, and I ſaw ſome Gentlemen lie. Oh, ſaid I, What a pretty Poſture is this? Where are we a going? Gentlemen, you muſt turn out The firſt that came to hand was my Lord Preſton; but I did not know him then, nor ſome time after I was in the Boat with him: So I took hold of him, and help'd him up; and when he was up, ſaid I, Sir, I muſt ſearch you. Says he, I hope you will take nothing from me. Nothing, ſaid I, but Papers: So I ſearch'd all his Pockets; and as I found any Papers, I put them into my own Coat Pocket. And I took his Watch, and pull'd it out, and gave it him again: After that I had ſearch'd him, came up Mr. Elliot the firſt Man, and the next was Mr. Aſhton, who crouded up while Elliot came up, in his Night Cap. I think, Mr. Aſhton, you had your Night-Cap on. So Mr. Aſhton goes down again, and puts on a Perriwig, I think; but coming up again, one of my Sea-men ſees him take ſomething and put it into his Boſom: He follows Mr. Aſhton quick, and pulls me by the Coat; and, ſays he, That Gentleman has got ſomething in his Boſom: So I took hold of him, and turned him round; ſaid I, Mr. Aſhton, what have you got in your Boſom? Nothing, ſays he but a Handkerchief; and immediately he put his Hand into his Boſom, and pluck'd out the Handkerchief, and ſhew'd me. As ſoon as he had pulled out the Handkerchief, I put my Hand into his Boſom, and there I met with the Pacquet that had the Lead affixed to't; and pulling it out, I clapp'd it into my own Pocket; for I thought that was the Matter of Moment that I was to ſecure. So I ordered them to go into the Boat, and the Maſter of the Veſſel to let go his Anchor; and two Men I left in the Veſſel, whom I ordered to ſearch and to ſecure what they found till farther Order; and I left two Muſquets with them. And after we were in the Boat, they deſired to have ſomething handed in, which I gave Order for, a Hamper, and a Night bag; and away we put off from the Veſſel, and rowed up; it was againſt Tide, and very cold Weather. In a little time Mr. Elliot called one of the Gentlemen, my Lord; then I whiſpered him, and ask'd him who that Lord was, and he told me, It was my Lord Preſton. Then I ſaluted my Lord; and my Lord was pleaſed to ſay, he was very well ſatisfied they were fallen into the Hands of a Civil Gentleman. So rowing up againſt Tide, and it being a Weſterly Wind, which blow'd very freſh, My Lord deſired that I would let them ſtop at Graveſend, till the Tide turned, that they might refreſh themſelves. I begged his Pardon, and ſaid, there was a Ship in Long Reach, the George Frigot, and we would ſtop there; and I did not doubt, but I could command the great Cabin for his Accommodation; and there he might have any thing that he wanted. My Lord ſeemed contented with it; but before we came on Board the Man of War, there happened a great deal of Diſcourſe betwixt us of ſeveral things.

Sir W. Williams. Pray repeat it, as well as you can remember, what Diſcourſe happened.

Capt Billop. Truly my Lord Preſton being cold, and the Hamper ſtanding by, ſays he, Captain Billop, we have not eaten, we will eat if you will. And there was a piece of Beef at the top of the Hamper, and Bottles of Wine; and I opened the Hamper, fitting faireſt for it, and handed out the Beef, the Bread, and the Bottles; and after we had eaten what we would, my Lord ordered the reſt to be given to the Men that were were the Boats Crew, and after we had done this, and taken out a Bottle or two, and ſhut up the Hamper again, my Lord Preſton drank to me once or twice, and ſeem'd very well ſatisfy'd and pleas'd with his Uſage. He told me he was ſenſible of my Civilities; and if ever it lay in his Power, he would not forget me. So we drank again, and talk'd again; but before we came to the Ship, my Lord Preſton told me, that if ever it lay in his Power, he would be ſure to make an acknowledgment of the Civility I had ſhew'd him. And to the beſt of my Memory, he had this Expreſſion, If there ever was any thing he could ſerve me in, he would do it with all his Heart, if I would but diſpoſe of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. What would Mr. Aſhton have had you done? What did he ſay to you?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton ſaid, it would do me no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen; and deſired me that I would throw the Packet over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he mean by ſo many Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. My Lord, I cannot tell, but that was his Expreſſion.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who deſired you to throw the Packet over board?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton did ſeveral times.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he ſay to you? What Arguments did he uſe?

Captain Billop. My Lord, it was ſo many times over, and ſo much mixture of Diſcourſe we had, that I am not able to tell the Particulars.

L. C. J. Holt. But what Arguments did he uſe?

Captain Billop. I don't know that he uſed any more great Arguments, more than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Holt. Say that again that you ſaid before.

Captain Billop. He ſaid, 'twould do me no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen. Prethee, Captain Billop, ſays he, throw it over board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he ſay farther?

Captain Billop. I'll tell you, if you'll give me leave. Mr. Aſhton did ſay, a little after this, with a great deal of Inſinuation, Captain Billop, What if you ſhould turn about, and go along with us? No, Mr. Aſhton, ſaid I, that I cannot do. Says Mr. Ellyot, Prethee, throw the Packet over-board. This they did as we came up the River; and 'tis the moſt that I can remember, till we came on board the George; and when we came on board the George, Ellyot called me into the Steerage, and deſired me, of all Love, that I would diſpoſe of the Packet: And he ſaid, that now I had an Opportunity to make my ſelf as rich, and as great as I would, and no body could ſee it, if I did throw it away. While I was in the Ship, Mr. Aſhton, my Lord, and Mr. Ellyot, were with me, in the Steerage. Said I, I ſhall be taken notice of, to be whiſpering; pray forbear. Aſhton then ſpoke to me again, to deſire me to throw the Packet over board; by this time the Victuals was handed in, and there we eat and drank, and my Lord ſmoked a Pipe of Tobacco, before the Tide turned; and when the Tide made, we went into the Boat again, and rowed up towards London, and they were uſing theſe ſorts of Arguments over and over again. And once Mr. Ellyot, I think 'twas, to the beſt of my remembrance, told me, Now you have it in your Power to make your Fortune, and may be as great a Man, and as rich a Man as you can deſire. And Mr. Aſhton ſaid ſome Words ſomething to the ſame purpoſe; Prethee, ſaid he, throw it over board: What good will it do you? So I refuſing of it, as I did many times, Mr. Ellyot told me, that I might take the Letters that were taken in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and tye the Lead to them, and throw the Packet over board. No, ſaid I, Mr. Ellyot, Sure, you would take the King's Council to be a very odd ſort of Men, that they cannot find out ſuch a thing as this. Prethee, dear Billop, ſaid he, throw it over board. Many times whiſpering me in the Ear; and ſo did Mr. Aſhton many times, ſaying, You may do us a great Kindneſs in it. And we drank, and had ſeveral Intermiſſions; and they at me again, and I denied them, and they deſiſted; and then they at it again: And Mr. Ellyot then told me, Prethee, dear Billop, throw it over board. Said I, Mr. Ellyot, If I ſhould be ſo great a Villain to do ſuch a thing, if ever it was your Day would you truſt me again? Put it to be your own Caſe. Says he, You have Gentlemen to deal withal. But, ſaid I, I will never put it into your Power. Mr Ellyot ſeem'd to be angry at this, and ſaid, Every Dog had his Day. Said I, I hope never to ſee it your day: But I pray, forbear this Diſcourſe; let me beg that of you; for I do not deſire to be provoked to uſe you otherwiſe than as Gentlemen. And after that, they never urged me more to throw the Packet over-board: But Mr. Ellyot was angry, and very much diſturbed, and wiſhed a Thunderbolt might ſtrike the Boat, and ſink it. So I brought them up, through London-Bridge, and they ſaid no more about the Packet; but Ellyot wiſhed, that London-Bridge might have fallen on our Heads. At length, I brought them to Whitehall; and I put my Man a-ſhore at Hungerford Stairs, that he might get before, and give the Porter notice at Whitehall-Bridge, that he might open the Gate. I brought my Lord Preſton, and the reſt, to the Bridge; and while I was arming my Men, to guard them up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, I ſuppoſe they then took the Opportunity to give the Men Money, getting near to them; I know nothing of that: But I carried them up to my Lord Nottingham's, and there I delivered them, and the Packet to my Lord. After ſome time, the Packet lay upon the Table, and my Lord Nottingham ſends me for my Lord Preſton. When my Lord Preſton came in, I withdrew without bidding, and the Packet lay upon the Table unopen'd: And when my Lord Preſton came out, I went in on my ſelf, and the Packet lay in the ſame Place and Poſture, and not opened. And I ſtay'd while Mr. Aſhton was call'd in, and my Lord Nottingham ask'd him a great many Queſtions.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray repeat thoſe Queſtions, Captain Billop; and what Anſwers I made.

Captain Billop. Truly, my Memory does not ſerve me to remember all of them, and I was in a very uneaſie Condition at that time, and would much rather have been in my Bed, than any where elſe: For the Night before I went down I had a Plaiſter of Spaniſh Flies put to my Back, and they had raiſed a great Bliſter, and it had not been dreſſed ſo long, that the Napkin that was applied ſtuck ſo to it, that the Fleſh was jagged, and I was in a great deal of Pain, ſo that I did not mind ſo much as I ſhould have done at another time, what was ſaid.

Mr. Aſhton. But pray, Captain, remember as much as you can what paſs'd.

Captain

Captain Billop. But I'll tell you what I remember; I remember my Lord Nottingham ask'd, who I took the Packet from? And you owned, I took it from you.

Sir Will. Williams. Pray Mr. Aſhton, give us leave to have done with him, and then you ſhall ask him what you pleaſe. Pray go on Captain Billop.

Captain Billop. Then my Lord Nottingham ſent for Mr. Ellyot in, and ask'd him whither he was going? And he ſaid for Flanders. My Lord asked him, what he was going there for? He ſaid, he was going to ſeek his Bread; he was turned out of all at home, and he had rather go abroad to ſeek his Bread, than ſtay at home to ſtarve.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was this the Lead, that you took fix'd to the Packet?

Captain Billop. Yes, Sir; that is the Lead.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take that Lead, with the Packet, out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom?

Captain Billop. This was tied faſt to the Packet that was taken out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom. Theſe honeſt Men ſaw me take it.

Sir Will. Williams. Now, if you have a mind to ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Captain Billop, did not you ſearch me before you took the Packet upon me?

Captain Billop. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not you taken ſome other Papers from me before?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; I took none from you but the Packet.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray recollect your ſelf, for perhaps my Life may turn upon it: You are as much a Witneſs for me, as for the King; you are to ſwear the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Captain Billop. And I will do you all the Juſtice I can, I will aſſure you.

L. C. J. Holt. Anſwer his Queſtion, Captain Billop.

Mr. Aſhton. Was not I the firſt Man that ſpoke to you after we came up?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Ellyot was the firſt Man that ſpoke to me, that I knew.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not I ask you to give me leave to go down for my Hat?

Captain Billop. Truly, I don't remember that.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not you reply, That the Man ſhould go down and fetch my Hat?

Captain Billop. 'Tis likely I might, but I don't remember it.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not you ſearch'd me then, and taken my Papers from me?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Aſhton; for, upon the Oath that I have taken, I took no Papers that I remember, but the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and the Packet that I took out of your Boſom; for my Lord Nottingham ask'd me, if that Packet was all the Letters I took? I told him, no; and ſhew'd him the Papers I took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and they prov'd to be of no Conſequence, and my Lord Nottingham gave them me again, and I carried them to my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not I go down into the Hole for my Hat?

Captain Billop. I believe you might.

Mr. Aſhton. And was it not after that, that you took the Papers out of my Breaſt?

Captain Billop. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Aſhton. Where is your Man that call'd to you, and ſaid, I put ſomething in my Breaſt?

Captain Billop. Here he is, by me, if you would ask him any thing.

Mr. Aſhton. You ſay, I ſpoke to you about diſpoſing of theſe Papers: Pray, from the Time that we came into your Boat, before we came on Board the George Man of War, did I ſpeak to you?

Captain Billop. Yes, of the Packet you did: You ſaid, What Good would it do me to injure ſo many Gentlemen?

Mr. Aſhton. There paſs'd no more than general Diſcourſe before we came on Board.

Captain Billop. Yes, Mr. Aſhton; I'll tell you another thing you put me in mind of. When you ſaw that, though you were ſo eager with me, nothing would prevail, you ſaid, I know Captain Billop, and have known him many Years; and nothing will prevail on him, if he have no mind to it: And I know, if he will ſerve us, he will ſerve us generouſly, and like a Gentleman.

Sir W. Williams. Speak that again.

Captain Billop. He ſaid, I know Captain Billop; if he will ſerve us, he will do it generouſly, and like a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Who ſaid ſo?

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton.

Mr. Aſhton. Did I ſpeak to you to diſpoſe of the Papers after we came from on board the Ship? I ſuppoſe you remember it was cold, and the Tilt was call'd for, to be lay'd over us, and I fell aſleep; and you know I never wak'd, nor ſpoke, till I came to London-Bridge.

Captain Billop. Yes, yes; we had the Tilt over us.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray ſpeak your Queſtions out, that we may hear 'em, Mr. Aſhton.

Captain Billop. Mr. Aſhton did go to ſleep a while, but he had many times urg'd me, and ſpoke to me to throw the Papers over-board.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that told you, Every Dog had his Day?

Captain Billop. That was Ellyot.

Sir W. Williams. Was there any Diſcourſe about Turning of the Tide?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ellyot ſaid, You have now an Opportunity to make your own Fortune, and you may be as great, and as rich as you pleaſe; for 'tis impoſſible the Tide can run long this way.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Aſhton ſay any thing about going along with them?

Captain Billop. Yes: You may remember, Mr. Aſhton, that you ſaid, Come, go along with us; you may do as well there, or better than you do here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did he tell you, where you were to go with 'em?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; nor I did not ask him the Queſtion.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, When did you give my Lord Nottingham theſe Papers?

Captain Billop. Do you mean that Bundle that I took out of your Boſom?

Mr. Aſhton. Yes.

Captain Billop. As ſoon as ever I follow'd my Lord Nottingham into his Room, I pull'd 'em out, and gave 'em him.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not you go out of my Lord Nottingham's Room, and give my Lord Nottingham ſome looſe Papers?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Aſhton. After this, Was not my Lord Preſton call'd in to be examin'd?

Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Aſhton. How long was my Lord Preſton in the Room, while you were out?

Capt. Billop. I can't tell very well.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Sir, anſwer that Queſtion.

Capt. Billop. I believe it might be half a quarter of an Hour: I do not think it was much more.

Mr. Aſhton. I believe you muſt remember ſome ſort of Diſcourſe that was betwixt you and Captain Ellyot, even to a Quarrel almoſt. And did you not ſpeak to my Lord Nottingham's Servants, to fetch your Hat out of my Lord Nottingham's Room.

Captain Billop. Yes, I do remember that.

Mr. Aſhton. This muſt be a good conſiderable Time: It was all the time that my Lord Preſton was within with my Lord Nottingham, that you were out?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Aſhton. And all that while was not the Bundle of Papers out of your ſight?

Captain Billop. It lay upon the Table.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, anſwer my Queſtion: Was it not out of your ſight?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes; it muſt be, for he was out of the Room.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came into the Room, did you find the Papers in the ſame Condition?

Captain Billop. Yes, they were unopen'd, except that my Lord had taken off the Lead and a little Paper fell looſe from the reſt.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, take notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. But pray don't infer more from thence than it will bear.

Mr. Aſhton. It ſeems ſome of the Papers were taken out.

L. C. J. Holt. He does not ſay any ſuch Thing, that ſome of the Papers were taken out.

Mr. Aſhton. He ſays, ſomething was cut, and ſome Papers fell out.

Captain Billop. There was a little Paper or two tyed to the great Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of them?

Captain Billop. They were cut looſe, but not opened.

Mr. Aſhton. How can you tell they were not opened?

Captain Billop. Becauſe I ſtood by when they were cut.

Mr. Aſhton. But how can you tell that; for you ſee the little Papers taken, and they were looſe from the others?

Captain Billop. They were taken from the great Bundle before I went out.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not my Lord opened thoſe Papers before you came in?

Captain Billop. No.

Mr. Aſhton. How can you tell that?

Captain Billop. I tell you, as near as I can judge, they lay in the ſame Poſture that I left them in.

Mr. Aſhton. Was the Pacquet ſealed when you took it?

Captain Billop. No; but it was tyed. There were ſeveral Letters in it that were ſealed; it was tyed up very hard.

Mr. Aſhton. I do not Queſtion but my Lord Nottingham will do me the Juſtice to ſay how long he was in the Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You muſt not Comment, nor make your Obſervations till your proper time.

Jury-man. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may be asked who was with my Lord Nottingham when my Lord Preſton was there.

Captain Billop. There was no Body elſe then.

Jury-man. Then 'tis not probable they were altered before Captain Billop came in.

Mr. Aſhton. But I hope Probabilities ſhall not be Evidence to condemn any Man.

Jury man. Thoſe two little Papers you ſpeak of, were they ſevered from the Pacquet?

Captain Billop. I cannot tell whether they were or no; they ſeemed looſe upon untying the Bundle.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they cut in your preſence?

Captain Billop. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot ſay that I did ſee them cut.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray take notice of that, Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. They are Twelve honeſt Gentlemen, they will do you right.

L. C. J. Pollexfex. Obſerve what the Witneſs ſays; he ſays, That he does not remember that they were cut in his preſence, but he does not ſay, they were not.

Mr. Aſhton. If he does not ſwear they were, it is reaſonable to conclude they were not cut in his preſence.

L. C. J. Holt. He ſays, the great Pacquet was not opened, the two little Papers were looſe from the reſt of the great Bundle.

Captain Billop. There might be two or three of them, leſs or more, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You will be further ſatisfied in this Matter upon my Lord Nottingham's Evidence, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We have done with Captain Billop for the preſent. Pray call Johnſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Sir W. Williams. Were you at the taking of that Gentleman, and the others in the Smack?

Johnſon. Yes, I was.

Sir W. Williams. Then pray give an Account of the Matter how it was.

Johnſon. We went down in a Pleaſure Boat and went to the Tower, we ſet through Bridge againſt Tyde, my Lord of Danby was with us; and when we came to Tower Wharf there they went to the Tower for Arms, and we ſtayed till Ebbing Water, and Rowed to Graveſend; and when we came to Graveſend we went on board ſeveral Ships, and I thought we were going a Preſſing; and we ſtayed at Graveſend the time of the writing of a Letter, and then we went both into the Boat again, and rowed after a Smack that had gained of us, but that not being the Smack, we turned back again, and then it was high Water: And when we came to the upper-end of the Hope we ſaw ſeveral Smacks coming, and there was a Fiſher-man on board that ſaid, that was the Smack the Captain enquired after, that was coming down there; and when they came on board, the Captain ſaid there were two or three brave Men, and he hoped he could ſpare one of them; and the Maſter ſaid he hoped he would take none of them becauſe they had a Protection, which he ſhewed to the Captain. Then the Captain went in and bid me take ſome ſmall Arms and go on board with him, and told the Maſter he muſt look a little further; and the Boards were taken up, and I ſaw a great piece of Roaſt-Beef, and under that my Lord Preſton, and Mr. Ellyot, and this Gentleman Mr. Aſhton:

My

My Lord Preſton came up firſt, and Mr. Ellyot next to him; and I ſee this Gentleman take up ſomething and put it into his Boſom, and I told the Captain of it, and he asked him what it was, and he ſaid nothing but his Handkerchief, and plucked out the Handkerchief; but the Captain put his Hand into the Boſom and pulled out ſomething elſe.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Johnſon. It was a parcel of Papers tied up with a piece of Lead tied to it, for I came up cloſe after him and ſee him take it up.

Sir W. Williams. What elſe were there found with the Papers, was not there ſome Seals?

Johnſon. That was afterwards; but when the Captain asked him what he had gotten in his Boſom, he pulled out his Handkerchief, and ſaid nothing but his Handkerchief; but the Captain took the other Papers out of his Boſom and ſo I went down and there were the two Seals, and I took them up; and when I came up, Ellyot had a pair of black Whiskers on, and he borrowed a pair of Sciſſers and cut them off, and ſaid he ſhould remember me again if ever he lived, he ſhould know me by my Tooth being out. And coming up into Long-reach, Ellyot was a cold, and got to the Oar and Rowed, and ſaid you row as if you were rowing to Priſon; and he wiſhed that a Thunder-bolt might drop into the Boat, and that London-Bridge might drop down upon his Head. And when we came up to Whitehall I ſtood a Guard over them.

Jury-man. Did you ſee Captain Billop take the Packet of Letters from that Gentleman's Breaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, I did.

Jury man. Did you belong to Captain Billop?

Johnſon. Yes, I was one of the Boats Crew.

Mr. Aſhton. Had not I been up and ſearched before?

Johnſon. Yes, I think you had been up before.

Mr. Aſhton. And then you ſaw me take up the Pacquet off from the Ballaſt?

Johnſon. Yes, I ſaw you take it out of the Ballaſt and put it into your Boſom.

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, I hope, you will be pleaſed to take notice of that.

L. C. J. Holt. No doubt of it they will.

Mr. Aſhton. Did not that bundle of Papers that was taken out of my Breaſt, did not they lie near to the place where the Seals lay?

Johnſon. Yes, it lay juſt by them.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray ſet up Captain Billop again. (Which was done.)

When you brought theſe Papers to Whitehall, Captain Billop, who did you deliver them to?

Captain Billop. To my Lord Nottingham.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. After he received them, what did he with them?

Captain Billop. After he had examined all theſe Gentlemen, he went to opening of the Papers, and he deſired me to ſtay in the Room till they were opened, which I did; and my Lord looking on ſome of the Papers ſaid, if this Pacquet had gone we had quickly been viſited by the French. With that I took them up, and lookt into them. My Lord ſaid, I might look into as many Papers as I pleaſed; but I was very uneaſy and full of Pain, and had more mind to be gone, and be a Bed, than a looking into Papers; but ſeveral of the Papers I did look into, and ſeveral I put my Mark upon; and the next day at the Council, what of them I did know, I did put my Mark upon.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. After my Lord Nottingham had peruſed them, what did he do with them?

Captain Billop. My Lord put them up in a Cover, and tyed them with a Piece of Twine and put his Seal upon them, and gave them me, and deſired me to carry them to my Lord Preſident; which I immediately did, and without ſtopping carried them to my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Aſhton. When was this, Sir? Was it that very Night that we were brought to Whitehall?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we muſt deſire my Lord Nottingham to be ſworn.

The Earl of Nottingham Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give the Court an Account how theſe Papers came to your Lordſhip, and how your Lordſhip diſpoſed of them.

Earl of Nottingham. Captain Billop came to my Office——

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to ſpeak louder; for I cannot hear your Lordſhip, and I fear the Jury cannot.

Earl of Nottingham. I ſpeak as loud as ever I can, but I have a great Cold.

L. C. J. Holt. You may hear my Lord very well, if the Court be but ſilent.

E. Nottingham. Captain Billop brought to me a Pacquet tyed about with a Packthread, to which there was a Piece of a Leaden Pipe fixed, in which Pacquet there was ſtuck in another Paper, I think there was but that one beſides the Cover but what it was particularly I do not remember, this Pacquet was laid upon the Table while he was by; and I called in my Lord Preſton, not being willing to make him ſtay, and after I had ſome Diſcourſe with my Lord to examine him what account he could give of theſe Proceedings; then I called in your ſelf Mr. Aſhton, and Captain Billop was by alſo, but the Pacquet ſo tyed with the Packthread I cut open in Billop's preſence with a Pair of Sciſſers; the ſame Papers that were in that Pacquet, together with the little Paper that was ſtuck in, I tyed up, I am ſure I ſealed them in a Sheet of Paper, and gave them back again to Captain Billop to carry them to my Lord Preſident.

Sir W. Williams. Captain Billop, you have already declared that all you received from my Lord Nottingham you carried to my Lord Preſident.

Captain Billop. All the Papers that I received from my Lord Nottingham, juſt as I received them ſealed with my Lord's Seal, I went directly to my Lord Preſidents, and gave them him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray, my Lord, did your Lordſhip deliver to Captain Billop all the Papers that you received from him?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all the Papers that Captain Billop brought to me that were in the Pacquet (for he brought ſome Letters that he took out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket that were of no Conſequence) but all the Papers that were in the Pacquet I delivered back to Captain Billop ſealed as I received from him, and no more and no others; for the other Letters, they being from my Lord Preſton's Children, and not relating to the Publick, I gave them to him to give my Lord Preſton again.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to tell the Court how long my Lord Preſton was with your Lordſhip in the Room.

E. Nott. Truly I am not able to tell you particularly how long it was, I believe it might be about a quarter of an Hour, or ſcarce ſo much.

Juryman. Was there no body with your Lordſhip, when Capt. Billop was out, but only my Lord Preſton?

E. Nott. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have one Favour more to beg your Lordſhip, I humbly pray your Lordſhip will pleaſe to tell the Court and Jury what Anſwer I gave to your Lordſhip, when you asked me how I came by thoſe Papers.

E. Nott. As near as I remember the Account that you gave of them was, That you went down again after you were come up, as you ſaid, to fetch your Hat; and that when you did go down into the little Hole to fetch your Hat, you brought up theſe Papers with you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, this was the Account I did give. Now this very well correſponds with that Man's Evidence, that ſays he ſaw me take up the Papers and put them into my Breaſt.

L. C. J. Holt. He does ſay ſo, and this does all very well agree.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we deſire my Lord Preſident would be pleaſed to be Sworn.

The Lord Preſident ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, will your Lordſhip pleaſe to declare to the Court what Papers Capt. Billop brought to your Lordſhip, and how your Lordſhip diſpoſed of them.

L. Preſident. Captain Billop did bring me a Pacquet tied with a Packthread, and that was ſealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal, I knew it to be his Seal; and he told me that my Lord Nottingham commanded him to bring the Pacquet to me. I opened the Pacquet, and peruſed all the Papers; it was very late and I locked them up till Morning, and I then carried thoſe very Papers to the King, and in the King's Cloſet, at Kenſington, the King read ſome of them, and in my ſight, for I never parted from the King, but was by all the while: The King put up all the Papers again, and commanded me to call a Cabinet Council, and to let them be delivered there to the Council; accordingly I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked there by my Lord Sydney, who is here preſent; and they were then delivered into the Hands of my Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you pleaſe to ask my Lord any Queſtions, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, if your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to pardon me, I would ask your Lordſhip, Did any of your Lordſhip's Servants, or Family read any of theſe Letters?

L. Preſident. No, not one.

Mr. Aſhton. Were they locked up where any of your Lordſhips Secretaries, or Servants could come to them?

L. Preſident. No, I lockt them up in a ſtrong Box in my Cloſet.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I only deſire this Favour further of your Lordſhip. Your Lordſhip at the Committee of the Council was pleaſed to ask me, how I came by thoſe Papers; I preſume you may remember, and I pray your Lordſhip to declare, what anſwer I gave.

L. Preſident. Truly Mr. Aſhton, to tell you Truth, I do not remember the Particulars, I remember you denied every Thing; I can only ſay that in the general, but what you ſaid in particular I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you put my Lord in mind, if you can; See whether he does remember it.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I only deſire to ask my Lord Preſident, whether I did not tell him I went down after I had been ſearcht into the Hold, and there I ſee the Papers lye, and brought them up, and put them into my Breaſt; they were no ſooner in my Hands but Capt Billop had them in his; for the Man called and ſaid, This Gentleman has ſomething in his Breaſt, and the Captain put in his Hand and pulled it out.

L. Preſident. Truly, Mr. Aſhton, I do not remember the Words that you uſed, but remember you ſaid ſomething to which I made anſwer, What makes it matter, They were found upon you, and taken out of your Boſom, do you look to it how you came by them. I do not remember what you ſaid, for I cannot remember particular Words, but I believe you might ſay ſome ſuch Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, pray my Lord Sydney, will you be pleaſed to be Sworn.

The Lord Sydney Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to declare what Papers you received from my Lord Preſident?

L. Sydney. At the Cabinet Council my Lord Preſident delivered a Pacquet of Papers, I received them every one there, and markt them, and put them into my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did your Lordſhip deliver them to any Perſon afterwards?

L. Sydney. The next Day, or the Day after, I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to Copy out, and he delivered them back to me again.

Mr. Sol Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ask this Queſtion ——

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Your Lordſhip had markt them before you delivered them to Mr. Bridgman to Copy?

L. Sydney. Yes, I markt them at the Council Table, at my Lord Nottingham's Office.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, thoſe Papers that you markt were the ſame Papers that my Lord Preſident brought, and delivered in at the Council?

L. Sydney. Yes, the very ſame.

Juryman. My Lord, ſhall we have leave to aks my Lord Sydney a Queſtion?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; What is it?

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, did the Pacquet come to you Sealed? That which was taken from this Gentleman, was it Sealed when it came to you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, it had been opened by my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Preſident.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, you are under a Miſapprehenſion of the Matter. My Lord Nottingham after he had opened them ſealed them up again, and delivered them to Capt. Billop; Capt. Billop carried them ſealed to my Lord Preſident, my Lord Preſident opens them and lays them up, they were never out of his Poſſeſſion, he carries them to the King, the King read ſome of them in his Lordſhip's preſence, he delivers them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sydney, and my Lord Sydney ſwears he read them there, markt them, and, when he had done, put them in his Pocket.

Mr

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to look upon theſe Papers, and ſee if theſe be part of them.

L. Sydney. I know them very well, I have read them Ten times, I markt them at the Council, and that is my Mark.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, are thoſe two Papers that you have in your Hand, Two of thoſe Papers that my Lord Preſident delivered at the Cabinet?

L. Sydney. Yes, that they are.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Preſident, will you pleaſe to look upon them?

(Which his Lordſhip did)

L. Preſident. Theſe are Two of the ſame Papers that Capt. Billop brought me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we ſhall deſire to have them read, but give me leave to obſerve to you, That one of them is a Copy of the other; only in the one ſome Words are written ſhort, that are written out at length in the other.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to ask, are they of the ſame Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are of different Hands.

Mr. Serj. Thomſon. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take notice, and obſerve theſe Papers, for there is a great deal of Matter of great Moment in them; for you cannot expect the King's Council ſhould repeat every Thing that is in ſo many Papers as we ſhall read; it is impoſſible we ſhould take notice of all.

L. C. J. Holt. Or I either; therefore pray, Gentlemen, obſerve what is read, for I ſhall be able only juſt to ſtate the Evidence to you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I hear them ſay one of thoſe Papers is a Copy of the other; I deſire the Original may be read, and not the Copy.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Who knows which is the Original?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, we don't know which is the Original, or which is the Copy, they are both found together, they contain the ſame Matter and the ſame Words: It may be you can tell which is the Original.

Mr. Serj Thompſon. You may look upon them your ſelf, and tell us which is the Original if you pleaſe.

Mr. Aſhton. That is very well obſerved, Sir. That is throwing Water upon a dead Mouſe. Then I deſire both of them may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, Mr. Aſhton, I think there is a particular Reaſon why you ſhould not deſire to have the Copy read, becauſe leaſt it ſhould prove to be your own Hand Writing.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray let both be read.

Cl. of Peace Reads. The reſult of a Conference——

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray attend, for this is the Scheme of the whole Work.

Cl. of Peace Reads. The reſult of a Conference, &c.

And the other was likewiſe read as before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray let Mr. Aſhton ſee that Paper.

The Paper was handed to Mr. Aſhton, being one of the Papers before read.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, look upon that ſame Paper a little, ſatisfy your own Mind a little whoſe Hand that Paper is in. Look upon it well, I would have you be ſatisfied about it. Look particularly upon the latter part of it.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I have look'd upon it, I have ſeen it all.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Come then, give it me back again, and think of it a little in your own Heart.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, pray, will your Lordſhip look upon this Paper.

L. Sydney. This is one of the Papers that was among the reſt, delivered by my Lord Preſident at the Cabinet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſhew it my Lord Preſident; What ſays your Lordſhip to it?

L. Preſident. This was one of the Papers I gave my Lord Sydney, and was brought to me in the Pacquet by Captain Billop.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King would return with a Deſign of making an entire Conqueſt of his People——

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Pray, my Lord, give me leave, before it be read, to acquaint the Jury what this is, that they may make the better Obſervations upon it. This, Gentlemen, is the Heads of a Declaration that was intended to be Publiſhed when the French came; and you will ſee what it is when it is read. Pray obſerve it.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King will return, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj Tremain. The next Paper is an Account which they had taken with them of the Force of the Kingdom, of the Ships, particularly how many in Number, what Rates, what were in Repair, what out of Repair, and what a Building. Pray ſhew it my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. This is another of the Papers that I received from my Lord Preſident, and markt at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then ſhew it my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. This is one of the Papers that were in the Pacquet, that Captain Billop brought me. Clerk of the Peace reads.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Sydney, look upon theſe Papers, and tell where your Lordſhip had them.

The Papers were Shewn both to the Lord Preſident and the Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſident ſays he received them from Captain Billop, and gave them to my Lord Sydney; and my Lord Sydney ſays they are the ſame he received from my Lord Preſident.

Juryman. Are thoſe the Papers that have been read, my Lord?

Mr. J. Eyres. No, but they both ſay the ſame as to thoſe that have been read.

Juryman. Then pray, my Lord, What are thoſe Papers that are going to be read?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Theſe are Two Letters, Gentlemen, that are written, giving an account how the Affairs in England ſtood, with reference to the Perſons Concerns that they are written to; and there is a particular Paſſage in one of them, How their young Maſter prevailed in his Intereſt, and got ground of his Adverſaries. If you obſerve them, you will eaſily underſtand what is meant by them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Redding, New-years Eve. Though the Bearer of this, &c. As before.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding. As it is impoſſible for me to expreſs, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we deſire my Lord Sydney and my Lord Preſident would look upon theſe Papers.

Jury-

Juryman. My Lord, I deſire the former part of that laſt Letter may be read again.

Which was done.

L. Sydney. Theſe I had from my Lord Preſident.

L. Preſident. And I had them out of the Pacquet that Capt. Billop brought me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordſhip pleaſe I will open them to the Jury. Here are two Letters in one of them there is an Account given that they were heartily ſorry they were diſappointed, and that they had not been here already, but hoped they will be here as faſt as they can; that the Match was concluded, the Settlement prepared, and no doubt but the Daughters Portion would be well Secured, if they would come quickly.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. 1690. 'Tis directed for Mrs. Charlton. I muſt not let this Bearer depart Madam, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj Tremain. That Letter tells you that the Daughters Portion would be well Secured; this that we now produce will tell you, how it ſhall be Raiſed. It ſays, the old Tenants are weary of their Maſter, and a little Matter if he would but appear in Weſtminſter Hall, would redeem the Eſtate; and the Cauſe might be brought to a final hearing before the end of Eaſter Term, if they made haſte, and it were well Sollicited.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Jackſon. Dec. 31. 1690. The Bearer hereof will give you, &c. As before

Mr. Sol. Gen. We muſt deſire my Lord Preſident and my Lord Sydney would be pleaſed to look upon theſe Papers.

L. Preſident. I received theſe from Capt. Billop in the Pacquet, and gave it to my Lord Sydney

L. Sydney. Theſe are ſome of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Letters we now produce to be read ſeem to be written by a Man that was involved in a great Trade, that had great Projects in his Head, and drawn many Schemes in his own Brain how to carry on the Trade, he directs what ſort of Wares he would have ſent, what was proper for their Markets, that he had got many a new Cuſtomer, and hoped they ſhould not be diſobliged; that all muſt be ſent before the Firſt of March, at leaſt before the Tenth, or the whole Summer Profits would be loſt.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec ——

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Superſcription firſt.

Cl. of the Peace. There is no Superſcription, my Lord, at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, read on.

Clerk of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. The Interruption of the former Correſpondence had a very ill Effect many ways, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Gentlemen, doubting that that Letter might not be preſſing enough, here is another to the ſame effect.

Cl. of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. It is a Preſumption incident to thoſe that are any ways upon the Spot, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. One would imagine this Letter were written by ſome Perſon that uſed to talk Cant, that he is ſo ready at it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Preſident, what ſays your Lordſhip to theſe Papers?

L. Preſident. Theſe Two Letters were in the Bundle that Capt. Billop delivered to me, and I delivered them to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. Theſe are ſome of the Papers I had from my Lord Preſident, at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That firſt of theſe Papers is a Letter wherein the Party gives an Account of his own Condition here, and how he would venture to bring about what was deſired.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. 1690. Was my Condition more deſperate and uneaſie than it is, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This little Paper was incloſed in the other.

Clerk of the Peace reads. I beg, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now ſhew this Paper to my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Sydney.

Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preſident, and my Lord Sydney, ſwear the ſame for this Paper, as for the reſt.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper ſhews they were going about a Deed that they did not deſire to have known; 'tis a Key how to explain their Meaning.

Cl. of the Peace reads. For Mrs. Anne Ruſſel, &c. As before.

Then three other Papers were ſhewn to and ſworn by the Lord Preſident, and the Lord Sydney, to be part of the ſame Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Papers that we are going to read are theſe. Gentlemen, here is a Letter of Recommendation in behalf of one Mr. Orbinet, which is a Name they pretended of ſome Perſon that was at Paris, or to go there, and 'tis written by one Mr. Dellivere to his Correſpondent there, and he tells him, the Bearer had ſomething to diſcloſe to him, and that he might have an entire Confidence in him: But the Letter of Recommendation alone, without a Sum of Money, they reckoned would meet with a bad Welcome in France, and therefore they take 500*l.* with them, and here are Two Bills to pay it.

Then Mr. Humphrey Levermere was ſworn to interpret them, being in French, (which he did) and read them as in the former Tryal.

Juryman. Were theſe Bills found in that Pacquet?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, Yes; they are ſworn to by both thoſe Lords.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, pray my Lord, will you pleaſe to look upon theſe Papers.

The Lord Preſident, and Lord Sydney both teſtified, That thoſe were part of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. This next Paper that we give in Evidence is very ſhort. It ſeems to be a Table for the Memory of the Perſon that was to carry it; They are ſhort Heads for the Memory, conſiſting of a great many Particulars; You will make your Obſervations upon them, and what Judgment you think fit of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, I deſire to take Notice of theſe Papers that we are now going to read; you will obſerve theſe Things in them, which are worth your remarking, Gentlemen; becauſe theſe Papers that we now read to you are of themſelves ſufficient to prove every Article in the Indictment: For theſe Papers give an Account of the Ships, their Number and Force, the Forts of the Kingdom, how they are Manned, how they may be Surprized, where the French Fleet ſhould Fight, where they ſhould Aſſault us, how they ſhould hinder the Dutch and Engliſh Fleets from Joyning, what Number of Soldiers would be ſufficient, and what Number of Ships in Newcaſtle to plague the City of London, don, how to manage this whole Affair; and it gives Characters of the Clergy of England, and particularly of the City of London, and ſays, they are the worſt of Men.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. No Brother, 'tis the worſt of all the Clergy.

L. C. J. Holt. Come read them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Lady D. 2000 l. &c. As before.

The Jury deſired to ſee the laſt Papers, and had them delivered to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we reſt it here, to ſee what the Priſoner will ſay to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, the King's Council have done their Evidence for the King, what have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly deſire to know of your Lordſhip, whether all the Letters are read, that were read at the Tryal of my Lord Preſton?

L. C. J. Holt. What is that material to you, whether they be or not?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I am informed that there were ſeveral Letters, that particularly name my Lord, implying him to be the Bearer, and I deſire thoſe Letters may be read.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. With all my heart, if you do deſire it, it ſhall be read, we do not think it material.

Mr. Aſhton. I do deſire it, it will be plain, I believe, from hence, that I could know nothing at all of this matter; and if your Lordſhip pleaſe, my Lord, to obſerve it, three or four of theſe laſt Papers, as Mr. Serj Tremain obſerved, were the Ground-work of all this Buſineſs, which refers to Portſmouth and South Sea, and ſome other Papers; theſe I think, with Submiſſion, were proved to be the Hand of another Gentleman, and I deſire it may be proved again to the Jury, by which I think it will be plain, that they do not affect me.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, it is not proved to be your Hand, nor pretended to be ſo.

Mr. Aſhton. But poſitively proved to be another's Hand, as I am informed, and 'tis that which Mr. Serj. Tremain obſerved was the Ground-work for carrying on the whole Deſign, I preſume the Witneſſes are in Court that proved it then, and I hope your Lordſhip will be ſo kind as to let it be proved now; they did prove it to be another Perſons Hand upon a Tryal not long ago.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a mind to call any Witneſſes to prove the Papers to be another's Hand, you may call them.

Mr. Aſhton. I hope the King's Witneſſes are now in Court that did prove them to be his Hand Writing, and they'll prove it now I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a mind, you may call them, they have not a mind to produce them for the King.

Mr. Aſhton. I know not where they are my Lord. Pray Mr. Aaron Smith, be you ſo kind as to call them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You ſhould have ſent and Subpœna'd them to be here.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Warr is there, my Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd the Queſtion; and I believe Mr. Blane is in the Court, pray let him be ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Warr, you are called by the Priſoner, as a Witneſs, to prove my Lord Preſton's Hand.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Warr, Mr. Townſend and Mr. Blane, I deſire may be all ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, you have inſiſted upon it, that theſe Papers were my Lord Preſton's own Writing.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do inſiſt upon it, to know whether they were not proved to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, they were ſo, 'tis agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We do grant the King's Witneſſes proved, that they did believe them to be my Lord Preſton's Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Council do admit, that theſe three laſt Papers were not your Hand, but they admit them to be my Lord Preſton's Hand, and 'tis very well done of them to admit it; ſo that now it is to be taken for granted, that thoſe three laſt Papers were my Lord Preſton's Hand.

Mr. Aſhton. Then my Lord, I deſire the Subſtance of thoſe Papers may be the more preſs'd upon the Jury, becauſe Mr. Serj. Tremain obſerved that the whole Deſign in the Scheme of it lay in thoſe Papers, and they are not my Hand, but anothers; and for what is in them, I know nothing, nor am concern'd.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you farther to ſay, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You mentioned another Letter which you did deſire ſhould be read.

Mr. Aſhton. Ay; two or three where my Lord is nam'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the Letter I ſuppoſe you mean, the Clerk ſhall read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Sir, I vow to you, I do not repine at having loſt all for your ſake, &c. (as before)

Mr. Aſhton. Gentlemen, I hope you will obſerve, in that Letter my Lord is called the Bearer; and it tells that he brings Papers with him, by which it is plain, that you cannot imagine I could know any thing of theſe Papers. And Gentlemen, it has not appeared by any Evidence that has been given, that I knew any thing more, than that they were unfortunately found upon me: But with Submiſſion, I believe there is another Letter, if I am inform'd right, wherein my Lord is named, and called, my Lord the Bearer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, I do aſſure you now, we have to my Obſervation, read every Letter, and every Paper, that was read on Saturday.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Sollicitor, I am ſatisfied, for I am confident you would not affirm it if it were otherwiſe.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. There is not any Letter that ſays my Lord the Bearer, but my Lord will give you an account, ſo and ſo; the Bearer will tell you theſe and theſe things; will you have it read again? You ſhall if you will.

Mr. Aſhton. I am unwilling to take up your Lordſhip's time, unleſs the Jury deſire to have it read again.

Jury man. Pray my Lord, when that Letter was read on Saturday, how was it conſtrued by the Court? How did they take it then?

L. C. J. Holt. We did take it then, becauſe my Lord was mentioned, that he might poſſibly be the Bearer.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is very probable, and ſo it was underſtood then, that the Lord mentioned in the Letters was my Lord Preſton, and ſo that my Lord was the Bearer that could give an account of the Counteſſes Condition; and in the beginning of thoſe Papers that are of my Lord's Hand, there is mentioned ſo much Money for the Lady D——which is my Lady Dorſet I ſuppoſe, that is there meant, and that writ that Letter.

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lady Dorcheſter.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Dorcheſter I cry your mercy; and it is probable the ſame reaſon is a reaſon ſtill to make it believed that my Lord Preſton was meant.

Mr. Aſhton. I think my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to obſerve, as I have been informed, in giving his Charge to the Jury, that theſe Papers, ſome of them naming my Lord, muſt be meant of my Lord Preſton, there being no other Lord but he; and he likewiſe gave another reaſon, ſays he, they lay by my Lord's Seals that were produced, and therefore it was plain, they could not be Aſhton's nor Elliot's.

L. C. J. Holt. No not ſo, but my Lord might be concern'd, becauſe my Lord's Seals were there where the Papers were found.

Mr. Aſhton. I am wrong inform'd if thoſe were not the words my Lord Chief Juſtice Pollexfen uſed.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What do you ſay were the words? if you will repeat them, I'll tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Aſhton. Your Lordſhip ſeem'd to infer, that my Lord being nam'd, and the Bearer in the ſame Paper, that of Conſequence that muſt be my Lord Preſton, and the Papers muſt be his; and you did give another reaſon for it, to enforce it, that the ſame Man that ſaw me take them up, ſaw them lye by the Seals, which were proved to be my Lord Preſton's, from whence your Lordſhip did ſay, it is plain they were my Lord Preſton's, and that Aſhton or Ellyot could not be concerned in them.

L. C. J. Holt. You miſtake that matter, ſure there was not any ſuch word ſaid, for that Evidence that tended to convict my Lord Preſton, did by no means tend to acquit you; the queſtion then was, how far my Lord Preſton was concerned; my Lord inſiſted upon it, ſays he, They were not taken from me but from Mr. Aſhton; there the Queſtion was not about you.

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly hope, my Lord, you will forgive me for inſiſting upon theſe Matters, becauſe I am for my Life.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I would do you all the right I can, I aſſure you, Mr. Aſhton; but certainly there was no ſuch thing ſaid as you have mentioned.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not queſtion but you will do me right, and I thought ſo, when I choſe the Jury out of the firſt that appeared, without challenging any.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Sir, pray go on to your Defence.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, my own Defence will be very weak upon the whole, for I am very illiterate and unskill'd in the Laws, but where I do fail of taking Advantage, to obſerve what may be for my Advantage, I hope your Lordſhips will be ſo kind to me, as well as juſt (I may call it) to your ſelves, being upon your Oaths, as to take notice of it. My Lord, in the firſt place——

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Mr. Aſhton proceeds, I would obſerve one word in a Letter that has been read, which is one of theſe Papers, it ſays, I ſay nothing of another Gentleman that takes opportunity to ſee thoſe parts, but he has ſhewn a Zeal and Sincerity in the affair equal to moſt.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. You hear, Gentlemen, that there is notice taken of another Perſon beſides the Bearer.

Mr. Aſhton Pray, my Lord, is it any Conſequence that I muſt be the Perſon that muſt be meant, or that I muſt know what the Contents of the Letter was? There was another beſides me, and ſo it is not plain who was meant, or if I were the Man meant in this Letter, it muſt not therefore follow that I muſt know of it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I did not mention it as a Proof that you were the Perſon meant, but only to ſhew that there was another Perſon beſides, my Lord, taken notice of in them.

L. C. J. Holt. I muſt confeſs, I think Mr. Aſhton obſerves right, it does not concern him, for as well as he was there, there was another, and it is uncertain whether it relates to him or the other, and ſo it ſignifies nothing at all; that's my mind. Pray go on Mr. Aſhton.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, upon the whole I have this to obſerve, firſt as to my buſineſs of going into France, I muſt ingenuouſly own it, though I proteſt to you I never own'd it or named it to the Woman though ſhe had Sworn it, but yet I do now. My deſign was to go to France, and I had very great and good Reaſon for it, I think, I had endeavoured all ways I could in the World to procure a Paſs to go to France, 'tis very well known, I did buſineſs under Lieutenant General Worden that died half a year ago, his Accounts are now depending, and ſuch Accounts as may be prejudicial in ſome points to his Family, to whom I have always own'd and muſt a great Obligation, and would be very glad upon all occaſions to ſerve it, and all the Branches of it; this was not the whole nor the only deſign I had in going thither, but I had likewiſe ſome buſineſs of my own, I have a conſiderable Sum of Money owing me, if it be neceſſary to prove it, I can prove it by a Bond from a Perſon that is there; a great Sum it is, a very conſiderable one to me at leaſt. And, my Lord, I did think if I did not go my ſelf it was impoſſible for me to do any thing in that Affair, and that was the true and only Reaſon of my deſign in going to France, having been out of hopes of getting any other Convenience otherways; this was not a Deſign juſt now formed, as if I were juſt now upon ſome Plot concerning the Publick, but it has been my deſign ever ſince Lieutenant General Worden died, and he upon his Death-Bed ingaged me to do it; and I once went down, hoping to have gone from Dover, and there I was apprehended and taken. And, my Lord, I have uſed all manner of Endeavours to go other ways, but they have always failed me, and this way I hoped would have taken: my Lord, I do own I did hire the Boat, and I did pay the Money, but with Submiſſion, I think that is not any manner of Treaſonable Act, my Lord; perhaps it is an ill Act, but it does not amount in the leaſt to Treaſon going to the King's Enemies, ſuppoſe I went upon that account, that is no manner of Treaſon in in the World, carrying Papers to the King's Enemies, except it be proved that I was privy to them, and knew the Contents of them, if Lawyers inform me right, is not Treaſon; then what remains? 'Tis true, I muſt own the Papers were found upon me, and I believe there is no body that has heard the Evidence that has been given, but muſt readily conclude that I found them in the place where the Sea-man ſays I took them up; and beſides, my Lord, there is not any manner of proof ſo much as aim'd at by the King's Council in all their Evidence, that I was privy to any one of theſe Papers; ſo that, my Lord, I think there is very little proved upon me at all; I had the misfortune to be taken in this Company that was going where theſe Papers were taken, it's true, but they have not attempted to prove that I was privy to or knew any thing of them at all, nor that I was more concern'd than that they were taken in my Stomach; this is all I have to obſerve upon the whole; as to the buſineſs of the Indictment there are great and grievous Aggravations in it, and ſuch as I am not able to comprehend the meaning of, the Words confound me; and therefore I humbly deſire your Lordſhip to tell me upon what Statute I am Indicted.

L. C. J. Holt. I'll tell you, Mr. Aſhton, you are Indicted upon the 25*th* of Edward the Third, for conſpiring, compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King and Queen, and for that purpoſe going to France, and endeavouring to incite the French King to invade the Kingdom, and telling him how he ſhould do it, and letting him know in what State and Condition the Kingdom was, and how fit to be invaded.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, is that at all proved upon me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Queſtion that the Jury are to judge of upon the Evidence that has been given.

Mr. Aſhton. As to that of compaſſing the Death of the King and Queen, I am ignorant of dealings in Law; but I conceive there are ſeveral Species of Treaſon mentioned in that Act of the 25 of Edward III. and as to the imagining the Death of the King, that's only to be proved by ſome Overt Act: Now I think nothing at all has been proved of any open Act conducing to prove the imagination or compaſſing the Death of the King or Queen, no manner of Conſultation or Treaſonable Act at all, and therefore, my Lord, I do not ſee that there is any great matter that is proved upon me, and I hope you are of that Opinion too.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, that you may not go away with a Miſtake, any that deſign'd the Depoſition of the King and Queen, and the Invaſion of the Kingdom, which is proved by any Overt Act, is ſufficient to prove that they compaſs and imagine the Death of the King and Queen.

Mr. Aſhton. I preſume it may be ſo, I believe that may be the Conſtruction of the Law.

L. C. J. Holt. And I make no queſtion but thoſe that you have conſulted with have told you as much.

Mr. Aſhton. Truly as to Council my Tryal has been as hard as ever Man met withal.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you ſay ſo, Mr. Aſhton? the Court has not been hard upon you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not complain of the Court, but as to the matter of time, I had notice by that Gentleman, Mr. Bale, to prepare for my Tryal, and that was on Friday, and not before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Friday was Sevennight, you mean, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Aſhton. Yes, I do mean Friday was Sevennight, I was then a cloſe Priſoner, I had not the opportunity or liberty of ſeeing any Chriſtian Soul, I ſpake to him then, and told him, Mr. Bale, this is very ſhort notice; pray be ſo kind as to move my Lord that I may have Council; truly he was Civil enough, and ſaid, he would do all he could; ſays he, will you give me the Names of your Council? ſo I gave him the Names of four, and of a Sollicitor; but I never heard more of him in the matter: I did with all my Induſtry and Skill give my Friends notice, but I was under great difficulty, for I had not the liberty of Pen, Ink, nor Paper, nor a Man to ſend upon a Meſſage, on Saturday; I gave my Friends notice of it upon Sunday, which was no very good Day for buſineſs, they apply'd themſelves to my Lord Sydney, whoſe Favour and Kindneſs I ſhall always own as long as I live, he gave me all the diſpatch poſſible, and got me an Order to ſee my Wife that day, though it was Sunday; the next day I made Application to have my Council come to me, that was Monday; he with the ſame readineſs procured that, but it was Tueſday in the Afternoon before I could ſee any living Soul but my Wife; and ſome of the Council that I deſired would not readily come to me, and it was Wedneſday before I did ſee any body of them, and ſo I had but Wedneſday and Thurſday to conſult with them in. On Friday I was brought here, and I endeavour'd to procure a Copy of the Pannel, that I might inform my ſelf of the Characters of the Men that were to be my Jury; and my Lord, I would deſire you to give me leave to clear one Point, which through Inadvertency ſlipt from me about the time that I deſir'd to ſend to enquire about the Jury. I did not mean as was apprehended to ſend to them to take them off, but I only meant to enquire after their Characters; this was done upon Friday; I had not a Copy of the Pannel till laſt Friday, when we were Arraigned in Court, it was Two of the Clock before the Pannel was given us, it was between Three and Four when we came to Newgate; we were to come upon our Tryal the next Morning by Eight of the Clock; ſo that before the Copies could be tranſcribed for us, there were left but ſix Hours for us to enquire into the Morals of ſo many Men, of whom ſome liv'd eight, ſome ten, ſome fifteen Miles out of Town; for my part I was not able to enquire after any one, and that your Lordſhip may think by my taking the firſt Twelve that appeared, and believing my ſelf Innocent of this matter, I reſolved to put my ſelf upon my Tryal by any twelve indifferent Engliſh-Men; I only beg if I have omitted any thing in reference to my ſelf, or misbehaved my ſelf, with reſpect to the Bench, that you would pleaſe to ſet me right, and conſider that I ſtand here for my Life; and to grant me your Pardon for any thing wherein I have offended your Lordſhips, to whom, and to the Jury, I refer my Cauſe; only I beg leave to call two or three Witneſſes, I know it hath been allowed before in ſuch caſes, to give ſome ſhort account of my Life and Converſation, becauſe it hath been reflected upon me that I was a Papiſt, becauſe I deſigned to go into France; but believe there is not any Man, whoſe Devotion to the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, is greater than mine hath been, or to whom that Religion is Dearer than to my ſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. You are not accuſed of any ſuch thing, no body pretends you are a Papiſt, but call whom you will.

Mr. Aſhton Pray call Dr. Burſh, Dr. Lake Dr. Fitz-Williams and Dr. Davenant. There is Dr Fitz Williams; I beg the Favour of you Dr. Fitz-Williams to give the Court an account of your Acquaintance with me, and particularly about my Religion.

Dr. Fitz Williams Will your Lordſhip give me leave, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Aye; Come, what do you know of Mr Aſhton?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I ſuppoſe, my Lord, that he calls me in as a Witneſs to his Religion, and to his Morality, I think ſo; with my Lord's Permiſſion I will give the trueſt Teſtimony I can: I have known him for ſome time, he uſed to be frequently at the Service of the Church in the Proteſtant part of the Family, at St James's, where I was Chaplain; during the time I was there, I obſerved him to be a frequent Receiver of the Holy Communion; and as far I could obſerve, lived anſwerable to what he profeſſed to be, a Sincere Member of the Church of England, and a Serious Chriſtian. For his Sincerity and Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, I can give this Inſtance he had an Aunt that had a Relation to that Family, one Mrs. Du-pee, who he thought did warp a little towards Popery, and he deſired me, about five Years ago, to have recourſe to her, and deſired to know if ſhe were diſſatisfied with any Point of Religion in the Church of England, in Communion with which ſhe lived viſibly, and I would do my endeavour to ſatisfie her; as I do not doubt but I could. She was deſirous to know who was the Perſon that ſent me: I told her I came of my own Head in the greateſt part; but I ſuppreſs'd the Interpoſition of Mr. Aſhton for ſeveral Reaſons, and told her, I had great Suſpition of her inclining the other way; and I had great reaſon for it becauſe of her Husband, who was a Papiſt, and the great Reſort of Popiſh Prieſts to their Lodgings. She told me then, ſhe was ſatisfied in every thing, and if ſhe had any Diſſatisfaction ſhe would ſend for me to give me an account. Some Months after I came to St. James's to wait, and obſerving her to be more than uſually before from Prayers in the Chappel, I went to her, and asked her the reaſon: She told me, it was becauſe ſhe was making ſome Linnen for her Maſter King James, which was to be made in haſte: But ſhe then deſign'd to go for Flanders quickly; and Mr. Aſhton about that time, or two or three days after, told me his Aunt was gone to France, and ſpoke it with very great concern, and that he believed, under the Pretence of calling over her Younger Son, ſhe was gone to declare her ſelf a Papiſt, and he was very much troubled at it. This I know for his Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. This was, my Lord, about five Years ago.

Mr. Aſhton. That is, as to the buſineſs of my Aunt I ſuppoſe, I know not how he comes to mention it, but as to my Life and Morals, you can give a later account.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. My Lord, I have Adminiſtred the Sacrament to him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Queſtions do you farther ask him, Mr. Aſhton? or can you ſay any more, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, my Lord, I can ſay no more, but that he received the Sacrament about half a Year ago.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. We have not objected any thing, as to his Religion, at all.

Mr. Aſhton. But I know it has been a Reflection that has gone about of me, that I am a Papiſt, therefore I beg leave to prove my Religion and Converſation.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, call whom you will, you ſhall not be hindered, take what Courſe you pleaſe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Doctor, you ſay he has received the Sacrament lately; when was that, and where?

Dr. Fitz Williams. It was at Ely Chappel within this ſix or ſeven Months.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you been lately converſant with him?

Dr. Fitz Williams Truly, my Lord, I have not been very lately.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray what have you heard him ſay, concerning his Affection to King William and Queen Mary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not remember any thing at all of that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you heard him ſay any thing to the contrary?

Dr. Fitz Williams. No, I cannot remember that.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What have you heard him ſay about his Affection to K. James?

L. C. J. Holt. Do not ask him that, there may be a Snare in that Queſtion.

Juryman. You ſay, Doctor, that he received the Sacrament ſix Months ago in Ely Chappel; Did you deliver the Sacrament to him there?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I did not.

Juryman. Pray, Doctor, were the Prayers that were uſed at that time altered, as they are now in the Common-Prayer-Book?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot ſay they were.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you ever ſee him Drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz Williams. I do not uſe to Drink Healths, I came here only to do an Office of Juſtice and Kindneſs to Mr. Aſhton, to teſtifie about his Religion and Converſation.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But anſwer the Queſtion, Did you ever ſee him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot remember I ever did.

Juryman. Was King William and Queen Mary Pray'd for in thoſe Prayers?

Dr. Fitz Williams. I cannot ſay they were.

Mr. Juſt. Eyres. But the Juryman's Queſtion was, whether King William and Queen Mary were Pray'd for? and whether the Prayers were as they are now altered?

Dr. Fitz Williams. My Lord, I ſay I don't remember there was any Names mentioned, as the Prayers are now altered.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That's very well.

Dr. Fitz Williams. I did neither read the Prayers, Sir, nor Adminiſter the Communion at that time.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you were not at the Prayers, as they are now altered, I perceive.

Dr. Fitz. Williams. Yes, I have, ſeveral times.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Not with that Gentleman, Mr. Aſhton.

Dr. Fitz. Williams. But I have been an hundred times at the Prayers as they are now altered.

Mr. Aſhton. I deſire Dr. Lake, who is there upon the Bench, that he may be asked what he knows of me.

Mr Serj. Tremain. But I have one queſtion to ask of Dr. Fitz-Williams before he goes.

L. C. J. Holt. What will you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I would ask you, Sir, one queſtion, Have you taken the Oaths to this King and Queen?

Dr. Fitz. Williams. No. I have not, Sir, that's my Unhappineſs, but I know how to ſubmit and live peaceably under them.

Mr. Aſhton. But there is one Dr. Lake that has taken them, he'll give you an account what he knows of me.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. If any one can ſay I have done or acted any thing againſt the Government, I will readily ſubmit to be puniſhed for it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Dr. Lake, what ſay you?

Dr. Lake. My Lord, I have known Mr. Aſhton above theſe ſixteen Years, we liv'd together in the ſame Family ſeveral of them; I always obſerved him to be a Perſon of exemplary Piety and ſingular Devotion; he duly came to the Prayers of the Church twice a day, and to the Sacrament once a Month; he has taken occaſion, that I know ſeveral times, both at St. James's and at Edinburgh, to teſtifie his Zeal againſt Popery; and I am apt to think, that he has ſuffered ſometimes for doing ſo.

Mr. Aſhton. Dr. Burſh, Pray, as to my Religion, I beg you to give an account what you know of me, particularly ſomething you may remember of me, of my perhaps over-heat againſt Popery.

Dr. Burſh. My Lord, I have long known Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and till within theſe two years frequently converſed with him; and while I did ſo, I believed him a good Proteſtant, and I have ſo many Inſtances of it, and particularly before ſome upon whom his Fortune depended; but as to any thing of late, I can ſay nothing, becauſe our Converſation has ceaſed.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Dr. Burſh, have you known any thing of Mr. Aſhton's Converſation for two Years paſt?

Dr. Burſh. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord, I have nothing more, unleſs your Lordſhip deſire any thing more of this Nature.

L. C. J. Holt. Call whom you will.

Mr. Aſhton. Here is one Mr. Tomlinſon.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, what ſay you, Sir?

Mr. Tomlinſon. My Lord, I waited upon Major General Worden when he was Sick, and there read the Prayers of the Church, and Mr. Aſhton was a conſtant Attender upon the Publick Prayers at the Viſitation of the Sick, and was very Devout; that's all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Mr. Tomlinſon. It was in the Sickneſs of Major Gen. Worden.

L. C. J. Holt. How long ago was that?

Mr. Tomlinſon. It was about half a year ago.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Were thoſe Prayers as they are altered now or not?

Mr. Tomlinſon. It was only the Viſitation of the Sick, and the Collect for the Morning and Collect for the Evening, becauſe the General's Sickneſs was ſuch, that he could not bear long Prayers.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, have you been acquainted with the Priſoner any time?

Mr. Tomlinſon. About eight Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I would have you to anſwer me this one thing; why were you ſo deſirous, and uſed ſuch Importunity, that the Papers ſhould be thrown over Board.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, that is a Point I ought to have ſpoke to, to clear my ſelf.

L. C. J. Holt. It ſeems material, and I would not have it forgot, if you can anſwer it

Mr. Aſhton. I humbly thank your Lordſhip, and whatſoever my Fate is, I cannot but own I have had a Fair Tryal for my Life, and I thank your Lordſhip for putting me in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. And take this other thing with it, why did you deſire Captain Billop to go along with you where you were going?

Mr. Aſhton. He has Sworn it, my Lord, that I did ſo, but as I hope for Salvation, if I were to dye immediately, I do not know that I ſpoke to him of any ſuch thing; how was it poſſible that I ſhould prevail with him? or how was it likely that I ſhould force him to go along with us, when he had about twelve or fourteen Men with him Armed, and we unarm'd?

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, it was not Forcing, it was but Perſwading him to go.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not know any thing of it, I'll aſſure you; but as for endeavouring to perſwade him to throw the Packet overboard, I muſt own I did endeavour to perſwade him to it; and I do preſume there is no body in Court, that had been engaged with a Perſon ſo Unfortunate, that would not have done the ſame thing for any common Friend, not knowing what the Contents of thoſe Papers were, ſeeing them in that Poſture, eſpecially when I ſaw ſome body elſe ſo near me, ſo uneaſie and concern'd to have them ſeen.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Mr. Aſhton, there's another thing which you open'd, which I would have you prove; you ſay you were to go into France upon the Affairs of Col. Worden's Family; firſt you ſay Col. Worden had a great account to make up; how will you make that out?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will prove here in Court, though it is a ſort of ſurpriſe upon me; that there is a great Account depending, I believe I may appeal to Mr. Sollicitor himſelf, who knows that there is a Petition in the Houſe of Commons, now depending, from the Queens Tradeſmen and Debtors, whom ſhe owed 68000*l.* ſhe did Aſſign the Arrears of ſome growing Rents for the Satisfaction of this Debt; but the King and Government have not thought fit to let it be applied to her uſe, or to the paying of thoſe Debts ſhe aſſign'd it to. Nay it has gone farther, I can appeal to ſeveral Perſons, there is one Man by chance in the Court, that I believe does know that I promiſed and engaged, and actually have paid a great part of this Debt; for believing that the Money was good upon the Aſſignment, I have actually paid ſome of theſe Men out of my own Pocket, and perhaps more than became me to venture; I think it may very well call my Diſcretion into queſtion.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you have called, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, here is Mr. Spalding.

L. C. J. Holt. That the late Queen does own People Mony, that I believe is true.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, Mr. Spalding, will you give the Court an account, whether there is any Money due from the Queen to you.

Mr. Spalding. My Lords and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I have a Debt due to me from the late Queen, as her Coach Harneſs maker, it is 470*l.* or ſomething thereabouts, and Mr. Aſhton has paid me part of this Debt; this I do own.

Mr. Serj Tremain. Pray, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Aſhton, Sir?

Mr. Spalding. A dozen years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you any Intimacy with him?

Mr. Spalding. He and I have been very well acquainted.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you ſeen Mr. Aſhton write at any time?

Mr. Spalding. Yes I have.

Mr Serj. Tremain. Do you know his Hand?

Mr. Spalding. Yes I think I do.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray how came Mr. Aſhton to pay you that part of your Money?

Mr. Spalding. I preſs'd Mr. Aſhton, and told him my Neceſſities, and he did advance me this Money.

L. C. J. Holt. How much did he advance?

Mr. Spalding. Almoſt 400*l.*

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was it he paid it you?

Mr. Spalding. Almoſt a Year ago.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pay it out of his own Pocket?

Mr. Spalding. I believe ſo.

L. C. J. Holt. I believe ſo; or was it Money that he had returned to him?

Mr. Spalding. I believe it was out of his own Pocket, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you believe ſo?

Mr. Spalding. Truly I believe it was out of his own Pocket.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray who was to repay him?

Mr. Spalding. About that very time we were Petitioning the Houſe of Commons, that we might have our Debts ſecured, and our Money out of the Arrears of Rents due to the late Queen, according to her Aſſignment; and we ſo far preſs'd the matter, that there was a Clauſe inſerted into the Bill for the ſecuring of our Debt; but upon the next day, or the day following, the Parliament was Prorogu'd.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Which way did he expect to be repaid?

Mr. Spalding. I'll tell you which way, I ſuppoſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did he not tell you which way?

Mr. Spalding. No, he never told me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, did you never tell him how you ſhould be repaid?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I hoped to be repaid, and concluded I ſhould, out of the Arrears of Rent in the Tenants Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. But you were very kind to pay Money out of your own Pocket upon ſuch Hopes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray Sir will you look upon that Paper; do you know the Hand?

Mr. Spalding. No, Sir, I do not.

L. C. J. Holt. I ſuppoſe he did compound with you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This does ſhew an extraordinary kindneſs towards ſome ſort of People.

Mr. Aſhton. If he Diſcounted the Intereſt to the time that we reckoned it would be paid, you know that Prejudice would be to him, and not to me; it may indeed prove a Prejudice at laſt, if the Debt be not paid, becauſe the Receipt is Conditional: if it be not allowed him, ſhe ſhall Diſcount to me again

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was there no Money return'd over from the Queen, K. James's Queen that was?

Mr. Aſhton. No my Lord directly nor indirectly, not one Penny. I believe they are not in a Condition to return Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Mr. Aſhton, what have you more?

Mr. Aſhton. I have nothing more to ſay, I ſubmit my Cauſe to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you Mr. Aſhton, as to ſome things that you have mentioned: Firſt, there's no body queſtions but you are a Proteſtant; nay, as far as I diſcern, ſo they are all that are concern'd in this Matter. The whole deſign ſhows that they are all ſo careful of the Proteſtant Religion, that they deſign to reſtore and eſtabliſh it by the King of France; ſo that it appears they are all Proteſtants concern'd in this Project.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, who is it that propoſes that?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Papers that were carrying to France, Mr. Aſhton, you have heard them read.

Mr. Aſhton. I hope, my Lord, that no doubtful Inſinuations or Suggeſtions are to affect me?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. There is a Gentleman that was called to by the Priſoner, it may be, he knows his Hand; pray Dr. Fitz. Williams look upon that Paper, you have been acquainted with him many years, do you know his Hand?

Dr. F. Williams. No Sir, I do not know his hand, I never did ſee him write, I cannot ſay I ever received a Letter from him.

Mr. Aſhton. I entirely ſubmit my Cauſe to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you have done, Mr. Aſhton?

Mr. Aſhton. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Eyres. Mr. Aſhton, becauſe you cannot reply again upon my Lord Chief Juſtice, after he has ſummed up the Evidence. There's another thing that I would put you in mind of, that you may give an Anſwer to it. Captain Billop ſwears before the Papers were found upon you (and it ſeems to ſtick upon you) when he was informed by the Sea men, that you had put ſomething in your Boſom, and he ask'd you what it was, you ſaid nothing but your Handkerchief? Now, if you knew not what was in the Papers, how came you to deny you had any thing in your Boſom?

Mr.

Mr. Aſhton. For the ſame Reaſon that I would have endeavoured to have had them thrown over-board, out of kindneſs to the Perſon with whom I happened to be taken.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Conſider Mr. Aſhton, what a ſtrange many things you run upon: Firſt, you would have it believed, That you had a mind to go into France upon your own account.

Mr. Aſhton. I do own that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Next then, That you hired a Veſſel for you and Ellyott. Why would you have Ellyott to go with you into France?

Mr. Aſhton. I would not have him, he deſired the Favour of going.

L. C. J. Holt. Who deſired my Lord Preſton to go, or did he deſire to go with you?

Mr. Aſhton. I had not ſeen Mr. Ellyot of Three Months before I went into the City to hire the Boat.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Why would you have my Lord Preſton go with you?

Mr. Aſhton. Why would I have my Lord Preſton go with me? My Lord, I hop'd to have got my Paſſage free with a Perſon of my Lord's Quality.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you hired this Veſſel for my Lord Preſton?

Mr. Aſhton. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it my Lord's Money or your own that you paid?

Mr. Aſhton. The Money I paid, but how I ſhould be repaid I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you for your own Convenience pay a Hundred Pounds for a Boat to go to France, and yet hope to get your Paſſage free by taking in my Lord Preſton.

Mr. Aſhton. Truly my Lord, I cannot tell how it would have been; at the utmoſt, we could but have paid our ſhare of it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you can tell me if you will, I ask you, how it was agreed among you?

Mr. Aſhton. Truly my Lord, as I hope to be ſaved, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Then there is another thing, why did you deſire one of the Sea-men to ſay, That you were to go to Flanders and not to France, and give him Half a Crown to ſay ſo?

Mr. Aſhton. I preſume your Lordſhip knows that it is a Fault, though it be not a Treaſonable Fault to go into France.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But Mr. Aſhton, Truth is the thing that we are enquiring after; and, that is the thing we would have prevail, and I hope ſhall in all Caſes: If you are not Guilty, we hope it will prevail of your ſide, if you are Guilty we hope it will prevail on the other ſide. Now how likely is it that you ſhould get into this ſame Company by chance without a Previous Agreement; you ſent ſomething from Burdet's, a Hamper and a Trunk, and afterwards ſome other things went from Rigby's, who is your Father-in-Law.

Mr. Aſhton. No, There was nothing at all carried from Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, the Leather Bag, I believe. but another thing is this, That if it be poſſible you will do well to give an anſwer to, why did you enquire for a hiding Place? Why did you ask the Maſter of the Ship whether there was a convenient Place to hide in?

Mr. Aſhton. As to that Matter, my Lord, I had heard of diverſe People, that actually had Paſſes, and were going to Flanders, yet were ſtopp'd and brought to Town again. I believe my Lord Nottingham has bail'd many a One, and your Lordſhip knows it to be ſo, and has bailed many your ſelf; and therefore I had great reaſon upon that account to endeavour ſecrecy as much as I could

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Aſhton, as I remember, you ſaid your ſelf you were once before a going over, and had the Misfortune to be ſtopt; now to venture a Second time without a Paſs, was ſomething ſtrange. Why had you not gone and applied your ſelf to the Secretary for a Paſs?

Mr. Aſhton. I had made all the Application I could to my Lord Nottingham, I cannot ſay in my own Name, becauſe I was ſure before hand, I ſhould be denied; but I did by other hands endeavour to have got a Paſs to have gone into Flanders, becauſe it was of extraordinary conſequence to me, as I tell your Lordſhip, to go quickly.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had ſuch an occaſion to go, and had made it out to the Secretary, and given Security, you might have got it ſure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. One word further, Why ſhould you be ſo much concerned to have theſe Papers thrown Over board?

Mr. Aſhton. Perfectly out of Friendſhip, and had I been Travelling with your Lordſhip or any Man elſe that had been ſo unfortunate I, would have done the ſame.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Well, Have you any more to ſay for your ſelf?

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Mr. Aſhton, call what Witneſſes you will, and ſpeak as long as you will for your ſelf, you ſhall be heard at large.

Mr. Aſhton. Mr. Serjeant, I thank you heartily, I have no more at preſent.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the King's Council deſire to ſpeak a Word to the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Thompſ. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: It falls out to be my Duty to Sum up the Evidence that has been given. I opened the Cauſe at the beginning to you, and I opened it at large, and many Particulars there were mentioned, and truly I do not think we have failed in the Proof of any one; I know you are Men of that Obſervation, that I need not, nor ſhall take upon me to repeat all the Particular Circumſtances, but as near as I can, I ſhall touch upon the Heads of the Evidence, and do it with as equal regard to my Duty, and as much tenderneſs to the Priſoner as any one can do.

Gentlemen, In the Firſt place, you ſee what the Indictment is for; 'tis for a High Treaſon of a very Great Nature, no leſs than the Depoſing the King and Queen and Subverting this Government, and that by a French Power and Intereſt: If inviting an Invaſion, and giving an Account of the Weakneſs, and where the Strength of the Government lay, carrying Papers to Sollicite the French to come and to incite this Nation into Rebellion, that ſo they might depoſe this King, and ſet up the late King James again. If theſe be High-Treaſon, as doubtleſs they are, then Gentlemen, how far forth the Priſoner at the Bar had a ſhare in it, I muſt refer to you from what we have proved.

He is the Man, it ſeems, that made the firſt ſtep, for you may remember it was proved that he met this Woman at Burdett's in the City, for the hiring of this Ship, and after Two or Three Meetings more, they come to a Concluſion, and 93 Guineas and Six Pence are depoſited to make up 100 l. which was the Price agreed upon, and that was actually paid by Mr. Aſhton, this is Sworn to be ſo.

up

The next thing is, to what purpoſe this Money was paid, and the Ship hired, that is directly Sworn, it was to carry Mr. Aſhton and Two or Three more of his Friends, not naming of them, and they were to go for France, one of the Witneſſes ſays, to any Port in France, it was not directly declared to what Part. This I ſay was the purpoſe, for which the Money was paid, and the Veſſel hired, and this was to carry you Mr. Aſhton and Two or Three more Friends of his into France.

It is true, Mr. Elliot afterwards did meet Mr. Aſhton, and I think was by at the Bargain making, or at leaſtwiſe, when the Money is paid, I will not be poſitive in that, becauſe I would do him no wrong, he being to make his Defence hereafter.

Mr. Aſhton. No, he was not by, I made the Bargain my ſelf.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. Then afterwards I remember one Circumſtance when he hired this Ship, he was to hire a Ship that had a Place to hide in, and ſo he muſt needs know upon what Deſign, I ſay, by that he muſt needs know, that there was a Matter of great Moment which he was to tranſact, for he was to have ſuch a Ship as he might hide in.

After this Ship was hired then they met in Covent Garden, and there they take Order with the Man to go down with them to the Stairs, where the Waterman was called, indeed Mr. Aſhton did part from them in the Way, but preſently after came to them at the Stairs, and there came my Lord Preſton and his Man, who together with Elliot, that was there before, I think before, all Embark't in the Boat, and were carried to the Ship, and made all the haſt away they could for France.

When they were there, and came to a Place of Danger, near a Ship of War, there was care taken according as they had enquired of the Maſter of the Ship before, that they ſhould be hid, and hid they were.

Afterwards, when they were paſt that Danger, when they came to the Block-Houſe at Graves end, there they thought fit to hide again, and did ſo, and there they concealed themſelves, till they were ſurprized in that Place by Captain Billop.

My Lord, after ſuch time as Captain Billop had ſurprized them, he tells you, how he came down after this Smack, you ſee what happened; my Lord Preſton firſt came up, and after he had ſearch'd my Lord Preſton, Elliot came up and he was ſearcht, and after Mr. Aſhton was once come up, he went down to fetch his Hat, and there was ſeen to take up this Bundle of Papers, and there the Papers upon ſearch were found in Mr. Aſhton's Breaſt.

This being ſo found in his Breaſt, you have heard what applications were made by this Gentleman, to get theſe Papers caſt Over-board, and what Promiſes were made to the Captain, and what likelihood there was of making his Fortune, if he would go along with them or throw away the Packet.

You hear, Gentlemen, that after they came to White-Hall, one of the Men Swear, that this Gentleman gave them Money, that they ſhould ſay, they were not hired for France; but for Flanders.

Theſe, Gentlemen, are the ſeveral Circumſtances that do appear in this Caſe, which ſhew the mighty care and diligence that was uſed to get theſe Papers ſuppreſſed that had been thus taken, or to get them again into their own Cuſtody, and that is a Matter that ſhews how far this Gentleman was concerned in this Deſign, and taking all theſe things together, I think there can no greater Evidence be given, that Mr. Aſhton was in this contrivance, that he was concerned in the Meſſage, that he was to be ſent, and all this buſineſs that was to be done, was as much Guilty as my Lord Preſton, who now ſtands convicted for it.

And the Court will tell you, Gentlemen, there are no Acceſſories, in Treaſon, all are Principals, though it be not actually proved, that this Gentleman did know all theſe Papers what they were, yet in Caſe he hired a Ship for himſelf, and the Lord whoſe Papers they were, to go in, and take ſuch notice of the Papers as to take care of them, to ſuppreſs and conceal them, that is an Evidence of his knowledge of the Importance of them; and if ſo, he will be equally Guilty of the High-Treaſon.

L. C. J. Holt. I doubt that.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. My Lord, I would not willingly preſs any thing further, than the Nature of the thing will bear.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray go on, Brother, we are only talking among our ſelves.

Mr. Serj. Thompſon. The next thing is this, that is to be conſidered, that after ſuch time as theſe Papers came to be laid open, what is it that appears among them? Truly I ſhall not take upon me to repeat ſo much as the ſubſtance, much leſs the Particulars of the ſeveral Papers; but, I muſt ſay, that there does appear to be a Formed Deſign of Subverting the Government, of Depoſing this King and Queen, and of bringing us all into War Rebellion and Blood-ſhed, all this under a pretence of Eſtabliſhing the Proteſtant Religion, and our Legal Government again (tho I can ſee no means they had to depend upon for it) but by a Popiſh Intereſt and a French Power, and how far that is poſſible or probable to promote ſuch an end by ſuch means, I leave to your conſideration.

Gentlemen, you have heard all the particular Papers read, here was the Reſolution of a Conſult and Conference, where this Project was deſigned, here were Heads of a Declaration, that was to be framed to make the Credulous believe, what mighty things ſhould be done upon their New Revolution, you ſee, what Letters have been produced, and cannot but eaſily apprehend what is the Import and Meaning of them. I reſolve, as I ſaid, not to mention the Particulars, but there is ſcarce One Line among them, but what is Treaſon, for it all tends to this Purpoſe and Deſign, to depoſe the King and alter the Preſent Government.

Now upon the whole Matter, Gentlemen, what this Gentleman has ſaid, I confeſs to me ſeems ſtrange, he ſaid indeed at firſt, that he had no defence at all, or that which was very weak, and ſo it ſhould ſeem, the Truth was, for you ſee what his Defence has been.

He ſays, that he went into France, that he owns that he was going thither, but what it was

was it to do, it was to ſettle ſome Accounts with the Family of Colonel Worden, and to receive a Sum of Money that was owing to him by a Perſon there.

Gentlemen, if the Deſign had ſo much Innocency in it, certainly he might have had a Paſs, at leaſt, there was no need of hiring a Veſſel at ſuch an extravagant rate, there was no neceſſity of hiding in this ſecret manner, and no neceſſity of impoſſible ſuggeſtions, and proffering Great Rewards for the diſpoſing of, and concealing theſe Papers.

Gentlemen, You will remember many Particulars more, which have not ſlipt your Obſervation, I ſhall not take upon me to repeat them, but leave them to your conſideration.

Only this I muſt ſay, That this is a Treaſon of a very high Nature, a Treaſon to depoſe a King that has ventured all he had, even his Life has been in Danger, and his Blood has been ſpilt to Eſtabliſh this Government, and our Religion and our Laws, and yet it ſeems there are Men that think this may be better done by a Popiſh Intereſt and French Power, which I think no body of either Wiſdom or Honeſty can imagine, or will engage in, and therefore I leave it to your determination.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you underſtand, that Mr. Aſhton is now Tryed for High Treaſon, it is mentioned in the Indictment, to be for Conſpiring the Death, and Depoſing of the King and Queen, and for that purpoſe, he did endeavour to go into France, and to carry divers Propoſals in Writing, and ſeveral Memorials to ſhew how this Kingdom might be Invaded by the French.

To prove this, the Evidence that has been produced and given by the King's Council has been long, and conſiſts of two Parts, Witneſſes Viva Voce, they have told how Mr. Aſhton deſigned a Voyage to France, and that he hired a Ship for that purpoſe, and ſeveral Papers were taken out of his Boſom.

In the firſt place, the Witneſſes tell you, that about the latter end of December laſt, Mr. Aſhton, and Mr. Elliot came to Burdett's Houſe, where they met with Mrs. Pratt, and Burdett having before that ſpoken to her about a Smack that ſhe called the Thomas and Elizabeth.

Then there was a Meeting appointed between her and Mr. Aſhton at the Wonder Tavern, where they did Treat and Debate about the hire of it; afterwards they came back to Burdett's again, and there the Agreement was made betwixt the Woman and Mr. Aſhton, the Priſoner at the Bar, to have a Hundred Pounds. Ninety Three Guineas and Six Pence was fetcht down by Mr. Aſhton and told out, and depoſited in the Hands of Mrs. Burdett, then there was a Six Pence broken, and one part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other part Mr. Aſhton had, and when either the Maſter or Miſtreſs Pratt ſhould bring the part of the Six Pence that Mr. Aſhton kept, to Mrs. Burdett, the Hundred Pounds was to be paid.

And this Agreement being made, 'tis poſitively Sworn, that they did ask, whether there was a Hiding Place in that Veſſel? an Anſwer was made, There was one, and thereupon a Note was given, that the Maſter and Miſtreſs Pratt ſhould go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Upon Wedneſday Night, they went there according to the Directions, where meets Aſhton and Elliot, but before that, there was a Boat hired at Surrey Stairs to carry them down to the Ship through Bridge, over againſt the Tower, but the Tide not ſerving till about Ten a Clock at Night, they had agreed with a Waterman for Half a Crown to carry them, and he was to ſtay till the Tide ſerved. And when they went out from Rigby's they parted, Elliot and the Maſter went together, Mr. Aſhton did not go with them, but came near about the ſame time to Surrey Stairs, where they took Water.

Being aboard, it was obſerved that all theſe Gentlemen were very timorous, and ſeemed to be much frighted at the ſight of any Veſſel, from which there was any apprehenſion of their being taken notice of; and, therefore they went down under the Quarter-Hatches, which is a Place very inconvenient for ſuch Perſons, where none could ſtand or ſit upright, but they were forced to lye upon the Boards, or upon the Ballaſt.

It ſeems ſome intimation was given, that ſome Gentlemen had an intention to go into France to proſecute ſome Treaſonable Deſign; And Captain Billop being employed to purſue them, which he did in a Pinnace, when he came near the Veſſel where they were, he called to the Veſſel, and under pretence of Preſſing Seamen, he went on Board; The Maſter of the Veſſel ſaid he had a Protection from the Admiralty; ſo that there was no cauſe for them to fear preſſing, nor indeed was there any for Gentlemen to fear it, they being not lyable to be preſſed.

When the Captain came near the Ship, and declared his intent of coming on board, theſe Gentlemen were gone under the Quarter Hatches again, Captain Billop coming on board, and ſpeaking about preſſing of the Men, and ſaying, there was a Couple that would make good Seamen for the King; the Maſter ſhewed his Protection, and then the Captain ſaid he would ſearch further in the Ship, and ſo he did, and then he pulls up the Boards, and there he finds all theſe Gentlemen, who were called up one after another, and ſearcht by the Captain.

Gentlemen, There is one of the Witneſſes tells you, that when they were come up, he ſaw a Packet that lay in this very place under the Quarter-Hatches, unto which was tyed a piece of Lead, which Mr. Aſhton takes up and puts in his Boſom, with which the Captain being acquainted, Enquiry is made by him, what Mr. Aſhton had there? Mr. Aſhton ſaid it was his Handkerchief, and nothing but that which he pulled out: But Captain Billop puts his Hand in his Boſom between his Coat and his Body, and takes out the Packet, and carried theſe Gentlemen on Board the George Frigat, where they ſtayed till the Tyde ſerved to bring them to White-Hall.

But before they came on board the Frigate, Mr. Aſhton was very importunate with him to throw this Packet into the Water; when they were on board the George Frigate, and in the Cabin alone, they continue their importunity.

Now, ſay they, we have you here, and you are alone, pray will you throw this Packet overboard; and particularly Mr. Aſhton ſaid it would do the Captain no good to injure ſo many Gentlemen, and Mr. Elliot would have perſwaded the Captain to take the Lead that was tyed to the Packet, and tye it to ſome Letters that were taken out of my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and throw the Packet over-board; and then have informed the the King and Council, that thoſe Letters was the Packet taken out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom: But the Captain very honeſtly rejected all their Motions of that kind.

Truly, Gentlemen, my Memory will not ſerve me to repeat all the Particulars, but I queſtion not your Notes will bring them to your Minds. Mr. Elliott, it ſeems was ſo mightily concerned at their being taken with theſe Papers, that when they ſhot London-Bridge, he wiſht the Bridge might have fallen upon them and knockt them on the Head; and, when they were got through, he wiſht a Thunder-bolt would fall down into the Boat and ſink them: That, indeed was Mr. Elliott, and not Mr. Aſhton; but Mr. Aſhton was as much concerned about diſpoſing of the Packet as Mr. Elliott.

At White-hall this Packet is opened, and you have ſeveral Papers produced in Evidence and read to you, you have heard what Evidence has been given, that theſe are the very Papers that were in the Packet thus taken.

Firſt of all Captain Billop tells you he carried them to my Lord Nottingham, and that they lay there in his Office; he withdrew indeed while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preſton, but the Packet was not opened in the interim, but there was only a Paper ſtuck on the out-ſide that my Lord had taken off before the Captain returned into the Room, and there the Packet remained intire. He ſays, my Lord Nottingham opened the Packet and put up all the Papers that were in the Packet in his preſence into a Cover again, and ſealed them up with his Seal. My Lord Nottingham ſays poſitively, he did put up all the Papers that were in the Packet again, all and no more, except the Cover, and that he ſealed up and delivered it to Captain Billop.

Captain Billop ſays, he took theſe very Papers from my Lord Nottingham, and as he received them, carried them without opening to my Lord Preſident.

My Lord Preſident ſays he lockt them up unopen'd in a cloſe Cabinet in his Cloſet-Room, where no body comes; there they were that Night, and the next Day he carried them intire to the King, and ſome of them were read by the King, in the Preſence of my Lord Preſident; and they were all taken away again by his Lordſhip, no more nor no leſs; and, my Lord Preſident brought them all to the Cabinet Council, where they were read, and were delivered to my Lord Sydney.

My Lord Sydney ſwears, theſe Papers now produced are the ſame Papers he had from my Lord Preſident, and my Lord Preſident ſwears, that they are the ſame he received by Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Sydney markt them.

So that there can remain no doubt of theſe being the ſame Papers, that were contained in the Packet, that was taken out of the Boſom of Mr. Aſhton.

Then, as to the Matter of the Papers, I think it is plain beyond all contradiction, that the Import of them is Treaſonable: They ſhew a Deſign of invading the Kingdom by a Foreign Force, and of Depoſing the King and Queen from the Government, and of ſetting the late King upon the Throne.

It is agreed, as it is mentioned, at a Conference, between ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen, that were of the Whig and Tory Party, as they call them, that the late King was to be reſtored, though by a French Power.

It was impoſſible for them to effect it, by going plainly to work, and ſaying in plain Words, the French ſhould invade us. It was to be done in this manner.

The French King muſt pretend by all means to be our Friend and a Mediator betwixt the late King and the People of England, and this was out of deſign plainly to get a Party of the Kingdom, to joyn with them; the moſt credulous and inconſiderate ſort of People; who when they ſhall be ſeduced into a Belief of the French King's great Kindneſs, it was not doubted but there would be a Conjunction between them and the French Forces, to reſtore the late King.

And to procure ſuch a Perſwaſion in the People; the French King was to ſhew himſelf kind to the Engliſh Proteſtants, to appear and act another part than he had formerly done; he was to permit them the Exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion, thereby to perſwade many, that his Perſecution of his own Subjects, the Hugonots, was not out of any Averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only to their Antimonarchical and Reſiſting Principles.

Then an Inconvenience is to be removed; for they complain, that they are too full of Bigottry at St. Germains, and too bare faced: For they make an open Profeſſion of Popery, and ſpeak truly what they do intend; but ſay they, if they will have the Deſign take effect, they muſt be more Cloſe and Secret: For the Folly and Bigottry at St. Germains was a very great Obſtruction. Therefore, they propoſed, that ſome Perſons might be ſubſtituted as Agents to Correſpond here, that underſtood the Temper of the Nation, and what would eaſilieſt prevail with the People: And a Model was to be framed at St. Germains, the Proteſtants are to be ſeemingly careſſed, Seven or Nine to be of the late King's Council, that ſo we might believe, that he was ours in Intereſt again, and that we have a Relation to him.

And if things were carried with ſuch cunning and ſubtilty, they hoped to delude a great many People over into the Intereſt of the late King; but, if they went bare-faced, it would cauſe ſuch great Jealouſies, that they muſt totally depair of Succeſs.

Yet they did not hope by theſe Artifices to obtain ſo many Friends here, as might have been ſufficient to accompliſh their Deſign; and therefore they muſt have recourſe to a Foreign Force, particularly a French Force. For ſays one of the Papers, Uſe Foreigners to expel Foreigners; that is, Uſe French to expel Dutch Foreigners, who are our Allies, and are falſly accuſed by them to have trampled upon the Rights and Liberties of the Nation.

There is one Argument uſed to encourage People to aſſiſt the French in the Invaſion of their own Country, which I cannot omit, namely, That as ſoon as the French, with a conſiderable Expence of Men and Money, had reſtored the Proteſtant Religion, the late King to the Crown, and the People to their Liberties, that he would withdraw all his Forces, and reap no Profit or Advantage by his Succeſs. I muſt confeſs, this carries ſo little of Perſuaſion in it, that it is ridiculous to think thereby to impoſe upon any number of Men. But notwithſtanding the weakneſs of their Arguments, it is apparent they were in good earneſt; the Papers give an account to the French, in what ſtate and condition our Forts were, Portſmouth not

It was a happy juncture between this and the firſt of March, when Advice is given to make uſe of the Opportunity. For Men cannot give, but Men may uſe Opportunities, and ſomething was to be done forthwith, and the Goods muſt be got in readineſs, particularly Linnen and the Copper are mentioned, which are myſterious and dark Expreſſions, and you may put a Conſtruction upon them as well as I; for they are written in a ſtyle of Trade, as if there were a Correſpondence between two Tradeſmen, and the Linnen and the Copper are ordered to be brought before the 10th of March.

But however obſcure ſome of theſe Expreſſions are, there are others that are more plain, That the French Fleet muſt be out in April at fartheſt, and are to come before the Conjunction between the Engliſh and the Dutch, and Jennings, Strickland, or Trevannian are to come from St. Mallo's in one Night, and to fight the Engliſh Fleet in the Chops of the Channel, and not to come ſo high as Beachy, where they came the laſt Year.

And there is an account given, in what condition and ſtate our Navy was, how many Ships, what Rates, how Man'd, and who the Officers; and then as the French were to be in readineſs to come in April, ſo they ſay our Fleet was not to be out till June.

Gentlemen, There are a great many other Particulars; but theſe are enough, nay half of them were enough to make any Man Guilty of Treaſon, that was concerned in them, or that had a hand in carrying or making uſe of them.

Beſides, there are other Letters which can import nothing, but the Writer was of the late King's Intereſt; one directed to Mr. Redding, the other to Mrs. Redding; and theſe were to go to France to let them know how zealous he was in his Duty, and how the Intereſt of the young Maſter increaſed. The Letters have theſe Expreſſions: That though the Family were decreaſed, yet our Intereſt is increaſed, which is yours, and I ſpeak in the Plural Number, becauſe I ſpeak the Sentiments of my elder Brother, and the reſt of our Relations, and deſire them to believe they were zealous and cordial in their Duty to Mr. Redding. Now what Interpretation you will make of this, I'll leave to you.

Then there is another Letter to Mrs. Charlton, and another to Mr. Jackſon, and divers other things that have been read, and amongſt the reſt, have been read the Heads of a Declaration at large, ſhewing what ſhould be done, and what Methods ſhould be taken in order to the reſtoring the late King, and depoſing this.

And there is alſo mention made in a Paper, how divers Perſons, who were to be pardoned, as particularly, all Juſtices of the Peace actually in Commiſſion are not to be excepted; Outlaws are to be pardoned; Chimney Money to be taken away; and all that come in within One and Twenty Days are to be forgiven.

So that it is plain, theſe Letters import a Deſign to depoſe the King and Queen, and the Kingdom to be invaded by Foreigners, only a little to colour the matter, nor to loſe the pretence of a Proteſtant Intereſt altogether, there was to be 5 or 6000 Swedes to be made uſe of in the Invaſion.

Gentlemen, if there was a Deſign of an Invaſion, be it by Papiſts, or by Proteſtants, if any Act was done tending thereunto, it is High Treaſon within the Statute of 25 E. 3. For purpoſing and intending to depoſe the King and Queen, manifeſted by any Overt-Act, hath been always held to be High Treaſon.

This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that has been given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Aſhton ſays for himſelf, it is true, ſaith he, my Deſign was to go to France, I was ſo unfortunate as to have the Papers taken about me. I did take them up; but, ſays he, it is not at all proved that any one of the Papers that are now produced are my hand: Which is true: There is no ſuch Proof.

The next thing is, that Mr. Aſhton being ask'd, what occaſion he had to go to France? He ſays, he had formerly a Relation to Col. Worden, and did tranſact and had the Management of his Affairs, which were very great. Col. Worden died half a year ago, and he enjoin'd him upon his Death Bed to go into France about ſetling ſome Accompts of his, and he was deſired by the Family of Col. Worden ſo to do.

This Mr. Aſhton alledges; but he has not proved it. 'Tis very ſtrange, that if Mr. Aſhton was to go to France to negotiate that Affair for Col. Worden's Family, none of that Family ſhould be produced to prove, that Col. Worden gave him ſuch Directions, or that the Family deſired him to go into France upon that account.

Then Mr. Aſhton hath endeavoured to give another reaſon for his Voyage into France: he affirms, he had ſome Affairs of his own with relation to the late Queen, he was concerned for her, and ſhe did owe Monies here, and he paid ſeveral Debts to Tradeſmen, particularly 400 l. ſhe owed to the Coach Harneſs Maker; and he having paid it, went over to reimburſe himſelf: The Tradeſman was produced, and he ſays, Mr. Aſhton did pay the Money a Year ago; but whether Mr. Aſhton had Effects from the late Queen, or paid it out of his own Pocket, does not appear; Mr. Aſhton ſays, he paid it out of his own Pocket, which is very extraordinary, that he ſhould be ſo kind to pay what he was not obliged to pay, and have no ſecurity to reimburſe himſelf.

So that, Gentlemen, you had beſt conſider whether there be any thing at all ſaid or proved, that can juſtifie Mr. Aſhton's going to France, or whether there be any good reaſon offered for it.

Then Aſhton has called Witneſſes to prove, that he was always a Proteſtant, though he did live in a Popiſh Family, where they did incourage Papiſts and diſcountenance Proteſtants; for which he had the ill will of thoſe he did depend upon.

Gentlemen, all that is agreed, and it is not a queſtion in this Caſe; whether Mr. Aſhton be a Proteſtant or a Papiſt; but the Queſtion is, whether he be guilty of High Treaſon, from which the being a Proteſtant does not ſecure a Man.

But Gentlemen, if Mr. Aſhton had no Knowledge upon what deſign the other Perſons were to go into France, though he had actually gone into France, it had been a Crime in this Juncture of Affairs, yet not High Treaſon; but to go into France, and carry a Treaſonable Scheme of a Deſign and Project of an Invaſion, that is Treaſon.

Now the Queſtion is, whether Mr. Aſhton went with ſuch a Purpoſe or not, you are to con-conſider; I would not lead you into any ſtrain of the Evidence, but only ſtate it how it ſtands. It is plain he was concerned all along in hiring the Smack, and as the King's Council obſerved to you, the Price was ſomething extraordinary, they were to pay 100*l.* for the Voyage, to which was added ſome Encouragement to the Woman, that if ſhe performed this Voyage well, ſhe might get 1000*l.* before Lady Day, and the Money was paid by Mr. Aſhton, and he was taken aboard the Veſſel.

Mr. Aſhton was much concerned to ſecure the Papers, by taking them out of the place where they lay, upon the Ballaſt under the Quarter-Hatches, and after they were taken out of his Boſom, he was very importunate, and ſo often with Captain Billop to throw them overboard.

And why ſhould he be ſo earneſt and concerned, unleſs he very well knew and was acquainted with the contents of thoſe Papers?

And he gave one of the Seamen 2*s.* 6*d.* to ſay they were bound for Flanders: Unleſs it was a matter of great Importance he went about, and that was not fit to be known; why ſhould he deny it, or labour to have it concealed? An 100*l.* to be paid for this Voyage, was, upon a joint Account, as well for my Lord Preſton as for Mr. Aſhton and Ellyot; Mr. Aſhton did pay the Money, and he does not make it appear whoſe it was.

Gentlemen, it reſts upon you to conſider the Evidence you have heard, whether it is ſufficient to induce you to believe Mr. Aſhton was going into France with theſe Papers to carry on the Deſign of Depoſing the King and Queen, and invading the Kingdom: If you are not ſatisfied in your Conſciences that he is Guilty, then find him not Guilty: On the other ſide, if you are ſatisfied that he is Guilty, I do not queſtion but you will find him ſo.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord has rightly repeated and ſtated the Evidence to you, I ſhall only ſay but a very few Words to it.

Mr. Aſhton, as at firſt he did, ſo in his Defence has complained of a very ſpeedy Tryal, and would inſinuate ſomething of Favour that he might find for that Reaſon. It does appear he had notice of his Tryal ſufficient, and had Time enough to prepare for it: But there is one thing extraordinary has happened to his Advantage, which I would deſire may be taken notice of. If he had been tryed on Saturday, perhaps he had had more reaſon to complain than now he has; for he has now (and you ſee he uſes it, and wiſely enough too) the Advantage that happened to him upon my Lord Preſton's Tryal; and has had time ſince Saturday to prepare for this day's Work, ſo that there is no hard Point upon him as to that Matter, but he has had pretty good Fortune therein.

Next he does inſinuate that he is a Proteſtant: Gentlemen, the Law does not diſtinguiſh between a Proteſtant Traytor and a Papiſt Traytor; if he has committed ſuch an Offence, as by the Law is High Treaſon, the Law does not diſtinguiſh, nor may we. And Proteſtants may ſerve Papiſts Deſigns, though they do not directly intend it. Therefore the Evidence to prove him a Proteſtant is nothing before you; for the Matter is only whether he be guilty of this Crime or not.

In the Tryal of my Lord Preſton, then the Labour was, that My Lord was not the Man that was concerned, as the Bearer of this Pacquet of Letters or Writings wherein the Treaſon is contained; but then it was Mr. Aſhton, the Pacquets were found about him; but now it is not Mr. Aſhton, but my Lord Preſton, and this is now the Queſtion before you, that he ſtands upon.

But if ſo be they were all concerned in the Carriage and tranſporting of this Buſineſs, then they are all alike guilty of Treaſon, and therefore they cannot ſhuffle it from one to another.

Now there appears ſome Reaſon why they would not all agree to be tryed together; for now it is but turning it from My Lord Preſton upon Aſhton and Mr. Aſhton upon my Lord Preſton, and Ellyot upon either of them, and ſo by this means all might eſcape, if this were ſufficient to ſerve their turn.

But the Queſtion before you, is, whether all theſe Perſons are not all in all equally concerned, and 'tis the Evidence that muſt be your Guide and ours; for it is not Mr. Aſhton's Affirmation, that he had Buſineſs to go into France, and he happened unluckily to fall into theſe Mens Company, that will be a ſufficient Excuſe, unleſs he prove it.

It had been an eaſie matter for him to have proved, if he had been going into France upon Buſineſs for Colonel Worden; but at length that is turned off, and then the pretence for going is, to recover ſome Mony he had owing to him there, and that he had payed for another Perſon. Had he Papers of Inſtructions of this kind? Had he any one Witneſs of this thing?

The Merchandize that he carryed out with him is of another import. Where were the Notes or Bonds that he was to recover? Where is the Accompt that he had to make up with any body beyond Sea? There is no manner of Evidence of any ſuch thing.

Next Gentlemen, do but conſider, if the Man were ſo innocent as he would inſinuate, as if he had not gone with the reſt upon this Errand, how came the Man to have ſo heavy a Concern upon him? Why ſhould he go to take up theſe Papers, if they were not his Brats? Why ſhould he clap them into his Boſom, if he knew nothing what was in them? Why was his concern ſo great to have them thrown overboard?

Gentlemen, if you expect that the Hearts of Men ſhould be proved otherwiſe, than as Men gueſs by one anothers meanings by their Actions, 'tis impoſſible to convict any Man of a Crime; for if his own Affirmation ſhall be a Defence, he will never want a Defence to keep himſelf from being convicted: But that is not what the Law gives credit to; it muſt be Proof and Evidence that you are to judg upon. But of all he pretends to, he proves nothing.

How came he acquainted with my Lord Preſton? Sure he was a Man ſufficiently known in the World? Why ſhould he go with him and Mr. Ellyot? Are they not all known? Are they not Perſons of the ſame Diſpoſition, and much in the ſame Imployment?

He had been taken a little before, he ſays himſelf, and was hindred from going; and he had ſtrange ill luck, if there was nothing elſe in the buſineſs than what he pretends.

Gentlemen, in ſhort, if you do find by the Evidence, that he was going upon a good and an honeſt

honeſt deſign, and that he knew nothing of the Danger that was in theſe Papers, and that theſe Perſons were in, by reaſon of theſe Papers, and yet would go about to have theſe Papers conceal'd, and endeavour to have them thrown away, without knowing what was in them: Theſe are Evidences that will be good for you to go by, if you have any ſuch; but to take his Affirmation, becauſe he ſays it, when he proves nothing, that is no Evidence to go by.

I leave it to you, as my Lord has done. If you are ſatisfied upon the Evidence that he is guilty; I doubt not you know and will do your Duty, and will find him ſo; and if you have no ſuch Evidence, or any to prove the contrary, that he is not guilty, then you ought to find him ſo too.

Mr. Aſhton. I beg you pardon for one word.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you ſay?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſhall reckon it a particular Favor, if you will pardon me one word, after your Lordſhip has given the Charge.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Aſhton. I think, with Submiſſion, that there is no proof I knew or was privy to the Contents of any of theſe Papers.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Aſhton, ſhew any Man any Reaſon, if you can, why did you go down and catch up theſe Papers, if you did not know what was in them; they might be for your Advantage to be ſhewn, for any thing you pretend to know.

Mr. Aſhton. I did it for my L. Preſton's Sake, whoſe Hand was proved, and he ſtands convicted as the Bearer of thoſe Papers.

Mr J. Eyres. But you forget one thing that was plainly proved, Mr. Aſhton, that when you importun'd Capt. Billop to throw away the Papers, you uſed this as an Argument, It would do him no good to injure three honeſt Gentlemen.

Mr. Aſhton. I did not ſay ſo, my Lord, that I know of, tho indeed he has ſworn it.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, you have been heard as long as you did deſire to ſpeak, and were askt over and over again, whether you had any more: You are not now ſaying any new Matter; if you could urge any thing that had been omitted, which made for your Advantage, I believe the Court would indulge you, tho it be againſt the Courſe.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſay there is nothing under my Hand, there is no Privity proved; does Suppoſition condemn a Man? And is there any thing but Suppoſition againſt me? There is not my Hand proved in any of the Papers. I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Jury to obſerve that.

L. C. J. Holt. Your being in the Company, and being ſo concerned, and importunately endeavouring to have them thrown overboard; the hiring the Veſſel to go with theſe Treaſonable Papers to an Enemies Country, and the Papers found about you, is Fact proved, and is left to the Gentlemen of the Jury to conſider of.

Mr. Aſhton. But does all this amount to more than Suſpicion?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, if you ſpeak after we have charged the Jury, you will give us an Occaſion of ſpeaking to anſwer you; the Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Underſtanding, they have very well obſerved the Evidence, and I perceive they have been very extraordinary intent upon it, they will be able to make a right Judgment, no Queſtion of it.

Mr. Aſhton. All that I deſire, is; there is nothing proved upon me, of my knowing what was in theſe Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. And there is that which is very conſiderable too, that 'tis plain, what you ſay about Col. Worden's Account, is but a Pretence, for when you were ſearcht, there was not one Paper, nor one bit of Account found about you, nothing but this Bundle of Treaſonable Papers and Letters.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I humbly beg you will obſerve what is for me, as well as what is againſt me.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, do you think you ſhall ſtay out any time, the Court deſires to know it, becauſe they will order themſelves accordingly.

Juryman. My Lord we do not know till we come together.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, take your own Time, only the Court would comply with your conveniency in the Adjournment.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourn'd for half an Hour, and when they were returned, the Jury came in to give their Verdict, and being called over, anſwered to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton hold up thy hand. Which he did. Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you? Is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels? &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Maj. Richardſon. Look to him, he is found guilty of High Treaſon.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that John Aſhton is guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, but that he had no Lands nor Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the time of the High Treaſon committed, nor at any time ſince to your knowledge, and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen, I think truly you have gone according to your Evidence, which the Law requires you to do, and that it is which will preſerve us all. And tho it be truly a thing that falls hard upon the particular Men that are concerned in ſuch things; yet notwithſtanding, we muſt have more conſideration of the general Good, and Preſervation, and the Support of the Government, and that the Law have its due Courſe, than of any particular Man's Caſe, as to the hard Point of it: We muſt look to theſe things, or there will be no living in the World.

Sir W. Hedges. My Lord, we humby deſire of your Lordſhip that we may be diſmiſt from further attendance this Seſſions.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, you are diſmiſt, and the Court thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourned for an Hour, and then the Lord Mayor and Deputy Recorder, with ſeveral of the Juſtices and Aldermen returned into the Court, and after Proclamation for Silence, Order was given to bring the Lord Preſton, and Mr. Aſhton to the Bar. Which was done.

The Lord Preſton ſtanding without the Bar, and Mr. Aſhton within.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your hand. Which he did.

John Aſhton, hold up your hand. Which he did.

My Lord Preſton, You ſtand convicted of high Treaſon, for conſpiring the Death of the King and Queens Majeſties, for adhering to the King's Enemies, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government: What can you ſay for your ſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment againſt you of Death according to the Law?

Lord Preſton. 'Tis true, my Lord, the Jury have found me guilty of the Treaſon aſſigned in the Indictment. My Lord, it is a Treaſon of a very heavy and black Nature, 'tis of ſuch a Nature, that if I had been conſcious to my ſelf to have deſerved, I ſhould be very willing to undergo, that Judgment that is like preſently to paſs upon me. It is to endeavour to bring in the King of France to Conquer and Invade this Kingdom; 'tis a thought I always abhorred; I love my Religion, my Family, my Country too well to attempt or endeavour any ſuch thing; I muſt appeal to your Lordſhip, though now perhaps it is too late, whether the Treaſon that is laid againſt me has been perfectly proved; for in the Caſe of proving Hands, and particularly in the Caſe of Colonel Sydney, It was diſallowed that compariſon of Hands ſhould be Evidence; there ought to be at leaſt one if not two Evidences to prove the writing of it. My Lord, I know this is too late, I ſhould have offered this to the Jury before, but being in the Crowd and in great diſorder by ſtanding ſo long, I had not ſtrength or ability enough to urge it as I ſhould. I have nothing more to ſay in the Caſe but ſubmit to that Judgment that the Law has aſſigned.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preſton, Your Lordſhip knows the proceedings of the Law in ſuch Caſes; there is no averring againſt the Verdict of the Jury, they have found your Lordſhip guilty, and the Law ſays, that Judgment muſt be given upon you according to that Verdict.

Lord Preſton. Mr. Recorder, I do not aver againſt the Verdict. I own it is too late, I ſhould have offered it before, and I muſt ſubmit to the Judgment of the Law.

Cl. of Arr. John Aſhton, hold up thy hand. Which he did.

You are in the ſame Caſe with the Priſoner laſt before you. What can you ſay for your ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt you, to die according to Law?

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I would humbly deſire I might have a ſight of my Indictment; I have ſome reaſon perhaps to believe that I am found guilty upon an Erroneous Indictment, and if it be ſo, I would deſire to have Council to argue the Errors of the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have heard it twice read in Engliſh, and once in Latin, and that is all that is allowed to any one in your Caſe, I never knew the Record of any Indictment ſhewn to any Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Aſhton. Suppoſe there be any Error in it.

Mr. D. Recorder. I am not to ſuppoſe any ſuch thing, if there is any, it has been read to you, aſſign it and the Court will conſider of it.

Mr. Aſhton. If I can aſſign the Errors in the Indictment, may I have the advantage of it then?

Mr. D. Recorder. If there be Errors, you will have the Advantage of them: If you will aſſign them; if there be none, you can have none.

Mr. Aſhton. Then I ſay, if there be words in the Indictment that there are no ſuch Words in Nature, then, Sir, I am told it is a Vicious and Erroneous Indictment, and that is enough to viciate the Indictment.

Mr. D Recorder. No ſuch Words in Nature? It is hard to tell what you mean by that; perhaps there are terms of Art in the Law, which though you are not acquainted with, we are.

Mr. Aſhton. Then there are ſuch Words in Nature.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is an inſenſible Expreſſion, Words in Nature!

Mr. Aſhton. I am informed that even a Letter in an Indictment is enough to viciate it, or if it be falſe Latin, that will make it an Erroneous Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No, that is not ſo; but if you will tell me what that Letter is, I'll tell you what I ſay to it; it may, or it may not be material.

Mr. Aſhton. We know it was lately diſputed in a Caſe of this Nature at this Place, and I am informed the Court were of Opinion, if it had been in the Body of the Indictment, it had been an Error.

Mr. D. Recorder. If you pleaſe to tell me wherein the Error in your Indictment conſiſts, I may be able to give you a good Anſwer to it, or you will have the advantage of it.

Mr. Aſhton. I ſay it conſiſts in this, the Word Cymba is written with an S in the Indictment, whereas it ſhould be with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. How do you know it?

Mr. Aſhton. It is no matter how I know it, I have ſome reaſon to know it, it may be.

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Hardeſty, look upon the Record.

Mr. Aſhton. With Submiſſion, that is an Error, for there is no ſuch word as Cymba with an S.

Cl. of Arr. It is a long Indictment; will you pleaſe to ask him where about it is?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Aſhton, will you tell me where 'tis written?

Mr. Aſhton. In the Indictment when you come to ſpeak of Cymba a Boat.

Mr. D. Recorder. By the Sound I cannot diſtinguiſh whether it be S or C.

Mr. Aſhton. Sir, I hope you will do me the Juſtice to examine the Indictment it ſelf.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk is looking upon it; how is it Mr. Hardeſty? Is it with an S or a C?

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk has read it, and he certifies me it is in both places with a C, which is true Latin.

Mr. Aſhton. Is it in all places with a C?

Cl of Arr. I have lookt in two places, and 'tis right; I'll look further, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray do. Which he did.

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C in all places.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk tells me it is the ſame, and right in every place, and he has looks over all the Indictment, as to the matter.

Mr. Aſhton. Then Sir I ſubmit to it.

Mr. D. Recorder. Make Proclamation for Silence; Which was done.

Mr.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preſton, or rather Sir Richard Grahme, and Mr John Aſhton, Ye have been Indicted, Arraigned and Convicted of High Treaſon againſt their preſent Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, whom God preſerve. Ye have had a long, a fair, and favourable Tryal as any Perſons that ever have been tryed at this Bar.

The Jury that has paſſed upon your Lives and Deaths has convicted you; and the Court are now to do their laſt Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon ſuch Crimes as ye ſtand Convicted of.

It is a great trouble to me to pronounce a Judgment that is ſo heavy upon you; but I muſt ſay, the Evidence that has been given againſt you, was ſo clear, and I ſuppoſe not only convincing to the Twelve Men that tryed you, but to all By-ſtanders, that I can do it with that ſatisfaction that becomes one who is intruſted with the King's Juſtice, that the Law may obtain, and that there ſhould be no Interruption of Juſtice. And the Sentence that the Law has declared ſhould be pronounced in this Caſe, is this:

That Ye do reſpectively go to the place from whence Ye came; from thence to be drawn upon a Sledge to the place of Execution, to be there hang'd up by the Neck, to be cut down while Ye are yet alive, to have your Hearts and Bowels taken out before your Faces, and your Members cut off and Burnt, Your Heads ſevered from your Bodies, Your Bodies divided into four Quarters, Your Heads and Bodies reſpectively to be diſpoſed of according to the King's Will and Pleaſure; and the Lord have mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were conveyed away to Newgate, the Place from whence they came.

The Tryal of Henry Harriſon, Gent.

Die Mercurii Sexto die Aprilis, Anno Regni Domini Gulielmi & Dominæ Mariæ Regis & Reginæ Angliæ, &c. Quarto.

THe Keeper of the Priſon of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court being then ſate, bring up the Body of Henry Harriſon, Gent. to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, London, who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found that Day by the Grand-Jury for the City of London, in manner following:

Cl. of Arr. HEnry Harriſon, hold up thy Hand. Which he did. You ſtand Indicted by the Name of Henry Harriſon, late of London, Gent. for that you not having the fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the Fourth Day of January, in the Third Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, of England, &c. about Eleven of the Clock in the Night of the ſame Day, with Force and Arms, &c. at London, viz. in the Pariſh of St Peter Cornhil, in the Ward of Limeſtreet in London aforeſaid, being in a certain Coach with one Andrew Clenche Doctor of Phyſick, and a certain Man yet unknown, in and upon the ſaid Andrew Clenche in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, Violently, Feloniouſly and of your Malice forethought, did make an Aſſault. And that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the ſaid Man unknown, with a Pocket Handkerchief with a Coal in the ſame, being put, of the value of Two Pence, about the Neck of him the ſaid Andrew Clenche, then and there Feloniouſly, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought did put, faſten and bind; and that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon with the ſaid Handkerchief with the Coal aforeſaid in it, by you the ſaid Henry Harriſon with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the aforeſaid Man unknown about the Neck of the ſaid Andrew Clenche then as aforeſaid, put faſtened and bound, him the ſaid Andrew Clenche then and there with Force of Arms, &c. Feloniouſly, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought did choak and ſtrangle, by Reaſon of which choaking and ſtrangling of the ſaid Andrew Clenche by you the ſaid Henry Harriſon, with the Handkerchief aforeſaid, with the Coal as aforeſaid put in it, he the ſaid Andrew Clenche inſtantly died: So that you the ſaid Henry Harriſon with the Help and Aſſiſtance of the ſaid Man unknown, him the ſaid Andrew Clenche the ſaid Fourth Day of January in the Year aforeſaid at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid in manner and form aforeſaid, Feloniouſly, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought, did Kill and Murther againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen now, their Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, Henry Harriſon, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand Indicted, or not Guilty?

Mr. Harriſon. Not Guilty in Thought, Word nor Deed.

Cl. of Ar. Culpreiſt, How will you be Tryed?

Mr. Harriſon. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Then

Then the ſaid Mr Harriſon was taken away from the Bar by the Keeper of Newgate.

And afterwards the ſame Day, about Eleven of the Clock in the Morning, the ſaid Henry Harriſon was brought to the Bar, and he deſired the Court that he might then be Tryed, which was granted, and thoſe Perſons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You Henry Harriſon, Theſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and perſonally do appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and you upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Harriſon, you may challenge ſuch of the Jury as you ſhall think fit before they be Sworn.

Then the Jury was called and ſworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve ſworn were theſe whoſe Names follow:

JURORS.

John Roll	John Lawford
Nathaniel Houlton	Nicholas Wildeboare
Michael Pindar	Robert Williamſon
James Hulbert	William Merriden
Joſeph Howe	Thomas Simpſon
Richard Chewne	Thomas Pakeman

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is uſual.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I have made no Challenges, becauſe I do believe the Jury to be honeſt Men.

Cl. of Arr.——Henry Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of Henry Harriſon, late of London, Gent. &c. [he reads the Indictment.] Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince. If you find him not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Darnell,—My Lord, Mr. Harriſon's Agents or Friends have, ſince the laſt Seſſions, made or conveyed away a young Man that was a Principal Evidence againſt him.

L. C. J. That is a very ill thing, and if it be prov'd, it will no way conduce to Mr Harriſon's Advantage.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I know nothing of it. But my Lord, one of my Witneſſes that would have been material for me, is lately dead, Sir Edward Hungerford's Son.

Mr. Darnell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn. I am of Council for the King and Queen againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands Indicted for the Murther of Dr Andrew Clenche, which was as barbarous a Murder as any that hath been committed in this Age. And conſidering it was done in the Dark, I think there will be given as clear an Evidence of it againſt Mr. Harriſon the Priſoner, as can be expected. And that is, was upon this occaſion; one Mrs Vanwicke a Widow (between whom and Mr. Harriſon there was a great Kindneſs) prevailed with Dr Clenche, to whom ſhe was indebted twenty Pounds, to lend her ſo much more as would make it up one hundred and twenty Pounds, and to take a Mortgage of a Houſe of hers in Buckingham Court near Charing-Croſs for his Security; and Mr. Harriſon was preſent with Mrs Vanwicke at the lending of the reſt of the Money, and executing of the Mortgage, as he was wont to be at the Management of her Affairs; but when the time came that it was to be repaid, the Dr could not get his Money, and Mrs Vanwicke having but an Eſtate for Life in the Houſe, and having long delayed the Doctor, he brought an Ejectment for the recovering of the Houſe, upon which the Priſoner came to Dr Clenche, and abuſed him with very ſcurrilous Language, and his Paſſion growing higher, he laid his hand upon his Sword, and would have drawn it, and if it had not been for one Mr. Johnſon, 'twas thought he would have kill'd the Doctor at that time; ſo that the Doctor deſired Mr. Johnſon to take the buſineſs upon himſelf, and to act in his own Name, he was ſo much afraid of him. And it will be proved further to you, that at another time the Priſoner ſaid, That Dr Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and deſerved to have his Throat cut. And ſometime after this, Mrs Vanwicke would have borrowed ſome more Money of the Doctor, but he refuſed to lend it her, whereupon ſhe acquainting the Priſoner with it, he ſaid, leave him to me (Madam) I'll warrant you, I'll manage him, he is a Rogue, and deſerves to have his Throat cut. And afterwards about St. Thomas's day laſt, the Priſoner went to Mrs Weſt the Tennant, who dwelt in the Houſe mortgaged to Dr Clenche, and deſired of Mrs Weſt to have ſome Money for Mrs Vanwicke, and it ſhould be diſcounted in part of the then next Chriſtmas Rent. But the ſaid Mrs Weſt refuſed to pay him any, telling him that ſhe and her Husband were forbid by Dr Clenche and the Ground Land Lord, to pay any more to Mrs Vanwicke, and thereupon the Priſoner expreſſed his further Malice againſt the Doctor, and ſaid he is a great Rogue, and a Villain, and deſerves to have his Throat cut, and will not dye in his Bed. And, Gentlemen, ſoon after the Priſoner began to put his malicious Deſign againſt the Doctor in Execution, and the Method he took was firſt to change his Lodgings, for on the day before Chriſtmas Eve laſt, he took new Lodgings at one Mr. Garways in Thread-Needle-ſtreet, near the Old Exchange, attended by a Foot-boy, pretending himſelf to be a Parliament Man, and that he was juſt then come out of the Country, and lay in his Lodging there every Night, until the firſt day of January following, but lay out that Night, and the two next Nights following. And whilſt he lodged at this Mr. Garways this matter hapned, which does conduce ſomewhat towards the diſcovery of this Murther. One

Even-

Evening the Priſoner being in his Chamber there, and one Mrs Jackſon, the Daughter of Mrs Garway, making a Fire for him, he did take out his Handkerchief, and held it before the Fire to dry it, which ſhe took great notice of, becauſe it was coarſe and dirty, and not fit for his Quality (as ſhe thought) it being made of ordinary Indian ſtuff, like her Mothers Maids Apron. And, Gentlemen, this very Handkerchief was the ſame with which the Murder was committed, and this Mrs Jackſon will ſwear it to be the ſame, for it is a very remarkable one, and it will be produced to you. And we ſhall ſhew you further, that on the Third Day of January (being the Day before this Murder was committed) he cauſed a ſham Letter to be left for him at his Lodgings at this Mr. Garway's, as written from a Friend of his that was Sick in the Country, earneſtly preſſing him to come quickly down to him: And we ſhall prove that the ſame Evening he being with Mrs Vanwick in Woodſtreet-Counter, did again threaten Dr. Clenche, and ſaid that he was a Rogue, and he would have his Blood. And upon the Fourth Day of January laſt he again changed his Lodgings, and took new ones at one Mr Jones's a Cane Chair-maker in St Paul's Churchyard, and there he pretended himſelf to be a Country Gentleman, juſt then come out of Cumberland, and brought in a Portmanteau Trunk thither. And the ſame Day he ſent a Letter to Mrs Garway where he had lodged before, acquainting her that he was gone out of Town for a Week or ten Days. And, to give you farther Satisfaction, we ſhall prove that upon the ſame Fourth Day of January in the Night of which this unfortunate Gentleman was Murder'd, the Priſoner was at one Mr. Robert Humſton's Lodgings at the Golden Key in Fleetſtreet over againſt Fetter-lane End, at near Nine of the Clock at Night, and being ask'd by Mr. Humſton to ſtay and Sup with him, he ſaid he could not, for he had been about earneſt Buſineſs that Day, which was to be done that Night, and that a Gentleman ſtayed for him in the Street to go with him about it, and ſo he went away. And ſoon after, about Nine of the Clock the ſame Night, two Men ſtanding in Fleetſtreet at Fetter lane End, call'd for a Coach, and ask'd the Coachman if he knew Dr. Clenche who dwelt in Brownlow-ſtreet in Holborn; and the Coachman reply'd, he did know the Street, but not the Doctor, whereupon they went into the Coach, and ordered him to drive to the End of Brownlowſtreet, and when they came thither, one of them called to the Coachman and bad him go to Dr. Clench's and tell him, that two Gentlemen in a Coach at the End of the Street deſired him to go with them to a Patient that was very Sick, which the Coachman did. And he found the Doctor in his Night-Gown and Slippers, and juſt a going to Bed; but he immediately dreſſed himſelf, and went to them into the Coach. And it fell out very happily for the further Diſcovery of this Murther, that while this Coach ſtood at the End of Brownlowſtreet, a Young Gentlewoman ſtanding at her own Door near it, and fancying that while the Coachman went on the Errand, the Gentlemen would ſlip out of the Coach(I think they call it Bilking) ſhe watch'd them. And a Lamp that lighted croſs Holborn over againſt Brownlowſtreet End, and another about the middle of Brownlowſtreet, gave ſuch a light into the Coach that ſhe plainly ſaw one of the Men that ſat in it, and ſee him look out of the Coach after the Coachman, and heard him ſwear at the Coachman, becauſe he made no more haſte in going to the Doctor's Houſe, and ſhe is very certain that the Priſoner at the Bar is the ſame Perſon that look'd out of the Coach, and that did ſwear at the Coachman, and is more confident of it from the remarkableneſs of his Voice. For ſhe hearing of this Murther and remembering theſe Circumſtances, ſhe went to Newgate to ſee the Priſoner, and hearing his Voice in another Room, before ſhe ſaw him, ſhe declar'd to the Perſons that were then with her, that the Voice ſhe then heard was the Perſons Voice that ſhe ſaw look out of the Coach, and that did ſwear at the Coach-man; and afterwards when ſhe came into the Room where the Priſoner was, though with ſeveral other Men, ſhe pointed to him as the Perſon, and ſhe hearing him then ſpeak again, declared to the Perſons with her, that both by his Voice and by his Countenance ſhe knew him to be the ſame Man. And, my Lord, after thoſe Gentlemen had gotten the Doctor into the Coach, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him make haſte and drive them to Leaden Hall-Market, and when they were come within Holbourn-Bars, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him drive faſter; whereupon the Coachman drove them very faſt through Holbourn to Leaden-Hall-Market-Gate, and when he came there, one of them bad him drive to the Pye without Aldgate (before which time, without doubt, the Murther was committed upon the Doctor, for his Hat was found next Morning in Holborn near Fetter-lane End, but the driving ſo long about after is ſuppoſed to be done leaſt the Doctor might recover) and when they were come without Aldgate, one of them ordered the Coachman to ask there for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon; which he did, and being anſwered that no ſuch Perſon was there, he ordered the Coachman to drive back again to Leaden-Hall, and when they came there, one of them called the Coachman and gave him three Shillings and Six Pence, and bad him go into the Market there to one Hunt's a Poulterer, and buy them a couple of Fowls, but the Coachman could not find any Hunt a Poulterer, but however he bought a couple of Fowls for three Shillings, and when he came with them to his Coach, the two Gentlemen were gone and the Doctor left in the Coach murther'd with a Handkerchief tied faſt about his Neck with a Coal in it (which will be proved to be the Priſoner's Handkerchief.) Beſides, there was a Boy in the Street there who took notice of the Coachman's being ſent of an Errand, and ſaw the two Perſons come out of the Coach in great haſte, and he going towards the Coach before they went out of it, one of them did ſwear at him to be gone, and of him the Boy took moſt notice, and was as poſitive as any Man can be to the Perſon of one that he never ſaw before, that the Priſoner now at the Bar was one of them, and was the Perſon that did then ſwear at him. But this Witneſs is ſpirited away, and cannot be heard of, although he hath been deſcribed in the Gazette, and diligent ſearch and inquiry has been made after him. But we have his Examination upon Oath before the Coroner; and we muſt ſubmit to the Court how far that ſhall be admitted as Evidence.

Gentlemen, We will call our Witneſſes, and if they prove all this matter, I believe every Man here will be ſatisfied that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of this baſe murther.

Mr.

Mr. Darnell. Pray call and ſwear Mr. George Wigmore. (Who was ſworn with others.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray Mr. Wigmore tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Money that was lent by Dr. Clenche, and to whom.

Mr. George Wigmore. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, there was a Draught of a Mortgage from Mrs. Vanwicke to Dr. Clenche, made by a Gentleman of Grays-Inn for the Sum of one hundred and twenty Pounds, and I ingroſs'd it; and I paid by the Doctor's Order above threeſcore Pounds of the Money, and the reſt of it was ſatisfied before; and upon ſealing of the Mortgage for the Money, Mr. Harriſon, and one Mr. Rowe fell out about their Dividend of the Money, and called one another ill Names; and Mr. Rowe produced a Bill of what he had done and laid out for Coach-hire and other things for Mrs. Vanwicke, and Mr. Harriſon and he had high words about it, and called one another Rogues; ſo I told them if they could not agree, I would put the Money up again, and carry it home; but Mrs. Vanwicke and they did agree at laſt, and ſealed the Mortgage, and I paid the Money; and Mrs. Vanwicke and Mr. Harriſon took out twenty Pounds of the Money, and paid it to Mr. Rowe; and after Mr. Rowe was gone, they deſired me to go with them to the Young Devil Tavern, and they both uſed hard Expreſſions there againſt Mr. Rowe.

L. C. J. Who was the Mortgage made to?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, it was made to Dr. Clenche for one hundred and twenty Pounds.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray, Sir will you tell the Jury how much Money the Gentlewoman had, and if Mr. Rowe had not ſtept between me and her, I had not been in Queſtion.

Mr. Wigmore. Mrs. Vanwicke acknowledged that the Money I paid her, made up one hundred and twenty Pounds.

L. C. J. What did you hear the Priſoner ſay againſt Dr. Clenche?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, I do ſay that he was very troubleſome to the Doctor.

L. C. J. Were there any Reproaches caſt upon the Doctor at that time?

Mr. Wigmore. No my Lord, only upon Rowe, becauſe he was a Truſtee.

Mr. Darnell Did you hear him ſay any thing againſt the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. Indeed I cannot particularly ſay.

L. C. J. He is upon his Oath, and he is ſenſible and underſtands the Queſtion.

Mr. Wigmore. He did ſay very ugly Words, and when I met him afterwards in the High-way, he was very huffy, and I thought he would have drawn his Sword upon me.

L. C. J. What did he ſay of the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. I cannot ſay particularly what he ſaid.

L. C. J. Stand down.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Thomas Johnſon. (Who was ſworn and ſtood up.)

Mr. Darnell. Sir, Pray give the Court an account what you know concerning this Matter.

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I believe I ſhall ſay nothing that Mr. Harriſon will contradict, I was Attorny for Dr. Clenche between him and Mrs. Vanwicke, and I ſued Mr. Rowe that was bound with Mrs. Vanwicke in a Bond to perform Covenants for re-payment of the Money lent her by Dr. Clenche upon Mortgage; and I adviſed the Dr. and told him, don't let us trouble the Tenant, but let us take Rowe firſt; and I ſued Rowe, and had him arreſted, and after ſome time, I ſaw that the Mortgage muſt do our buſineſs, for Rowe could not pay the Money, whereupon I cauſed a Declaration in Ejectment to be delivered againſt Mrs. Vanwick's Tenant of the Houſe Mortgaged by her to Dr. Clenche and then Mr. Harriſon came to me, and he expreſſed himſelf againſt the Doctor after a ſtrange rate, and laid his Hand upon his Sword; ſo my Lord I ſaid to him, what a Fool do you make of your ſelf? muſt none go to Law, but they muſt ask you leave, I ſuppoſe Mr. Harriſon cannot deny this. Then Mr. Harriſon preferred a Petition to the Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal for Mrs. Vanwicke, and thereby ſuggeſted to their Lordſhips that ſhe was wronged in the Purchaſe and in the Mortgage Money, and that twenty Pounds of it was a former debt of her Husbands; and he finding ſhe could have no Relief before them without payment of the Mortgage Money, he grew troubleſome; yet ſays I, Mr. Harriſon, What ſhe hath done, I cannot help, but if ſhe would pay the reſt, I told him I would abate her twenty Pounds, and the Intereſt Money alſo.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, Sir, did the Doctor deſire you to act for him in your own Name, becauſe he had no mind to meet with Mrs. Vanwicke and the Priſoner?

Mr. Johnſon. The Doctor did find himſelf too deeply concerned with them, and he did not care to have to do with them, whether it was that he was afraid of his Life, I cannot ſay; but he ſaid to me, Pray, Sir, go on, I will put all into your Hands, and I will truſt you with all the Affair, and let them come to you, and not trouble me, own it to be your own; and I told him, I feared none of them, and the Doctor gave out that he had made over all to me, although he had not, and upon this I fear, comes this unfortunate Buſineſs, and the Doctor's Lady muſt look after it her ſelf.

L. C. J. What did he ſay when he had laid his Hand upon his Sword in your Study?

Mr. Johnſon. He ſaid the Dr. had cheated the Widow, and he ſaid that he would be revenged on him, as near as my Memory will ſerve me, I ſuppoſe he will not deny it; whether he did this in a Paſſion, or to affright the Doctor or no, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was that before you offered to abate the twenty Pounds?

Mr. Johnſon. It was before I offered to abate it.

Mr. Harriſon. How long was it before Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Johnſon. I think it was about a Fortnight or three Weeks, or a little more.

Mr. Harriſon. I never threatned the Doctor in my Life, but I ſaid Rowe had been a Villain and a Cheat, and he and Rowe were the Men, and I ſhall make it appear that the Dr. never wrong'd the Widow.

L. C. J. How came Rowe to be intruſted or concerned with the Money?

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, Mr. Cornelius Vandinanker, a Merchant, gave a Legacy of five hundred Pounds to the Widow Vanwicke and her Children, and Mr. Row was a Truſtee on the Purchaſe, and had by that the management of the Affair.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. George Howard.

(Who being Sworn ſtood up.)

Mr.

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Howard, Give the Court an account of what you know concerning the Priſoner's threatning Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was at Joe's Coffee-houſe near Warwick-Houſe in Holbourn, ſome conſiderable time before Dr. Clenche was murdered, where Mr. Harriſon uſed ſeveral very virulent Expreſſions againſt Dr. Clenche; amongſt others, one was, That he was a Rogue and a Raſcal, and deſerved to have his Throat cut. Mrs. Vanwick was then in Company, and they both ſaid, That they then came from Dr. Clenche's.

Mr. Darnell. You are ſure he ſaid that Dr. Clenche deſerved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Howard. Yes: He ſaid, That Dr. Clenche deſerved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Harriſon. Who was I talking to?

Mr. Howard. You were talking to Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

(Who was ſworn and ſtood up)

Mrs. Sheriff. My Lord, Mrs. Vanwick came to my Houſe with Mr. Harriſon, and deſired me to go with her to Dr. Clenche's Houſe; and when we came there, ſhe deſired him to let her have Twenty Pounds more; and he ſaid, no. If his Houſe were full of Money, he would not lend her any more, ſo long as ſhe kept Mr. Harriſon Company, for he would ſpend it; and he adviſed her to be a Gentleman's Houſe-keeper, and he would help her to a Place; and told her withal, That ſhe owed him one hundred and twenty Pounds, for which he would take one hundred Pounds; and we left Mr. Harriſon behind us at my Houſe, and did not take him with us, becauſe we were afraid he might anger the Doctor, and fall out with him; ſo when we came back, Mr. Harriſon asked Mrs. Vanwick, what Dr. Clenche ſaid; Why, ſays ſhe, he ſaith, That he will not lend me any more Money while I keep you Company, for you will ſpend it, and that I muſt go to Service. To Service! ſaid Mr. Harriſon. God damn him, have a Perſon of your Quality go to Service! he deſerves to have his Throat cut; let me alone, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed, and ſo away they went together.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not you ſay, that as you hop'd to be ſav'd, that I was innocent of the Thing?

L. C. J. She does not accuſe you of doing the Fact, but gives an account of ſome Expreſſions that paſſed from you.

Mrs. Sheriff. You were always talking againſt Dr. Clenche, and you ſaid, God damn him, he was an old Rogue, and that Mrs. Vanwick was almoſt ſtarved to Death.

Mr. Harriſon. Rowe, Rowe, I meant, my Lord.

(The Priſoner being then in a Paſſion.)

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, do not fall into a Paſſion, it may be more to your advantage, in the making your Defence, if you keep your Temper.

L. C. J. Witneſs, What were the Words that he ſaid againſt Doctor Clenche?

Mrs. Sheriff. Why, he ſpeaking of Doctor Clenche, ſaid to Mrs. Vanwick, God damn him, would he have a Perſon of your Quality go to Service! he deſerves to have his Throat cut; well, Madam, ſays he, be contented, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed.

Mr. Harriſon. What had you for your Swearing?

Coroner for the King and Queen. Witneſs, he asketh you, if you had any thing for your ſwearing againſt him.

Mrs. Sheriff. No, I had nothing, neither have I need of any thing; I had not ſo much as my Coach-hire.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elizabeth Weſt.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Miſtreſs, give an account to the Court, what you know about the Priſoner's coming to demand Rent of you, and what paſſed.

Mrs Weſt. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, this Gentleman, the Priſoner, came to me two or three Days before St. Thomas's Day laſt, and deſired me to give him ſome Rent for Mrs. Vanwick, and I told him, I had no Power to pay him, becauſe I was warned by Dr. Clenche, to pay no more; ſays he to me again, Dr. Clenche and Rowe, are great Rogues and great Villains. Sir, ſays I to him again, I believe that the Doctor is a very honeſt Man: No, ſays Mr. Harriſon, he is a great Villain, and he will never die in his Bed; which of them he meant, Mr. Rowe or Dr. Clenche, I cannot tell. And Mrs. Vanwick, and Mr. Harriſon, a little time before that, preſſed me, to let them have ſome Shop Goods in part of her Rent, to grow due, and ſhe made great Complaint, that her Children were ready to ſtarve, and I then told them, that Mr. Johnſon had fore-warned me to pay any more Rent to Mrs. Vanwick, and if I did, I ſhould pay it again; and therefore I would not pay any more Rent to her, or deliver her any Goods, until ſhe had agreed with Mr. Johnſon, and then Mr. Harriſon ſaid, that Mr. Johnſon was a great Villain, and a great Rogue, and that they had all combined together to cheat the Widdow. And Mr. Johnſon being at my Houſe, Mrs. Vanwick fell upon him in a great Rage, and ſaid ſhe would tear his Throat out, and laid hold on him, and Mr. Johnſon got from her, and went away in great haſte. And the laſt time I ſaw Dr. Clenche, I preſſed very hard upon him, to let Mrs. Vanwick have more Money; and the Doctor ſaid, that ſhe would never do any good with it, for ſhe ſpent it all upon Mr. Harriſon; and I wiſhed him to let her have twenty Pounds more and he ſaid, that he adviſed her to go to Service, and that he had wiſhed her to a Service of Twenty Pounds a Year, and ſhe abuſed him for it.

L. C. J. What Cloaths had the Priſoner on?

Mrs. Weſt. My Lord, he had an old Thread-bare black Cloth Suit of Cloaths on, which looked very ſhabby.

Mr. Harriſon. What Religion are you of, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Weſt. I was born and bred a Proteſtant.

Mr. Harriſon. I believe you are a Papiſt, and will Swear any thing, you keep Roman Catholicks in your Houſe, they have murdered Dr. Clenche, for ought I know.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Harriſon ever lodge in your Houſe?

Mrs. Weſt. No, my Lord, I have none but Perſons of Quality lodge in my Houſe, and they belong to the preſent Government.

Mr. Darnell. Call Ann Watſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Harriſon's taking of Lodgings at Mr. Garway's Houſe, and when it was?

Anne Watſon. He came about ſix a Clock at Night, the Day before Chriſtmas-Eve laſt, to my Maſter's, Mr. Garway's Houſe, and told us, that he was newly come out of the Country; and lodged there that Night, and ſo he did until, and upon the laſt Night of December; and on the firſt Day of January, he went out, and ſtaid out that Night; and on the Sunday, the third of January laſt, at Night, he came again with a Perſon with him, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and things, and paid for his Lodging; and in his abſence, there was a Letter left for him, which I gave him, and he ſaid, it came out of the Country, and that he had a Friend ſick in the Country, and did intend to go down to ſee him, being one from whom he expected a Legacy, and he left that Letter on the Kitchin Window, and on the Monday after, being the fourth Day of January laſt, he ſent a Letter, ſignifying he was gone out of Town.

(Then the Letter was produced, Marked with the Penny-Poſt Mark.)

Mr. Darnell. Who knows Mr. Harriſon's Hand? Mr. Johnſon, take that Letter and look upon it, and tell the Court if you think it to be Mr. Harriſon's Hand.

(Mr. Johnſon takes the Letter and looks upon it.)

Mr. Johnſon. My Lord, I believe it to be Mr. Harriſon's Hand.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Mr. Clerk of the Peace, read the Letter; and the Subſcription firſt.

(Clerk of the Peace reads.

To Mrs. Garraway, at the Hand and Apple in Thread-Needle-Street, near the Royal-Exchange, Preſent.

Mrs. Garraway,

I Am ſorry it ſhould be ſuch an inconvenience to you, as it is. I have left with your Maid, Three Half Crowns, and if it is not enough, I will give you more. I am gone out of Town, for a Week or Ten Days, and as ſoon as I come again, I will wait on you, which is all till I ſee you, from

Your Friend,

4*th* of Jan. 1691. and Servant,

H. Harriſon.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Henry Garway and his Wife. (Who were called and ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Garway, take that Letter, and look upon it, and tell the Court, when you received it.

Then ſhe takes the Letter, which was produced and read as before, and looked upon it.

Mrs. Garway. My Lord, I received this Letter on Monday the 4th Day of January laſt.

L. C. J. Watſon, when did he leave the Lodgings, ſay you?

Anne Watſon. He went away the firſt of January laſt, about nine a Clock in the Morning, and returned not that Night, but on the ſecond of January laſt, he was at my Miſtreſs's Shop again (as my Miſtreſs told me) and he came about five a Clock on the next Sunday Night (being the third of January laſt) with a Perſon with him, to my Maſter's Houſe, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and things, and left three Half Crowns with me for his Lodgings, which I gave to my Miſtreſs.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Catharine Jackſon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning Mr. Harriſon's coming to lodge at Mr. Garway's, and when he went away, and what you know of any Handkerchief he had.

Mrs. Jackſon. He came on the Day before Chriſtmas-Eve, to lodge at my Father's, Mr. Garway's Houſe, and lodged there ſeveral Nights, and went away the third of January at Night, with his things, but was abſent ſome Nights between his coming and going away, and whilſt he lodged there, I obſerved a Handkerchief in his Hand, as I was making a Fire for him in his Chamber, and the more, becauſe he had ſaid, he was a Parliament Man, and I thought it more like a Sea-man's Handkerchief, than a Parliament-man's, and our Maid had an Apron of the ſame kind of Stuff.

(Then the Handkerchief was produced in Court, by the Coroner, and the Coal in it, wherewith Dr. Clenche was ſtrangled.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Jackſon, I deſire that you would look upon that Handkerchief, and tell the Court what you know of it.

Mrs. Jackſon. This is the Handkerchief that I ſaw Mr. Harriſon hold to the Fire, when I was making of it in his Chamber, or very like that Handkerchief, for I obſerved it to be very like my Mother's Maid's Apron.

(Then a piece of the Maid's Apron was produced, and they being compared, were very like.)

Mr. Harriſon. Did you hear me ſay, I was a Parliament Man.

Mrs. Jackſon. Yes, I heard you ſay ſo.

Mr. Harriſon. Perhaps, you might hear my Boy ſay ſo.

Mrs. Jackſon. Your Foot-Boy ſaid, you were a Parliament Man: And you ſaid ſo your ſelf.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Garway again.

(He appeared.)

Mr. Darnell. Where is the Letter you receiv'd from Mr. Harriſon, ſince he was a Priſoner?

L. C. J. What do you ſay about a Letter that came to your Houſe from the Priſoner?

Mr. Garway. My Lord, I had this Letter from him laſt Saturday, directed to my Wife, and I believe it to be his Hand.

(He produceth the Letter.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Read the Letter, Mr. Tanner.

(Clerk Peace reads.)

To Mrs. Garway, at the Hand and Apple in Thread-Needle-ſtreet, behind the Royal Exchange, Preſent.

Mrs. Garway,

I Was informed Yeſterday, that you are to appear againſt me, at next Seſſions. I am ſure, you never heard me mention Dr. Clenche, in all your Life; and if you do, it will look like Malice. My Lord Chief Juſtice is ſenſible of the Wrong done me. This is all from

Your Servant,

Henry Harriſon.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, Did I ever tell you, That I was ſenſible of it?

(To which he made no Reply.)

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. John Cartwright.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. I would have you declare, what you heard Mr. Harriſon ſay, concerning Doctor Clenche.

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, upon the Third of January laſt, Mr. Harriſon came to Woodſtreet Compter; it was on a Sunday in the Evening, about Five or Six a Clock, I was ſtanding in the Gate, and I let him in. Aſſoon as he came in, he asked, how poor Mrs. Vanwick did; ſays he, ſhe hath been wronged of Five Hundred Pounds within this 12 Months: Then I let him into the Court, and he went into her Chamber; and about half an hour after, I was ſent by my Maſter, to require ſome Chamber-rent of Mrs. Vanwick, and I heard Mr. Harriſon and ſhe at high Words, and in a great Paſſion, and I heard Mr. Harriſon ſwear, God damn his Blood, he would be reveng'd of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winch, I cannot tell which, and he would have his Blood, e're it were long.

Mr. Harriſon. Where were you?

J. Cartwright. My Lord, I was at the Chamber-door, and there was no Body on that ſide of the Houſe, but Mr. Harriſon, Mrs. Vanwick, and my ſelf.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Jones.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, I will call one to prove, where he took a new Lodging, the very Day the Murther was done.

L. C. J. Cartwright, was that in Mrs. Vanwick's Chamber that you heard him ſwear ſo?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, my Lord, in her Chamber, and none was with her, but he only.

Mr. Darnell. You, the laſt Witneſs Mrs. Jones, when did Mr. Harriſon come to Lodge at your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. He came on a Monday.

Mr. Darnell. What Day of the Month was it?

Mrs. Jones. I can't tell what Day of the Month, for I did not ſet it down.

Mr. Darnell. Was it the Monday before he was taken?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, it was the Monday before.

Mr. Darnell. Whence did he pretend to come?

Mrs. Jones. He ſaid, that he was come out of the Country, and had formerly lodged in Fleet-ſtreet, and that where he had lodged formerly, they had left off Houſe-keeping, and were gone into the Country.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. In St. Paul's Church-Yard, at the Sign of the Golden Ball.

Mr. Darnell. Call James Howſeman.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you tell what you know, about Mr. Harriſon's being at Mr. Jones's Houſe.

Howſeman. My Lord, he came in about Eight a Clock at Night, and brought a Porter with him, and a Portmanteau Trunk; and after that, the Porter went out a little before him, and then he followed him, and went out after.

Mr. Darnell. Did you hear him ſay, from whence he came?

Howſeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Darnell. Call Anne Evans.

(Who did not appear.)

Mr. Darnell. Then Call Mr. Robert Humſton.

(Who was ſworn)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Humſton, I deſire you will give the Court an Account of Mr. Harriſon's being at your Houſe, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, I met Mr. Harriſon on Monday the 4th of January laſt, and he told me, he was going to the Compter, to a Gentlewoman that was much oppreſſed, and that he wanted Money to get her releaſed; upon which, I gave him ſome Money, and after ſome Diſcourſe, I deſired him to bring home my Gown, that I formerly lent him, and ſeemed angry with him, for that he had ſeveral times promiſed me to bring it home, but had failed therein; and thereupon he promiſed, that I ſhould have it that Night: And that Evening about Nine of the Clock, he came to my Lodgings, and brought home my Gown, and when he came, I asked him, if he had gotten Mrs. Vanwick Releaſed: And Mr. Harriſon anſwered, No. Upon which, I blamed him for neglecting an old Friend, and Mr. Harriſon excuſed it; telling me, that he had met with ſome Perſons upon earneſt Buſineſs which prevented him. And then I asked Mr. Harriſon to ſtay and Sup with me, but he refuſed it, ſaying, that he had been about extraordinary Buſineſs that Day, which muſt be done that Night, and that a Gentleman ſtayed in the Street for him, and they two were going to do it.

L. C. J. Where do you live? And how long ſtayed he at your Houſe?

Mr. Humſton. I lodged then at the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Fetter-lane End: He came to my Lodgings about Nine of the Clock at Night, and ſtayed there but a little time.

L. C. J. What manner of Cloaths had he on?

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, he had a Cloak on, but I cannot tell what Cloaths he had under it, he brought my Gown up under his Cloak.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Eſther King.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you know what time Mr. Harriſon was at Mr. Humſton's Lodgings.

Eſther King. It was on Monday the Fourth day of January laſt, about Nine of the Clock at Night, as near as I can gueſs, the Shop was ſhut up, and I let him out.

Mr. Darnell. Where was it?

Eſther King. At the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet over againſt Fetter lane End.

Mr. Darnell. What Cloaths had he on?

Eſther King. I cannot tell well, but he had a Cloak on, I do not know what Cloaths he had on beſides.

Mr. Harriſon. Was it Eight or Nine a Clock.

Eſther King. It was near Nine, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. Darnell. Swear John Sikes the Coachman. (Which was done.)

Mr. Darnell. Give an Account to the Court, what you know about carrying two Men in your Coach, and how you found Dr. Clenche murdered.

John Sikes. My Lord, on the 4th of January laſt, being Monday, I was at the Play-Houſe, and there I took up a Man and a Woman, and carried them into the City; ſo I brought the Gentleman back again, to the Green Dragon Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet; and then he ſaid, he would pay me by the hour; he ſaid, that it was but much about nine a Clock. Then I left him, and was driving up the Street towards the Temple, and two Men ſtood in Fleet-ſtreet about Fetter-lane End, and they asked me, if I knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-ſtreet in Holbourne: I told them, that I did not know Dr. Clenche, but I knew the Street. So they went into my Coach, and one of them bad me drive thither, and I did, and ſtopt at the Streets End; becauſe the Gate at the other End was ſhut, ſo that I could not turn my Coach: And one of them bid me go and tell the Dr. That there were two Gentlemen in a Coach at the Streets End, that would deſire him, to go with them, to ſee one that was not well. The Doctor asked me, if I could tell, Who they were? Or, who it was, that he was to go to? I told him, that I could not tell. The Doctor was in his Night Gown and Slippers, and he dreſſed himſelf: And when he came to the Coach, one of them removed from his Place, and gave him the hinder part of the Coach, and told him, That they had a Friend, that was not Well: And one of them bad me Drive to Leaden Hall Market; and when I came about Holbourn Bars, one of them called to me, and asked me, Why I drove ſo ſlowly? And bid me drive faſter; ſo I drove faſt, and came to Leaden Hall. And then one of them, bid me drive to the Pye Tavern without Aldgate, and there Ordered me to ſtop. And when I had ſtopped there, one of them called to me, and told me, that I need not ſtir out of my Coach Box; but call to the Boy at the Tavern, and ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, which I did do: And when the Boy came to me again, he ſaid, there was no ſuch Man. Then one of them bad me drive back again to Leaden-hall; and in the time I ſtayed there, and turned my Coach, Aldgate was ſhut; and when I came to the Gate, one of them gave Six Pence to the Watch, and the Gate was opened, and I drove to Leaden-hall Gate. And when I came there, I ſtopped again, and one of them gave me Half a Crown, and bad me go and buy a Fowl of one Hunt a Poulterer; but after I had gone a little way from the Coach, he called me again, and ſaid, here Coachman, you had as good take another Shilling, and buy a Couple: ſo I went, and bought a couple of Fowls, but could find no ſuch Poulterer as Hunt, ſo I bought them of another, and I gave three Shillings for them. And when I came back to the Coach ſide, I found Dr. Clenche, (as I thought) ſitting againſt the Fore-ſeat, with his Head againſt the Cuſhion: I pull'd him and cried, Maſter, Maſter, for I thought he had been in Drink, but I could not get one word from him; and then I went to the Watch, who were near; and when they came, we found him Strangled with a Handkerchief about his Neck, and a Coal in it, plac'd juſt upon his Wind Pipe, but the other two Men were gone.

L. C. J. Had one of the two Men a Cloak on?

J. Sikes. I cannot remember that.

L. C. J. What kind of Habit had he? Had he black Cloaths on?

J. Sikes. My Lord, I cannot tell juſtly, what Cloaths he had.

L. C. J. You have heard him ſpeak. What ſaid he?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he never ſpoke to me; it was the other Man.

Mr. Harriſon. What kind of Man was the other? Was he leſs than I, or taller?

J. Sykes. He was taller than you, with his own Hair.

Mr. Darnell. Can you be poſitive, that the Priſoner at the Bar is one of thoſe two Perſons?

J. Sykes. My Lord, one of thoſe two Perſons, had a Perriwig on, of a Light-coloured Hair: And I do verily believe, that the Priſoner at the Bar, is the ſame Perſon; I cannot be poſitive he is one of them, but as near as I can judge of a Man, whom I have ſeen but once, he is one of them.

Mr Harriſon. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip to obſerve the time, that he took the two Men up, and what time it was they ran out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Coachman, what time was it, that they left your Coach?

J. Sykes. About half an hour paſt Ten, and it was about a quarter of an hour paſt Nine, when I took them up.

Mr. Darnell. Pray let's ask the Coachman one thing more. Coachman, Look upon that Handkerchief, do you know it, and where did you ſee it?

The Handkerchief was produced by the Coroner.

J. Sykes. I do believe that it is the ſame Handkerchief, that was about Dr. Clenche's Neck, when he was found Murdered.

L. C. J. Call the Coachman again. Hark you, In what Poſture did you find Dr. Clenche, when you came back to your Coach?

J. Sykes. My Lord, he was ſat in the Bottom of the Coach, leaning on one ſide, with his head againſt the Cuſhion.

L. C. J. Was a Handkerchief then about his Neck?

J. Sykes. Yes, my Lord, I untied this Handkerchief, and this is the ſame; and here is the Coal that was lapt in it: it was lapt in the middle of it, and it laid juſt againſt the Doctor's Wind Pipe.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Rebone and Mr. Marriot.

Who were Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Rebone, tell what you know, concerning the Handkerchief, and how you found the Doctor.

He takes the Hankerchief, and looks on it.

Mr. Rebone. This Handkerchief was about the Doctor's Neck, and the Coal in it, and it lay juſt upon his Wind Pipe, when I ſaw him Dead in the Coach. The Coachman came to Mr. Marriot's Houſe, and ask'd for a Conſtable, and we went to the Coach ſide, and there we found him laying along; and we took him, and carried him to the Bull Inn, and there he was let Blood on the Arms, and the Chyrurgeon took about half a Spoonful of Blood out of his Right Arm; and he was let Blood on the other Arm, but that did but juſt trickle down, and we could not get him to life again; and we found a Silver Ink horn in his Pocket, and that, and the reſt of his things, were ſecured. That is all I can ſay to the Matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elianor Aſhbolt.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Pray tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of any Perſons you ſaw in a Coach at Brown low-ſtreet End, that Night Dr. Clenche was Murdered.

Mrs. Aſhbolt. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I went out of an Errand for one Madam Anwell, a Gentlewoman who Lodges at my Mothers houſe, houſe; and coming home again, I ſaw a Coach ſtop at Brownlowe-ſtreet End, between Nine and Ten a Clock at Night, and the Coachman went to the ſide of the Coach: And one in the Coach bad him go to Dr. Clenche's, and tell him, That there were two Gentlemen ſtayed for him in a Coach; and as he went up the Street, he went ſlowly, and looked back two or three times: Whereupon, one of the Perſons leaned out of the Coach, and did Swear at the Coachman to make haſt, and I went round the Coach, and could diſcern Mr. Harriſon's Face; and I ſtayed, and ſaw Dr. Clenche go into the Coach, and one of them gave his Place to the Doctor.

Mr. Darnell. Why were you ſo curious, Miſtreſs, and what did you obſerve further?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. I thought they might give the Coachman a ſlip. I well obſerved Mr. Harriſon, but do not know the other Man; there were two Lamps burning; one in Brownlow-ſtreet, and the other in Holbourn, over againſt the End of Brownlow-ſtreet; and they lighted quite through the Coach, and the Men pulled themſelves backwards, when they ſaw me look on them; it was that Night that the Doctor was Murdered. I went to Newgate afterwards, Madam Clenche deſired me to go and ſee Mr. Harriſon; and when I came to Newgate, it ſeems, he was writing Letters, ſo I ſtaid before I went into the Room; and there were two Men with me, and Mr. Harriſon was talking very loud, ſaid they to me, Who is that ſpeaks now? Why, ſays I, it is one of the Perſons that was in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was Murdered.

L. C. J. Who are thoſe two Men that were with you?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. One of them was one Mr. Jones, a Coachmaker in Holbourn, and the other was Madam Clenche's Coachman.

L. C. J. Did you know the Priſoner, when you ſaw him in Newgate, to be one of them that were in the Coach?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, I did, I knew him to be the ſame Man, as ſoon as I ſaw him, and he changed Countenance as ſoon as he ſaw me.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, this Woman is certainly hired by the Villains that are againſt me. Pray, ask her, my Lord, Why ſhe did not make a Diſcovery ſooner?

L. C. J. Miſtreſs, What ſay you to that?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. I acquainted Madam Anwell, what I had ſeen and obſerved, and ſhe told Madam Clenche, after laſt Seſſions, and then ſhe deſired me to go to Newgate, to ſee Mr. Harriſon, and I went accordingly; and I would have told it to Madam Clenche ſooner, but my Mother was loath I ſhould be concerned about ſuch a thing.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have ſome Witneſſes who can give your Lordſhip an Account, that one of our Witneſſes, whom I mentioned to your Lordſhip before, is ſpirited, or withdrawn from us, by a Gentleman that ſaid he came to him from the Priſoner, and deſired him to be kind to the Priſoner, which Witneſs is ſince abſent, and not be found; his Name was Andrew Bowſell, a Youth, and an Apprentice to one Mr. Tims, a Shoo-maker.

L. C. J. You muſt prove upon him, that he made him keep away.

Mr. Darnell. Call Barnabas Smith.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Give my Lord, and the Court an Account, what you know of this matter.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, this Andrew Bowſell, which the Council for the King ſpeaks of, was ſent to Leaden-Hall-Street, of an Errand, to the Bull-head Ale-houſe there, and as he was going along, a Gentleman met him, and asked him, if he was not an Evidence againſt Mr. Harriſon, and being told by the Boy that he was, he deſired him to be kind to him, and pull'd out a piece of Money, and offered it him, deſiring him to be kind to Mr. Harriſon, upon which the Youth replied, That he owed him nothing, and nothing he would take; then the Gentleman told him, That he would come again another time, and ſend for him near to his Maſter's; ſo the Boy ſaid, and told me: And ſaid further, That if he could have gotten him to have gone to the Bull-head Ale houſe, he would have ſeized him.

Mr. Darnell. What is become of the Boy?

Mr. Smith. Truly, we do not know what is become of him, we never heard of him ſince the Sixth Day of March laſt.

Mr. Darnell. Call his Maſter, Mr. Richard Tims.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of this matter, and what is become of your Apprentice, Andrew Bowſell.

Mr. Tims. My Lord, he went away from me on the Sixth Day of March laſt, he was enticed away by three Soldiers that Night, and on the morrow Morning, one of them came and demanded his Coats, Shirts and Neckcloths; ſays I to him, who ſent you, and who is your Captain? and he anſwered, why, Captain Harris; he huffed and ſaid, That if I would not give him the Cloaths, he would ſend his Officer; and then I told the Soldier, I would have him before a Juſtice of the Peace; ſo he went away, and never came to me again; and I could never hear of my Apprentice ſince, tho' I have made great Inquiry after him.

L. C. J. Did your Servant tell you of any Money that had been offered him by the before mentioned Gentleman?

Mr. Tims. No, my Lord; he did not tell me, but he told Mr. Smith, the Witneſs that was laſt Examined, as he told me.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Andrew Bowſell's Examinations before Mr. John Brown, the Coroner of London, upon Oath, may be read.

Which being proved by the Coroner, were directed to be read.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. 12. Januarii, 1691.

Andrew Bowſell, Servant to Richard Tims Shooemaker, Sworn and Examined touching the Death of Andrew Clenche Doctor in Phyſick, deceaſed; ſaith, that he, this Informant being ſent to Mr. Parker's at the Bull-head Ale-houſe in Leaden-hall-ſtreet, on Monday laſt was Seven night, being the fourth of this inſtant January, between the hours of Ten and Eleven of the Clock in the Evening, ſaw a Coach ſtanding againſt Leaden-hall Market, and heard ſome Perſon that was in the Coach ſay, make haſt. And this Informant ſays, that according to the beſt of his remembrance he heard him talk of a Poulterers; and this Informant ſays, that ſoon after the Coachman was gone into the Market, this Informant ſaw two Perſons go out of the Coach, one whereof had, as this Informant believes, a black Coat on; and that this Informant ſaw the ſame Perſon as ſoon as he came out of the Coach fling a Cloak over him, and then both the Perſons went through the the Market on the Weſt part. And this Informant ſaith, that this Informant going to look into the Coach, the Perſon that had the Cloak on him, cry'd Dam him; and this Informant ſaith, that he, this Informant, thereupon going away, went to Mr. Parker's, and told them that two Perſons had cheated a Coachman, or to that effect.

And. Bowſell being further Examined the 23d day of January, 1691. touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, ſaith, that he hath ſeen Hen. Harriſon, now a Priſoner in Their Majeſties Goal of Newgate, and belives he was one of the Perſons that came out of the Coach at Leaden-hall, a little after ten of the Clock at Night, on Monday the 4th of this Inſtant January; and believes he knows him by his Voice. And ſoon after, this Informant underſtood that the ſaid Andrew Clenche was murther'd in a Coach, being the ſame Coach which the ſaid Harriſon, and another Perſon unknown a little before went out of.

L. C. J. Mr Harriſon, What have you to ſay againſt that which hath been proved againſt you, what defence can you make?

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I did attend Dr. Clenche about a Mortgage that was made him by Mrs. Vanwick, and Dr. Clenche did pay one Hundred Pounds, but this Gentlewoman would pay or allow Rowe but Fifteen Pounds, and we did not know how to get the Money from Rowe, ſo we Petition'd the Lords Commiſſioners about it, which was above Six Months before Doctor Clenche was Murther'd; and Mr. Fairbeard wonder'd that I would put Doctor Clenche's Name into a Petition with ſuch a Rogue as Rowe; and I do poſitively ſay, that I had not ſeen Doctor Clenche in a Month before, and if Doctor Clenche had died in his Bed, it had been the ſame thing to me; and, my Lord, Mr. Johnſon and I had never any angry words between us; and I have the Report in Chancery which I had from Sir John Hoskins, which I will read, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

L. C. J. Let's ſee it.

Which was handed to the Lord Chief Juſtice ſitting on the Bench.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, that is the Original, which if your Lordſhip pleaſes to remember, I had Rowe before you twice about it, and it is Rowe that hath been the Rogue, and therefore what occaſion had we to be angry with Doctor Clenche?

Then the Report was perus'd by the Lord Chief Juſtice, and return'd to him.

L. C. J. Mr. Harriſon, this will do you no good, not being to the preſent purpoſe, therefore proceed in your defence.

Mr. Harriſon. Now, my Lord, I have ſome Witneſſes to prove where I was at the time that the Coachman ſays the Murther was done. Cryer, call Thomas Turner a Porter, and Mr. Maccaffee.

Who appeared, but were not Sworn, and Examined apart, at the Requeſt of Mr. Darnell, the Kings and Queens Council.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I ſhall prove by theſe Witneſſes, that I was elſewhere when the Coachman ſaid he took up thoſe two Men, a little after Nine a Clock. Pray Mr. Turner, give an Account to the Court, what time it was I called you to carry my Trunk.

Tho. Turner. My Lord, I was, about Seven of the Clock in the Evening, the 4th Day of January laſt, at the Two Kings and Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Salisbury-Court; and I was told, that a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-houſe in Salisbury-Court wanted a Porter; and I preſently went to him thither, and it was this Mr. Harriſon: and he bad me take up his Trunk, which I did, and carried it to the Two Kings and Key, and he went with me: And he aſk'd me to get ſome Linnen waſh'd for him againſt the next Day at Noon: and he gave me ſome Linnen, which I carried to my Wife to Waſh for him, and return'd to him again preſently; and I went with him from thence, and carry'd his Trunk to his Lodgings in Paul's Church Yard; and when I had deliver'd his Trunk, I left him there; and then it was about Eight of the Clock at Night.

L. C. J. At whoſe Houſe was it you deliver'd the Trunk?

Thomas Turner. My Lord, it was at Mr. Jones's Houſe in Paul's Church Yard.

L. C. J. And did he ſtay within?

Thomas Turner. No, my Lord, he went out preſently after me.

L. C. J. Were you any where elſe with him that Night, beſides at the places you have mentioned?

Tho. Turner. No, my Lord.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I will prove that Mr. Humſton miſtakes an Hour.

Mr. Humſton. I cannot miſtake an Hour, becauſe the Shop is ſhut up about Nine a Clock, and it was ſhut when you came firſt to my Lodgings.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, there ſtands in Court one Thomas Johnſon, Apprentice to Mr. Pemmel; he can tell what time a-night it was I came to Mr. Humſton's, he let me in; I deſire he may be call'd.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Thomas Johnſon.

Who was Sworn.

L. C. J. What time of the Night was it that Mr. Harriſon came to ſpeak with Mr. Humſton, on that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Tho. Johnſon. My Lord, on the 4th of January laſt at Night, Mr. Harriſon came to my Maſter's Houſe, and knock'd at the Door; and I went to the Door, and open'd it, for I had ſhut up the Shop; and he aſk'd me if Mr. Humſton was within? And I told him, he was: And he came in, and went up to Mr. Humſton's Chamber; and it was then about Nine of the Clock, as near as I can gueſs.

L. C. J. Where is your Maſter's Houſe?

Tho. Johnſon. My Lord, it is the Golden Key in Fleet ſtreet, over againſt Fetter-lane end.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray call Adam Maccaffee, Mr. White, Mr. Carden, and John Allen.

Who appear'd. And Mr. Maccaffee ſtood up.

Mr. Maccaffee. Upon Monday the 4th Day of January laſt, the Priſoner was at my Houſe, and ſtay'd from Nine a Clock till paſt Eleven, and play'd at Cards with one Mr. Baker, and one Mr. White and his Wife; and he ſtay'd till it had ſtruck Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe, Sir?

Mr. Macaffee. My Houſe is in Chancery Lane, over againſt Serjeants-Inn.

L. C. J. Did he tell you where he had been before?

Mr. Maccaffee. He ſaid, that he had been towards the City, and was very cold.

L. C. J. Did he ſay any thing of Mr. Humſton?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, what Room were you in? Did you play at Cards in the Kitchen?

Mr. Macaffee. Yes.

Mr. Darnell. Where they up Stairs?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Lord Mayor. At what time a night did they come in?

Mr. Maccaffee. Betwixt Nine and Ten a Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. What made you take notice of the Day of the Month, and Hour of the Day?

Mr. Maccaffee. My Lord, I heard that Doctor Clenche was murder'd, and that Mr. Harriſon was taxed with it; and that made me take notice of the Day.

L. C. J. Call Mrs. Maccaffee. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Miſtreſs what time did Mr. Harriſon come to your Houſe on the 4th of January laſt at Night?

Mrs. Maccaffee. My Lord, it was near Nine a Clock as any thing can be, when he came in firſt.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. I cannot tell how long he ſtay'd, but there were two Accidents happen'd; one was, our Playing at Cards; and the other was, that there was a Pick-Pocket carried by to be pump'd at Lincolns Inn; it was from Nine to Eleven before he went away, and there were Mrs. White, Mr. Baker, and one Mrs Faireleſſe.

L. C. J. Did any one come with the Priſoner, to your Houſe; in what Humour did he ſeem to be?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, my Lord, there was no one came with him, and he never ſtirr'd out, neither did he ſeem to be diſorder'd; he was neither too merry, nor too melancholy.

L. C. J. Where did he ſay he had been?

Mrs Maccaffee. He ſaid, that he had been in the City.

L. C. J. Did he uſe to frequent your Houſe?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Formerly he did; but I had not ſeen him in half a Year before.

Mr. Darnell. How many were there, do you ſay?

Mrs. Maccaffee. There was one Mrs. Faireleſſe, and one Mrs. White, and my ſelf, and my Husband was upon the Bed, and Mr. White came for his Wife about Ten a Clock, to come home.

Mr. Darnell. Do you remember that Mr. Baker was there?

Mr. Maccaffee. Yes, he was there.

L.C. J. Pray, Miſtreſs, did Mr. Harriſon come in, and find them at Cards?

Mrs Maccaffee. No, we went to Cards, afterwards.

L. C. J. Where was your Husband?

Mrs Maccaffee. He was upon the Bed in the Kitchen.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Baker. [Who ſtood up.]

Mr. Baker. This Gentleman the Priſoner, is a Stranger to me; but here is a Letter that he ſent me two or three Days afterwards. I came into Mrs. Maccaffee's Houſe about half an Hour after Nine a Clock, with two Women more: Mrs Maccaffee owed me Money, and I had been in Lincolns Inn, for I do ſome Work there for Sir Thomas Cook, and the Women ask'd me to play at Cards; and I ſaid, that I did not care to Play, becauſe I had been abroad, and could not get any Money, which made me out of humour. My Lord, I never ſaw the Man in my Life before.

L. C. J. Who were they that play'd at Cards?

Mr. Baker. It was one Mrs. Faireleſſe, the Woman of the Houſe, and Mr. Harriſon, and my ſelf.

L. C. J. Who were together?

Mr. Baker. Mrs. Fairleſſe and I, and the Woman of the Houſe and Mr. Harriſon the Priſoner, and we play'd for a Penny a Corner, I cannot ſay any more to it, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay?

Mr. Baker. I left him there after Ten a Clock, and as I hope for mercy, I never ſaw him but once before, and I had not known him again, but by a particular Token.

Mr. Harriſon. Were there not ſome Accidents happen'd at that time?

Mr. Baker. Yes, there came a Vintner's Boy to ask for a Woman, one Mrs. Frances, and he was in great haſte, and a Pick-pocket was carried up the Lane to be Pump'd at Lincolns-Inn Pump.

Mr. Harriſon. Call Mrs. Fairleſſe, call Mrs. Whipple. [neither of which appear'd.]
Call Mr. Sutton. [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. Where do you live, and what is your Name?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, my Name is Sutton, and I live in Stone cutter ſtreet.

Mr. Harriſon. Mr. Sutton, what time was it that I was coming by, when one Mr. Ruſſel and you were Drinking?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, it was about Eleven a Clock at Night, at the King's Head-Tavern at Chancery-Lane end.

Mr. Harriſon. What had I on, a Cloak and a Muff?

Mr. Sutton. Yes, I think you had a Cloak on.

Mr. Darnell. What time was it before or after Eleven a Clock?

Mr. Sutton. It was about a quarter before Eleven.

Lord Mayor. What day of the Month was it?

Mr. Sutton. It was the fourth of January.

L. C. J. Where was he going, which way went he?

Mr. Sutton. He was going towards Fleet-Bridge, my Lord, and I called after him, but could not make him hear me at firſt, but afterwards he came to us.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray call Mr. Ruſſel.
[who appeared.]

Mr. Ruſſel. I can't hear, my Lord, but if you pleaſe to permit Mr. Sutton to ſpeak to me, I can hear his Voice better than any Man's.

L. C. J. Speak as loud as you can, Sir, and we will let you hear us, Mr. Sutton muſt not ſpeak for you.

Mr. Harriſon. Pray Mr. Ruſſel what time of Night was that you ſaw me go by you, when you were drinking at the King's-Head-Tavern?

Mr. Ruſſell. I can't tell, my Lord, I have not heard a Clock theſe three years.

L. C. J. Where were you going at that time of Night?

Mr. Ruſſel. I was going to Wild ſtreet, to the Chyrurgeon's-Arms, to Receive ſome money.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Ruſſel. He had been with me all that day, and I deſired him to go with me; and, my Lord, I did expect that the money would have been brought to me, but it was not, ſo I went for it.

L. C. J. Well, and what then?

Mr. Ruſſel. While we ſtaid at the King's-Head-Tavern

Tavern door to drink Wine, Mr. Sutton ſent the Drawer to call Mr. Harriſon.

L. C. J. What had you been doing before that time?

Mr. Ruſſel. We had (I ſuppoſe) been drinking together.

L. C. J. Where had you been before you came to the King's Head Tavern.

Mr. Ruſſel. We had been at the Horſeſhoe Tavern in Chancery-Lane.

L. C. J. Did you requeſt Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Ruſſel. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. You ſay your buſineſs was to go to Wild-ſtreet, to receive ſome money?

Mr. Ruſſel. Yes, it was, my Lord, and I did receive it.

L. C. J. When was it that you met Mr. Harriſon, the Priſoner?

Mr. Ruſſel. My Lord, I can't poſitively ſay, but by computation of the Night, I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. Did you meet Mr. Harriſon before you went to the Horſeſhoo-Tavern, or after?

Mr. Ruſſel. Afterwards, my Lord, I ſaw Mr. Harriſon turn at the Corner of Fleet-ſtreet, towards Fleet-Bridge.

L. C. J. At the time when Mr. Sutton and you went firſt out, did you agree of your going to the Horſeſhoe Tavern?

Mr. Ruſſel. We went thither to ſend for the Gentleman out of Wild-Street.

L. C. J. When you had been Drinking all the Afternoon, how came you to ſtop your Coach at the King's Head?

Mr. Ruſſel. We ſtopt there, whilſt Mr. Sutton ſent for ſome body to come to him.

L. C. J. You ſaid juſt now that Mr. Sutton ſent for Mr. Harriſon.

Mr. Ruſſel. No, my Lord, I do not remember that, but Mr. Sutton ſaid Harry, or Harriſon, where art thou going, when he went by us.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, this Man is a ſtranger to me. Call John Allen, Drawer at the King's-Head Tavern. [Who apperared.

Mr. Harriſon. John Allen, what time of Night was it that Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruſſel came to your Houſe in a Coach?

J. Allen. I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. How much Wine had they?

J. Allen. Two Half Pints of Canary.

L. C. J. What Night was it? what Day of the Month was it?

J. Allen. My Lord, I can't remember what Day of the Month, but it was that Night that Doctor Clench was murther'd.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Harriſon there?

J Allen. I can't tell that, I never ſaw him, 'till I ſaw him in Priſon.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not you go to Mr. Maccaffee's Houſe?

J. Allen. Yes, I did.

Mr. Harriſon. Did not one ſtrike you with a Muff?

J. Allen. Yes, but I can't remember who it was.

Lord Mayor. Look upon that Man, do you know him to be the Perſon?

J. Allen. No, my Lord, I do not know him to be the Perſon.

Mr. Darnell. Who ſent you to Crown-Court?

J. Allen. Mr. Ruſſell.

Mr. Darnell. For what?

J. Allen. For a Servant Maid, and he bid me tell her that he had a deſire to ſpeak with her.

Mr. Darnell. How long did you tarry at the Houſe?

J. Allen. I did not ſtay at all.

Mr. Harriſon. Call Mr. Carden, Drawer at the King's-Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]

Mr. Harriſon. What time did Mr. Sutton come to your Houſe, did you ſee any one ſtand at the Coach ſide? and what Cloaths had he on?

Carden. I ſaw one ſtand at the Coach ſide, and he had a Hanging-Coat or a Cloak on, it was about the Hour of Eleven, to the beſt of my knowledge, and I ſaw a Man go into the Coach, and come out again.

Mr. Coroner. What time of Night do you ſhut your Doors, eſpecially on Monday Nights; and were they ſhut when Mr. Sutton called in the Coach?

Carden. We ſhut them commonly about Eleven a Clock at Night, but on Monday Nights uſually later; they were ſhut when Mr. Sutton called, and I opened them for him.

L. C. J. Can you ſay that the Priſoner was the Man that drank with Mr. Sutton?

Carden. To the beſt of my knowledge (looking on the Priſoner) that is the Man, I can't be poſitive, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Harriſon. No, my Lord, unleſs Mr. Eſſington be here, he promiſed to be here to give an account of me. My Lord, there is a Gentleman that is in the Preſs-Yard, one Mr. Butler, I deſire he may be ſent for, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

L. C. J. Let him be fetch'd down.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. But, in the mean time, it behoves you to give an account of theſe things. Firſt, why did you ſay that you were a Parliament Man. Secondly, why did you leave your Lodgings and take other Lodgings in Paul's-Church-Yard? Thirdly, why did you ſay that you had extraordinary buſineſs? Give ſome account what your buſineſs was, and who that Gentleman was, that ſtaid for you in the Street, when Mr. Humſton deſired you to ſtay and Sup with him, what hinder'd you from accepting his Invitation? Now we would have you to Conſider of theſe things, and give an anſwer to them, for it much concerns you ſo to do.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, firſt as to the firſt, I do declare that I never went for a Parliament Man, nor never ſaid ſo: Secondly, that Night I was to go out of Town, I had left word at ſeveral Coffee-Houſes that I was going out of Town upon earneſt Buſineſs, and with above twenty People beſides, that I was going out of Town, and I was about to go to Baſing-Stoke, to a Gentleman that owed me Money, one Mr. Bulling, but I could not get money to go.

L. C. J. Prove that you were to go into the Country.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I can't prove that now, except I could have ſent to Baſing-Stoke.

L. C. J. That you ſhould have done before now; why did you not ſtay with Mr. Humſton, when he Invited you to Sup with him? You might have been better entertained there, than by going among ſtrangers to Play at Cards for a Penny a Corner, at an Ale-houſe.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I was unwilling to ſtay, becauſe he had Strangers with him.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What if he had, you are not ſuch a baſhful man, that you could not Sup with Strangers.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, Mr. Rowe was accuſed with me.

L. C. J. What if he was? he was under ſome Suſpicion, and he hath made it appear where he was at the time the Fact was Committed, and now he is Diſcharged.

Then Mr. Butler was brought into Court from Newgate, attended by a Keeper.

M. Harriſon. Mr. Butler, Pray tell the Court what Mr. Fairbeard ſaid to you about me?

Mr. Butler. My Lord, Mr. Fairbeard asked me what I could ſay about what Mr. Harriſon had ſaid to me concerning the Murder of Doctor Clench? I told him I could not tell what to make of his broken and rambling Speeches and Diſcourſes, they being moſt of them ſpoken when he was in his Drink. This is all that I know, my Lord.

L. C. J. This is not a Witneſs for your turn.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs Anwell.

Who was ſent for from her Lodgings in Brownlow-Street in Holborn, and appeared, and was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Madam, pray give an account what Mrs. Aſhbolt told you concerning any Man's being in a Coach at Brownlow-ſtreet end?

Mrs. Anwell. I know nothing of my own Knowledge, but the Night that Doctor Clench was Murthered, I ſent Mrs Aſhbolt of an Errand, and at her return, I blam'd her for ſtaying ſo long; and ſhe told me, that as ſhe was returning home, a Coach ſtop'd at Brownlow-Street end, with two Men with Cloaks on in it, and that one of them bad the Coachman go for Doctor Clenche, and deſire him to come to them, and in his going ſeveral times look'd back as if he ſuſpected the men would leave the Coach, and ſo ſhe ſtayed until Doctor Clenche came and went into the Coach, and that one of the men gave the Doctor his Place; and that one of them had a fair Perriwig and a ſanguine Complexion.

Mr. Darnell. What diſcourſe had you with her when you heard that thoſe men had murdered Doctor Clench?

Mrs. Anwell. She told me that one of thoſe men had a fair Perriwig and a ſanguin Complexion, and that one of them had a Cloak on.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay that ſhe obſerved either of their Faces?

Mrs. Anwell. Yes, my Lord, ſhe ſaid that one of them had a round Face, and a big Voice.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe could know him again?

Mrs. Anwell. No, my Lord, ſhe did not ſay ſo, but ſhe ſaid that ſhe could know his Voice again. And after the laſt Seſſions I told Mrs. Clenche of it, and that if ſhe would ſend for the young Woman, ſhe would inform her further of it.

L. C. J. Madam, Pray what was the reaſon, that ſhe did not diſcover it ſooner to Mrs. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. Why truly becauſe Mrs. Aſhbolt, her Mother, was unwilling ſhe ſhould concern her ſelf in ſuch a matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call another Witneſs, Mr. Jones, Coach-maker. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Harriſon. Pray, my Lord, take notice, that now ſhe ſays that thoſe Gentlemen had Cloaks on, that came in the Coach to Brownlow-ſtreet-end.

L. C. J. Yes, we heard her what ſhe ſaid.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I will ask this Witneſs, Mr. Jones, a Queſtion.

Mr. Darnell. Prav Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Mrs. Aſhbolt did at Newgate?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I went with her to Newgate, together with Doctor Clenche his Coachman, and when ſhe came to Newgate, before ſhe ſaw Mr. Harriſon (only ſtood at the Chamber Door and heard him ſpeak) ſhe ſaid, that to the beſt of her Thoughts, he was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach to look after the Coachman, and ſwore at him, for ſhe knew his Voice. And when ſhe came to ſee him, ſhe ſaid that ſhe knew his Face, and declared that was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Did he look out of the Coach, Mrs. Aſhbolt?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, my Lord, he put his head out of the Coach, and look'd after the Coachman, to ſee if he went right to Doctor Clench's Door, and did ſwear at him, becauſe he went no faſter.

L. C. J. How could you diſcern his Face?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. By the Light of two Lamps, that were near, which did ſhine into the Coach.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath that the Priſoner is the ſame Perſon?

Mrs. Aſhbolt. Yes, my Lord, I can both by his Voice and Face.

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip ſomewhat in Relation to the Credit of thoſe Witneſſes, that the Priſoner hath brought here; particularly, as to Mr. Baker, we ſhall prove that he hath been convicted for a Cheat. And as for Maccaffee, he keeps a very diſorderly Houſe, where ill People commonly reſort.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mrs. Martha Whelſtead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

L. C. J. Mrs. Jones, what time did Mr. Harriſon come to your Houſe, to his Lodging that Night that the murder was committed?

Mrs. Jones. I think it was about eleven a Clock, or a little before eleven.

L. C. J. What time on the Monday did he hire the Lodging of you?

Mrs. Jones. It was ſometime after Dinner.

L. C. J. It was before Night, was it not?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, my Lord, it was before Night.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Mr. Tanner may read the Record againſt Mr. Baker, whereby it will appear that he was indicted and convicted at Hicks's-Hall, for cheating the Pariſh of St. Giles in Middleſex, when he was Scavenger there, by altering the Figures in the Book, and rateing the Sums of Money higher upon divers of the Pariſhioners, than they were in the Pariſh Book, and then collecting and extorting the Money, ſo by him increaſed, from them.

Mr. Tanner reads the Indictment aforeſaid, by which it did appear to the Court, and to the Jury, that the ſaid Mr. Baker was indicted for the Offence aforeſaid, and confeſſed the Indictment, and was fined for it twenty Shillings.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was wrongfully indicted, and traverſed the Indictment, and was acquitted.

L. C. J. Mr Tanner, give me the Record.

(Lord Chief Juſtice peruſes the Record.

Mr. Baker, I have read the material parts of the Record, and do find that you were indicted for that Offence, and that you confeſſed the Indictment, and were fined for it.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was acquitted of it, and can prove it by Captain Cannon, who knows me, and my Reputation, and he is in Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, the Record teſtifieth the Truth, and cannot err, therefore you have great Confidence to aver againſt it, yet I will hear what Captain Cannon ſaith.

Mr. Baker. Call Captain Cannon.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, do you know this Mr. Baker?

Captain Cannon. Yes, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I deſire that Captain Cannon may be ſworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, ſwear Captain Cannon.

(Who was ſworn.)

L. C. J. Sir, do you know that Mr. Baker was indicted for falſifying of the Scavenger's Book when he was Scavenger, and acquitted or convicted, and what do you know about it?

Captain Cannon. My Lord, I am an Inhabitant of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, and ſo I was when Mr. Baker was Scavenger, and do well remember that ſome of the Inhabitants of that Diviſion where he was Scavenger, were troubled and complained, that they were charged more than uſually they had been to the Scavenger's Rate; and it was diſcover'd that ſeveral Figures of the Book by which Mr. Baker collected the Money to the Scavenger's Rate, were blotted and altered, and did not agree with the Pariſh Leadger-Book, but the Sums in his Book ſo blotted and altered were raſed; whereupon it was ordered that he ſhould be indicted for it, and it was done accordingly, and he was fined for it, and to the beſt of my Remembrance he confeſſed that Indictment.

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, Pray tell the Court and the Jury, of what Reputation Mr. Baker is now.

Captain Cannon. My Lord, he is now of none of the cleareſt Reputations.

Captain James Partrich, of the ſame Pariſh, being in Court, offered himſelf, and gave the ſame account of Mr. Baker that Captain Cannon did.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Francis Brampton, Mrs. Martha Whelſtead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

(And Mrs. Whelſtead and Mr. Cole appeared, and were ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Whelſtead, pray give the Court and Jury an account what diſorderly Houſe Mr. Maccaffee keeps?

Mrs. Whelſtead. My Lord, I dwell in Crown-Court in Chancery-lane, over againſt Mr. Maccaffee's Houſe; and he and ſhe are very ill People; and keep a very evil and ſcandalous Houſe, and ſuch as are reputed to be Houſe-breakers, Pick-Pockets, and Lewd Women, do uſe and frequent the Houſe; and there is commonly at late hours in the Night, Perſons calling out murder, and Whore and Rogue, and ſuch ſort of Language, diſturbing their Neighbours; and their Houſe hath been ſeveral times ſearched by ſeveral Conſtables for ſtollen Goods, and for the Perſons that have ſtollen them; and upon ſuch Searches, there have been ſtolen Goods found there: And I have ſeen great Lewdneſs there between Men and Women; and the Neighbours do account it a Houſe of an ill Fame, and do avoid going thither.

Mr. Tho. Cole. My Lord, I do know Mr. Maccaffee and his Wife; I do dwell over againſt his Houſe, and they are reputed to keep an ill Houſe, and moſt Perſons that frequent it, are reputed to be Perſons of lewd and evil Lives and Converſations; and it is amongſt the Neighbourhood noted for a ſcandalous Houſe, and ſeveral Conſtables have ſeveral times ſearched there for ſtolen Goods.

L. C. J. What have you more to ſay, Mr. Harriſon?

Mr. Harriſon. I cannot ſay any thing more; you may deal with me according to my Deſerts in this matter.

L. C. J. You may aſſure your ſelf, that we will do you no wrong; have you any more to ſay? (He made no Reply.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have another Witneſs come now, who was not here before. Cryer, call Mr. Charles Whitfield.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, this Gentleman can give your Lordſhip an account what the Priſoner ſaid of his being juſt come out of the Country, upon the fifth of January laſt. Pray tell my Lord what you know, Sir.

Mr. Charles Whitfield. My Lord, upon the fifth day of January laſt, being the Day day after Dr. Clenche was murdered, I went to Joe's Coffee-houſe in Salisbury-Court, and there Mr. Harriſon, ſitting by the Fireſide, ſays I to Mr. Harriſon, where have you been for a long time that I have not ſeen you? Says he, I have been in the Country: Where ſays I? Says he, about twenty Miles off, in Kent; and I want a Landreſs, and a Lodging. Says I, do you hear the News, Sir? What News, ſays he? Why, ſaid I, of Dr. Clench's being murdered: I cannot tell the Occaſion, ſaid I, but he was found dead in a Coach laſt night in Leadenhall-ſtreet. Then, ſays he, I did love him very well once, but of late he hath been a barbarous Rogue to a Gentlewoman, a Friend of mine, and ſhe is in the Compter now: And Mr. Harriſon ſaid it was a juſt Judgment of God upon the Doctor for being ſo great a Villain to the Gentlewoman; therefore I will write to her preſently, and give her an account of his Death. And my Lord, the Contents of his Letter were theſe, as near as I can remember.

Madam,

'I Am juſt now going to Lambeth, but hearing of Dr. Clench's murder, I do hereby 'give you an account of it, and can impute it 'to no leſs than a juſt Judgment of God upon 'him for his Baſeneſs ſhewed to you. And if 'you think fit to ſend to Madam Clenche, it may 'be ſhe may ſend ſomewhat towards your Relief, ſhe now being a Widow as well as you.

Madam,

I am yours to command,

Henry Harriſon.

My

My Lord, after this came into the ſame Coffee-Houſe another Perſon one Mr. Ravenſcroft, of whom Mr. Harriſon asked ſome Queſtion about Dr. Clenche; who reply'd, That he heard that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that it was committed by a Bully of the Town that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter who was laid in there upon Dr. Clench's account; at which, he was much ſtartled: Says he again, There is no Perſon familiar with that Gentlewoman but my ſelf; for I know, and am concerned in all her Affairs: Perhaps then I may be taken up about it: Or, my Lord, he uſed Words to that effect.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, this Woman was not in the Compter upon Dr. Clench's account.

L. C. J. No, the Witneſs don't ſay ſo; but that it was the Diſcourſe of the Town that ſhe was, and the Town did ſuppoſe her ſo to be. What did he ſay further, Sir?

Mr. Whitfield. My Lord, he ſaid that he had been in Kent about twenty Miles off; and he ſaid, that he wanted a Landreſs, becauſe he had ſome foul Linnen to waſh; which he produced. This was on the Tueſday, and the Murder was committed on the Monday-night before: And, my Lord, there were two more Gentlemen that heard him as well as I, that he ſaid, That he had been about twenty Miles off in Kent, and that he was newly come to Town. Now, my Lord, I could not imagine for what Reaſon this Man ſhould ſay, that he had been out of Town about a Fortnight or three Weeks, when he was in that Houſe but the Monday night before; that is, the Night the Murder was committed.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Biſhop.

(Who appeared and was ſworn.)

Mr. Biſhop. About three Years ago the Priſoner came to my Maſter's Shop to cheapen ſome Linnen, and when ——

L. C. J. Hold, what are you doing now? Are you going to arraign his whole Life? Away, away, that ought not to be; that is nothing to the matter. Have you done, Priſoner?

Mr. Harriſon. Yes, my Lord, I have done, I refer my Cauſe to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Priſoner at the Bar, Henry Harriſon, ſtands indicted for the wilful murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, who was barbarouſly murdered on the fourth day of January laſt: You have heard the Witneſſes that have been ſworn; and upon their Teſtimony, it doth appear that two Perſons came to Brownlow-ſtreet End in a Coach after nine a Clock at Night, and ſent the Coachman to the Doctor's Houſe, under pretence to get him to a Patient, a Friend of theirs, that was ſick. By this Contrivance, they got him into their Coach, which they had brought for that purpoſe, and then they ordered the Coachman to drive to Leadenhall ſtreet; and when they came about Holbourn-Bars, one of them ask'd the Coachman why he drove ſo ſlow, and bad him drive faſter. When they came to Leadenhall-ſtreet, then they bad him drive to the Pye-Tavern without Aldgate; where one of them bad the Coach-man ask for one Hunt; but he not being there, one of them bad the Coachman return back, and gave ſix Pence to the Watch to come through the Gate, which was ſhut in the mean time; and when they came to Leadenhall-Market, one of them gave the Coachman three Shillings and ſix Pence, and ſent him to buy a couple of Fowls; which the Coachman did buy, and brought them to the Coach; but when he came back, he found the Doctor in the body of the Coach leaning againſt the fore Seat of the Coach, a Handkerchief being tied about his Neck with a Coal in it, placed upon his Wind-pipe; which Handkerchief and Coal have been produced in Court.

The Queſtion is, Gentlemen, Whether the Priſoner at the Bar be guilty of this baſe and barbarous Murder? To prove which, there hath been a very long Evidence given, ſome Poſitive, ſome Circumſtantial. It has been proved that Dr. Clenche had ſome Dealings with a Woman named Vanwicke, and had lent her one hundred and twenty Pounds, and had taken a Mortgage for it. This Priſoner, Mr. Harriſon, was a great Acquaintance, and very intimate with this Woman; and did concern himſelf in the Management of her Affairs: and becauſe Dr. Clenche did refuſe to lend the Woman more Money, therefore he had an Animoſity againſt Dr. Clenche. The Money not being paid to the Doctor as he did expect, he did call it in; and therefore this Gentlewoman did oftentimes repair to Dr Clenche to deſire farther Time or Forbearance, becauſe ſhe could not raiſe or procure the Money elſewhere. That about Michaelmas laſt it ſeems ſhe came to a Coffee-houſe near Warwick-houſe in Holborn, and there was Mr. Harriſon; where they conſulted what to do. And it was agreed, that the Miſtreſs of the Houſe and Mrs. Vanwicke ſhould go to Dr. Clench's; but Mr. Harriſon ſhould ſtay behind, for it was not thought convenient that he ſhould go, leſt he ſhould provoke the Doctor. When they came to the Doctor, Mrs. Vanwicke was very importunate to have more Money; but the Doctor would lend her no more. And when they returned to the Coffee-Houſe again, Mr. Harriſon enquired what paſſed between the Doctor and Mrs. Vanwicke. She told him, that the Doctor would not furniſh her with any more Money, although ſhe had preſſed him to do it, and urged her great Neceſſities, but adviſed her to go to Service. Damn him, ſays Harriſon, does he ſay that a Woman of your Quality ſhould go to Service? He is a great Rogue, and deſerves to have his Throat cut, but let me alone, I will manage him.

At another place there was a Diſcourſe betwixt Mr. Harriſon and one Mr. Johnſon; and that the Priſoner did then ſpeak very hard and ill Words of Dr. Clenche: And that Mr. Harriſon came frequently to him; and one time laid his hand upon his Sword, uſing ſome menacing Words, but what they were he cannot tell: But he likewiſe ſays, that at ſeveral times he did expoſtulate with him, and told him, That he would not do any good with ſuch Diſcourſes as theſe are, &c. That the Mortgage money not being paid, it was thought fit, That there ſhould be a Proſecution made to get Poſſeſſion of the mortgaged Eſtate, and that the Tenants ſhould be forbid to pay their Rents. And Mr. Harriſon went to Mrs. Weſt the Tenant, ſome few days before St. Thomas's Day laſt, and demanded the Rent of her. To which ſhe made anſwer, That Dr. Clenche had forbid the Payment of the Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke. Thereupon Mr. Harriſon grew very angry, and anſwered, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and bid her that ſhe ſhould not pay him any Rent. And the Witneſs ſaith further, That the Doctor being preſt to let her have ſome more Money, refuſed to do it, becauſe ſhe would ſpend it all upon Harriſon.

Then the Council for the King called ſome Witneſſes, who gave you account of the Priſoner's ſhifting his Lodgings the day before the murder was done. He takes a Lodging at Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle ſtreet, on the twenty third day of December, and there he continued till about the firſt of January. The ſecond of January he was at Garway's Shop; and on the Sunday night he came and fetcht away his Things. The Monday after, being the day that this barbarous Fact was committed, he ſent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, to acquaint her that he was gone out of Town; but he left three Half Crowns with her Maid to pay for his Lodging. But as to his going out of Town, it was falſe, for he never went into the Country, but took a Lodging at Mr. Jones's in St. Paul's Church yard. It's obſervable alſo, that he went for a Parliament-man when he lodged at Mr. Garway's, and had his Footman to attend upon him, &c. There it was that he was ſeen to have an ordinary Handkerchief, and to hold it to the Fire; which was taken notice of by Mrs. Jackſon, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, which was not ſuitable, as ſhe thought, to a Parliament-man's Quality, but rather fit for a Seaman, for it was like the Apron of the Maid in the Houſe: which hath been ſhewed in Court, and compared with the Handkerchief that was tied about Dr. Clenche's Neck. She ſaith it is the ſame, or very like that which ſhe did ſee Mr. Harriſon hold in his hand.

Cartwright the Officer at the Compter, he tells you, that the Sunday night, the day before the murder, Mr. Harriſon came to Woodſtreet Compter, and enquired for Mrs. Vanwicke, and that he only was in her Chamber, and no other Body on that ſide of the Houſe but Mrs. Vanwicke, the Priſoner, and this Cartwright the Keeper, who ſtood at the Door, and heard Harriſon ſay, That he would have the Blood of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winch.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, he was not in the Room.

L. C. J. No, he was not; but there were none on that ſide the Houſe but you, Cartwright, and Mrs. Vanwicke.

Now, on the Monday on which this Fact was committed, he having taken a Lodging at Jones his Houſe, he came thither with a Porter, who brought his Portmantua-Trunk about eight a Clock at night; and after he had been there a little while, he went away.

And you are told, by a Gentleman that lodges at the Golden-Key againſt Fetter-lane end; That he had ſome Acquaintance with the Priſoner, that he had lent him a Morning-Gown; and that about nine a Clock that very night, he came to his Lodging in a Cloak; and then the Gentleman asked him for his Gown; and he told him, that he had brought it with him. Thereupon the Gentleman invites Mr. Harriſon to ſtay and ſup with him. Mr. Harriſon ſaid, he could not ſtay, for he was engaged; he muſt be gone, for that a Gentleman ſtaid in the Street for him to go about extraordinary Buſineſs.

The Coachman tells you, That near about that time two Men in Fleet-ſtreet, near Fetter-lane end, hired his Coach of him to go to Brownlow-ſtreet to Dr. Clench's; but he can't poſitively ſay, that the Priſoner at the Bar was one of them, but he ſwears, he does verily believe that he was one of them.

Mr. Harriſon. He ſaid before your Lordſhip, That he could not remember what I had on.

L. C. J. Well, well, he doth not remember it now; but being hired to go to Dr. Clench's, he drove to the Street end and no further, becauſe the Gate at the lower end was ſhut up, and he could not turn his Coach in the Street; but he was ſent by them to the Doctor's, to deſire the Doctor to come out to them, and they ſat in the Coach in the mean time. The Doctor made haſte, and went to them immediately, and they drove away to Leaden hall, and then to Aldgate; and they called at the Py-Tavern, and enquired for one Mr. Hunt a Chirurgeon, as I mentioned to you before: He not being there, they returned to drive through Aldgate, gave the Watch ſixpence, and paſſed through the Gate without any manner of notice taken: but if the Watch had done their Duty, it might have been better diſcovered. But further, the Coachman tells you, that when he came to Leaden hall Street, they called to him, and directed him to buy one Fowl; and after that he had been gone a little way from the Coach, they called him back, and bad him take ſome more Money and buy two Fowls. So he went and bought the Fowls; but when he came back, the two Gentlemen were gone, and he found the Doctor ſtill in the Coach; and he not ſtirring, he thought he had been in Drink: but upon further Examination, and calling the Watchman with his Candle, it appeared that the Doctor was ſtrangled with a Handkerchief and a Coal.

There is one Mrs. Elianor Aſhbolt, who lives in Brownlow-ſtreet with her Mother, and had been ſent of an Errand; and between nine and ten of the Clock at Night, ſhe ſaw the Coachman in Brownlow-ſtreet, and thought that thoſe men in the Coach might have put a Trick upon him, by going away without paying him his Fare. And ſhe ſays further, That by the help of the Lamps ſhe did diſcern the Face of this Harriſon in the Coach; he had a Cloak on, with a light Perriwig, and looked out of the Coach, and did ſwear at the Coachman; and by this means ſhe knew him when ſhe ſaw him again, to be the ſame Man, both by his Face and Voice. This Woman indeed was not before the Coroner, and ſhe gives you this reaſon for it, becauſe her Mother was not willing ſhe ſhould be concerned in ſuch a matter as this was; and what ſhe could ſay, was not known to Mrs. Clenche until after the ſecond Seſſions: And when he was in Newgate, ſhe ſaw him there, and declared he was the ſame Man.

There was another piece of Evidence. viz. That of the Boy's, who does not appear, he was examined before the Coroner. There has been Evidence given of ill practice to take him out of the way, and therefore his Affidavit is read for Evidence: He ſwears he ſaw two Gentlemen come out of the Coach when it ſtood in Leaden hall-ſtreet, and that having ſeen the Priſoner in Newgate ſince, doth believe him to be one. This, Gentlemen, is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Evidence for the King, to prove that the Priſoner was one of thoſe that committed the Murder.

You

You have heard likewiſe what the Priſoner ſays for himſelf; he does undertake to prove that he was in another place, (that is) that he ſhould come into Maccaffee's Houſe in Crown-Court over againſt Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-lane: and Maccaffee, he tells you, that there were ſome other Company there, and that Harriſon came in very cold, and that they went to Cards, and plaid for one Penny a Corner at Whisk; and that he did continue there from nine till eleven a Clock; and if he was there then, it is impoſſible he ſhould be guilty of this Fact, for the Fact was done between the ſame Hours.

Maccaffee's Wife tells you the ſame, and they both tell you who were there beſides, and who plaid together, and are poſitive that the Priſoner was there.

Baker ſays, That he went away about half an hour after ten at Night, and left Harriſon behind him. To confirm this Evidence, they have called two other Witneſſes beſides the Drawers at the King's-Head Tavern, viz. Mr. Sutton the Surgeon, who lives in Stone-Cutter's ſtreet, and Mr. Ruſſel: Mr. Sutton ſays, they had been at the Horſe-Shoe-Tavern in Chancery-lane, and called for half a Pint of Sack at the King's-Head-Tavern when they came by: and as they ſat in the Coach, Mr. Harriſon came by accidentally, and one of them looking out of the Coach, cries Harry, or Harriſon; and he went to them, and they drank together another half Pint of Sack.

As to their meeting with Harriſon, and as to other Paſſages there, Ruſſel ſays the ſame; but as to the time of night he is not poſitive. And they ſent one of the Drawers to a Houſe in Crown Court to enquire for ſome body there.

The Drawers of the King's-Head-Tavern, ſay, That Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruſſel did call there about that time; and that they drank two half Pints of Wine: and that when they were drinking, a Man came by with a Hanging-Coat or Cloak on, and drank with them. And one of the Drawers went to call ſome Body in Crown-Court; and one of the Company up with his Muff and gave him a ſlap in the Face.

Now this is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that you have heard on the behalf of the Priſoner, to induce you to believe that he was not the Perſon that was concerned in the Murder of Doctor Clenche.

To which Evidence an anſwer hath been offered;

Firſt, As to thoſe Witneſſes, Maccaffee and his Wife, divers Witneſſes have been produced to prove, that they are People of doubtful Credit; it ſeems they keep an Houſe of ill Fame.

Mr. Harriſon. I am glad, my Lord, that I was there.

L. C. J. Well, well. Gentlemen, the People of the Houſe are not of very good Reputation, they keep a naughty and a diſorderly Houſe, (if you believe the Witneſſes) you may conſider of their Credit.

And as to Mr. Baker; about nine Years ſince he was convicted of an arrant Cheat, which is no leſs than Forgery, for altering the Scavenger's Rate for St. Giles's Pariſh, and therefore the leſs Credit is to be given to his Evidence; for now it appears that he is a Knave upon Record: and the very Record it ſelf was produced againſt him, which is true without doubt, notwithſtanding his pretence of Innocency. What is ſaid by Mr. Ruſſel and Mr. Sutton, I muſt leave to your Conſideration; they had been a drinking, and the Drawer ſays they were at the King's-Head Tavern at eleven of the Clock at Night. Mr. Harriſon the next day after the Murder, met a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-Houſe in Salisbury-Court; and though he had taken a Lodging in Paul's Church-Yard, yet he ſaid that he was newly come to Town, and had been in Kent, and had remained there about three Weeks; and that he wanted a Laundreſs and a Lodging, although he had not been out of Town, and had taken a Lodging but the day before: And then he told the Witneſs who diſcourſed with him about the Death of Dr. Clenche, That he had formerly loved him, but he ſaid he had been of late a barbarous Rogue to a poor Gentlewoman a Friend of his; and that the juſt Judgment of God had fallen upon him for ſo doing, and that he would write to her to give her an account of it; and adviſe her to write to Mrs. Clenche, and to tell her that ſhe was a Widow now as well as Mrs. Vanwicke; and he thought by that means to move Mrs. Clenche to pity her, being a Widow as well as her ſelf: And that whilſt they were talking thus, one Mr. Ravenſcroft tells him, that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that a Bully of the Town, that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, one Mrs. Vanwicke, was ſuſpected. At which Mr. Harriſon was much ſtartled, and ſaid, That no one was concerned with that Gentlewoman but himſelf; and for ought he knew, he might be taken up for it. This is that which he ſaid.

Now what ſaid Mr. Harriſon farther for himſelf? Why, ſays he, this Gentlewoman is not in Priſon at the Proſecution of Dr. Clenche, and was not ſo affirmed, but ſo reported; and whether it were ſo or no is no great matter. Gentlemen, you ought to conſider of the Evidence that you have heard againſt him, and alſo to weigh well the Evidence he hath brought for himſelf.

It is moſt plain, if you believe the Witneſſes, that Mr. Harriſon was concerned for this Woman Vanwick, and hath threatned Dr. Clenche, called him Rogue and Raſcal, and ſaid, that he deſerved to have his Throat cut; that Harriſon went under a Diſguiſe for ſome time before the Murder. You have had an Account of the Handkerchief, what kind of Handkerchief Harriſon had, and what Handkerchief was taken about Dr. Clench's Neck, you have ſeen: And you heard what Evidence was given by Mr. Humſton; how the Priſoner was with him about nine a Clock that Night; and how he refuſed to ſtay and ſup with Mr. Humſton. If Mr. Harriſon had no earneſt buſineſs, one would have thought he might have ſtaid with Mr. Humſton better than to have gone to an Ale-Houſe in Crown-Court, and plaid at Cards at one Penny a piece a Corner; he might have had better Fare no doubt.

The Witneſſes for the Priſoner ſay for him, That he came to Maccaffee's Houſe about 9 a Clock at night, and ſtaid till eleven: That is contrary to that Evidence given for the King, viz. That he was in the Coach at Brownlow-ſtreet End; for if he was at Maccaffee's Houſe all the time they mention, it is impoſſible he ſhould be guilty. All theſe things are under your ſerious Conſideration. You had beſt go together, and if you are not ſatisfied upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is guilty, then you ought to acquit him; but if you are ſatisfied that he did not commit this Murder, then you ought not to find him guilty.

to

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned for half an hour; and when they were returned, the Jury came to give their Verdict; and being called over, anſwered to their Names; and Mr. Harriſon was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arraign. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury.—— Yes.

Cl. of Arraign. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury.—— Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arraign. Henry Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.]

Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraign. What Goods or Chattels? &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Major Richardſon Look to him, he is found guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraign. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it.

You ſay that Henry Harriſon is guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ſtands indicted, but that he had no Lands, nor Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the time of the Felony and Murder committed, nor at any time ſince to your Knowledg: and ſo you ſay all?

Jury.——Yes.

Then the Priſoner was remanded to Newgate untill the laſt Day of the Seſſions, and then he was brought to the Bar to receive Sentence of Death.

Cl. of Arraign. Henry Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.]

Henry Harriſon, You ſtand convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clench: What can you ſay for your ſelf why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt you, to die according to Law?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Harriſon, You have been Indicted, Arraign'd and Convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr Andrew Clenche. You have had a long, and a fair and favourable Tryal, as any Perſon that ever hath been Tryed at this Bar.

The Jury that has paſſed upon your Life and Death hath Convicted you, and the Court are now ready to do their laſt Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon ſuch Crimes as you ſtand Convicted of.

Mr. Harriſon. I expect no Mercy here, therefore I humbly deſire you would interceed to the Queen, that I may have twelve Days allowed me, in order to my better Preparation for Death.

Mr. D. Recorder.—— Well.

Mr. Harriſon. I muſt needs acknowledg, that I was Tryed before the beſt of Judges, my Lord-Chief-Juſtice Holt, but one thing I think ſtrange, that my Witneſſes ſhould be examin'd ſingly, and not the King's.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is no more than what is uſual, the Council for the King and Queen requeſted it, and you did not.

Mr. Harriſon. I beg'd that I might have timely notice of my Tryal, and I had not; there were ſeven People in my Company at that time when this black and bloody Murder was done, and I could not get them to be here.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have had a long time to get them ready, and you preſſed on your own Tryal, which you ſhould not have done if you had not been ready.

Mr. Harriſon. I humbly ſubmit.

Then the uſual Sentence of Death was pronounc'd againſt him, and he was Remanded to Newgate.

The Examination of Henry Harriſon this 6th. Day of January, 1691.

THIS Examinant being ask'd where his Lodgings are, anſwereth, That he Lodgeth at the Golden-Ball in Paul's Church-Yard, and came to Lodge there on Monday Night about Eleven of the Clock or half an hour after, but took the Lodgings in the Morning, the Maſter of the Houſe being one Mr. Jones a Cane-Chair-Seller; and before that time this Examinant lodged at the Hand and Apple near the Exchange, which ſaid Lodging he left on Saturday laſt in the Morning, and paid for them on Sunday Afternoon. And this Examinant ſaith, That on Saturday Night laſt he lodg'd at the White Balcony in Old Southampton-Buildings, the Miſtreſs of the Houſe being one Miſtreſs Pitts: And this Examinant Lodged there on Sunday Night alſo. And this Examinant ſaith, That he was at the King's Head in Crown-Court in Chancery-Lane upon Monday laſt, from between Seven and Eight of the Clock at Night, and ſtayed there until Eleven, playing at Cards with the Man and Woman of the Houſe, and other Perſons unknown. And being ask'd where he Dined on Monday, and how he ſpent his Time on Monday in the Afternoon, he ſaith, he cannot give an Account. And this Examinant ſaith, that on Tueſday laſt Mr. Hartly of Old Southampton-Buildings, diſcourſing concerning the Murder of Doctor Clench, ſaid, That this Examinant was ſuſpected to be guilty of that Murder. And this Examinant further ſaith, That he wore the ſame Cloaths he hath now on upon Munday laſt, and hath worn them a great while having no other Clothes to wear.

Capt. & Cognit. 6. die Jan. 1691. Coram J. Holt. Hen. Harriſon,

The Tryal of John Cole, 4 W. & M.

At the Seſſions of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bayly, on the 31ſt day of Auguſt, and on the firſt and ſecond days of September, in the Fourth Year of their Majeſties Reign.

Judges preſent { Mr. Juſtice Dolben, and Mr Juſtice Powel.

THE Keeper of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court being ſate, on Friday the 2d day of September, bring up the Body of John Cole to the Seſſions Houſe in the Old-Baily, London; who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found againſt him by the Grand Jury of the City of London, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche.

Cl of Arraignment. JOhn Cole, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You ſtand indicted by the Name of John Cole, of London, Labourer, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche, &c. and the Indictment is in ſuch manner as that againſt Mr. Henry Harriſon.

How ſay you, John Cole, are you guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand indicted, or not guilty?

John Cole. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culpriſt. How will you be tryed?

John Cole. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

And afterwards the ſaid John Cole was brought to the Bar upon his Tryal; and thoſe Perſons who were returned upon the Jury, were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You, John Cole, Theſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and perſonally do appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and you upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Then the Jury were call'd and Sworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve Sworn were theſe whoſe names follow.

John Clay	Cuthbert Lee
Edward Sherlock	Thomas Watſon
John Ruddyer	Thomas Milburne
Benj. Evans	Thomas Applebury
George Beſtow	Nicholas Harris
Archibauld Wilſon	Ralph Cates.

Then Proclamation was made for Information and Evidence as uſual.

Cl. of Ar. John Cole, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen, You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands indicted by the Name of John Cole, late of London, Labourer, &c. as in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty. If you find that he is guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and Murther committed, or at any time ſince. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call Mary Milward, Joſeph Dudley, John Dudley, Jane Warren, Sarah Dueley, Anne Gunn, Anne Geſſon, Anne Warren, Elizabeth Harper, Mary Edwards, John Gamble, John Sykes, Robert Rebone, Richard Eades, Richard Marryot, Samuel Revet, Henry Milward, Squire Dalley, William Brown, Francis Hobbs. Who were all ſworn.

Cl. of Ar. Set Mary Milward up.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. What have you to ſay, Woman, againſt Cole the Priſoner, concerning the Murther of Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, my Husband declar'd to me, that he and Mr. Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. That's no Evidence at all what your Husband told you; that won't be good Evidence if you don't know ſomewhat of your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, I have a great deal more that my Husband told me, to declare.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. That won't do: what if your Husband had told you that I kill'd Dr. Clenche, what then? That will ſtand for no Evidence in Law: We ought by the Law to have no Man call'd in queſtion, but upon very good Grounds and good Evidence, upon Oath, and that upon the Verdict of Twelve good Men.

Have

Have you any body that can prove any thing againſt Cole, or does it all ariſe barely from your Husband's Report?

Mrs. Milward. My Husband declared that he and Mr. Cole were to go under a pretence to rob the Doctor, and ſo to take their Opportunity to kill him; and the firſt time they call'd at Doctor Clenche's, he was not within, but the ſecond time they went he was within, and then they did the Murther.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. When dy'd your Husband Miſtriſs?

Mrs. Milward. The 23d of May laſt, Sir,

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Here hath been two or three Seſſions ſince that time, why did not you take up Cole about it before now?

Mrs. Milward. I did not know where to find him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why, then you ſhould have gone to a Magiſtrate, and told him of it, and taken ſome advice about it.

Mrs. Milward. I did as ſoon as I had found Mr. Cole

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Your buſineſs had been to have diſcover'd this to Mrs. Clenche, and ſhe ſhould have look'd after Cole; is Mrs. Clenche here?

Sir William Hurſt. Here is her Brother-in-Law.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Do you proſecute Cole upon this Indictment?

Mr. Wiſe. No, my Lord, I do not. Mrs. Milward is the Proſecutor, and ſhe charged Mr. Cole with the Murther of my Brother Dr. Clenche; and ſhe told my Siſter Clenche, that Mr. Milward her Husband confeſſed and ſaid ſometime before his Death, that he and Mr. Cole murther'd Dr. Clenche in a Coach; and Mrs. Milward ſaid, That ſhe had ſufficient Evidence againſt Mr. Cole for it, and my Siſter Clenche told Mrs. Milward that Mr. Harriſon murther'd Doctor Clenche in a Coach, together with another Perſon, which my Siſter Clenche ſaid, ſhe believed was the ſaid Mr. Milward, Husband of the ſaid Mrs. Milward; and that ſhe had a Warrant againſt him, the ſaid Mr. Milward, upon Suſpicion for it, but could not take him, and that ſhe ſuſpected that there were other Perſons contrivers or concerned in it; who were ſet down at the Blue-Boars-Head Ale-Houſe near Clements Inn, by Mr. Gamble a Coach-man out of his Coach, together with the ſaid Mr. Milward in their return from Dr. Clenche's Houſe that Night he was murder'd; and my Lord, by my Siſter Clenche's Order, I went with Mrs. Milward to all her Witneſſes, and took Notes of their Evidence, and I went with ſeveral of them to my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's Chamber, before whom they gave in their Informations upon Oath about it, and when I had done it, I told Mrs. Milward I could find no Evidence that ſhe had againſt Mr. Cole, more than that he was at Dr. Clenche's Houſe, and at the ſaid Blue-Boars-Head Ale-houſe with Mr. Milward, and another Perſon, that night Dr. Clenche was murdered, and ſo he might be concern'd in the contrivance of it; whereupon Mrs. Milward was diſſatisfied, and ſaid, ſhe was not able to Proſecute him for it; ſo my Siſter ſaid to Mrs. Milward, that ſhe might if ſhe would prefer an Indictment againſt him for it, and that ſhe would pay for it, and other Charges about it, which ſhe did; and Mrs. Milward hath a Note of the Names of all her Witneſſes, and may call them.

Sir Rob. Clayton. Did not you lie at Cole's Houſe, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Milward. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why did not you take him then?

Mrs. Milward. Becauſe he abſconded himſelf, and gave out that he was gone to Sea.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Was there no Quarrel betwixt Cole and you about your Goods?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I had no Quarrel with him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Becauſe you did not do it ſooner, have you not been troubled with your Husbands Ghoſt? Tell the Jury the Story; we have heard on't, but I am afraid they will Laugh at you.

Mrs. Milward. That was very true, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well if you have any thing elſe to ſay, that is material, ſpeak: otherwiſe my Brother and I are of Opinion, that what you have already offer'd is no Evidence.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, here is a Coachman or two, that can acquaint your Lordſhip of the matter of Fact, better than I can.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call John Gamble the Coachman. (Who ſtood up.)

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You, Coachman, do you know the Priſoner?

Mr. Gamble. No, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Look upon him, do you know him or no?

Mr. Gamble. No truly, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Why! Look you, Woman, he does not know him; you Coachman, the Story is well known, therefore I ask you again upon your Oath, if that Priſoner at the Bar be one of the three Perſons, that you carried to the Blue-Boar's Head on the back-ſide of St. Clements, that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd.

Mr. Gamble. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot be poſitive whether he be one of them or no. I took up in Cheapſide three Men into my Coach, and ſet one of them down at Grays-Inn, and drove the other two to Dr. Clenche's Houſe that Night he was murder'd, and he was not at home, and afterwards the Man I had ſet down, came in again, and I ſet them all down at the Blue-Boar's-Head Ale houſe near Clement's-Inn-Gate, about Eight a Clock at Night.

Cl. of Ar. Set up William Brown, Servant at the Blue Boars Head.

Mr. J. Dolben. Hark you, is this one of the three Men that the Coachman ſet down at your Maſter's Houſe that night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Will. Brown. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What time did they come to your Houſe?

Will. Brown. They came about Eight a Clock at Night, and this Man and the other ſtayed till after a Eleven a Clock; only Milward went out and returned preſently, and then immediately he went out again, which was before Nine a Clock, and return'd not until Eleven a Clock after.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What time was Dr. Clenche kill'd?

Will. Brown. About Ten a Clock, or betwixt Ten and Eleven as I think.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who went out firſt, only Milward?

Will. Brown. Only Mr. Milward, my Lord, but this Man ſtayed all the time, till Eleven a Clock at Night, and another who went by the Name of Harper, as I am ſince informed.

Mr.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then this Man could not be in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was Murdred, ſo Harriſon and Milward kill'd the Doctor in all probability, for he ſays, this Man at the Bar, and another, ſtay'd at his Maſters Houſe till after Eleven a Clock.

Will. Brown. My Lord, when Milward came back he brought a Couple of Men with him in Soldiers Habit about Eleven of the Clock at Night.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that Mr. Cole and he went out of the Houſe, and left Mr. Harper behind.

Mr. J. Dolben. But this Man Swears, that the Priſoner did not go out of the Houſe till Eleven a Clock at Night, and they were ſet down about Eight of the Clock, and Dr. Clenche was found kill'd a little after Ten at Night, and that Milward went out, and then came in again about Eleven a Clock, and brought two men with him; 'tis to be fear'd he had been killing Dr. Clenche in that time; have you any more to ſay? If this man ſays true, nothing can be ſaid more.

Mrs. Milward. Speak what was done, when they came to drink the Pot of Ale, Mr. Brown.

Mr. J. Dolben. I would fain know, Miſtreſs, who ſet you upon this buſineſs? Is there not ſome Money promis'd you? It was not the fear of your Husband's Ghoſt that put you upon it, I am afraid.

Mrs. Milward. I am much wronged, my Lord, I know nothing of any Money offer'd me.

Mr. J. Dolben. What ſay you more?

Will. Brown. My Lord. Mr. Milward being at my Maſter's Houſe that Night Dr. Clenche was kill'd, deſired me to make a Fire in the ſame Room the next morning, and that he would come again then; and I made a Fire accordingly, but he came not then, nor afterwards at any time to my knowledge, but on a Sunday Night about a Fortnight after came the Two Perſons, that came with Mr. Milward in the Coach to my Maſters Houſe that Night Dr. Clenche was Murdred, and my Maſter being above ſtairs, I ſent him word, that the Two men were there who were there that Night that the Doctor was Murdered, and they Inquired for Mr. Milward, ſaying he promiſed to meet them there, and he not being there, before my Maſter could come down, they paid for the Pot of Drink and went away.

Mr. J. Dolben. When they came together to the Blue-Boar's-head they had ſome evil deſign, no doubt, but if it be true that thoſe Two men ſtaid from Eight a Clock till Eleven, then it could not be this Man that Murder'd Dr. Clenche; but hark ye, Fellow, you ſay, there were Three Perſons, whereof Cole was one, and Milward the other, who was the Third?

Will. Brown. I do not know his Name, my Lord, otherwiſe than as I have ſince heard.

Mrs. Milward. The other Man's Name was Harper.

Mr. J. Dolben. You know nothing but what your Husband told you, and 'tis moſt probable that Harriſon and he did the Murder, for that it appears that the Priſoner at the Bar is not the Man that Kill'd the Doctor, that's plain. Have you any more?

Mrs. Milward. About a Fortnight after the Murder was done, they came to inquire for my Husband at the Blue Boar's-head, and whilſt the Tapſter went to tell his Maſter, they left their Money for the Drink and went away, and would not be ſeen.

Mr. J. Dolben. What if they had run away, what then? If they were at the Blue Boar when Dr. Clenche was Kill'd, they could not Kill him.

Mrs. Milward. His Maſter ſays, that they were in the Houſe, and out of the Houſe, very often. Call Mr. Dalley the Maſter. Who appear'd and ſtood up.

Mr. Dalley. My Lord, Two of them were not out of the Houſe all the Night, I am not poſitive that this is the Man that came in with Milward, but thoſe Two Men that came in with him, never went out at all until after Eleven a Clock at Night, but only Milward went out between Eight and Nine, and returned about Eleven a Clock.

Mr. J. Dolben. What do you ſay to this, Woman? your Husband told you that the Priſoner was one of the Two, this Witneſs cannot ſay he was one, but ſays poſitively thoſe Two men never went out till Eleven a Clock, and from St. Clement Danes to Leaden hall ſtreet is not to go in and out, they muſt take a great deal of time to go thither and back again. Hark you, Mr Dalley, you ſay that thoſe Two men that Milward left, never went out of your Houſe till after Eleven a Clock, you are ſure on't.

Mr. Dalley. No, my Lord, they did not go out.

Mr. Wiſe. Mrs Milward hath two Witneſſes that can tell ſomewhat more of the matter, concerning her Husband's being concern'd in the Murder.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that the Coach-man took them up not far from Chancery Lane end, and that Mr. Cole laid hands upon the Dr. in the middle of Holbourn.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call John Sykes the Coach-man; who ſtood up.

Mr. Sykes. My Lord, I took up Two men in Fleet Street, about Fetter Lane end.

Mr. J. Dolben. What manner of men were they? What Cloths had they on?

Mr. Sykes. My Lord, one of them had a Light Coloured Periwig on, and the other was in Sad Colour'd Cloths, and Lank Hair, but I cannot be poſitive that this is one of them: They Asked me if I knew Dr. Clenche of Bartholomew ſtreet? I told them, that I did not know the Dr. but I knew the Street; and they bid me Drive thither; and when I came to the Street's end, they ſent me to the Doctor's Houſe and bid me tell him that Two Gentlemen were at the Street's end in a Coach, who deſired him to go with them to one that was not well, ſo the Doctor came preſently after me, and when he was in the Coach, they bid me Drive to Leaden hall-ſtreet, and when I came about Holbourn-Bars they bid me Drive faſter, and when I came to Leaden-hall-market, they bid me Drive to Aldgate, and I drove through the Gate to the Pye Tavern and when I had turned my Coach, they bid me ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, but he was not there; and then I told them the Gate was ſhut, and one of them put his Hand out of the Coach and gave the Watch man Six Pence to open the Gate, and then I drove back again to Leaden hall-market, and there they bid me ſtop again, and one of them gave me Half a Crown to Buy a Fowl, and I went a little way from the Coach, and one of them call'd me back again, and gave me a Shilling more, and bid me bring a Couple, and he bid me Ask for one Hunt a Poulterer; I went all over the Market, but I could find no ſuch man, ſo at length I bought the Fowls of another man, and would have had the man gone with me to my Coach, but he would not; then I came to my Coach ſide, and found the Door open, and I found the Doctor ſitting at the bottom of the Coach with his Head againſt the Cuſhion, and the Two men gone, and one of them ſeemed to be in drink when I took them up, and I thought him to be that man fallen aſleep, and that the Doctor and the ſober man were gone to the Perſon that was not well, ſo then I call'd the Watch, and found the Doctor dead, and then it was about half an Hour after Ten a Clock at Night.

Mr. J. Dolben. Then I Ask you, was that one of the men?

Mr. Sykes. I cannot ſay it, my Lord, I don't know him.

Mr. J. Dolben. What time of Night was it that you took them up at Fetter-Lane end?

Mr. Sykes. It was about Nine a Clock, ſomewhat after.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then, they ſay, that this man never ſtir'd out of the Houſe from Eight a Clock till Eleven, this man can't be concern'd.

Cl. of Ar. Set up John Dudley, which was done.

Mrs. Milward Mr. Dudley, What did my Husband ſay concerning the Doctor to you in the Country?

Mr. Dudley. He came into the Country preſently after the death of the Doctor, and he ſent for me, and was very much concerned, I Ask'd him what was the matter with him, and he told me, that he was come out of Town about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, that I hoped he was not concerned in it; he told me, No, but there was a Warrant out againſt him upon account that he Quarrell'd with the Coach-man that Night that he carried him to Dr. Clenche's; and he ſaid, that Mr. Harriſon had ſent to him from Newgate, and told him, that he would give him Twenty Pounds, if he could make his Tryal eaſie.

Mr. J. Dolben. Miſtreſs, this makes it out, that he told you one Story, and to this Witneſs another, which contradicts your Story fully; he told him, that he came away for fear, and that he was Innocent of the Murder; and ſince that he told you, that he was Guilty. Well, what elſe did he ſay to you, Mr. Dudley?

Mr. Dudley. He was much concerned to enquire after the Gazettes, and Letters, if he were in them, about the Doctor's Murther, and to enquire if Mr. Cole and Mr. Harper were taken up about it.

Mr. J. Dolben. You hear what is ſaid againſt you; what do you ſay to it Mr. Cole?

Mr. Cole. My Lord I know nothing of it.

Mr. J. Dolben. No, I doubt you do, you were one of the Three that was ſet down on the back-ſide of St. Clement's Church, at the Blue-Boar's-head, where all things were Conſulted.

Mr. Cole. My Lord, there was not one word ſpoke about Killing of Dr. Clenche in my Company.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were not you Acquainted with Milward?

Mr. Cole. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were you not with Harriſon?

Mr. Cole. No, my Lord, I never ſaw him with my Eyes.

Mr. J. Dolben. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Mrs. Milward. Call Mr. Hobbs, who ſtood up.

Mr. Hobbs. I met Mr. Milward in York Buildings, and he Asked me how I did, and he went from me a little way, and then came to me again, and ask'd me if I would drink. So we went to the George in York-Buildings and there we drank a Pot or Two; and he ask'd me if I heard that he was accuſed about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, No, but he never told me any thing of this Man at the Barr.

Mr. J. Dolben. What was Milward?

Mr. Hobbs. I do not know how he got his Living.

Mr. J. Dolben. Have you any Body elſe, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I know no more.

Mr. J. Dolben. Gentlemen of the Jury, Cole the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted for Murthering Dr. Clenche, who, as it now appears, was Murther'd in a Coach by two Perſons that were therein together with the Doctor. The queſtion now before you is, whether Cole was one of theſe two?

Gamble, the Coachman, ſwears, That the Night Doctor Clenche was killed, he took up Three Men in Cheapſide, ſet one of them down at Gray's-Inn, and drove on to Doctor Clenche's Houſe, the Doctor was not at home, then the third Man came in again to the Coach and he drove to the Blew-Boar's-Head an Alehouſe by Clement's-Inn, and ſet thoſe Three Men down there, and 'twas then about Eight of the Clock.

Sykes the Coachman, ſwears, he took up Two Men at Fetter-lane End in Fleetſtreet, and by their directions drove to Brownlow-ſtreet, where the Doctor lived, whom they got into the Coach, and he drove as far as Aldgate, and through the Gate, and then came back to Leaden-Hall, was ſent by the Two Men in the Coach to buy a Fowl, when he returned they were gone, but the Doctor found Dead in the Coach; and 'twas now half an hour paſt Ten.

The Queſtion now, as I ſaid before, is whether Cole the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of theſe two men.

The Woman tells you, Milward her Husband told her, that he and Cole were in the Coach with Doctor Clenche, and that they Two Kill'd Doctor Clenche.

She likewiſe tells you, her Husband told her, that Cole and her Husband went out from the Blew Boars-Head near Clement's Inn, and left only Harper behind.

The Court hath already declar'd to you, that her Evidence, being only what her Husband told her, is no Evidence in Law to take away a Man's Life, eſpecially when it is ſingle without any Circumſtance to confirm it, as here 'tis. But that is not all, there is a very great Evidence, that what ſhe ſays her Husband told her, is falſe.

He told her, ſhe ſays, that he and Cole went from the Blew-Boars-Head and Kill'd the Doctor, leaving only Harper behind.

The Maſter of the Houſe and his Servant (Witneſſes which ſhe produceth) both ſwear, That her Husband went out alone, and left Two Men behind, who both ſtaid in the Houſe till Milward return'd, which was about Eleven of the Clock. The Master, 'tis true, cannot say that Cole is one of the two, but the Servant is very positive he is, and both are positive, that two Men, that Milward left behind, continued in the House till Milward returned at Eleven of the Clock. These Two Mens Depositions do plainly contradict her Story, and if they swear true, Cole the Prisoner was not one of the Persons that Kill'd the Doctor.

the

You have all heard, I am sure, that one Harrison hath been Convicted by a Jury in this Place for the Murther of Doctor Clenche: If he was one of the two, then Milward by his own Confession (if his Wife swear true) was the other; but this you cannot take notice of, the Record is not produced, neither hath the Prisoner taken notice of it. The Question is only whether Cole be Guilty of the Murther? which I leave to you upon the Evidence you have heard.

The Jury having consider'd their Verdict, returned, That the Prisoner was not Guilty.

The Tryal of Charles Lord Mohun for the Murder of William Mountford, 1692. 4 W. & M. Published by Authority.

Die Martis 31. Januarii, 1692.

IN the Court Erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Tryal of the Lord Mohun, for the Murder of William Mountford.

About 12 a Clock this Day, the Lords came from their own House in their Robes, in Procession in this manner into the Court.

First, the Lord High Stewards Gentlemen Attendants, two and two.

Then the Clerks of the House of Lords, with the two Clerks of the Crown in the King's-Bench and Chancery, two and two.

Then the Masters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges Eight of them, two and two.

Then the Peers Eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then the Yeoman Usher of the House.

Then the Peers according to their Seniority, beginning with the youngest Baron, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then his Grace remov'd from the Wooll-Pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Aſcent juſt before the uppermoſt ſtep of the Throne, and Seated himſelf in the Chair.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Cl. of Cr. Chief Governor of the Tower of London, return the Precept to you directed, together with the Body of Charles Lord Mohun your Priſoner forthwith into the Court, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Deputy Governor of the Tower, brought the Lord Mohun to the Bar, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor of the Tower, who ſtood with it at the Bar, on the Right Hand of the Priſoner, turning the Edge from him.

The Priſoner at his Approach to the Bar, made three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand, and his Grace and all the Peers returned the Salute to him.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, my Voice will not ſerve to ſpeak at ſuch a Diſtance, ſo as to be heard, and therefore I muſt beg leave of your Lordſhips to come down to the Wooll-Pack again.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and Seated himſelf on the Wooll-Pack.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, I am to let your Lordſhip know, you are not to hold up your Hand upon your Arraignment; and I am to let you that are Council at the Bar likewiſe know, that both you and the Witneſſes, are to Direct your ſelves to the Court, in the Style of my Lords, ſpeaking to the Court.

Then there was a little Pauſe, after which his Grace Addreſſed himſelf to the Priſoner thus.

Lord High Steward. My Lord, you are brought here before this Supream Court in Order to your Tryal.

The Charge againſt you is, for the Murther of one of the Kings Subjects, which is a Crime the King will at no time paſs over in the meaneſt Mans Caſe, without making a ſtrict inquiry into the Offence, and cauſing due Puniſhment to be inflicted on the Offender.

This my Lord is charged upon you, not by any ſlight Information; but by the Grand Inqueſt of this County, made up of Gentlemen of good Worth and Conſideration. It is true, that this Inqueſt does not amount to much more than a bare Accuſation; and therefore it ought not to be made any uſe of, ſo as to prejudice your Lordſhips Tryal; but it is that which is the Ground of preſenting this Black Crime before my Lords your Peers, who cannot receive it without ſome trouble, to find any one of their Body ſuſpected to be Guilty of an Action ſo Diſhonourable as this is repreſented to their Lordſhips.

My Lord, you are a very young Man, and therefore it is to be hoped, you cannot ſo early have had your Hands in Blood. And the ſame Reaſon, becauſe you are ſo young, may perhaps make you conceive, that you are under ſome greater Diſadvantage in making your Defence, than you would be if your Experience had been longer.

But to remove any Miſapprehenſion you can have of that kind, it is very proper to put your Lordſhip in mind, that you have the good Fortune now, to be Tryed for this Fact in full Parliament, where no Evidence will be received, but ſuch as muſt be manifeſt and plain, beyond all Contradiction; ſo that you have nothing to fear here, but your own Guilt.

In the next place, My Lord, you need not be diſcourag'd for the want of Council, for the Honour of this Court is ſuch, as will take Care to inform you of any Advantage that the Law can give you. And you may be farther aſſured, that no Art or Skill in Arguing, can take any place here, either againſt your Innocency, or to Divert my Lords from doing you exact Juſtice. Nay, I dare preſume to ſay on the part of my Lords, that if there be room for any Abatement of Severity, you may reaſonably expect to find it from their Lordſhips.

Theſe Conſiderations, my Lord, cannot but give you great Conſolation under your unhappy Circumſtances, it being moſt certain, that nothing but your own Crimes can hurt you.

But

But at the same time I must tell you, that your Lordship is not to flatter your self with an Expectation or Hope, that any Favour will be shewed you beyond what Honour and Justice can allow: And I hope you have well considered, that it is no less than your Life, your Honour, and your Estate, that you are now to Defend, insomuch, that I cannot doubt but your Lordship has recollected and prepar'd your self, for the Defence of what so very much concerns you.

I will not therefore detain you any longer than to give you some Directions in the Order and Method of your Tryal; and those are, that your Lordship do give Attention carefully to the Reading of your Indictment. That you give no Interruption to the Council or Witnesses when they speak against you; and when the proper time shall come for your Witnesses to be Examined, and that you are to be heard in your own Defence, I will give you due notice of it.

Your Lordship may also be certain that when it shall come to your turn to speak, you shall be heard with all the Patience and Favour that the Matter will bear; and at last, when all hath been heard that can be said on both sides, your Lordship needs not doubt, but that My Lords will give such a Judgment as will be Suitable to the Honour, Justice and Equity of this great Court. Clerk Read the Indictment to my Lord.

'Clerk of the Crown' 'CHarles Lord Mohun, You stand Indicted by the Name of Charles Lord Mohun, of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, For that you together with one Richard Hill of the same Parish and County Gentleman, who is fled, and withdrawn from Justice, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 9th Day of December, in the 4th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady William and Mary, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King and Queen, Defenders of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one William Mountford Gent. in the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault. And that he the said Richard Hill, with a certain Rapier made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of 5s. which he the said Richard Hill, in his Right Hand then and there had and held drawn, the said William Mountford, in and upon the Right side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the Right Pap of him the said William, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did strike and thrust, giving unto him the said William Mountford then and there, with the Sword drawn aforesaid, in and upon the aforesaid Right side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the said Right Pap of the said William, one Mortal Wound of the breadth of one Inch, and of the depth of twenty Inches, of which said Mortal Wound the aforesaid William Mountford, from the aforesaid ninth Day of December, in the Year aforesaid, unto the tenth Day of the same Month of December, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid in the County aforesaid, did languish, and languishing did live, on which said tenth Day of December in the Year aforesaid, the aforesaid William Mountford of the Mortal Wound aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, died. And that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, at the time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the aforesaid Richard Hill, in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought done and committed, then and there feloniously, willfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting and maintaining the aforesaid Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in form aforesaid, feloniously, willfully, and of his Malice afore-thought to kill and murder. And so that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, and the said Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, did Kill and Murder, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity.

How say you Charles Lord Mohun, Are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder, or not Guilty?

Lord Mohun. Not Guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. How will your Lordship be Tryed?

Lord Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. Will your Lordships please, that the Judges may be Covered?

Lord Ay, Ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serj. O Yes.

Clerk of the Crown. If any one will give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queens Majesties, against Charles Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard, for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. You Gentlemen that are of the Kings Council, will you begin.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordships, I am of Council for the King and Queen, against my Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands Indicted for the Murther of one William Mountford.

Lord Mohun. My Lords.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, what does your Lordship say?

Lord Mohun. Do not your Lordships think it proper, that I should have Pen, Ink and Paper?

Lords. Ay, by all means.

Lord High Steward. Yes, give my Lord Pen, Ink and Paper?

Which was carryed to him by one of the Clerks.

Lord High Steward. Go on Sir now.

Mr. Serj. Thomson. My Lord Mohun stands Indicted here before your Lordships, for the Murder of one William Mountford, and the Indictment sets forth, that one Richard Hill, who is since fled from Justice, did upon the 9*th.* of December last, make an Assault upon this same William Mountford, and that the said Lord Mohun, did likewise make that Assault. The Indictment particularly sets forth, that this Hill by a Sword or Rapier which he had in his Hand, did give this William Mountford a Wound on his Right Side, and that Mountford did Languish of that Wound till the next Day, which was the 10*th.* of December, when he Dyed; and that at the time of the giving the Wound, Wound, My Lord Mohun was preſent, and was Aiding, Abetting, Aſſiſting and Comforting of Hill; and thereupon we do ſay, he is Guilty of this Murder, and for this he ſtands Indicted. It is my Duty to open the Indictment to your Lordſhips, we ſhall call our Proofs, and give you the Evidence, and then leave it to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, the Indictment has been opened, and by that your Lordſhips ſee, the Noble Lord at the Bar ſtands Charged with the High Crime of Murder.

My Lords, his Peerage gives him a Right to be Tryed in this Great and Noble Court; and as my Lord has Juſt Reaſon to put a High Value upon this Priviledge, ſo on the other Hand, their Majeſties who are making Inquiſition for the Blood of one of their Subjects have a full Aſſurance, that no Compaſſion for my Lords Youth, no Conſideration of his Quality, or Regard for one of your own Order, will make your Lordſhips unmindful of the Heinous Nature of the Crime, or cauſe any Variation in the Steadineſs of your Juſtice.

It is true, my Lords the difference between the Tryal of a Peer and a Commoner is very great, but there is no difference in the Crime, whether committed by one or the other: It is the ſame Law by which they muſt be Tryed and Judged; and that Fact which would be Murder in the meaneſt Subject, is no leſs than Murder if committed by the greateſt Peer.

My Lords, it is not inſiſted upon, that the Noble Lord at the Bar gave the Mortal Stroak with his own Hand; Nor is it ſo alledged in the Indictment: The Indictment findeth the Wound to have been given by the Hand of Richard Hill; but if my Lord the Priſoner was of his Party, if he Concurr'd with him in the Thing, if he was Preſent and Abetting to the Fact, though he did not ſtrike a ſtroke, though he was no more than a looker on, when the thing was done, the Law ſaith, he is a Principal in the Murder.

Whether my Lords Caſe will fall within this Rule, is the Point for your Lordſhips to Determine, when the Witneſſes are heard.

My Lords, it is my part to give an Account of the Nature of the Evidence, to the end, that your Lordſhips may more eaſily go along with the Witneſſes, as they are Examined, and more readily make your Obſervations upon what they ſay.

This I ſhall do as ſhortly, and as exactly as I can without pretending to Aggravate any thing, which I could never think did become any one in my Station; and I am ſure, would be to very little purpoſe before ſuch a Judicature as this; for after all, your Lordſhips will found your Judgments upon the Fact, not as it is Repreſented by us, but as it appears upon the Oaths of the Witneſſes.

The time when the Fact for which my Lord is to be Tryed was Committed, was the 9th. Day of December laſt.

The Occaſion of it, was this.

Captain Hill, the Perſon mentioned in the Indictment, had for ſome time before made Addreſſes of Courtſhip in the way of Marriage, to one Mrs Bracegirdle, an Actreſs in the Play-Houſe; But theſe Propoſals were totally Rejected. This put Mr. Hill in a very great Rage, and he Declared, that Mr. Mountford (the Perſon Slain) was the only Man that ſtood in his way, and with many Execrations, expreſſed his Reſolution to be Revenged upon him: This he did at ſeveral times, and before ſeveral Perſons.

The ſame Day the Fact was Committed, in the Morning; My Lord who is now at the Bar, and Captain Hill went together to Hire a Coach to go to Totteridge, and Directed the Coach-man to have ſix Horſes Ready, but to be waiting for them in Drury-Lane near the Play-Houſe, with only two Horſes in his Coach, about nine a Clock the ſame Night. My Lord and Captain Hill Dined together that Day, at a Tavern in Covent Garden; and there much of their Diſcourſe was about Mrs. Bracegirdle; and both of them did freely declare their Opinion, that Mr. Mountford lay with her. But the Principal of their Diſcourſe, was in Relation to a Deſign which they had formed for the Seizing upon Mrs Bracegirdle, and forcing her into a Coach, and carrying her away ſome where into the Country.

This was to be executed that Night; and accordingly they were then providing Arms for that purpoſe, Mr. Hill did acquaint my Lord, that the Soldiers would be ready by the time; and my Lord took notice, that the carrying her off, would ſtand Mr. Hill in 50*l.* at leaſt. Thereupon (as your Lordſhips will hear from the Evidence) Mr. Hill uſed this Expreſſion, If the Villain Reſiſt, I will Stab him; and then my Lord was pleaſed to ſay, That he would ſtand by his Friend.

After they had Continued there ſome time, being about to part, Mr. Hill told my Lord, that unleſs he was at the Play-Houſe by ſix a Clock, the thing could not be Effected, and he ſhould be undone: But my Lord promiſed to be there at the time.

Accordingly they both met at the Play-Houſe, and after they had been behind the Scenes, and informed themſelves that Mrs. Bracegirdle would not be there that Night, they left the Play-Houſe.

But it ſeems they had got Intelligence, that ſhe was to Sup that Night at one Mr. Page's Houſe in Drury-Lane; and therefore they planted themſelves with their Soldiers near that place, over againſt my Lord Cravens Houſe.

Lord High Steward. They; who do you mean?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord the Priſoner at the Bar and Mr. Hill. After they had continued there for a Conſiderable time (I think till towards Nine a Clock) they began to have a Jealouſie, that they might be under ſome miſinformation; and therefore ordered the Coachman to Drive them into Howard-Street, the place where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and obſerving ſome Perſons Walking near her Lodging, they ſaid, they doubted they were deceived, and had been betrayed.

But they ſoon came back again to Drury Lane, and fixed themſelves in their former Station. About Ten a Clock, Mrs. Bracegirdle accompanied with Mr. Page (at whoſe Houſe ſhe had been) and with her Mother, and (I think) her Brother going Home; when they came to the Place where the Coach ſtood, with the Door open, and my Lord at the Bar placed in the Coach; and ſeveral Caſes of Piſtols by him, the Soldiers together with Captain Hill, came up to Mrs. Bracegirdle, Seized upon her, and would have forced her into the Coach: Mr. Hill endeavoured with Violence, to force away Mr. Page, who was then leading her, and ſtruck him; but Mrs.

Brace-

Bracegirdle's Mother holding her about the middle, they could not readily get her into the Coach, and during this ſtruggle, there was an Opportunity given to Mr. Page to call for help, and ſeveral Perſons coming preſently from the Houſes near, and the People in the ſtreet beginning to riſe upon them, they found it impracticable to effect their Deſign at that time.

Thereupon the Soldiers were Diſmiſſed; but my Lord and Mr. Hill, would not be denyed the Liberty to wait upon Mrs. Bracegirdle to her Lodging, and accordingly together with Mr. Page and her Mother and other Perſons, they went together to Mrs. Bracegirdles Lodging, at one Mrs. Brownes Houſe in Howard Street. Mr. Mountford's Houſe was in Norfolk Street below Howard Street. Howard Street is a Croſs Street, which leads from Arundel Street, and through Norfolk Street to Surry-Street; and ſo it was not poſſible for Mountford to come to his own Houſe, but whoever ſhould fix themſelves in Howard Street muſt have the Opportunity of ſeeing him.

As they were going along, Hill ſwore he would be Reveng'd; but nam'd no Body.

After that Mrs Bracegirdle and the Company were come to her Lodging, ſhe and her Mother, and Page went into the Houſe: My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill ſtaid in Howard ſtreet, and there continued for near two Hours together, and for the moſt part of that Time, with their Swords drawn.

Mr. Mountford, as it hapned, did not come Home till late that Night; ſo that their Stay being long, my Lord and Mr. Hill thought fit to ſend for Wine, and had one or two Bottles, which they drank in the Street, near Mrs. Bracegirdles Lodgings.

During this Time, they were heard to ſay (that is, one of them was; but which of them, by reaſon of the Darkneſs, we cannot tell) that if he could not be revenged that Night, he would the next Morning; upon which, a Boy, who was there with them; (but who the Boy was we cannot diſcover) ſaid, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution. I did obſerve before, that Mrs. Bracegirdle Supped that Night at Mr. Pages Houſe, and Mrs. Page having heard of the great Outrage and Tumult in the Street, and that her Husband was gone home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and being under a great Concern for his Safety, thought fit to follow him thither. As ſhe entred into the Houſe, ſhe ſaw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill near the Door; and preſently after, before ſhe could have a full Relation of what had happened in Drury Lane, Mrs. Brown, the Owner of the Houſe where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, came into the Room, and told them, that my Lord Mohun and Hill were waiting for Mr. Mountford, and that ſhe was apprehenſive it was with no good intention. Thereupon Mrs. Page thought it requiſite to go to Mrs. Mountfords Houſe, to give her Notice of it, and to deſire her to find out where her Husband was, and to caution him not to come Home, unleſs he brought a good Guard with him.

As ſhe went out, ſhe ſaw them both with their Swords drawn, and ſhe acquainted Mrs. Mountford with it, who ſent to ſeveral Places in ſearch of her Husband, but ſhe was ſo unfortunate, that the Meſſengers could not find him.

Whilſt this was doing, the Watch came into Howard-Street, being allarm'd at the Report that two Gentlemen were Drinking in the Street, and walking there with their naked Swords. The Watch demanded of my Lord Mohun, why he had his Sword drawn. My Lord was pleaſed to return them this Anſwer, That he was a Peer of the Realm, and bid them touch him if they durſt. They then asked Hill why his Sword was out, and my Lord made the Excuſe for him, That Hill had loſt his Scabbord.

The Watch obſerving the Drawer who attended upon them, and knowing that he lived at a Tavern in Surry-Street, went to inform themſelves, who theſe Perſons ſhould be, that were walking in ſuch a Manner at that time of Night. But they were hardly got into the Houſe before they heard the Cry of Murder.

The Witneſſes will inform your Lordſhips, that as Mr. Mountford, about 12 a Clock, was coming Home, my Lord Mohun met him, and ſaluted him. Mr. Mountford ſaid, My Lord Mohun, What does your Lordſhip do here at this time of Night? And my Lord made anſwer, He ſuppoſed Mr. Mountford had been ſent for. No, No, ſays Mountford, I came by chance. My Lord ſaid to him again, I ſuppoſe you have heard about the Lady. Mr. Mountford anſwered, I hope my Wife has given your Lordſhip no Offence. No, ſays my Lord Mohun, It's Mrs. Bracegirdle I mean. To this, the Reply of Mr. Mountford was, Mrs. Bracegirdle is no concern of mine, but I hope your Lordſhip does not countenance any ill Action of Mr. Hill.

Upon this Hill came up to them, and ſaid to my Lord, it was not a time to diſcourſe of thoſe Matters; and as my Lord continued to talk with Mountford, Hill ſtruck Mountford firſt, and in a manner, at the ſame inſtant made a Paſs at him, and run him clean through the Body, and this before Mr. Mountford's Sword was drawn Immediately upon this there was a Cry of Murder, and the Watch came with what haſte they could, and took my Lord Mohun, but Hill was fled; when my Lord was taken, his Sword was not drawn.

As ſoon as my Lord Mohun was taken, the firſt Queſtion he asked was, if Hill was apprehended; and when he was told he was not, he ſaid he was glad of it, and he did not care if he were hang'd for him. And he ſaid, adding at the ſame time, That he was ſorry that Mr Hill had ſo little Money about him, and wiſhed him all that he had in his own Pocket; and he did then alſo own to the Watch, that he had changed Coats with Mr. Hill, and had Hill's Coat on him at that time.

My Lords, this is the Subſtance of the Evidence, and in this Order, with your Lordſhips Leave, we ſhall offer the Proofs to your Lordſhips; I do not doubt, but your Lordſhips will attend to the Evidence with all Care, and will determine upon it according to Juſtice and Honour. I will detain your Lordſhips no longer, but proceed to call the Witneſſes to prove what I have opened.

L. H. Steward. Pray call your Witneſſes together, and let me know who you begin with.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We do not know what Place is deſigned for the Witneſſes; but if they are to be on the other ſide, and this Croud do interpoſe between us and them, it will be impoſſible for us, who are the King's Council, to hear what they ſay, or know how to proceed.

L. H. Steward. There muſt be Room made there there for the Witneſſes, where are your Witneſſes Mr. Attorney?

Clerk of the Crown. If you pleaſe to name them Sir, we will call them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. John Hudſon, and Mr. George Powel.

Lord High Steward. I know not how this is ordered, but way muſt be made there by the Bar, that the Priſoner may ſee the Witneſſes, and they him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes my Lord, by all means.

Mr. Serj Tremain. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, the Witneſſes will be moſt conveniently heard, if they come and ſtand by us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, it will not be poſſible either for my Lord at the Bar, or for us to hear what the Witneſſes ſay, unleſs they be brought into this place to ſtand between us.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Great Chamberlain, be pleaſed to give order for them to be brought in thither.

Then the Lord Great Chamberlain went down to the Bar.

L. Gr. Cham. The Witneſſes muſt be brought to this place.

And accordingly, way was made for the Witneſſes, as called to ſtand at the Bar between the Priſoner and the Kings Council.

L. H. Stew. Give me the Name of him that you begin with.

Mr. Att. G. We begin my Lords, with Mr. John Hudſon. Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to him, upon which he laid his Hand.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Oath Sir, the Evidence that you ſhall give on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queens Majeſties, againſt Charles Lord Mohun the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: So help you God.

Then he kiſſed the Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hudſon, Do you give my Lords an account what you know of any Applications of Courtſhip made to Mrs Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill, and what became of it; and what you heard Hill ſay about her, or about any one elſe relating to that mattter.

Hudſon. My Lord, I had the Honour to be invited to Supper with my Lord Mohun, at the Roſe-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where I found Captain Hill with his Lordſhip.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this Sir? tell the time.

Hud. This was three Nights before this unfortunate Accident happen'd, there I found Captain Hill, and we ſupped together; and after Supper, Captain Hill raiſed a Diſcourſe of Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Mountford, ſays He, I ſhould not doubt the Succeſs of my Amour with Mrs. Bracegirdle, if I were not obſtructed by Mountford whom I deſign to be the Death of: This is Truth upon my Oath. My Lord Mohun was in the Company; but I cannot ſay that my Lord made any Reply to the thing, or took any notice of it: But this Captain Hill did ſay, not only then, but ſeveral times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ſay it at any other time in your Hearing?

Hud. Yes, ſeveral times before.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know any thing more of this matter?

Hud. No more, than that my Lord Mohun that very Night that Mr. Mountford was killed, and Captain Hill came into the Scene Room of the Play-Houſe, and my Lord Mohun had Captain Hill's Coat on, and Captain Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and they changed their Cloaths in the Play-Houſe. I ſaw them change their Cloaths; but what their Deſign was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. G. When was that Sir?

Hud. That very Night that the Gentleman that is Dead, Mr. Mountford, was killed.

Mr. Att. G. You ſay, that my Lord Mohun was preſent, when that Diſcouſe of Hill was, about Mountford at the Tavern.

Hud. Yes, but I cannot ſay my Lord took any notice of it, for he made no Reply that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord,

Hud. This is all that I know of the matter.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to this Witneſs?

L. Mob. No my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Then our next Witneſſes Name is George Powell.

Who was Sworn in like manner.

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Powell, you have heard the Queſtions that have been ask'd Mr. Hudſon. Pray will you make Anſwers to them; and give my Lords an Account what you know of this matter.

Powell. May it pleaſe Your Lordſhips, about 5 or 6 days before Mr. Mountford was Wounded, I was in Company with Captain Hill, and he began Mrs Bracegirdles Health. I told him I would pledge it. Says he, I am ſure there is no Bar between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, but Mountford; and I am Reſolved to be Revenged on him, one way or another. About 3 Days afterwards I was at Supper with my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, and another Gentleman, and the ſame Diſcourſe aroſe again, and Captain Hill whiſpered me in the Ear, ſays he, I am reſolved to have the Blood of Mountford. I told him I did not think it fit for him to ſpeak ſo behind a Gentleman's back, and to me who was his Friend. I ſaid I would acquaint Mr. Mountford what he ſaid, and I did not doubt but he would give him the ſatisfaction of a Gentleman for any Injury he did him. I heard no farther Diſcourſe at that time, nor do I know more of that matter, till the Night that Mr. Mountford was Wounded, when I ſaw him lying upon the Parlor Floor, and afterward ſaw him laid to Bed, and ſate up all Night with him, and about four a Clock in the Morning I asked Mr. Mountford how the thing happened. He told me Captain Hill killed him baſely; I asked him if his Sword was drawn; Yes, ſays he, but it was after I had received my Wound, for whilſt my Lord Mohun talked to me, Hill run me through.

Mr. Att. G. At that time, when thoſe Words were ſpoke at Supper, that he deſigned to be the Death of Mountford, was my Lord preſent?

Powell. Yes my Lord Mohun was preſent, but he was talking to Colonel Tredenham.

Mr. Att. G. Did my Lord Mohun ſay any thing to what Hill ſaid?

Powell. I did not hear him make any Anſwer to it at all.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know any thing elſe in relation to this Fact?

Powell. Nothing elſe but that Captain Hill did give a Letter to be delivered to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but I know not whether it was delivered or not, and he often told me he would marry her with all his Heart.

Mr. Att. G. You ſay you had that Diſcourſe with Mountford, when he lay a Dying.

Powell. It was about four a Clock, and he died about One.

Mr. Att. G. Was there any thing ſaid about my Lord Mohun at that time?

Powell. Nothing but that my Lord Mohun was talking to him, whilſt the other ran him through.

L. H. Stew. If I underſtand you aright, you ſay nothing againſt my Lord Mohun, but his being by one time at Supper when Hill ſaid ſome Words about Mountford; and then the other thing you ſay is what Mountford told you after he was Wounded: that my Lord was Talking to him, when Hill gave him the Wound.

Powell. Yes, My Lord, That is all that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordſhip any thing to ſay to this Witneſs?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. The next Witneſs that we ſhall deſire to call is Mrs. Knight.

Who was S W O R N.

Mrs. Knight. I have nothing to ſay to my Lord Mohun; but what I have to ſay, is to Mr. Hill. About 4 days before Mr. Mountford was Killed, Mr. Hill came to me, and ſpoke to me about Mrs. Bracegirdle: He told me he was ſatisfied ſhe hated him. I told him I did not believe ſhe hated any body, or loved any Body: Yes, he ſaid, ſhe did love ſome body, but he had thought of a way to be even with that Body. Upon the Wedneſday Night before Mr. Mountford was killed, he came to me as I was coming out of the Dreſſing Room; ſaith he, Mrs. Knight let me ſpeak a Word with you, ſays he, you are very great with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and I deſire you to be ſo kind, as to ſpeak to her for me, and I would beg of you if you would give me leave to give her this Letter from me: No, ſaid I, Mr. Hill, I beg your Pardon; you ſay ſhe hateth you, and if ſhe hateth you, ſhe will not love any body that ſpeaketh for you; and I am not fond of creating my ſelf Enemies in the Houſe, knowing I have ſome already. What Enemies, ſaith Mr. Hill, Mountford do you mean? And then repeating a great Oath, I ſhall find a way with him ſpeedily.

L. H. Stew. A way, with what?

Mrs. Knight. A way with him ſpeedily, Hill ſaid it of Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. What do you call this Witneſs for, Mr. Attorney, what uſe do you make of her Evidence againſt my Lord Mohun?

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, the uſe that we would make of theſe Witneſſes is to give an Account of the whole Fact from the Beginning to the End, Hill's Malice, and what was the Occaſion of it, his Deſign in coming there that Night, and what he did, and to leave it to your Lordſhips, to judge what influence this will have, how far it will affect my Lord Mohun. The next Witneſs is Mrs. Sandys.

L. H. Stew. What is this Womans Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Elizabeth Sandys.

She was S W O R N.

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Sandys, give my Lords an Account, whether you were preſent with my Lord Mohun and Mr Hill at the Tavern that day that Mr. Mountford was killed, and what paſſed there.

Sandys. I Dined with my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, at the Three Tuns in Shandois-ſtreet, and there aroſe a Diſcourſe about Mrs. Bracegirdle and Hill, and my Lord Mohun asked me, if I thought Mountford had lay with her or no. I ſaid I could not tell; preſently after ſays my Lord Mohun, it will coſt Hill 50 Guineas this Deſign. Saith Mr. Hill, if the Villain offers to reſiſt I will Stab him; ſaith my Lord Mohun, I will ſtand by my Friend. When this was done, Mr. Hill deſired Mr. Brough to borrow a Caſe of Piſtols of Captain Leiſter, and he ſaid he would not borrow them himſelf, for he doubted, if he knew of the Deſign he would not lend them. When that was done, Captain Hill told me had a Coach and Six Horſes in Witch Street, to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her away into the Country; and my Lord Mohun ſaid, he would ſtand by his Friend: And when my Lord Mohun went away, Hill ſaid to him; my Lord, if you be not there by Six a Clock, I am ruined. Saith my Lord Mohun, upon my Word and Honour I will be at the Play-Houſe by Six.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to that Witneſs?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, I deſire to have her asked, whether ſhe is a Maid or a married Woman.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Queſtion, but I do not know what uſe my Lord will make of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can eaſily anſwer, whether you are married or unmarried.

L. H. Stew. That Queſtion is very fair; are you a married Woman, or a ſingle Woman?

Sandys. I am a ſingle Woman, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mrs. Sandys repeat the Words that my Lord Mohun ſaid, when Hill ſaid if the Villain reſiſted he would Stab him.

Sandys. My Lord Mohun ſaid nothing in the World, but that he would ſtand by his Friend.

L. H. Stew. Have you any further Queſtions, Mr. Attorny, to ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have nothing more to ask her my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you my Lord Mohun; would you ask her any thing elſe?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then withdraw.

(Which ſhe did.)

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs we call is Mr. Rogers.

(Who was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is this Witneſſes Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Rogers, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is his Chriſtian Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. John. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to remember, that the laſt Witneſs Mrs. Sandys ſaid, That Mr. Hill deſired my Lord Mohun, not to fail of being at the Play-Houſe by Six a Clock, and that he was undone if he did not come; and my Lord promiſed upon his Word and Honour that he would come: Now we call this Witneſs to prove, that they met at the Play-Houſe according to the Appointment on the 9th of December.

Rogers. My Lord, all that I know of this matter was, That my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were at the Play-Houſe that Night, and that which made me take particular Notice of their being then at the Play-Houſe, tho' they had been frequently there before together, was, that Captain Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and my Lord Mohun had Captain Hill's Coat on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve any thing elſe, when they were at the Play-Houſe?

Rogers. Nothing but only ſome Words that paſſed between Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun, when I went to ask them for the overplus of the Money for coming in, becauſe they came out of the Pit upon the Stage; he ſaid he would not give it me, but if I brought any of our Maſters, he would ſlit their Noſes, or ſomething to that Effect.

Rogers. I asked them for Money, that they ought to pay more than the reſt that were in the Pit, becauſe they came upon the Stage, and they would not give it me, but he ſaid if I brought any of our Maſters, he would ſlit their Noſes, or cut their Faces, or to that Effect.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. No my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call another Witneſs then.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with your Lordſhips Favour, the next Witneſs that we ſhall call, is the Coach-man, William Dixon.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dixon, do you remember the Day when Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords, what Perſons you carryed in your Coach that Day, whether you carryed my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, and to what place, and where you waited for them.

Dixon. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun came in a Hackney Coach to my Gate, where I live, and I was juſt a going to ſet my Coaches into the Street for Hyre: They Bargained with me for Six Horſes, and I was to have Thirty Shillings to ſet them down at Totteridge on this ſide Barnet. I ask'd them whether they would have me bring all the Six Horſes with the Coach. No they ſaid, a pair would ſerve to the Play-Houſe, and the other four ſhould ſtand at the Pounds end. So I went accordingly to the place appointed, over againſt the Horſhoo-Tavern in Drury Lane, and a Foot-man came, and Mr. Hill and he bid me drive down lower. So I drove to my Lord of Clare's Door, or thereabouts; and there was ſome Soldiers that would have had me go in, and Smoak and Drink with them: I told them, I did never Smoak, and I did not care for drinking any thing at that time. With that, my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill came into the Coach, and as they bid me, I carry'd them into Norfolk-ſtreet, below the Watch houſe that ſtood there; they bid me turn about, and ſtand there; and then they went to the White-Horſe-Taven, ſo I did turn about, and ſtay'd as they bid me, and they tarryed a pretty while before they came again, and then they bid me drive back to the place from whence I came, ſo I drove into Drury lane, and they bid me ſtop next to my Lord Craven's Houſe, this was about Ten a Clock, and it being ſo late, I went Home, and ſent a Poſtillion down, to take care of the Coach, ſo that what paſſed afterwards, I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. What Day or Night, was all this you ſpeak of?

Dixon. Truly my Lord, I cannot tell what Day it was, it was in December, as I take it, the 9th, and it was Friday I believe, I do not know juſtly.

L. H. Stew. Did you hear of the Death of Mr. Mountford?

Dixon. Yes, I did.

L. H. Stew. Was it the ſame Day that you heard Mr. Mountford was killed.

Dixon. No, I did not hear it till the next Morning.

Mr. Att. G. You ſay, you went with my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill into Norfolk-ſtreet, and there you ſtayed for them, whilſt they went elſewhere.

Dixon. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know to what Houſes they went?

Dixon. They went to the White-Horſe-Tavern, to the hithermoſt Houſe on this ſide the Strand, and they went below to a Door on this ſide of a Houſe that is not finiſhed yet.

Mr. Att. G. Did you hear them uſe any Expreſſions there?

Dixon. I heard Hill ſay to my Lord Mohun, I think there is a Man and a Maid talking, it was at the Corner Houſe; ſaith Hill, we are Betrayed, Damn me ſaith he, my Lord, let us go and threſh him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they do then?

Dixon. I did ſee them do nothing.

Mr. Att. G. Whither did you carry them from thence?

Dixon. To the place from whence they came, in Drury-lane.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip ſay any thing to this Man?

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether he had not Orders to go out of Town with us, as ſoon as Mrs. Bracegirdle was put into the Coach.

Dixon. If it pleaſe you, Sir, I had Order thus, that when we were to go out of Town, I muſt drive down into the Strand, and then round about any way that was readieſt and cleareſt to get to the Pound, that Order I had, and no other Order I had.

L. H. Stew. Who is your next Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the next Witneſs we ſhall call, will give you an Account what was done in Drury-lane, upon their endeavouring to carry her away, and for that we have here Mrs. Bracegirdle her ſelf.

L. H. Stew. What is this Gentlewoman's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Ann Bracegirdle.

(Then ſhe was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Bracegirdle, Pray give my Lords an account of the whole of your Knowledge of the Attempt that was made upon you in Drury-lane, and what followed upon it.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was in Prince's-ſtreet at Supper at Mr. Page's, and at ten a Clock at Night, Mr. Page went Home with me; and coming down Drury-lane, there ſtood a Coach by my Lord Craven's Door, and the Boot of the Coach was down, and a great many Men ſtood by it; and juſt as I came to the Place where the Coach ſtood, two Soldiers came and pulled me from Mr. Page, and four or five more came up to them, and they knocked my Mother down almoſt, for my Mother and my Brother were with me. My Mother recovered, and came and hung about my Neck, ſo that they could not get me into the Coach, and Mr. Page went to call Company to reſcue me. Then Mr. Hill came with his Sword drawn, and ſtruck at Mr.

Page and my Mother; and when they could not get me into the Coach, becauſe Company came in, he ſaid he would ſee me Home, and he led me by one Hand, and my Mother by the other. And when we came Home, he pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and ſaid, Sir, I would ſpeak with you.

Mr. Att. G. Pray Mrs. Bracegirdle, did you ſee any Body in the Coach when they pulled you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord Mohun was in the Coach; when they pulled me to the Coach, I ſaw my Lord Mohun in the Coach. And when we came Home, Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and he ſaid he would ſpeak with him. As they led me along Drury-lane, my Lord Mohun came out of the Coach, and followed us, and all the Soldiers followed them, but they were diſmiſſed, and, as I ſaid, when we came to our Lodging, then Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and ſaid, he would ſpeak with him. Saith Mr. Page, Mr. Hill, another time will do, to Morrow will ſerve; with that, when I was within Doors, Mr. Page was pulled into the Houſe, and Mr. Hill walked up and down in the Street with his Sword drawn. He had his Sword drawn when he came along with me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve him to ſay any thing whilſt he was with you?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. As I was going down the Hill he ſaid, as he led me, he would be revenged.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he name of whom he would be revenged?

Mrs Bracegirdle. He did not name of whom then, but when I was in the Houſe, ſeveral Perſons went to the Door, and afterwards Mrs. Brown went to the Door, and ſpoke to them, and asked them what they ſtaid and walked there for; at laſt, they ſaid, they ſtaid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, and then Mrs. Brown came in to me, and told me of it.

L. H. Stew. Who ſaid that?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were my Lord Mohun and Mr Hill both together when that was ſaid, that they ſtaid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes they were. And when Mrs. Brown came in and told me, I ſent my Brother and the Maid, and all the People we could, out of the Houſe to Mrs. Mountford, to deſire her to ſend, if ſhe knew where her Husband was, to tell him of it, and ſhe did. And when they came in a Doors again, I went to the Door, and the Doors were ſhut, and I liſtened to hear if they were there ſtill, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were walking up and down the Street; and by and by, the Watch came up to them, and when the Watch came, they ſaid, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn? Says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare.

L. H. Stew. Repeat that again, for I could not well hear you: Do you ſpeak of what you heard from Mrs. Brown, or what you obſerved your ſelf?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was within Doors, but I was liſtening at the Door, and heard this my ſelf; they came up to them, and ſaid, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn?

L. H. Stew. Who asked that Queſtion?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. The Watch, and ſays my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare. Then the Watch left them, and they went away, and a little after there was a Cry of Murder, and that is all that I know, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire this Witneſs may be asked, how long after this Paſſage that ſhe ſpeaketh of, was it that ſhe heard Murder cryed in the Street.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Queſtion, Mrs. Bracegirdle, What ſay you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I believe it was about a quarter of an Hour after, to the beſt of my Memory.

L. H. Stew. What do you mean, a quarter of an Hour after, the Watch asked the Queſtion?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord.

Then the Earl of Mulgrave ſtood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord, I deſire to ask this Witneſs a Queſtion. If I heard her aright, I think ſhe ſaid, they threaten'd to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, I deſire to know of her, whether my Lord Mohun did threaten him.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I do not know indeed; but when Mrs. Brown asked them what they ſtaid there for? They ſaid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford. I did not hear them my ſelf, but Mrs. Browne came in and told me ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Bracegirdle, I think, if I did not miſtake, you ſaid, when the Watch came came up, they asked them, why their Swords were drawn?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, and my Lord Mohun made anſwer, he was a Peer of England, and bid them touch him if they durſt, and they went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the next Witneſs that we call, ſhall be Mr. Gawen Page, at whoſe Houſe Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped that Night.

(He was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Page, I ſuppoſe you remember the Night, when Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped at your Houſe.

Mr. Page. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray give an account of your whole Knowledge about this Matter, what happen'd that Night.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December laſt, going down Drury-lane, with Mrs. Bracegirdle, whom I led juſt againſt my Lord Craven's Houſe.

L. H. Stew. Pray, Sir, ſpeak out, and tell us what time it was.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the ninth of December laſt, going down Drury-lane, and leading Mrs. Bracegirdle, right againſt my Lord Craven's Door, ſtood a Coach, where two Soldiers preſſed in between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, and parted us: I asked what that was for? But they took hold of Mrs. Bracegirdle, and immediately they would have forced her into the Coach; Captain Hill, whom I ſaw there with his Sword drawn, made ſeveral Blows at me.

L. H. Stew. Who would have forced her into the Coach?

Mr. Page. The Soldiers would.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray go on, Sir, what follow'd after that?

Mr. Page. I ſay, Captain Hill made ſeveral Blows at me, and cry'd, you Villain, Stand. I received ſeveral of them upon my Cane, but there was none that hurt me; then I got help, and they were prevented of carrying Mrs. Bracegirdle away. My Lord Mohun was in the Coach; I ſaw him in the Coach.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Arms in the Coach?

Mr. Page. I ſaw no Arms, but I ſaw a Bundle in the Coach, tho' I could not tell what it was; and there was one in the Coach, that I ſaw was my Lord Mohun. So when we had got Help, we went down the Lane to Convey her Home, and Captain Hill was with us, and my Lord Mohun followed at a diſtance. Captain Hill ſaid to the Soldiers, Be gone, I have nothing more to do with you now. When we came to the Houſe, and Mrs. Bracegirdle was entring in, Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and ſaid he would ſpeak with me. Said I, to Night is not a fit time, to morrow is better, therefore pray ſtay till to morrow Morning. But ſaid he, God Damn me, you will not go home to Night.

L. H. Stew. You ſpeak ſo low, that I cannot tell what you ſay; I did not hear that laſt that you ſaid.

Mr. Page. My Lord, I ſay, when Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and ſaid he would ſpeak with me, I told him, that Night was not a fit time, to morrow would do better: Well, ſaith he, To Morrow then; but, God Damn me, you will not go out to Night: I went in a Doors, and there my Lord Mohun and he ſtaid for an Hour and a half, as I was told; I ſaw them not my ſelf: But Mrs. Browne came in and ſaid, that they ſaid, they waited to be revenged.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whom did they mean, your ſelf that they would be revenged of?

Mr. Page. Mrs. Browne ſaid, they waited for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you continue in that Houſe till after the Murder was committed?

Mr. Page. Yes, Sir, I did.

L. H. Stew. How long after you came into the Houſe was the Fact done?

Mr. Page. About an Hour and an half.

L. H. Stew. Did you your ſelf hear or obſerve any thing to be ſaid or done, from the time you came into the Houſe, to the time the Fact was committed?

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, I was in the Back-Room of the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Page, did you ſee Mr. Mountford after he was wounded?

Mr. Page. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give my Lords an account what paſſed at that Viſit.

Mr. Page. Upon the Out-cry of Murder, I came into the Street, where I found my Lord Mohun juſt ſurrendring himſelf to the Conſtable; and immediately I went to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and I found him lying all along in his Blood upon the Floor; he ſeeing me, deſired me to lift him up, which I did, and thinking he had been dying, I ask'd him whether he knew me. He ſaid Yes. Said I to him, Had you time to draw your Sword in your Defence? He ſaid, He was barbarouſly run through before he could draw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to ſay, Sir?

Mr. Page. Yes.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd whether my Sword was drawn when I ſurrendred my ſelf to the Conſtable.

Mr. Page. No my Lord, your Sword was in the Scabbard when you ſurrendred your ſelf, but I cannot ſay that your Sword was drawn before, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs that we deſire to call, is Mrs. Page.

(She was ſworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is the Name of this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Mary Page. Pray Mrs. Page, do you remember the night when Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped at your Houſe, and Mr. Mountford was killed? Acquaint my Lords with all you did obſerve that night.

Mrs. Page. Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped at my Lodging, and my Husband went home with her, and ſtaying ſomething longer than ordinary, I ſent my Servant to know what was the reaſon of it: He brought me word back, that my Husband had like to have been murdered, and Mrs. Bracegirdle carried away. With that I went down my ſelf towards Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, and there I found my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking, Mr. Hill with his Sword drawn before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door; my Lord Mohun's not. So I went in, into the Houſe; and after I had ſtaid a while there, Mrs. Browne came out to them, and asked them why they ſtaid there? They made anſwer, they ſtaid for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who made that Anſwer?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with Mr. Hill at that time?

Mrs. Page. My Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any body beſides thoſe two, that you obſerv'd?

Mrs. Page. No, there was no body elſe that I ſaw.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were their Swords drawn?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill's then was, my Lord Mohun's at that preſent was not: But Mrs. Bracegirdle hearing that they waited for Mr. Mountford, deſired me to go over to Mrs. Mountford's Houſe, and ſpeak to her to ſend to her Husband, and deſire him to keep where he was, or come home with a good Guard. Whilſt I was telling Mrs. Mountford what I was deſired to tell her——But I ſhould have told your Lordſhips, that when I came out to go to Mrs. Mountford, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they there when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings?

Mrs. Page. Yes, they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. And are you ſure, that at that time when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, my Lord Mohun had his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. I am ſure of it, that when I went out, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn; that was the ſecond time.

L. H. Stew. Out of whoſe Houſe was that you went?

Mrs. Page. Out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

L. H. Stew. Where were they when you ſaw his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. They were walking before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, from one end of the Street to the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Street is that?

Mrs. Page. Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray deſcribe to my Lords that Street.

Mrs. Page. They that ſtand in that Street, can ſee who goeth down to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and who goeth up Surry-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well now go on.

Mrs.

Mrs. Page. Whilſt I was deſiring Mrs. Mountford to ſend away to her Husband, I heard Murder cry'd out; immediately I open'd Mr. Mountford's Door, and he came in, and fell with his Arms round about my Neck to ſupport himſelf, I ſuppoſe, and he ſaid, Hill had Murder'd him. I helped him as far as the Parlor Door, and there down he fell. I went up the Street and called out Murder, and my Lord Mohun came to me, and bid me take notice, he had no hand in the Murder, for his Sword was not Drawn. I told him, I could not tell that, for to my knowledge he had been in Mr. Hill's Company with his naked Sword juſt before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mrs. Brown.

L. H. Steward. You have nothing to ſay to that Witneſs my Lord, have you?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to ſay, Mrs. Page?

Mrs. Page. After this, my Lord Mohun reſign'd himſelf up to the Conſtable, the Conſtable ſtanding by me, I bid him ſecure my Lord Mohun, which he did.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire to ask this Witneſs, whether I Surrendred my ſelf, or made Oppoſition, or offered to run away?

Mrs. Page. No my Lord, the Conſtable laid hold on you.

L. H. Steward. What Anſwer do you make to my Lord's Queſtion?

Mrs. Page. I ſay, my Lord, the Conſtable laid hold upon my Lord Mohun.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask her, whether I did not Surrender my ſelf?

Mrs. Page. Not till I had deſir'd the Conſtable to ſecure your Lordſhip.

L Mohun. Did I make any Oppoſition, or offer to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, for the Conſtable preſently took hold of your Lordſhip.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether Hill run away.

Mrs. Page. That I know not; I ſuppoſe he was gone away out of the Street before I came forth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mrs. Browne.

Which was done.

Mr. Att Gen. Mrs. Browne, you are upon your Oath, pray declare to my Lords what you know happen'd upon that Night that Mr. Mountford was Killed.

Mrs. Browne. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, when Mrs. Bracegirdle came Home, I found her Crying; I asked her what was the matter? She ſaid, my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, had run her into a Coach, with ſix or ſeven Soldiers, and lifted her into the Coach, and ſhe ſaid they were at the Door. Upon which, I went to the Door, and ſaw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking along. Said I, are you the Gentlemen that have uſed Mrs. Bracegirdle in this manner? my Lord Mohun anſwered, Madam, ſaid he, I protected her; if it had not been for me, the Rabble would have torn her a pieces; for if we had a mind to carry her away, we had ſix or ſeven Piſtols Charged in the Coach, and could eaſily have ſuppreſſed the Tumult.

L. H. Steward. I do not hear what the Witneſs ſaith, ſhe ſpeaketh ſo low.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun ſaid, they had Six or Seven Piſtols in the Coach, and could eaſily have ſuppreſſed the Rabble, if they would have carried her away; but he had no Deſign upon her for his own part, but only to ſerve his Friend; and that Mr. Hill's deſign was to take her out of Town, and keep her a Week, and ſee if he could perſwade her to marry him; and ſaith Mr. Hill, I ſhall light on this Mountford. Why ſaid I to him, What hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been Abuſed, and I will be Revenged.

L. H. Steward. That was Hill that ſaid ſo.

Mrs. Browne. Yes. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what my Lord Mohun ſaid to you about this Matter.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun ſaid, he protected her, for if it had not been for him, the Mob had torn her in pieces; but if they had a mind to carry her off, they could eaſily have ſuppreſſed the Mob, for they had ſix or ſeven Piſtols in the Coach: But ſaith my Lord, I had no deſign upon her my ſelf, but only to ſerve my Friend. So ſaith Mr. Hill, I ſhall light upon this Mountford. Why, ſaid I, what hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been Abuſed, and I will have my Revenge. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it. About half an Hour after, or more, Mr. Mountford came down, and when he came down, I ſaw him a little before he came to them, and went to him, and would have fain have ſpoke to him, but he would not ſtay to let me ſpeak what I had to ſay to him but going on, preſently he met my Lord Mohun. Saith he Your Humble Servant, my Lord. Saith my Lord again, Your Servant Mr. Mountford. Saith my Lord, I have a great Reſpect for you, Mr. Mountford, and would have no Difference between us; but there is a thing fallen out between Mr. Hill and Mrs Bracegirdle. Saith Mr. Mountford, My Lord, has my Wife diſobliged your Lordſhip? if ſhe has, ſhe ſhall ask your Pardon; but as for Mrs. Bracegirdle, ſhe is no concern of mine; and I hope your Lordſhip will not vindicate ſuch an ill Man as Mr. Hill in ſuch a matter as this. Upon that I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr Mountford ſaid, that I will; and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before he drew his Sword, or after, I cannot tell.

L. H. Steward. Speak that laſt again.

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford and my Lord met, ſaith Mr. Mountford, your Servant, my Lord; ſaith my Lord, Your Servant Mr. Mountford, I have a great reſpect for you, and would have no difference be between us; but here has been a thing fallen out between Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Hill; ſaith Mr. Mountford preſently again, Has my Wife diſobliged your Lordſhip? If ſhe has, ſhe ſhall ask your Pardon. But Mrs. Bracegirdle is no concern of mine: I know nothing of this matter, I come here by accident.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſaid they came there by accident?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford ſaid, I know nothing of this matter, I come here by accident. But, I hope your Lordſhip will not vindicate Hill in ſuch Actions as theſe are: Upon that, I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr. Mountford ſaid he would, and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before or after, I cannot tell; it was in the Night.

Then the Lord Godolphin ſtood up.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Godolphin.

L. Godolphin. My Lord Steward, I deſire this Witneſs may be asked, whether my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn when he talked with Mountford, becauſe the Council opened it before, that the

Watch

Watch came to them, and saw them with their Swords drawn when they were walking in the Street.

L. H. Steward. Mrs. you heard my Lord's Question: Was my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn whilst he talked with Mountford, or no?

Mrs. Browne. I do not remember I did see my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they near together?

Mrs. Browne. They were near together.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I went up the Street to meet Mr. Mountford, or he came down to me?

L. H. Steward. You heard the Question, Mistress, what say you?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford came down to him.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she did not go to hinder Mr. Mountford from coming that way?

Mrs Browne. Yes, I did go to speak to him, but he did not hear me speak, or did not hearken to me; I took him by the Hand, and told him I would speak with him, but he did not hear me, but went on.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not tell him upon what account you would have spoke with him?

Mrs. Browne. No, I had no time.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword was within his Arm, or by his Side.

Mrs. Browne. I believe it was by his Side.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked one Question more, whether he could not have went home, without coming to Mr. Hill and me?

Mrs. Browne. He did come out of his way, his way was not by my House; he did come down the Street towards them.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordships to take notice, that he came out of his way to me. I desire to ask her: Did he come as if he was going to his own House or yours?

Mrs. Browne. As if he was coming to mine.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, whether I had any hand in killing Mr. Mountford, or went to hold him, or meddled with him?

Mrs. Browne. Not that I did see.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more to say to is Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Nor your Lordship?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witness we desire to call, is Richard Row.

Who was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Row, where do you live?

Row. In Surry-street.

L. H. Steward. Where doth he Live, saith he?

Mr. Att. Gen. In Surrey-Street, my Lord. Pray how near is that to the Place where Mr. Mountford was kill'd?

Row. About ten or twelve Pole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill that Night, and where were they?

Row. All that I can say to the matter in that Case is, I was in my own House about a quarter after Ten a Clock, and I heard a noise in the Street, and I went out, and saw two Gentlemen and two Lads about the middle of the Channel; one of the Lads had one of the Gentlemen by the Arm, just by the Channel, and said, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, don't do it, alter your Resolution. There was an Answer made, that they would be revenged that Night, or to Morrow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know who the Boy was that used that Expression?

Row. No, my Lord, it was very dark.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you not know neither who returned the Answer?

Row. No indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you are sure you heard those words pass?

Row. Yes indeed, and I went to the Door afterwards, whilst they went to the upper end of the Street and returned again; and I saw Captain Hill's Boy following him. My Lord, I knew Capt. Hill, though he was not in the Cloaths he formerly used to come to my House in, and the Boy I knew to be his Boy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those Persons together that you heard speaking so?

Row. Yes, all four together, in a Confusion they seemed to be, for they were Pushing to and again, and the Boy had hold of one of the Gentleman's Arms when he bid him alter his Resolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Repeat those Words again that you heard him say.

Row. Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship any thing to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Row. I spoke of this same afterwards, and so they have brought me here to give Evidence: That is all that I can say. I cannot Swear to my Lord Mohun, that he was one, I do not know that ever I saw him to my knowledge in my Life.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord Steward, I desire he may be asked, whether he knoweth who that Boy was that made that Answer.

Row. There was no answer made by any Boy, but begging and praying, That my Lord would not do it.

E. of Mulgrave. Do you know who that Boy was?

Row. No, I do not know what Boy it was. But when I heard Mr. Mountford was Killed, and my Lord Mohun was concerned, I told what I had heard and seen, and so they bring me here to Evidence it. That is all I can say to the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire next to call some of the Watch, and shall begin with Merry.

Who was Sworn.

L. H. Steward. What is his Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. William Merry. Mr. Merry, I think you are Beadle of the Parish.

Merry. Yes, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed, when you saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, the first time and the second time, when my Lord Mohun was Taken.

Merry. When I first came down the Street, walking the Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, as I turned at the Corner out of Surrey-street into Howard-Street, I saw my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill Walking, that is, upon the Paved Stones; my Lord was walking towards me, and I asked, Who comes there? Saith my Lord, a Friend. Said I, What is the meaning of your Swords being Drawn? Return your Swords, and stand off. With that, he returned his Sword immediately. Saith he, I am a Peer of the Land; here, will you have my Sword? and he profferred me me his Sword; but the Constable was not there then, and I did not take his Sword; but, said I, God Bless your Honour my Lord, I know not what you are, but I hope you are doing no harm; No, faith he. With that, the Constable came immediately, and he proferred the same to him; there were two Candles in some Maids, or Womens hands at a Door hard by, and I went to ask them if they knew the meaning of it; and there being a Neighbours Man leaning with a Bottle and a Glass against the Wall, whom I knew. I think they told me one of them had a Sweet-heart there; and my Lord said, he was drinking a Lady's Health, and as soon as his Bottle was out, he would be gone. That is all I heard of the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Hill there?

Merry. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was his Sword Drawn?

Merry. Yes, his Sword was drawn, and I asked what made that Gentleman with his Sword Drawn? and my Lord Mohun said, he had lost his Scabbard; but seeing this Neighbour's Man stand there, I went to the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were both their Swords drawn at first?

Merry. Both their Swords were Drawn when I came first into the Street; but my Lord put up his Sword, and the other continued Drawn, by reason as they said, he had lost his Scabbard. And so seeing, as I said, my Neighbour's Man standing there, we went to that House to enquire if they knew what their Business was; we were not got into the House, I am sure not a Stone's cast within the House, but Murder was cry'd out, and we came back again, and my Master being nimbler of Foot than I, because he was a younger Man, came first into the Place, and seized my Lord before I came; how the Seizing was I do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Thomas Fennell.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Fennell, you was one of the Watch that night when Mr. Mountford was Killed.

Fennell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lords an account what you observed that Night, in relation to my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill.

Fennell. The Constable and his Watch going the Rounds, divided themselves into two parts; I went down Surrey-Street with one Party; the Constable he went down Strand-Lane with the other Party. We were four or five that came down Surrey-Street, and when we came down, my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill's Swords were both Drawn; my Lord Mohun put up his Sword just as we came down.

L. H. Steward. Speak out Man, that my Lords may all hear you.

Fennell. I say, the Constable and his Party went down Strand-Lane, and another Party down Surrey-Street, four or five of us, and my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill had both their Swords Drawn: When we came down, my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down, but the Constable not being come, I went and called him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say both their Swords were Drawn when you came down.

Fennell. Yes, but my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of Night was that?

Fennell. It was between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr. Att Gen. How long before the Murder was committed?

Fennell. A quarter of an Hour.

L. H. Steward. Do you not say, they put up their Swords as soon as you came down?

Fennell. My Lord Mohun put up his Sword, but Hill said he had never a Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ask them why they had their Swords drawn at that time of Night?

Fennell. No, I went to call the Constable.

L. H Steward. Have you any more to ask of this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have not my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Nor you my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Pray go on then; whom do you produce next?

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is James Bassit. Who was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you one of the Watch that Night Mr. Mountford was Killed?

Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill that Night?

Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Acquaint my Lords where it was, and in what manner you found them.

Bassit. In Howard-street; I came along with the Constable, and I walked before them that went down Surry-street with my Lanthorn, and there was my Lord Mohun with his Sword Drawn, and Captain Hill with his the like: We asked them, what they did there? They said they were drinking of a Bottle of Wine: Hill said to me, you may knock me down if you please: Nay, said I, we never use to knock any Gentlemen down, unless there be occasion; and then we went into Norfolk-street to the Tavern to examine what they were, and what they were doing; and in the mean time the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why their Swords were drawn?

Bassit. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they say?

Bassit. Hill made answer that he had lost his Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What said my Lord Mohun?

Bassit. My Lord Mohun had put up his Sword by that time we came up to him: That is all I can say to it.

L H. Steward. If you have nothing more to ask him, call another.

L. Mohun. My Lord I desire he may be asked whether he came with the Constable when I surrendred my self?

Bassit. Yes, and I took hold of your Sleeve, and you shook and quak'd and trembled, as if you would tear it to pieces.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked whether my Sword was in the Scabbard when I surrendred my self.

Bassit. Yes, it was, he surrendred it.

L. H. Steward. That was after the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. With your Lordship's Favour, I desire he may answer my Lord Mohun's first Question again, so as to be heard by your Lordships; What was that you were saying when my Lord surrendred himself?

Bassit. I took him by the Arm when he surrendred himself up.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then?

Bassit. Then he quaked, and I had him to the Round-House.

L. H. Steward.

L. H Steward. Hear my Queſtion, you ſay you took him by the Sleeve, when he ſurrendred himſelf; what do you mean by that? is it that he had ſurrendred himſelf before you laid hold on him, or afterwards?

Baſſit. I took hold of his Arm, when he ſurrendred himſelf.

L. H. Steward. But was it before he ſurrendred himſelf to the Conſtable?

Baſſit. No, it was afterwards, my Lord; to have him away.

L. H. Steward. Then you did ſee him ſurrender himſelf to the Conſtable?

Baſſit. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Charles Knowles; But he did not appear.

L. H. Steward. Whom do you call next, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we call'd Mr Charles Knowles; but they ſay, he is not come, therefore with your Lordſhips favour, we will call Mrs. Brewer.

[Who was ſworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Brewer, I think, you live at the next Door to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I do ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an account what you ſaw and heard that Night Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Brewer. I was at Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, and I went to the door with them; and juſt as I went to the Door, my Lord Mohun came up to me; juſt as he came to the Door, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and my Lord went to him, and imbraced him, and ſaid Mr. Mountford, Your humble Servant, I am glad to ſee you. Who is this ſaid Mr. Mountford, My Lord Mohun? Yes ſaid my Lord. What makes your Lordſhip here at this time a night, ſaith Mr. Mountford? Saith my Lord again, I ſuppoſe Mr. Mountford you was ſent for. Sent for, for what ſaith he? You have heard of the buſineſs of Mrs. Bracegirdle, I ſuppoſe, ſaith my Lord: No my Lord, ſaith he, I come by chance.

Mrs. Att. Gen. Who ſaid that?

Mrs. Brewer. Mr. Mountford, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on and ſpeak aloud.

Mrs. Brewer. My Lord, Mr. Mountford.— And there ſhe heſitated, and ſeemed to be in a Confuſion.

Mr. Att. Gen. She is not uſed to ſuch publick Examinations: If your Lordſhips will pleaſe to allow her to begin, becauſe ſhe is in ſome Confuſion, ſhe will be the better able to give you what account ſhe can of this matter.

L. H. S. Let her recollect her ſelf, and begin again.

Mrs. Brewer. When Mr. Mountford came down the Street, I ſtood at the Door, and my Lord Mohun was come to the Door, and my Lord Mohun went to him and ſaid, Mr Mountford, your Humble Servant, I am glad to ſee you, and Embraced him. Saith Mr. Mountford, Who is this, my Lord Mohun? Yes, ſaith he, it is. What maketh your Lordſhip here at this time of night? ſaith my Lord Mohun, I ſuppoſe you are ſent for Mr. Mountford. No indeed, ſaid he, I came by chance. Saith my Lord, You have heard of the Buſineſs of Mrs. Bracegirdle. With that, after he had ſaid this, Mr. Hill cometh up, and ſaith, Pray my Lord hold your Tongue, this is not a convenient time to diſcourſe this Buſineſs, and would have drawn my Lord away. Saith Mr. Mountford, I am very ſorry my Lord, to ſee that your Lordſhip ſhould aſſiſt Capt. Hill in ſo ill an Action as this; pray let me deſire your Lordſhip to forbear. Upon this, as ſoon as he had ſaid ſo, Mr. Hill came up and ſtruck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear. Saith Mr. Mountford, Damme, what's that for? And with that, he whipped out his Sword and made a Paſs at him, and I turned about and cry'd out Murder, Murder.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you ſay, you ſaw Hill draw his Sword, and make a Paſs at him.

Mrs. Brewer. No, his Sword was drawn before; but he immediately after the Box on the Ear, made a Paſs at him, and I turned about and cry'd Murder.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had Mr. Mountford his Sword drawn at that time?

Mrs. Brewer. No, he had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you ſure he had not?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I am ſure he had not, for as ſoon as he ſtruck the Blow, he made a Paſs at him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord preſent at that time?

Mrs. Brewer. He ſtood juſt by on the Right-hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. How near to them?

Mrs. Brewer. They were all cloſe together as well as I could diſcern.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, have you any mind to ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with her?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. The next Witneſs we deſire to call is Mr. Davenport, the Conſtable.

Who was Sworn.

L. H. Stew. Well, what ſaith this Man?

Davenport. The Ninth of December laſt at Night, as I was walking my Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, I divided my Watch into two Parts, one was to go down one Street, and the other another, and coming into Howard ſtreet, my Beadle happened to be there before me, and he had ſpied them as he told me, with their Swords drawn: As ſoon as I came up, my Lord Mohun very Civilly (his Sword not being then drawn) proffered to Surrender his Sword to me, and ſaid, he was a Peer of the Realm. I asked the other Man what he did with his Sword drawn? and he made anſwer, he had loſt his Scabbard in Drury-lane. With that I found them very Civil, and I heard ſome Women at the Door, and they ſaid they were Serenading them with a Bottle of Wine. There was a Drawer there that I knew, who formerly lived overagainſt me, and then lived at the White-Horſe Tavern; ſo I left them, (finding them Civil) and went to the White-Horſe Tavern to examin what the Buſineſs was; they told me they were there a Drinking, and before I had ſpoken three words almoſt to the Man of the Houſe, the Watch was called, and when we came, Mr. Hill had made his Eſcape, and ſo I Secured my Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the occaſion of calling the Watch?

Davenport. They cried out Murder in the Street; So I took my Lord Mohun and carried him to the Round-Houſe, where we kept him all Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you ſay, when you firſt came, my Lord Mohun's Sword was not Drawn.

Mr. Davenport. It was put up then, but the the Beadle ſaid they were both drawn before.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not ſee them ſo ſoon as your Beadle.

Davenport. No, he was there before me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then acquaint my Lord what was done, after you had ſecured my Lord Mohun.

Davenport. After I had taken him, I carried him to the Round-Houſe and when we came there, he asked me if Hill was taken? I ſaid no; and ſaid I, my Lord, this is a bad Misfortune you are happen'd into; and he ſaid, God Damn me, I am glad he is not taken, but I am ſorry he has no more Money about him; I wiſh he had ſome of mine; and, I do not care a Farthing if I am hang'd for him.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked whether I offered to Fly?

Davenport. No, my Lord, I do not ſay you did, but you know my Lord, you ſaid this to me.

L. H. Steward. But Mr. Davenport, did not my Lord Surrender himſelf to you?

Davenport. Yes my Lord, mighty Civilly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord ſay any thing to you about changing of Coats?

Davenport. He ſaid, they had changed Coats three or four ſeveral times that day, and at the ſame time he had Hill's Coat upon his Back; and I asked him if he knew where Hills Lodging was, and he told me; and I went to his Lodging with my Watch; and when we came there, we ſearched the Houſe, but did not find him there; but Captain Hill's Boy came in whilſt we were there; ſo with that, I ſecured the Boy and ſearched him, and found Gunpowder and Ball about him; and I have Hill's Sword in the Court, and Mr. Mountford's and my Lord's.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether Mountford's Sword was not broke in the Street, or whether he carried it away.

Davenport. I took up a piece my ſelf, and a Servant Maid took up another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword when it was found, was in the Scabbord or not?

Davenport. No, it was not, I ſaw no Scabbord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you ask the Queſtions ſo faſt, that we do not hear the Anſwers. Was not your firſt Queſtion, whether Mountford's Sword was not Broken?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. What Anſwer giveth he to that?

Davenport. I do not know when it was Broken; but by the report of People that were there by, it was ſaid, Mr. Mountford made a Paſs, and at the firſt Paſs, his Sword was Broken; and I went with a Lanthorn, and according as they ſaid, I found a piece of a Sword, and I took it up my ſelf.

L. H. Steward. What is your next Queſtion, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask him in what part of the Street he found the piece of the broken Sword.

L. H. Steward. You heard the Queſtion, what ſay you?

Davenport. It was in the High-way in the Street.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, what do you mean by that Queſtion?

L. Mohun. Whether it was in the middle of the Street towards Surry-ſtreet, or Norfolk-ſtreet, or near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, or upon the Pavement?

Davenport. It was over againſt the Door where you ſtood.

L. Mohun. How far might it be from where I ſtood? I deſire he may be asked that.

L. H. Steward. You hear my Lord's Queſtion, anſwer it.

Davenport. He was walking up and down when I came to Take him; and I took the piece of the Sword up in the Highway; he was walking on the Pavement, the Broad-Stones.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with that Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. Is Mr. Charles Knowles come? He did not appear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we deſire to call Mr. Bancroft the Chirurgion, and Mr. Hunt.

L. H. Stew. Who do you examin firſt?

Mr. Att. Gen. We begin with Mr. Bancroft.

(Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. You attended upon Mr. Mountford, Mr. Bancroft, when he was wounded.

Bancroft. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you know of this matter.

Bancroft. My Lord, upon the ninth of December laſt at Night, between the Hours of twelve and one, I was knocked up to go to Mr. Mountford, whoſe Servant came for me, and told me he was a dying of a Wound he had received. So I came to his Houſe, and found him very deſperately wounded; it went in and out by his back-Bone, behind his left Side. I told him what he muſt expect, that he was a dead Man. I attended him that Night, till about four a Clock in the Morning, and then I took my leave of him, and went home: About eight a Clock in the Morning I came thither again, and met Mr. Hobbs there, and he was of the ſame Opinion. He lived till about one, and then he died.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you with Mr. Mountford?

Mr. Bancroft. About ten a Clock I was ſent for by the Conſtable to come to Hick's-Hall, to be examined there before the Juſtices; and being then with Mr. Mountford, and ſome Company being there, Mr. Powell (as I take it) was one; I ſaid to Mr. Mountford, I ſuppoſe where I am going, I ſhall be asked ſome Queſtions about what you may have ſaid to me, you are now upon the brink of Eternity, and pray anſwer me truly, who gave you this Wound, was it Mr. Hill, or my Lord Mohun? Said he, My Lord Mohun offered me no Violence, but whilſt I was talking with my Lord Mohun, Hill ſtruck me with his Left-Hand, and with his Right Hand run me through before I could put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you his Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. He did not ſay, it was or not, but that Hill ſtruck him with his Left-Hand, and at the ſame time run him through with his Right, before he could put his Hand to his Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. The words were theſe as near as I remember, my Lord Mohun offer'd me no Violence, but whilſt I was talking with him, Hill with his Left-Hand ſtruck me, and with his Right run me through, before I had time to put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you he had his Sword drawn at all afterwards?

Bancroft. No, not a word of that, that I heard.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to ſay to him?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

(Then Mr. William Hunt was ſworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hunt, you have heard what Mr. Bancroft was examined to, do you give an account what you know in relation to this Buſineſs.

Hunt. I was ſent for to Mr. Mountford when he lay very ill; and I then asked him the manner of his being hurt, he ſaid, My Lord Mohun ſpoke to me, but Hill run me through before my Sword was drawn. I asked him, whether he had time to draw his Sword? And he ſaid, Hill was in me and was through me, before my Sword was out; and this he repeated again, about twelve a Clock, about half an Hour before he died the next day.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any thing elſe, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall ask him no more Queſtions, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not hear that Mr. Knowles is come yet; and if he be not come, we have no more Witneſſes to examin; if he does come, we muſt beg leave that we may examin him.

L. H. Stew. You know that the Court cannot ſtay, for after you have done on both Sides, my Lords are to withdraw, and we are not to ſit here in Expectation of your Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not expect that; if my Lord Mohun pleaſe to examin any Witneſſes on his part, and it happen that the Witneſs ſhould come before my Lord has made an end, we hope your Lordſhips will favour us ſo far, as that we may examin him.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, if you have any Witneſſes to be examined, now is your time to call them.

L. Mohun. I deſire firſt, Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy may be called.

L. H. Stew. Name him. (He came to the Bar.)

L. Mohun. My Lords, if you pleaſe, I deſire Mr. Brereton may be called firſt, becauſe I would prove to your Lordſhips and ſhew you I had no Malice to Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. I thought you had called that Boy firſt.

L. Mohun. That was a Miſtake, my Lord, this Gentleman Mr. Brereton, I deſire may be firſt examined.

Mr. Brereton. My Lord, I know nothing as to this matter of Fact, for I had not ſeen my Lord Mohun of two or three days before.

L. H. Stew. What do you examin this Witneſs to, my Lord?

L. Mohun. To ſhew that I had no Malice againſt Mr. Mountford, but ſpoke kindly of him ſeveral times.

Mr. Brereton. I had not ſeen my Lord Mohun for two or three days before this Fact was committed, and therefore can give no account of what happened then; but the Friday before, the Play of Alexander the Great was acted, and my Lord Mohun and I were at the Play-houſe, and he and I went to Supper together, and we were talking of the Play, and he ſaid it was a good Play, and commended ſeveral Parts in it, and particularly the acting; and he commended Mr. Mountford's acting extreamly: I ſaid, I thought he never acted ſo well in his Life before; but my Lord ſpoke particularly very kind things of Mr. Mountford, that he thought him a very good Actor. I anſwered, as to Comedy he did uſe to act very well, but I thought he would never make ſo good a Tragedian as Mr. Betterton, or ſome others. But my Lord before this, had uſed to commend Mr. Mountford and ſpeak kindly of him: And he ſaid, that ſeveral of the Players had been very rude to him, more than their Buſineſs did require of them; but Mr. Mountford had been more civil than any of the reſt. Upon this my Lord Mohun was pleaſed to ask me, whether I was acquainted with Mr. Mountford; I told him I never was in his Company but once with Mr. Bludworth. Saith my Lord, I have a great mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Said I, I do not think him worth your Acquaintance, but you may do what you will. Several things more my Lord ſaid, and ſpoke more kindly of him than of any of the reſt of the Players; but there was no time fixt for drinking with him. Upon Tueſday after, my Lord Mohun came to my Lodgings, and told me Mr. Mountford had been very civil to him the Night before at the Play-houſe, when the reſt were very rude to him; and he had a mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Saith he, I am going about ſome Buſineſs to Kenſington, but within a day or two you ſhall certainly hear of me, and we will fix a time for it, and if I do not like his Company, I will never trouble you nor my ſelf more with it.

L. H. Stew. When was this Sir?

Mr. Brereton. This was the Tueſday before, the firſt Diſcourſe was upon the Friday before.

(Then the Boy was Examined).

L. Mohun. Was you along with me and Mr. Hill, that Night Mr. Mountford was killed?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you muſt propoſe your Queſtions to me, and I will ask them.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire to know what the Boy's Name is, and who he is.

L. Mohun. His Name is Thomas Lake, and he was Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if he was with Mr. Hill and me that Night that Mr. Mountford was killed.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Queſtion; what ſay you to it?

Boy. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear you what you ſay.

Boy. I was with them my Lord, and all I heard was, they had a Deſign to take away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle, and they had provided Night-Cloaths and a Coach for her; to go to Totteridge, which was the Place where they deſign'd to carry her.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one word this Boy ſaith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, ſhall I repeat to your Lordſhip what the Boy ſaith?

Lords. No, no, no.

L. H. Stew. No, my Lord, you are not to repeat what your own Witneſs ſaith.

Boy. They had a Deſign to carry away the Woman, Mrs Bracegirdle.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one Word. That Boy can ſpeak out if he pleaſeth; I warrant him, he would make Noiſe enough if he was in another Place. Speak out, that my Lords may all hear you.

Boy. I cannot ſpeak any louder than I do; I ſay, they had a Deſign to carry away the Woman.

L. H. Stew. I may as well be at the other end of the Town as in this Place, as for hearing what he ſaith. Some body ſhould repeat what he ſaith.

L. Mohun. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to allow it, that one of the Officers of the Court may come down to the Bar, and repeat from his Mouth to the Court what he ſaith.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Walker, Then do you go and ſtand by him, and tell us what he ſaith.

Mr. Walker, the Clerk went and ſtood by the Boy at the Bar, and repeated his Evidence aloud.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, he ſaith, they had a Deſign to take away the Woman, and they had Night-Cloaths in the Coach for the Woman to put on, and they enquired at the Woman's Lodging where ſhe was, and there they were told that ſhe was at Mr. Page's at Supper, and her Brother came to the Horſhoe-Tavern and drank with them, and he was to go to tell them when ſhe came out, and which way ſhe was to go Home; and there was a Man that was to give Notice, and they went down before her, and the Coach ſtood almoſt at the lower end of Drury-lane, where there were ſome Soldiers to put her in, and the Soldiers went and took hold of her.

L. H. Stew. Is this my Lord Mohun's Witneſs?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord; and he ſaith, when they went to take hold of her to put her in, Mr. Page ſtruggled with them, and would not let them, and ſhe cry'd out, and was very much troubled at it.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked whether he was in Howard-ſtreet when Mr. Mountford was wounded, and what paſſed in Howard-ſtreet before Mr. Mountford was wounded?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, he was in Howard ſtreet, and ſaw Mr. Mountford come down in Norfolk-ſtreet towards them, and turn into Howard-ſtreet, but out of his way to his own Houſe; he ſaith, he came down, and there met my Lord Mohun and his Maſter, Mr. Mountford did; and he came to my Lord Mohun, and bowed to him, and ſaid, He had a Kindneſs for his Lordſhip. And my Lord Mohun replied, He had a Kindneſs for him. My Lord Mohun ſaid to him, He hoped he was not come to vindicate any thing of Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Mountford ſaid Not, and asked if his Wife had done any thing to him, and ſaid, He was very ſorry his Lordſhip ſhould have any thing to do to vindicate Mr. Hill in ſuch Rudeneſs. He ſaith, Captain Hill was at the lower end of the Street, and Captain Hill heard him ſay ſo, and came up and ſaid to him, Mr. Mountford, if you have any thing to ſay to me, I can vindicate my ſelf, and pray now draw; and he went into the Street, and Mr. Mountford drew and met him, and made three or four Paſſes, and in the Paſſes, the Sword was broke. He cannot tell which Sword it was that was broke, he ſuppoſeth it hit againſt the Hilt, and ſnapped in two.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, where I was when they fought?

Mr. Walker. My Lord ſtood upon the flat Stones, he ſaith, by the Houſe ſide all the while, and they were in the middle of the Street.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may asked, whether Mr. Mountford had his Sword by his ſide, and where it was, and whether I meddled with him?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith my Lord Mohun did not meddle with him, but ſtood upon the flat Stones, nor did offer to draw his Sword, and when Mr. Mountford came down, he carried his Sword in his Hand.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd, whether Mr. Hill did not ſtay in the Street to ask Mrs Bracegirdle's Pardon.

Mr. Walker He ſaith, he defired to ſee Mrs. Bracegirdle, and to beg her Pardon, and as ſoon as he had ſeen her, he would be gone?

L. H. Stew. How can he tell that? Where was he?

Mr. Walker. He was juſt by my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill in the Street, and Mr. Hill ſaid, he would but ſtay and beg Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon for what he had done, and he would go Home.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether I offer'd to fly when his Maſter went away?

L. H. Stew. What is it you ask my Lord?

L. Mohun. Whether I offer'd to run away, or make my Eſcape?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, my Lord did not offer to run away, but ſtood ſtill and ſaid he had done no hurt, nor drawn his Sword.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask him, whether I could not have run away as well as Mr. Hill, if I had had a mind?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, he might have run away as well as his Maſter Mr. Hill, but he ſtood ſtill a great while, till the Watch came and took him, and he gave himſelf up.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before the Boy goeth away, I deſire to know of him whether he has not been already Examined upon his Oath elſewhere?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, he was examined at Hick's-Hall, and was kept in Priſon two Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined before the Coroner?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, he was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which was the firſt Place he was examined at?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith he was examined at Hick's-Hall firſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he was examined before the Coroner, did he give the ſame Evidence as he does now?

Mr. Walker. He gave the ſame Evidence before the Coroner that he doth now, as near as he can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you did make Oath before the Coroner, was it read to you what you ſwore?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, his Evidence was not read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſubſcribe the Evidence you gave before the Coroner your ſelf?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you write your Name your ſelf?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he ſaith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know what it was you ſubſcribed your Name to?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, it was not read to him afterwards, he knoweth what it was he gave in.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you ſure it was not read to you?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, he is ſure it was not read to him.

L. H. Stew. Was it not read to him before he ſubſcribed it?

Mr. Att. Gen. That I did ask him, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He doth not remember that it was read to him at all.

L. H. Stew. Can he read himſelf?

Mr. Att. Gen. He writes a very good Hand my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, they bid him put his Hand to it; and as ſoon as he had put his Hand to it, they put him out, and bid him call another Woman.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would have him conſider of it, before he makes anſwer; becauſe there are ſeveral Perſons preſent here, who were preſent when it was read to him before he ſubſcribed it.

Mr. Walker. He cannot remember that it was read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember you ſwore at that time, that when Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill were puſhing at one another, my Lord Mohun ſaid, he would ſtand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend?

Mr. Walker. He ſaith, my Lord ſaid, he would not go, he would ſtay by his Friend, for Mr. Hill was his Friend.

E. of Carliſle. My Lord Steward.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Carliſle.

E. of Carliſle. I deſire that he may be asked, whether he was the Boy that ſaid to my Lord Mohun, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution.

L. H. Stew. Call the Boy agen (which was done) was you by when thoſe Words were ſpoken; Pray my Lord, will you repeat your own Queſtion?

E. of Carliſle. Whether he was the Boy that ſaid to my Lord Mohun, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Reſolution, or defer it to another Day.

Boy. No my Lord, I did not hear him.

L. H. Stew. Did not you ſay ſo your ſelf?

Boy. I ſaid no ſuch thing, nor heard no ſuch thing ſaid by any body.

L. H. Stew. Do you bring any more Witneſſes my Lord.

L. Mohun. Yes my Lord, Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

Elizabeth Walker. Here my Lord, I am ſhe.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before my Lord Mohun proceedeth to examine any other Witneſs, I have one thing humbly to offer to your Lordſhips.

(Then Proclamation was made for Silence.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Of what Conſequence it will be to my Lord Mohun, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips; when you have heard it, that is, whether it may not be proper now, ſince this Boy has given an Evidence, ſo very different from what he gave upon his Oath before the Coroner, to have his Depoſition that he made before the Coroner, read in his Preſence.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I think I ought to conclude, and give all my own Evidence before Mr. Attorney maketh his Remarks.

L. H. Stew. Then reſerve that till the laſt, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord is certainly in the right of it, there ought to be no Obſervations made upon his Evidence, and we ſhall be ſure to keep exactly to the uſual method in this matter; but I take it to be the Courſe of Evidence, where there is an Objection to what the Witneſs delivers now, which does ariſe from what the ſame Witneſs has ſworn before, it is proper to make the Objection, as ſoon as he has delivered ſuch Evidence, whilſt the matter is freſh in your Lordſhips Memories.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, let the Boy ſtay, he ſhall be called upon afterwards; but let my Lord go on now with the reſt of his Witneſſes.

L. Mohun. Here is Elizabeth Walker, my Lord.

H. H. Stew. What is that Woman's Name?

L. Mohun. Elizabeth Walker, did you live with Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Elizabeth Walker. Yes, I did my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Perſon has conceal'd her ſelf, we have been endeavouring to find her out all this while, but could not.

L. H. Steward. What do you ask her my Lord?

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked, whether ſhe lived with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and what ſhe ſaw and obſerved that Night Mr. Mountford was killed.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, I lived then with her.

L. H. Stew. I cannot hear what ſhe ſaid, Mr. Walker, I think you muſt go thither agen, ſpeak out Woman.

El. Walker. I was her Servant at that time, when Mr. Mountford was killed. And may it pleaſe you my Lord, that Night, old Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter, were invited to Supper at one Mr. Pages in Drury-lane, and coming home about Ten or Eleven a Clock out of Drury-lane, my Miſtriſs deſired me to go to Mr. *Mountford*s, to ſee if Mr. Mountford was come home. I went, and they ſaid, he was not come home: She deſired me then to go again, and tell Mrs. Mountford, that if he was not come Home, ſhe ſhould ſend to ſee where he was, and deſire he would not come Home without a good Guard, for my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were walking about the Street, and ſhe did not know their Deſign, by reaſon Mr. Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand, out of the Scabbord. I asked the Reaſon why he had his Sword drawn, and the Anſwer was made; he had loſt the Scabbord in a Skirmiſh in Drury-lane; but that I know nothing of. Mrs. Mountford ſaid, ſhe would ſend her Maid to ſee where her Husband was, and I told her, if my Miſtreſs would give me leave, I would go along with her, to bear her Company. And when I returned to my Miſtriſs, ſhe did give me leave, and I went along with her to ſeveral places; but we could not find Mr. Mountford; ſo coming home, I went to my Miſtriſs, and I ſaw them two ſtand at the Door, and they ſtaid there above an Hour, and in the mean time our Landlady Mrs. Brown, heard the Watch come into the Street, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go to the Door, and bid the Watch ſeize them; and ſhe did go out, and I was kept within Doors, and heard her talk to the Watch, but what ſhe ſaid, I cannot tell; but preſently the Watch went away and left them. And I ſtood at the Door, and heard Mrs. Brown ſay, there cometh Mr. Mountford, and ſhe would go ſpeak with him; and with that, ſhe went as faſt as ſhe could to meet meet him, and came to him a good way before he came down to them, and took him by the Arm thus to ſtay him, and ſhe ſaid, Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun was walking in the Street, and Captain Hill had his Sword in his Hand drawn, and ſhe did not know what their Deſign was.

L. H. Stew. Indeed ſhe muſt ſpeak louder, or I cannot tell what ſhe ſayeth.

El. Walker. My Lord, I ſay Mrs. Brown when I was at the Door, ſaid, yonder cometh Mr. Mountford, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go and meet him, and away ſhe went as faſt as ſhe could towards him; and when ſhe came up to him, ſhe took him by the Arm thus, and deſired him, that he would not come down that Street, but go to his own Houſe, for there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun walking in the Street, and ſhe did not know what their Deſign was, but Captain Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand. If it pleaſe you my Lord, Mr. Mountford did not anſwer her a Word; but preſſed forward to meet my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill. If it pleaſe you my Lord, they met one another, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Mountford Complimented one another very lovingly, and ſaid, they were glad to ſee one another; and Mr. Mountford ſaid to my Lord, he had a great Reſpect for his Lordſhip, and my Lord replyed to him again, by my Honour, I have the like for you Mr. Mountford, and with that, they embraced one another. I am ſure this is the Truth, for I followed Mrs. Brown out, and ſtood by when it was done. Mr. Mountford told my Lord, it was a Diſhonour to him to keep Company with Captain Hill. I will not take my Oath that Captain Hill did hear him ſay ſo, but he might have heard him, and it may be he did too; and that might occaſion the Quarrel; but I will not take my Oath of that: It came juſt in my Head after this was ſaid, that our Door was open, and I turned my Back to hear and look who was at our Door, and I heard Mrs. Brown ſay, that Captain Hill and Mr. Mountford were going to Fight: I ſaw them Fighting, making Paſſes at one another, I ſaw them engaged, I never ſaw men naked Fighting ſo in my Life.

At which there was a great Laughter.

El. Walker. My Lord, I do not underſtand theſe matters, I tell you as well as I can, they were fighting with naked Swords, Mr. Mountfords Sword was upon Mr. Hill hereabouts, and Mr. Hill's Sword was upon Mr. Mountford hereabouts; and after they had made two or three Puſhes at one another, Mr. Mountford ſaid he was kill'd, and threw down his Sword thus, and I took it up, and there was a good piece of the Sword broken off. I turned me about thus, towards our own Hatch at our Door, and there ſtood two or three People, I cannot ſay who they were, but I gave them the Sword, and I turned my Face towards Surry Street, and ſaw Captain Hill making his eſcape, running up Surry-Street; and if it pleaſe you my Lord, Mr. Mountford was the Friend I had moſt Reſpect for; and I ſaw him as faſt as he could, going towards his own Houſe, and my Lord Mohun ſtood in the ſame place that he was in, when he and Mr. Mountford were embracing one another, and I did not ſee my Lord Mohun ſtir from that place; but when they fought, they were engaged in the middle of the pitched Stones, where there was a place made for the Water to run along the Street like a Channel; and to my Knowledge, I did never ſee my Lord Mohun off of the Paved Stones, on the ſide. I cannot ſay he was never off, when my Eye was turned another way; but to my Knowledge, I never ſaw him off of thoſe Stones. If it pleaſe you my Lord, the next thing that I ſaw, was this, after Captain Hill run up Surry-Street, and Mr. Mountford did go Home, I ſaw my Lord Mohun walking up to the end of the Street, where the Watch were coming, and when the Watch came, I ſee him deliver himſelf up to the Watch; but I think one of the Watch ſaid he muſt have his Sword, and he did deliver up himſelf and his Sword to the Watch. And he bid me take notice, bear Witneſs, ſaid he, I have no hand in the Death of Mr. Mountford. Said I, no, my Lord, I think you have not. The next thing I remember, was Mrs. Page came and ſaid, Mr. Mountford was killed, upon which, ſaid my Lord Mohun to her, bear Witneſs, I had no hand in his Death. Said ſhe, you were in his Company, therefore ſeize him, and carry him to the Round-Houſe; and the Watch did ſecure him; and my Lord anſwered, as he was a Gentleman, he deſired to be uſed like a Gentleman; and they did carry him away to the Round-houſe. This is the thing that I did ſay, as near as I can remember, to the Juſtices; but I have been very much abuſed and diſtracted amongſt them, and therefore to a Word I cannot ſay; but as near as I can remember, being abuſed at the rate I have been, This I did then ſay, and it is the Truth.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether ſhe was not examined before the Juſtices at Hick's-Hall, and whether ſhe was not then Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

L. H. Steward. Truly, my Lord, I have heard very little of what ſhe has ſaid, but I hope my Lords that have been nearer have obſerved it.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, if you ask what was done at Hick's-Hall, I will tell you juſt as it was, what happened there, and ſo proceed on to tell you how I have been abuſed.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, What would you have her asked more?

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask her whether ſhe was not Mrs. Bracegirdles Servant when ſhe was examined at Hick's Hall, and whether ſhe ſwore the ſame there as ſhe ſaith here, and what was done to her ſince, or what they would have done, and whether they did not try to make her ſpeak what they would, and to put her out.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you my Lord, that next Morning, there came ſeveral of the Players to me, to ask me what I knew of the Death of Mr. Mountford, and I told them; but they did not like what I ſaid, and they ſeemed diſcontented at me. And when they were to go to Hick's-Hall, they ſaid they had no need of my Evidence, they could do without me. So Mrs. Brown and her Maid they went away, and left me at Home; what they did, or where they ſtaid, I do not know; but about two or three Hours after, a Meſſenger came and ſaid, my Miſtreſs and I muſt go to Hick's-Hall to be examined before the Juſtices; and we went, and when we came there, all were examined, and I was examined in the laſt Place; where, my Lord, I gave in the ſame Evidence that I do now, as near as I can ſpeak. I do verily believe it to be the ſame, but I have had ſo much Trouble with their abuſing me, that I cannot ſpeak to every Word or particular Thing. For my

Miſtreſs,

Miſtreſs ſtood before me, and ſaid, they brought Evidences that confounded themſelves, and another ſaid, hang her Jade, pull her by the Coat. I turned me to the Juſtices, and ſaid, I hoped I might ſpeak now I was there; but it may be for fear of my Miſtreſs, I did not then ſpeak all that I have done now, becauſe I have called more ſince to my Remembrance. And there is one particular thing that I call to mind now, I remember, that in our Parlor, as ſoon as they came home out of Drury-lane, there was a Diſcourſe between my old Miſtreſs and my young, that Captain Hill waited at the Door to ſee my Miſtreſs, and that if he might but have leave to ſee her, and to beg her Pardon, they would be gone thence to their own Lodging; and I ſaid to my Miſtreſs, if ſhe would give me leave, I would go out to them, and demand Captain Hill's Sword, and then he might come in.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether ſhe was not turned away and threatned.

Eliz. Walker. I am going on to tell my Lord what happened in our Houſe that Night. I told my Miſtreſs, if ſhe would give me leave, I would undertake to get Captain Hill's Sword from him, and then ſhe might let him come in and ſee her, and beg her Pardon, and I thought it would prevent a great deal of Danger that might follow elſe. And my Miſtreſs ſaid I was a prating Slut, and my young Miſtreſs ſaid, if he begged her Pardon upon his Knees never ſo, ſhe would never forgive him, nor ſee him more. My Lord, there was another Diſcourſe in the Street, that Captain Hill had made a Vow that he would kill himſelf that Night, and that my Lord Mohun, having a Reſpect for him, watched to prevent him from doing himſelf a Miſchief. That was diſcourſed in the Street, but I cannot ſay it was ſo of my own Knowledge.

Then another Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether ſhe was not turned away, and whether ſhe was never threatned.

Eliz. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, that Night that I gave in my Evidence at Hick's-Hall, by their talking, I knew before I went from Home, what a Life I ſhould have with my Miſtreſs, for I knew they did not like my Evidence, and I was afraid of coming Home, and went and ſtaid with my Siſter; but notwithſtanding I went Home about nine a Clock, and they were very inveterate againſt me, and I told one of them, I had witneſſed the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and that I would ſtand by. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, the next Morning there was this Ann Jones that lay with me that Night, and ſhe told me that in the Morning they threatned, and intended to fetch me to Mrs. Mountford to rattle me for what Account I had given in, and ſhe giving me this Item, I got up and went to dreſſing my Dinner, and Mrs. Mountford ſent a Man, that I know by ſight, I think it was one Roberts, I believe that was his Name; whereupon he came and asked me where was Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid; I ſaid, I was ſhe, and then he ſaid Mrs. Mountford deſired me to come to her. I ſaid, I had given in my Evidence where I ought to do it, and I had nothing to do with her; but it was upon this account, not that I had any Antipathy againſt Mrs. Mountford, but only as Ann Jones had given me that Item of a Deſign to ſend me to her, to rattle me for the Evidence I had given in, and I did not know what might come of it, or what their Deſign might be.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not interrupt any Witneſs, but becauſe ſhe ſpeaks of what was ſaid by Jones, and Mrs. Bracegirdle, I deſire they may be by to hear what ſhe ſaith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire my Witneſſes may not be hared.

L. H. Steward. This is not haring of Evidence, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire I may go on with my Evidence without Interruption.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, this is no Interruption.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord let Mrs. Mountford be called in to hear what ſhe ſaith of her, I deſire ſhe may be by.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I have no more to ſay to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. But then my Lord, before ſhe goeth away, I have two or three Queſtions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. What do ask her Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Att. Gen. She ſaith ſhe was examined at Hick's-Hall, I deſire to know if ever ſhe was examined before the Coroner.

Eliz. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I was not, and I will give you the reaſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray let us hear it.

Eliz. Walker. Why you have not heard how badly they uſed me after this.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray Miſtreſs anſwer my Queſtion.

Eliz. Walker. But, my Lord, if it pleaſe you, I went to my Siſter, and ſtaid with her till eight or nine, and my Aunt told me there had been a Porter to enquire for me, to go to the Jury; I was ſorry I was not at Home, but I took a Neighbour with me to go to Mrs. Mountfords, to ſee if the Jury were not gone, and I knowing how they had threatned me, I deſired him to leave me at a Victualling-houſe by Temple-Bar, and go and tell them, if the Jury were not gone I was ready to wait upon them; he went, and I remained at the Victualling-Houſe, and he came again, and told me, Mrs. Mountford ſaid they had done without me; but he was a little ſurprized.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, ſhe maketh a long Anſwer to a ſhort Queſtion. I would ask her another Queſtion preſently; but by the way, as to this Examination at Hick's-Hall, I would obſerve that it is a very unuſual, and I think, under Favour, a very unwarrantable thing for Juſtices of the Peace, to take upon them, under a Pretence of conſidering, in order to Bail a Perſon charged with Murder, to enter into a particular Examination of every one of the King's Witneſſes, as if they were either a Grand Inqueſt, charged upon Oath for finding a Bill of Indictment, or Coroners to take an Inquiſition of the Murder, both the Grand Jury and the Coroner are upon their Oaths to keep the King's Evidence ſecret; but this is to make it publick by an indirect way by a Juſtice of Peace's examining, in order to the bailing of an Offender. But I would obſerve this Woman goeth away from her Miſtreſs, and continueth away, and concealeth her ſelf; ſhe was not to be found to be examined before the Coroner, the proper Officer, nor are we able to tell where ſhe has been; I deſire ſome account may be given, in whoſe hands ſhe has been all this time.

Lord

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire your Lordship's Opinion, whether this may be permitted, that he should talk thus.

L. H. Stew. What do you say, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire to know whether he may interrupt me in my Evidence thus: All this matter is foreign to the Business before your Lordships.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please, I would ask her this one Question.

Lord ——— Under Mr. Attorney's Pardon, I think the Prisoner, or his Witnesses, ought not to be interrupted; but if he have any Remarks upon the Evidence, when they have gone thro' he may call them again, and ask them any Questions, or make any Remarks upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask her but one Question.

L. H. Stew. What is it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. If she heard Mrs. Brown say to Mr. Mountford that she would not have him come forward, because my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were there, and she did not know what their Design was.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you my Lord, I did hear them, and I was just by them; and there was none but she and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. She upon her Oath saith, she did not tell him any thing more, than that she would speak with him; but he did not hear her, or hearken to her: But my Lord, I have no more Questions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witness, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Who is your Lordships next? Pray call your next Witness.

L. Mohun. I desire Ann Jones may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What doth your Lordship examine her to?

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked what she knoweth of what passed that Night Mr. Mountford was hurt, and tell the whole Story.

Jones. First, I saw Mrs. Bracegirdle coming home with her Mother and Mr. Page, about ten a Clock at Night, and there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun with them when they came Home, but they did not come in with them, but walked in the Street about an hour and an half; and after they came in, Mrs. Brown sent to Mrs. Mountford, for she said Captain Hill had some Design, and my Lord Mohun upon Mr. Mountford, but Mr. Mountford not being at Home, they sent to all the Taverns thereabouts, but could not find him; they came Home again, and told Mrs. Mountford and Mrs. Bracegirdle they could not find him, and there my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill walked to and fro about the Street for an hour and half in all; about an hour after they had been to look for Mr. Mountford, or about three quarters of an hour Mr. Mountford came down, and I saw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill at this Door.

L. Mohun. At whose Door I desire she may be asked.

Jones. At this Mrs. Brown's Door, and Mr. Mountford coming down, my Lord Mohun met him, and embraced him, and said he had a great Honour and Friendship for him, and Mr. Mountford said he had a great Honour and Respect for his Lordship. Saith my Lord Mohun, Mr. Mountford, I suppose you are sent for. No not I, upon my Honour, said he. Upon that he up and told him how they had like to have got Mrs. Bracegirdle into a Coach, and carried her away, but were prevented. Saith Mr. Mountford, as to Mrs. Bracegirdle, I have nothing to do, she is no Concern of mine, if my Wife have offended your Lordship, she shall beg your Pardon. Said Mr. Mountford again, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Mr. Hill in any such Action as this. With that Captain Hill came up and hit Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and bid him draw. And said Mr. Mountford, Damn ye, What is that for? And thereupon he drew; and I tell you what I saw, they both came off from the paved Stones into the middle of the Highway, and made two or three Passes at one another; at the second Pass Mr. Mountford's Sword broke, and he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said he was a dead Man; Mr. Mountford went one way, and Mr. Hill another.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked if I did meddle with Mr. Mountford at all, or helped Mr. Hill whilst they fought, and where I stood all the while.

L. H Stew. What say you? Answer all those Questions my Lord asked you.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, he stood upon the Causey, the paved Stones, in the same Place where he was all the time.

L. H. Stew. Did my Lord meddle at all?

Jones. No, I did not see my Lord Mohun meddle.

L. H. Stew. Was my Lords Sword drawn?

Jones. I did not see it drawn.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I run away, or whether I did not surrender my self to the Watch.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, I did not see my Lord run away. But I did see him surrender himself.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked if she was not examined at Hick's-Hall.

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Mohun. And whether she did not there declare the same upon Oath that she doth now.

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L H. Stew. Have you any thing to say to this Witness, Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would only ask her this Question: She saith my Lord Mohun was upon the Pavement, or Causey, as she calleth it, all the while; I desire to know whether the Scuffle did not begin upon the Pavement.

Jones. Yes, it did upon the Causey.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know whether she saw any Blood upon that Causey the next day.

Jones. No, I saw none.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether they did not fight in the middle of the Street.

Jones. Yes, and please your Lordship, I did see them make Passes at one another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether the Sword was not broken there in the middle of the Street, and whether Mr. Mountford did not then cry out, I am killed.

Jones. His Sword was broken in the middle of the Street; but I did not hear Mr. Mountford say he was killed, but he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said, I am a dead Man.

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witneſs my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ſay to her, Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H Stew. Then who is your next Witneſs, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. Edward Warrington, my Lord. (Who came to the Bar.)

L. H Stew. What ſay you to him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask him where he liveth, whether he be not a Neighbour to Mrs. Bracegirdle? And what he ſaw that Night Mr. Mountford was killed? I deſire he would give his whole Evidence?

Warrington. I live if it pleaſe your Honour, over againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle's Houſe, at the White-Swan, on the other ſide of the way.

L. Mohun. I deſire he would tell all that he ſaw that Night.

Warrington. All that I can ſay, is about nine or ten a Clock, as near as I can gueſs: I heard a Diſturbance at Mrs. Browne's Door, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodgeth, and looking out, I ſaw there were two Gentlemen talking to old Mrs. Bracegirdle, and Mrs. Bracegirdle and ſome People went into the Houſe, and when they were gone into the Houſe, I ſaw the two Gentlemen walk about the Street, one's Sword I ſaw was drawn.

L. H. Stew. Whoſe Sword was that was drawn?

Warrington. Captain Hill's, as they ſay, for my part, I did not know either of them, they walked there for the ſpace of an Hour and a half, I ſaw them oppoſe no Body. But as they came along I heard them ask a Gentleman that came towards them, whether he would drink a Glaſs of Wine or not.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, what he ſaw afterwards of Fighting.

Warrington. For Fighting, I ſaw Mr. Mountford come down Norfolk-ſtreet, and I ſaw him turn at the Corner with his Sword in his Hand in the Scabbord, to the beſt of my Knowledge, and ſeeing ſome People there, as I ſuppoſe, went towards them, and came up to them; and I ſaw my Lord Mohun to the beſt of my Knowledge, lay his Hand upon his Shoulder, and embraced him, and complimented him; but I cannot be certain what the words were that paſſed between them.

L. H. Stew. Did you ſee them Fight?

Warrington. If it pleaſe your Honour, I did ſee their Swords both drawn, Mr. Mountford and he that they ſaid was Captain Hill; there were ſome Women about them, ſo that I could not ſo well diſcern when they drew their Swords, or who begun the Quarrel. Hill they ſaid, had no Scabbord to put his Sword in, my Lord Mohun ſtood by, and laid his Hand upon Mountford's Shoulder.

L. H. Stew. Was that before the Fighting, or at the time of the Fighting?

Warrington. It was before their Fighting, at their firſt meeting.

L. Mohun. I deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to ask him, in what part of the Street they fought, and whether I was near them then.

Warrington. When firſt I ſaw their Swords drawn, it was upon the flat Stones of the Pavement; and I ſaw Mr. Hill come off of the Stones, and Mr. Mountford with him. Mr. Hill was, I think the firſt, and they came both up together with their Swords drawn in their Hands, they were not a Swords length off from one another; and they paſſed at one another, and I run into our Houſe to fetch a Paring-Shovel, with an Intention to part them; but before I could get out of Doors with the Paring-Shovel in my Hands, the one was gone one way, and the other the other way; and I ſaw no body in the Street to ask any Queſtions of, but my Lord Mohun at the Corner, three or four Doors above this place. And I came out, and asked which way they were gone, my Lord Mohun turned about, and I was a little afraid of him at firſt; but ſaid he, here am I, I did not offer to oppoſe or draw my Sword, you all know it; and immediately if it pleaſe your Honour, the Watch came in, that is all I know.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether I did not go towards the Watch, and ſurrender my ſelf.

Warrington. I cannot ſay that, but the Watch came in a Minute. My Lord turned about, and ſaid, here am I, I did not oppoſe or draw my Sword, you all know.

L. Mohun. Pray my Lord, let him be asked whether I did offer to fly. And whether I had not as much time to fly, as Mr. Hill.

Warrington. I cannot ſay that my Lord. I ſuppoſe he might have gone away as well as Mr. Hill, for they were both together.

L Mohun. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked another Queſtion, whether when Mr. Mountford came into Howard ſtreet, he did not come out of his way to his own Houſe, to come towards us.

Warrington. My Lord, if it pleaſe your Honour, it was out of his way; but whether he did it on purpoſe, or becauſe he ſaw People there, I cannot tell.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may tell you where Mr. Mountford's Houſe is.

Warrington. Mr. Mountford's Houſe is in Norfolk-Street, two Doors in the Corner out of the Croſs Street; and this was done in Howard ſtreet.

L. H. Stew. I would ask you a ſhort Queſtion, whether that was the way to his Houſe that he went.

Warrington. No, it was not the way my Lord; for he turned on the Right-Hand, and he ſhould have kept ſtrait along.

L. Mohun. I deſire he may be asked, whether he was not ſworn at Hick's-Hall, and whether he gave not the ſame Evidence there, that he doth now.

Warrington. I was ſworn there, and did to the beſt of my Knowledge, give the ſame Evidence I do now.

L. H. Stew. If I underſtand you aright, you ſay both the Swords were drawn of Mountford and Hill?

Warrington. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Can you ſay whether Mountford's Sword was drawn before he was hurt, or not?

Warrington. If it pleaſe you my Lord, I cannot tell that, I cannot be poſitive whether it was or no; for there were Women about them, I ſay, at firſt, and I could not diſcern the Beginning; and I did not ſtand to ſee them puſh, for as ſoon as I ſaw their Swords drawn, and they come off the Pavement to Fight, I run into the Houſe to fetch a Paring-Shovel.

L. Mohun. Now my Lord, I will call another Witneſs.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any Queſtions to ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. Mohun. Then my Lord, I will call another Witneſs to ſhew you the reaſon why Mr. Hill and I ſtayed in the Street, and what was the Buſineſs we ſtay'd for. I deſire Ann Knevitt may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask her where ſhe liveth, and what ſhe knoweth of this Buſineſs.

Knevit. My Lord, I live in Howard ſtreet, exactly againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle s Lodging, and my Lord Mohun, as he gave his own Name to be, to the Watchmen, and another Man that they called Captain Hill, for ſo he gave his Name to be; they came down with Mrs. Bracegirdle, both the Mrs. Bracegirdles into the Street, and came to their Door, and old Mrs. Bracegirdle put her Daughter in at the Door, and then ſhe ſtood ſtill and talked with the Gentlemen, and asked them their Buſineſs. They ſaid, they wanted to beg the young Woman's Pardon for what they had done, and then they would be gone. She ſaid, ſhe thought they came to rob her. They ſaid no, they came upon a very Honourable Deſign, ſhe ſaid, then they might have come at a more ſeaſonable time; but ſhe believed they came to rob her.

L. Mohun. What time of Night was it?

Knevit. It wanted a quarter of Ten I believe, or it was about ten, a quarter over or under; I cannot exactly tell. They ſaid, if ſhe would give them leave but to ſpeak to her, and beg her Pardon for what they had done, they would go home immediately. She ſaid ſhe would not, they ſhould not ſee her any more that Night: Then one of the Gentlemen I know not which of them it was, ſaid, they would walk a little while in the Street, ſhe did ſee them walk very quietly, but ſhe made a great Noiſe her ſelf; and at laſt ſhe went in, and ſhut the Door, and the Gentlemen walked quietly up and down; and by and by, they went to the Door again, and deſired to be admitted to ſpeak with young Mrs. Bracegirdle, that they might beg her Pardon for ſome Affront that they had put upon her, I ſuppoſe, and ſhe ſtill refuſed them, and would not let them ſpeak with her; and ſeveral times they called and knocked at the Door, and ſtill deſired but to ſpeak with her, and beg her Pardon, and they would be gone home, but ſhe every time refuſed it.

L. H. Stew. Woman, I do not hear you, you muſt ſpeak louder.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhips will let one of the Clerks come, and take the Evidence, and report it to you.

L. H. Stew. If it be material, another muſt report it; for I have not heard one quarter of it.

L. Mohun. It is very material my Lord, to ſhew the Reaſon why we ſtayed there.

Knevit. My Lord, I will repeat it over again if you pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Then pray ſpeak ſo loud that I may hear.

Knevit. My Lord Mohun is a perfect Stranger to me, I only tell you what I ſaw and heard. At the firſt beginning of all, two Gentlemen and two Women came to a Door over againſt our Door, and at that Houſe Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter lodged, the Gentlemen gave their Names to the Watch afterwards to be my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill: So when they came there, the old Woman put her Daughter in at the Door, and when ſhe had pulled off her Hood and Scarf, ſhe came to the Door, and asked them their Buſineſs; and they told her, they wanted to beg her Daughter's Pardon for what they had done; but ſhe abuſed the Gentlemen mightily, and gave them very ill words, and ſaid, ſhe believed they came to rob her Daughter, they ſaid no, they came upon a very honourable Deſign, then ſhe ſaid, they ſhould have come honourably at a ſeaſonable time; they ſaid it was not an unſeaſonable time, for ſhe was out of Doors her ſelf at that time. So ſhe ſtood there a little, and then at laſt ſhe went in a Doors, and ſhut the Door, and ſome of them opened the Door again, and they were walking upon the Cauſey, and came up to the Door, and ſtill deſired the ſame thing, to ſpeak with the young Gentlewoman to beg her Pardon for what they had done, and they would go home for that Night. One of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, ſaid he had given her an Affront, and he deſired to beg her Pardon; but ſtill they ſaid, he ſhould not be admitted to ſpeak with her. Then one of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, deſired ſhe would be pleaſed to come but to the Hatch, that he might ſee her, and beg her Pardon, and he would not deſire to come in, but that would not be permitted. So one of them made anſwer, that they would not ſtir till they did ſee her, and they would walk there all night.

L. H. Stew. Cryer, call for Silence, and pray my Lord Great Chamberlain, take ſome Order with thoſe People behind there, for they cannot hear themſelves what the Witneſſes ſay, and therefore they are reſolved we ſhall not hear them neither.

(Proclamation was made for Silence.)

L. H. Stew. Now go on Woman.

Knevit. They ſaid they would ſtay in the Street all Night, unleſs they did ſpeak with her: But if ſhe would give them leave to ſpeak with her, they would depart to their own Lodgings immediately: but they were denyed to be admitted to ſpeak with her. Whereupon one of them called unto his Boy, to bring him his Cloak; but then he ſaid, he would not have his Cloak, he would walk without it, becauſe they had not both of them Cloaks; by and by they ſent for a Bottle of Wine, and there they drunk her Health, and took ſeveral Turns, and after they had drunk off the Bottle, or ſome part of it, they went to the Door again, and knocked at the Door, and ſome body anſwered from within, for they were not at the Door, what they would have; They ſaid the ſame thing as before, that they deſired only to ſee her, and beg her Pardon, and they would go home; for it was a very cold Night, and it was not convenient to walk there, but they ſtill refuſed to let them in: By and by, the Watch came down, and asked who was there, and what was their Buſineſs, and one of the Gentlemen made anſwer, and ſaid, He was a Peer, and his Name was Mohun, the other ſaid, his Name was Hill. So the Watch went by, and ſaid no more; but ſome Body made anſwer, and ſaid, there was a Gentleman had a Sweet-Heart in that Street, and he wanted to ſpeak with her. Juſt at that time, I went up ſtairs to warm a Bed in our Houſe, and whilſt I was warming the Bed, I heard a little buſtle in the Street, and running to the Window there I ſaw a Sword in a Man's Body, I could not tell who the Man was, nor who put the Sword there, but the Man that drew out the Sword, run away as hard as he could, and the Man in whoſe Body the Sword was, went as faſt as he could the other way. And my Lord that gave his Name to the Watch to be Mohun, ſtood on the farther ſide of the Street, and ſaid, I have done no hurt to any Body, and I will not ſtir. And there was a Woman that called out to the Watch to ſeize him; but who the Woman was, I cannot tell, but he ſtood ſtill between Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, and the next Neighbours, one that is called Nuttall I think, and never ſtirred till the Watch came to him, and the reſt went to Mr. Mountford, he ſaid, there was no occaſion to lay Hands upon him, for he would not ſtir from them.

L. Mohun. I deſire to ask her if Mr. Mountford did not ſay I am killed after the Sword was broke.

Knevit. Yes, he did ſay he was a dead Man.

L. H. Stew. What, after his Sword was broke?

Knevitt. After the Sword was drawn out of his Body, his Sword was in his own Hand, I ſqualled out when I ſaw the Sword in his Body, and had like to have gone out of the Window, and ſome body ſaid to me, when I told them why I cry'd out, Will you break your Neck for that Reaſon? it may be it is one of the Watchmen. No, ſaid I, it is not a Watchman.

L. Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked where Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill fought, whether it was not in the middle of the Street.

Knevitt. My Lord, it was exactly in the middle, as near as I can gueſs, rather on our ſide of the way, with his Arms ſpread, and his Sword in the Scabbard.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witneſs?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to ſay to her, Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask her where ſhe liveth.

Knevitt. I live in Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. With whom there?

Knevitt. At one Mrs. Brewers.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Employment is your Miſtreſs?

Knevitt. My Miſtreſs keepeth a Coffee houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you live near Mrs. Brown's?

Knevitt. I know not any of that Name there; but I live over againſt Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you know the People of that Houſe?

Knevitt. No, upon my Word, I do not know their Names that keep the Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let me ask you another Queſtion: You ſpeak of many Meſſages ſent backward and forward, and that they ſaid Mrs. Bracegirdle ſhould not be ſpoken with while my Lord ſtaid there; I deſire to know if you can tell who any of the Perſons were that brought thoſe Meſſages.

Knevitt. It was the Man that called himſelf my Lord Mohun, and the other that called himſelf Hill, they ſpoke themſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. But who was it that came to them ſo often, to tell them they ſhould not ſpeak with her?

Knevitt. It was old Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure of that.

Knevitt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you one Queſtion more: When the Watch came up to them, did my Lord tell the Watch his Name was Mohun, or only that he was a Peer of England?

Knevitt. He ſaid firſt he was a Peer of the Land, and then he ſaid his Name was Mohun, and the other ſaid his Name was Captain Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are ſure both of them told their Names to the Watch.

Knevitt. Yes, I am ſure I heard them ſay ſo.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more Witneſſes to call, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, I could call ſome as to Sandys's Reputation, but I do not think it at all material.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing, Mr. Attorney, to ſay to the Boy that was ſet by? Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I did propoſe that the Boy ſhould hear the Information read which he gave in to the Coroner.

L. H. Stew. Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Well then, call him again.

(The Boy came to the Bar, and his Depoſition before the Coroner was ſhewed to him.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper, is that your Name, and of your Writing?

Boy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it true you then ſwore before the Coroner?

Boy. Yes, it was true.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

(It was taken by the Clerk, and read at the Table.)

Clerk of Crown. Reads.

Middleſex. The Information of Thomas Leake, Servant to Richard Hill, Gent. taken upon Oath this 12th Day of December, 1692. before me.

HE ſaith, that on Friday Morning laſt, about nine of the Clock, 'twas agreed betwixt my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle with ſome Soldiers, and carry her away in a Coach about nine Miles off, and about ten of the Clock at Night my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, with about ſix Soldiers, did ſeize her, and endeavour to put her into a Coach; but ſhe refuſed to go, and they led her down into Howard-ſtreet to her Lodging, and then ſaid they would walk an hour under Mrs. Bracegirdle's Window, and another under Mrs. Barry's; and about an hour and an half after, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and Mr. Mountford and my Lord Mohun ſaluted each other, and my Lord Mohun ſaid, he hoped Mr. Mountford was not come to vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle; and Mr. Mountford hoped my Lord did not come to vindicate the Rudeneſs done to Mrs. Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill; and then Mr. Hill ſaid, he was able to vindicate himſelf, and bid Mr. Mountford to draw, and they both puſhed at each other with their Swords, and my Lord ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend: and during the time that Mr. Hill and Mr. Mountford fought, my Lord Mohun did not endeavour to part them.

Jo. Cowper, Coroner.

Thomas Leake.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to this laſt Witneſs. I would deſire ſome of the Watch may be asked, becauſe ſhe ſaith my Lord told them his Name was Mohun, and Hill told them his Name was Hill, whether it was ſo or not.

L. H. Stew. Who would you call?

Mr. Att. Gen. Merry, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

L. H. Stew Call him.

Lord Mohun. I deſire the Conſtable may be called.

Merry did not preſently come in.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not ſo material, as to deſire your Lordſhips ſhould ſtay for him But as to that one Witneſs that entertained your Lordſhip ſo long, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant, I deſire, that ſhe being here, may give your Lordſhips an account what became of this Servant of hers.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, ſhe went away from me on the Sunday.

L. H. Stew. Who did?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Maid that was then, and I ſent to her Aunts the Week after to ſeek for her, but ſhe could not be found, where ſhe was I cannot tell, nor could not hear of her from that time to this.

Lord Mohun. I deſire ſhe may be asked whether ſhe did not diſcharge her, or pay her her Wages.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I did not.

Lord Mohun. Did not you or your Mother?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Mother, my Lord, did, ſhe was not my Servant, my Mother hired her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What doth ſhe ſay? were her Wages paid, and ſhe diſcharged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. They were paid becauſe ſhe would not ſtay with me, my Lord. I deſired her to ſtay, and ſhe would not, and then ſhe demanded her Wages, and my Mother paid her.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire you would ask the Maid the reaſon why ſhe would not ſtay.

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, the reaſon was this. When I came from Hick's-Hall Mrs. Mountford the next day ſent for me, and I lying with this Ann Jones that was here, ſhe told me that I ſhould be ſent for, and they would rattle me off for my Evidence that I had given at Hick's-Hall for the King; my Lord, I having ſuch an Item from Ann Jones, and they being all Players; I was afraid, becauſe Players have a worſe Reputation than other People.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with any more Witneſſes.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may be asked if there were not Bailiffs ſent to take her, and ſhe threatned to be arreſted.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to that?

El. Walker. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I cannot ſwear it, but I will tell you, as near as I can, how it was; I had not time to look over my Cloaths, being in haſte when I went, and for fear I ſhould have miſtaken any thing, the next day I went to look over my Cloaths, whereupon I found I had miſtook, and taken one of my Miſtreſſes Aprons, and left one of my own for it, and knowing their great Suſpicion and Inveteracy againſt me, I went the next day to my Uncles, a Porter's, and deſired him to carry it to them; but when I had delivered it to him, he would not let me ſtay to ſpeak much, for he ſaid there had been three Bailiffs to take me, and I having no Friends, was much affrighted, and run crying up and down, and did not know where to fly; for fear they might lay me in a Priſon; and having no Friends, therefore I was forced to fly, and ſo I went to a Juſtice of Peace, and there I gave him an Account of the Buſineſs. But he ſaid he muſt have nothing to do with it, I muſt go again to proffer my Service to my Miſtreſs; but I was not willing to proffer my Service again to her, ſo I kept away ever ſince.

L. H. Stew. If you have done with the Evidence on both Sides; What have you more to ſay, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lords, I hope it will be no Diſadvantage to me, my not ſumming up my Evidence like a Lawyer, being a young man; I think I have made it plainly appear that there never was any former Quarrel or Malice between Mr. Mountford and me; I have alſo made appear the reaſon why we ſtaid ſo long in the Street, which was for Mr. Hill to ſpeak with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and ask her Pardon, and I ſtaid with him as my Friend, ſo it plainly appeareth I had no hand in the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and upon the Conſidence of my own Innocency, I ſurrendred my ſelf, aud I commit my ſelf to this Honorable Houſe, where I know I ſhall have all the Juſtice in the World.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordſhip no more to ſay?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, but I am innocent of the Fact, and leave my ſelf wholly to your Lordſhips.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, according to my Duty, I am to repeat the Evidence to your Lordſhips on the behalf of the King.

My Lord, the Evidence hath been very long, both that on the Part of the King, and that on the Part of the Priſoner, and I know your Lordſhips have given Attention to it with very great Diligence. I cannot pretend that my Memory will ſerve me ſo well, as to repeat the Circumſtances of this ſo long Evidence, but that which has been material, I ſhall crave leave ſhortly to mention to your Lordſhips.

My Lords, I know a great many things may ſlip my Notice and Repetition, but nothing can ſlip your Lordſhips Obſervation: So that though I ſhould not lay a due weight upon the Evidence for the King, yet your Lordſhips will let nothing paſs without giving it its juſt Conſideration, and will give Judgment according to the exacteſt Juſtice.

My Lords, the Evidence for the King doth conſiſt firſt of Facts precedent to the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and next what happened at that time.

As to what preceeded this Fact thus committed, there were two or three Witneſſes called, and the firſt of them is Mr. Hudſon, the next is Mr. Powel, and they give you an Account that Mr. Hill had made his Applications in the way of Courtſhip to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but that he had an Apprehenſion that Mr. Mountford was an Obſtruction to him in that matter, and therefore he did declare ſeveral times, that he would be revenged of him. And one time (which I think was two or three Days before the Fact was done) my Lord Mohun, the Priſoner at the Bar, was at Dinner with Hill, when Hill had this Diſcourſe courſe concerning Mountford, and ſaid he would be revenged of him. My Lord Mohun was by, they both ſay, when ſuch Diſcourſe was uſed by Hill, but they cannot tell what Notice he took of it.

My Lords, after this, the Day that this Fact was committed, your Lordſhips have heard how my Lord Mohun and Hill hired a Coach and ſix Horſes in order to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle and carry her away by Force, and that is proved moſt fully, both upon my Lord Mohun and Hill, that they were both concerned in that Deſign, and actually ingaged in it; there can be no Diſpute of that. Accordingly they dined together that Day, and at Dinner there aroſe a Diſcourſe in relation to Mrs. Bracegirdle. And at that time my Lord Mohun ſaid it would coſt Hill 50 l. to carry her off. And Hill ſaid, if the Villain reſiſted he would ſtabb him. And my Lord Mohun ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend. This Declaration was made at Dinner, on the Day this Fact was committed; and then they appointed to meet at the Play houſe at ſix a Clock in the Evening, expecting Mrs. Bracegirdle would be there; and accordingly the Coach was ordered to be ready at that time in Drury-Lane.

My Lords, in purſuance of this Deſign, they both came to the Play-houſe at ſix a Clock; this is proved by two or three Witneſſes. When they came there they inquired for Mrs. Bracegirdle, but ſhe was not there at that time. And then not finding Mrs. Bracegirdle there, your Lordſhips have an Account from the Coach-man, to what Places he carried them from thence. Firſt to Drury-Lane, there they ſtaid ſome time; and not finding her there, he drove them into Norfolk-ſtreet, near the Place where ſhe lodged, and there a Man and a Woman being diſcourſing together, gave them occaſion to ſay, they thought they were betray'd. And Hill ſaid, my Lord, let us go and cut that Fellows Throat, or Words to that effect.

Then, my Lords, they drove back from that Place, into Drury-Lane again, and ordered the Coach to ſtop over againſt my Lord of Clare's Houſe. There it happened that Mrs. Bracegirdle came from Mr. Page's houſe, where ſhe had ſupped. At that time there were preſent her Mother, her Brother, and Mr. Page, and Mr. Page led her along. Hill came up with ſeven or eight Soldiers, and forced her out of Mr. Page's Hand, and endeavoured to thruſt her into the Coach. In that Coach my Lord Mohun was, that is agreed upon on all hands, the Coach Door was open, and my Lord Mohun was there in it with ſeven or eight Piſtols.

It happening they could not carry her off, but the matter taking Air, People came in to their Aſſiſtance, and the Deſign being prevented, Hill would needs go home with her to her Lodging in Howard-ſtreet, and my Lord came out of the Coach and went along with him. When they were come to the Lodging, the Witneſſes tell your Lordſhips, that at that time, when Mr. Page was going into the Houſe, Hill would have had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Page, and deſired to ſpeak with him, but Mr. Page ſaid it was not a convenient time, but to Morrow would do better, and ſo went into the Houſe, and the Door was locked.

My Lord Mohun and Hill continued walking about the Streets for about two hours before Mr. Mountford was killed, and now your Lordſhips will obſerve what Tranſactions there were during the time that they continued walking in the Streets.

Then there was an Interruption for about a quarter of an hour, occaſion'd by a Lady's falling into Fits in one of the Galleries; but ſhe being removed, and Proclamation made for Silence, the Court proceeded.

L. H. Stew. Pray, go on Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I was obſerving to your Lordſhips, that part of the Evidence which related to what happened after the time that Mrs. Bracegirdle was in her Lodging. And, my Lord, your Lordſhips hear from the Witneſſes, that my Lord Mohun, and this Hill continued in the Street, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and walked up and down for near two hours before Mr. Mountford came.

During that time, the Conſtable and the Watch-men have told your Lordſhip upon their Oaths, that my Lord Mohun's and Mr. Hill's Swords were both drawn. And the Conſtable ſwears expreſly, That he asked my Lord Mohun what he did with his Sword drawn, and that my Lord anſwer'd, he was ready to put it up, and told him withal, he was a Peer of the Realm; the Conſtable then asked, Why the other Gentleman's Sword was drawn, and my Lord Mohun made anſwer that his Scabbord was loſt.

But your Lordſhips obſerve, that before the Watch came, Mrs. Brown (as ſhe her ſelf hath ſworn) came out of the Houſe where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and deſired to know what they did there, and then Hill ſaid, he ſhould light upon Mountford one time or another; ſaith Mrs. Brown to him, why, what hath he done to you, to which he Replyed, he hath affronted me, and I will be Revenged upon him; and this was ſaid in the Preſence of my Lord Mohun, he being juſt by.

My Lords, after this, in a very ſhort time, Mr. Mountford came down, and Mrs. Brown telleth your Lordſhips, that they were ſo much aware of this matter, that my Lord Mohun and Hill ſtaid to do Mountford a Miſchief, that there were Perſons ſent to Mrs. Mountford to give her Notice of it, and ſhe ſent Meſſengers to find out her Husband, to prevent his coming in their Way, but they could not find him.

Upon Mr. Mountford's coming down, Mrs. Brown ſeeing him, ſteps up towards him, to tell him that my Lord Mohun and Hill were in the Streets with their Swords drawn, and ſhe was afraid they had ſome ill Deſign againſt him; but ſhe ſweareth ſhe did not, nor could not tell him this, he was in ſuch haſte; but one of the Witneſſes for my Lord contradicts her in this, and ſays, that ſhe did tell him, but whether the one Witneſs ſweareth true, or the other Witneſs ſaith true, muſt be left to your Lordſhips Judgment.

But Mr. Mountford came down immediately, and as he came down, he met my Lord Mohun, and they did Salute one another (for I would not injure my Lord in miſtaking the Evidence, as near as I can) but your Lordſhips will obſerve the Witneſſes ſay, that preſently my Lord Mohun asked Mr. Mountford, whether he was not ſent for, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe you have heard what happened to the Lady this Night, and I hope you do not come to Vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle. And Mr. Mountford Replyed, I hope your Lordſhip doth not come to Vindicate Mr. Hill in ſuch an Action.

Thereupon Hill ſtepped up, and ſtruck Mr.

Mountford

Mountford a box on the Ear, and at the ſame time, with his Right Hand, paſſed at him, and run him through, before his Sword was drawn. This two of the Witneſſes for the King ſay Mr. Mountford told them upon his Death-Bed, and it was very probable ſo; becauſe your Lordſhips obſerve by all the Evidence, Hill's Sword was ready drawn in his Hand.

There being ſome Noiſe, Proclamation was made for Silence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords, I was obſerving that it was immediately, and at the ſame time that he ſtruck him, and run him through, and it is very likely it was ſo, as Mr. Mountford ſaid when dying; for ſeveral of the Witneſſes for the King do Swear, that the Box on the Ear, was before his Sword was drawn, and Hill's Sword was ready in his Hand. So Mr. Mountford ſaid when he was Expiring, and what regard your Lordſhips will have to the Declaration of a Dying Man, we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment; and Mrs. Brown who was there and ſaw the Fact, ſweareth the ſame thing, that it was done before Mr. Mountford could have time to draw his Sword.

If that be ſo, it is very plain it was Murder in Mr. Hill, and your Lordſhips will pleaſe to obſerve another piece of Evidence that came from the Mouth of a Witneſs, Examined for the Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar, and that is Leake the Boy, he was Examined before the Coroner, indeed he was not called now for the King, and your Lordſhips may ſee ſome Reaſon why he was not, but your Lordſhips have had his Depoſition before the Coroner read, and by that your Lordſhips may obſerve, how different his Teſtimony then was, from what he now giveth. And whether your Lordſhips will believe what he then ſaid upon his Oath, or what he now ſaith, is left to your Lordſhips Conſideration. He ſaith, when he was Examined upon his Oath, ſoon after the Fact, that my Lord Mohun was by, when Hill did wound Mountford, and that my Lord Mohun ſaid, that he would ſtand by his Friend, and that Hill was his Friend, and that my Lord Mohun did ſtand by, and did not offer to part them. Though he hath ſomething varyed from this in his Teſtimony now, yet he ſtill affirms what he there Swore, to be true.

But further my Lords, your Lordſhips will Conſider what the Conſtable Swore, my Lord Mohun ſaid after he was taken, and when he was in Cuſtody at the Round houſe. Whether he did Surrender himſelf or no, we muſt leave to your Lordſhips, upon the Evidence that hath been given on the one ſide, and on the other. But when he was in Cuſtody (as I ſaid) my Lord Mohun asked whether Hill was taken, and being anſwered No, he ſaid he was glad of that; but he was ſorry he had no more Money about him, and wiſhed that he had that Money which he himſelf had, and that he would be willing to be hanged for him. So great a kindneſs he expreſſed for Hill, and ſaid, he had changed Coats with him, and then had Hill's Coat on his Back.

This, my Lords, is the Subſtance of the Evidence on the King's part, and upon the whole of it, it is plain, with Humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, that here was a premeditated Malice in Hill, by his own Declarations preceeding, by what was done at the time of the Fact committed, and by ſtabbing him before his Sword was drawn.

The Queſtion will be, whether, my Lord Mohun the Priſoner at the Bar, was Privy to this Deſign of Hill's, and did ſo far agree in it, as to keep him Company to Aſſiſt and Incourage him. For if he was Privy, and knew of Hill's Deſign, and ſtayed there for that purpoſe, to give him Aſſiſtance in it, with Humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, he will be as much Guilty of the Murther, as Hill that actually killed him: That therefore will be the Queſtion before your Lordſhips, for your Judgment upon the Conſideration of what has been proved in this Caſe.

My Lords, The Priſoner my Lord Mohun, has called and produced ſeveral Witneſſes to your Lordſhips, in Defence of himſelf. The firſt Witneſs was called to this purpoſe, to ſhew that my Lord hath no Malice to Mountford, but that they were very good Friends, but two or three Days before, that he ſpoke of him with a great deal of Kindneſs, and deſired to Drink a Bottle of Wine with him.

Now for this, I would obſerve to your Lordſhips, that it is not the Queſtion, whether my Lord Mohun had any direct or expreſs Malice againſt Mountford, but if Hill who was ſo great a Friend of my Lord Mohun's, had a Malice againſt Mountford, and my Lord Mohun had ſo great a Kindneſs for Hill, as to Accompany and Aſſiſt him in taking his intended Revenge. (Whether it was ſo or no, your Lordſhips are to Judge) it it will be as much Murder in Law, as if my Lord had himſelf had a Hand in it.

For the other Witneſſes that have been called for the Priſoner, I muſt leave the Conſideration of what they ſay, to your Lordſhips. They are not upon their Oaths, but yet they are to be believed ſo far, as your Lordſhips ſhall Judge what they ſay Credible, upon Conſideration of all that you have heard. But for the Boy, who hath Contradicted his own Evidence, which he gave upon Oath before the proper Officer; but acknowledgeth what he Swore then, was true, what Credit is to be given to him, will deſerve your Lordſhips particular Conſideration. How he has been prevail'd upon to change his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what weight it will have with you.

My Lords, I will not ſpend more of your Lordſhips time, I know you very well remember, and will carefully Recollect all the Evidence, both for the King and for the Priſoner, and your Lordſhips will conſider that it is a Caſe of Blood, and if your Lordſhips think him Guilty, tho' he be one of your own Body, you will adjudge him ſo, if not you will acquit him; and therefore I leave the Matter to your Lordſhips juſt Determination.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think now, having heard the Evidence on all ſides, your Lordſhips will think fit to Adjourn to the Houſe of Lords. Is it your Pleaſure to Adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew., This Houſe is Adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords returned to their own Houſe, in the ſame Order as they came into the Court.

After ſome Debate amongſt themſelves in their own Houſe, they Adjourned till the next Day, and ordered the Priſoner, Council, and Witneſſes to attend then in the Court.

Die

Die Mercurii Primo Februarii 1692.

The Lords ſate all Day in their own Houſe, debating amongſt themſelves in the Abſence of the Judges, who were in the Court, and about eight a Clock in the Evening, the Houſe of Lords Adjourn'd till the Friday following, the Thurſday being Candlemas-day, and no Law-day.

And the Priſoner, Council, and Witneſſes were ordered to attend in the Court on Friday morning.

Die Veneris Tertio Februarii 1692.

ABout the Hour of Four in the Afternoon, the Lords (who had till then been Debating amongſt themſelves in their own Houſe) came in the ſame Order as the firſt Day into the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall, except only that the Judges were a great part of the Day waiting for them in the Court.

The Lords being ſeated on their proper Benches, and his Grace the Lord High Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamations were made for Silence, and for the bringing the Priſoner to the Bar in uſual manner; and the Priſoner coming to the Bar, and having ſaluted his Grace the Lord High Steward, and the Peers, and being reſaluted by them, the Court proceeded in this manner:

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, My Lords have heard the Evidence on both ſides, for and againſt you; and upon that Evidence ſome Queſtions have ariſen in point of Law, in which ſome of my Lords are doubtful. I am therefore by their Lordſhips Command to propoſe to your Lordſhips, my Lords Chief Juſtices and the reſt of the Judges here, to have your Opinions upon a Caſe ſtated by their Lordſhips; and it is this:

In a Caſe where a Man ſhall murder another, Whether all thoſe that are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſaid Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon, ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty of Manſlaughter?

To this, my Lords expect you the Judges ſhould give your Reſolutions ſeverally one after another, and therefore it is to begin with you, my Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Queſtion is pretty long; and I deſire, that I may not be miſtaken in the Opinion I ſhall give, that I may have it in Writing, and that I may have a little time to conſider of it, becauſe it hath been a Queſtion framed upon very great Conſideration and Deliberation: Therefore I would be very well adviſed before I give an Anſwer to ſuch a Queſtion, becauſe it is of ſo great Importance.

L. H. Stew. You muſt ſpeak out, my Lords; for elſe I am at ſuch a diſtance that I cannot hear a word you ſay.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I make the ſame humble Requeſt: The Queſtion propounded is long, and the Fruit of great Deliberation among your Lordſhips; I deſire therefore my Anſwer may be ſuch as becometh me to it, and to that purpoſe that I may have a Copy of it, and ſome time to conſider of it.

L. H. Stew. I have it here in Writing, and will give it you, if that will ſerve the turn.

The Paper was brought by the Black Rod from his Grace to the Judges.

L C. J. Holt. My Lord, we deſire your Lordſhips will give us time to withdraw, and conſider of it among our ſelves.

L. H. Stew. Your Lordſhips hear the Motion of my Lord Chief Juſtice; the Judges deſire your leave to withdraw, and conſider of the Queſtion among themſelves.

Lords. No, no, no.

Then the Judges ſitting upon the Wool-Packs, conferred for a little time privately with one another; and then the Earl of Rocheſter ſtood up.

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Rocheſter, What ſay you?

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords, the Priſoner doth deſire to have a Copy of this Queſtion, it being a Queſtion in Point of Law, that his Council may ſee it.

Lords. Ay, ay, he ought to have it.

A Copy was carried by one of the Clerks to the Bar, and delivered to the Priſoner, and he gave it to Sir Thomas Powys, who with Mr. Hawles and Mr. Price, before aſſigned of Council for my Lord Mohun in Matters of Law, ſtood by him at the Bar.

L. Mohun. My Lords, I deſire to know whether my Council may ſpeak to this Caſe before the Judges give their Opinions, it being a Matter of Law, and the Judges ſuperiour to my Council.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, they may be heard to any Matter of Law that is Law ſingly, the Council on either ſide may be heard to any thing that is a Point of Law only.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I conceive this to be ſo.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it is agreed to be ſo: But, my Lords, I muſt deſire your Lordſhips leave to go down to the Wool-Pack, or I ſhall not be able to hear what is ſaid.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then his Grace came down and ſeated himſelf on the Wool-Pack.

Sir T. Powys. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council—

E. of Devonſhire. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devonſhire. I think your Lordſhips have not yet reſolved that the Priſoner's Council ſhall be heard before the Judges; therefore I deſire they may not begin.

Lords. Yes, yes, it was agreed above.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it muſt be either then, or not at all; and I underſtand the Reſolution of the Houſe to be ſo.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Go on, Sir.

Sir T. Powys. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am of Council aſſigned by your Lordſhips for this Noble Peer that is now a Priſoner at the Bar: The Queſtion your Lordſhips are pleas'd to propound is this:

In

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether all those who are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the same Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I take it there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be equally Guilty of that Murder; and there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be Guilty only of Manslaughter: And there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall not (with humble submission) be Guilty of any Crime at all.

For the first, there is no Question but if two Persons or more do meet together with Malice prepensed to kill another, and one of them killeth him, and the rest do aid and assist him in doing of it, though the Mortal Wound is only given by one, there is no question but they are all equally Guilty of the Murder with him that gave the Mortal Wound: And it is also as clear, if two Persons meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and during the execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth kill another Man, the other will be involved in the Guilt of it.

But, my Lords, if several Persons do meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and the Design of the Act is totally over, so that the Prosecution of it is quite left off. ——

There being some Noise and Disorder about the Court, Proclamation was commanded to be made, and was made again for Silence.

Sir T. Powys. My Lords, I say in the second Instance that I was offering to your Lordships. If two Persons or more meet together to do an unlawful Act, but are either disappointed in it, or have totally desisted from it; and afterwards these same Persons having quitted their Design, are together, and a third Person coming into their Company, though there were Malice between one of those Persons, and that third Person, and upon words, or some other occasion or accident, there should be quarrelling and fighting between those two Persons that bore Malice to one another, and one of them is killed, and he that before had joyned in the Design of committing an unlawful Act, be only there in the Company, if he doth neither aid nor abet, nor any ways agree to the doing of the thing, the Authorities are it will neither be Murder nor Manslaughter; and of this I would, with your Lordships Favour, put some Instances.

If two Persons agree together, (as the Case is put in that which goeth by the Name of my Lord Dacre's Case) to enter into another Man's Park and steal his Deer, this is an unlawful Design; and if one of them kill the Keeper, and the other no way at all act in the doing of it, yet it will be Murder in the Person that did go along with that other in that unlawful Act: But the Lord Dacre's Case was accompanied with further Circumstances, for there it did appear that the Lord Dacres had agreed before-hand to kill any Person that should oppose them; there was that particular Circumstance in that Case.

But, my Lords, I take it, with submission, to be very clear, that if two such Persons who made such an attempt to rob or steal Deer in a Park, should be disappointed, and should leave the Park, and afterwards go to a Tavern, or an Ale-house, or any place to drink, having quitted that Design, and some Hours afterwards, a Person cometh in that was not expected, or thought of, and a Quarrel ariseth between one of those two Persons who were before together, and the Man that so came in, and he shall be killed, I take it that the other Person who was present will not be guilty of the Murder, unless he aided, or assisted, or acted in it.

My Lords, I would speak to your Lordships in a Case of this Nature with as good Authority as I could, besides my own poor Reason to prove to your Lordships that there may be many Cases where a Person may be present at the time when another is murthered, and yet he shall be guilty only of Manslaughter, and in some Cases shall be guilty of no Crime at all.

The Case that I shall cite is out of a Treatise of a very great and very Learned Man, it is the Book that goeth under the Name of Sir Matthew Hales's Pleas of the Crown; the Case is this, you will find in that Book under the Title of Murder, Fol. 51. If A. and B. having Malice prepense, meet and fight, and C. the Servant of A. not acquainted therewith, take part with A. his Master, and kill B. this is Murder in A. but only Manslaughter in C. So here is an Instance where one is guilty of Murder, and the other only guilty of Manslaughter, when both are present at the time of the Fact committed. The same Law, saith he, it is, if C. came in suddenly, and took part with A. and killed B. In this Case it is Murder in A. if there was Malice prepensed between him and B. but only Manslaughter in C. who came in suddenly, and actually killed B.

My Lords, He goeth further, and saith, If one come by chance where one is killed, and doth not abet, he is neither Principal nor Accessory to that Murder or Manslaughter; so that here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and Manslaughter only in the other; and here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and not so much as Manslaughter, or any Crime at all in the other.

These that I have cited are Cases where one has Malice against another, and he that joyneth in the Quarrel doth not know it. But I will put the Case now, That a Person hath Malice against another, and one happeneth to be in his Company that knoweth he hath Malice against that other Person; if those two that had Malice against one another, do fight, and the one kill the other, yet he that is present will not be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter. For if the Law should be, that Men are involved in the guilt of Murder whenever they are present at a time when one that beareth Malice against another killeth his Enemy, Conversation in the World would be very dangerous: For, my Lords, we know the World is too full of Malice, and there are few Men but have Acquaintance with such as bear Malice to others; but if so be that no Man that is acquainted with one that bears Malice to another, may be in his Company but at the peril of his Life; if his Enemy come in his his way, and he happen to kill him in his Preſence, then no Man that is ever ſo innocent can be ſafe.

For I would put this Caſe to your Lordſhips: I am walking with a Friend or an Acquaintance that I know hath Malice againſt another, and that other Man cometh in the way, and they fight, and my Friend killeth that other Man, and I am no way aiding or aſſiſting in it, if that ſhould involve me in the Crime, ſurely the Law of England would be the moſt unreaſonable and dangerous Law to live under in the World. No doubt but in ſuch a Caſe the Perſon that is ſo preſent is unfortunate, but he is innocent, is not guilty.

For to make one guilty of Murder where Murder is committed, it muſt be either that he doth aid or abet, or ſome way aſſiſt in the killing of the Man, or he muſt have before that time agreed and confederated with the Perſon that killed him that he would joyn therein at that time, and he muſt be there for that end and purpoſe: For if he never engaged or agreed to the killing of him, nor was there for that purpoſe, nor at the time did any way act, or joyn, or aſſiſt, in the doing of it; in thoſe Caſes he is certainly not guilty.

My Lords, I dare not apply any of theſe things to the preſent Caſe, becauſe I ſuppoſe your Lordſhips only propounded this as a Queſtion of Law, and not of Fact; your Lordſhips are the great Judges both of the one and the other: But what in the Argument or Reſolution of this Caſe, your Lordſhips will find agreeable to the preſent Caſe of my Lord now before you, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips Judgment.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I will not repeat what has been offered, the Diſtinction is certainly true that has been made, that there are Caſes and Inſtances in Law where a Man may be guilty of Murder, when he is preſent where Murder is committed, and he may be guilty of Manſlaughter only where another is guilty of Murder; and a Man may be preſent where Murder is committed, and be innocent both of the one and the other. But this I do venture to ſay, That there is no Authority in our Law that ſaith a Perſon preſent, when a Murder is committed, muſt be guilty either of Murder or Manſlaughter, it muſt be according to the Circumſtances of the thing, either that he intended to aid or aſſiſt in the killing when he was there by Agreement before-hand, or muſt actually aid or aſſiſt by ſome Action or Encouragement.

But, with Submiſſion, the Authority of Law is very plain upon this Queſtion propoſed by your Lordſhips, that one Perſon may be guilty of Manſlaughter, and another of Murder at the ſame time. The Caſe that hath been put out of my Lord Hales was upon his account Authority ſufficient to quote, if we would only rely on him: But, my Lords, with Submiſſion, the Authority goeth a little higher; yet Stampford putteth the Queſtion before the Juſtices; A. that is, the Maſter, fighteth with B. and C. the Servant taketh part with his Maſter, and killeth B. A. is guilty of Murder, and C. only of Manſlaughter.

And that Authority is followed afterwards in the Caſe of Salisbury, in Plowd. Com. Fol. 100. B. with the Reſolution of all the Judges in that Caſe, That one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manſlaughter, as to the ſame Fact; and Stampford doth expreſly ſay, as my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales quotes it out of him, That if a Man be preſent, but do not abet or aſſiſt, or contribute to the thing, he is totally innocent, and neither Principal nor Acceſſory to the Murder or Manſlaughter.

My Lords, We do not find that our Law hath any way prohibited a Man to keep Company with one that oweth another a Spleen; ſure there ſhould be ſome warning given about it, if that was the Law in ſuch a Caſe. The Law goeth no farther than to caution a Man that he take care he doth not break the Law himſelf, that he doth not tranſgreſs the Bounds ſet him by the Law.

And it were a very hard Caſe upon a private Perſon if it ſhould be otherwiſe; for no Law compelleth a private Perſon to part two that are fighting; if he doth attempt it, he doth it at his own Peril, as in that Caſe of A. the Maſter fighting with B. and C. the Servant taking part with his Maſter to part them, if B. be killed, C. is guilty of Manſlaughter, though his Deſign was only to part them, becauſe the Law putteth it not upon a private Perſon to do it; if it did, the Law would protect him for what he did in Obedience to it.

The Law is otherwiſe in the Caſe of a Magiſtrate or a Conſtable, who endeavoureth to part any Perſons fighting, and to keep the Peace; if he happen ſo to kill a Man, he is totally innocent; but a private Perſon ſhall anſwer for it.

My Lords, I will not trouble your Lordſhips further; I hope it is plain that Malice is abſolutely neceſſary to make a Man guilty of Murder, and there is no ſuch thing in this Caſe ſtated by your Lordſhips; and therefore I ſubmit the Matter to your Judgment.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I am of Council for this noble and young Lord the Priſoner at the Bar: I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips ſo far as to make any Repetition of what has been ſaid by thoſe Gentlemen that went before me.

But there was a Caſe in Plowden that was cited by Mr. Hawles by the Name of Salisbury's Caſe; and I would crave leave to cite the Caſe that is next precedent; it is in that Book, Fol. 98. There, my Lords, was an Indictment for Murder againſt ſeveral, and among the reſt againſt two, one for giving the Wound and the Stroke, and the other for being preſent and aiding the other; and they tell you how he was an Aider and an Abetter becauſe he was preſent, and put the Man upon whom the Aſſault was made in terror, which terror was the occaſion that he could not defend his Life; and made him full as much a Principal as the other that gave him his Deaths Wound. And there, my Lords, he citeth another ancient Record, which is Quarto Libro Aſſiſarum Placito 25. of an Appeal of Murder by a Woman for the Death of her Husband againſt Sixteen; four whereof were Principals, and the others Acceſſories, where the words are Preſence, Force and Aid.

How that will come up to this Caſe now before your Lordſhips, I am not to trouble you with the Conſideration of, you who have heard the Evidence are beſt able to judge of it.

My Lords, By the ſame Reaſon and Rule that one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manſlaughter; one may be found guilty, and the other not guilty. As for Example, if A. commandeth B. to kill C. and afterwards it repenteth him of this Command, and he countermandeth it: yet notwithstanding B. doth kill C. now B. that killed C is guilty of Murder, but A. that countermanded it is not guilty as Accessory; for his malicious Intent did not continue till the murdering Stroke was given, and to make Murder there must be a continuing Malice till the mortal Wound given. Cases to this purpose many might be cited; but for a full Authority there is my Lord Coke in his Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51.

My Lords, I have no more to say, but that by the same Rule, that one may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter for the same Fact, by the same Rule, (as Circumstances may be,) the one may be found guilty of Murder, and the other not guilty at all.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say that are of Council for the Prisoner?

Sir Tho. Powys. No, my Lord, I have nothing further to offer to your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Have those who are of Council for the King any thing to reply to this that is said by the Council for the Prisoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordships, the Question that is proposed, is this,

> In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter.

My Lords, that which with all Submission we would offer to your Lordships is this; We are intrusted by their Majesties to prosecute for the Death of one of their Subjects; there hath been a Case stated to your Lordships by the Evidence which hath been given before you; That which is mentioned in this Paper has nothing certain in it, we are to imagine a Case, and suppose Facts, and then to argue what will be the Law upon those Facts supposed. When your Lordships are pleased to let us know what it is which your Lordships take to be the Fact of the Case before you, we shall be ready to speak to the Law upon that Case, as it becomes us, and as it is our Duty to do; but till the Fact be so stated by your Lordships, and declared to be that which your Lordships take to be the Fact of my Lord Mohun's Case, we think it not consistent with our Duty to enter into a Debate upon Supposals, or upon other Cases than that which is in Judgment before your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordships then please that the Judges give their Opinion?

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lords, not to trouble your Lordships with any Repetition of what hath been said, it is my Opinion, as Mr. Attorny General has declared his, That, as this Case is stated, we are bound not to give any Answer to it, unless your Lordships will please to tell us what the Case is upon the Evidence that hath been given before you.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. My Lords, I desire to be heard one Word in this Case. I take it for granted, that your Lordships here are Judges both of Fact and Law in this Case, and you are so entirely Judges of it, that no Body can interpose in giving their Opinions in relation to your Judgments, what the Fact is and from the Fact the Law ariseth. We, that are of Council for the King, must needs prejudice him as to the Evidence of the Fact that we have given, except we argue that which is the Fact of this particular Case, and the Law arising thereupon together; which is not necessary here, where your Lordships are Judges of both; and since you are better Judges of them, than any one else can be. Therefore we do not think it our Duty to argue upon a Case put ad extra, and obiter; and hope your Lordships will excuse us from answering what hath been said by the Council for the Prisoner; tho' I think it might be easily answered in every Point; but I shall not enter upon the debating of it. For your Lordships see what Caution we ought to have in relation to our Duty to the Government, which your Lordships will always expect we should perform as exactly as we can. When the Fact that hath been proved in this Case is stated, your Lordships then are the proper Judges what it amounteth to in point of Law, or if your Lordships desire that Council should argue it, we shall be ready to do it.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lords the Judges, what say you to it? my Lords here expect your Opinion in this Case.

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question, which is this:

> In a Case, where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, I shall not inlarge upon the Matter, but humbly offer my Opinion to your Lordships as generally as the Question. I am of Opinion, that the Crime of those who are in the Company at the time of the murder committed, may be so separated from the Crime of the Person that committeth the murder, as in some Cases they are only to be found guilty of Manslaughter. I suppose your Lordships do not expect that I should argue the Case, or explain my Opinion upon so general a Question, by particular Instances, or run into a Consideration of the different Cases that may be put upon it, therefore I only deliver this as my Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. May it please your Lordships I am of the same Opinion; I think the Import of your Lordships Question is, Whether there may be a Case in which it is possible that one Person, who is in the Company of another at the time that he committed murder, may be guilty of Manslaughter; and my Lords, I think a Case may fall out, and may be so circumstanced, as that it may be possible, that he who did accompany the Murderer, may be guilty only of Manslaughter. Your Lordships only expect our Opinion, and therefore I will not go about to argue it.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I shall not spend your time to repeat the Question, it hath been so ſo often repeated; but I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lords Chief Juſtices, I muſt concur with them in it, that there may poſſibly be ſuch a Caſe, as that when Murder is committed where others are in Company, he that doth the thing will be guilty of Murder, and thoſe that were in Company guilty but of Manſlaughter. There may be ſuch a Caſe.

Earl of Carliſle. My Lords, to ſave your Lordſhips time, unleſs the reſt of the Judges differ from thoſe that have ſpoken their Opinion, I think you need not trouble them to ſpeak to it ſeverally.

Mr. B. Turton. We are all of the ſame Opinion, my Lords, we cannot differ in Opinion upon ſuch a Caſe.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I humbly beg your Lordſhips leave to propoſe a Queſtion to my Lords the Judges for their Opinions.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. What is your Queſtion, my Lord of Monmouth?

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, the Queſtion is this,

> A. Conſcious of an Animoſity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him, whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to hand up your Paper, that my Lords the Judges may ſee it.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H Stew. What ſaith your Lordſhip, my Lord of Mulgrave?

Earl of Mulgrave. I only deſire, that the Priſoner at the Bar, if he hath a mind to it, may have his Council ſpeak to this Queſtion, before the Judges anſwer it, as was done in the other Caſe.

L. Mohun. I deſire, my Lords, my Council may have the Queſtion in writing.

L. H. Stew. Make my Lord a Copy of it. One Copy was delivered by the Clerk to the Priſoner, and by him to his Council, and another to the King's Council; and the Original was delivered to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordſhips pleaſure that my Council may be heard to this Queſtion?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powys. My Lords, the Queſtion that this noble Peer hath been pleaſed to propoſe, is this:

> A Conſcious of an Animoſity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him, Whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder.

My Lords, with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, I take it in this Caſe the Law is very clear, That as this Caſe is put, he that was in Company when the Murder was committed, under theſe Circumſtances, is not guilty of any Crime: But without queſtion he is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, Malice is ſo abſolutely neceſſary to Murder, either expreſs, or that which the Law calleth Malice implied, that there can be no Caſe where Murder can be committed without it; no Indictment can ever be good, unleſs Ex malitia ſua precogitata be alledged in it; becauſe this is abſolutely eſſential to Murder.

But, my Lord, if ſo be a Man that is preſent, not deſigning, or foreſeeing that unhappy Accident that doth fall out between his Friend with whom he is in company, and another Perſon that came accidentally to them, tho' Malice was between thoſe two, God forbid he ſhould be guilty, if he did neither foreſee it, nor any way acted in it.

He that is preſent muſt be involved in the Crime, either by ſome way aiding, abetting, or contributing to the death of the Man, or there muſt be ſome precedent Combination and Agreement to do that Act which at that time was done; and that muſt be plainly and clearly proved: For his acting, his ſtanding by innocently and harmleſly, is ſo great an Evidence of his not concurring, that it muſt be a mighty Proof of Malice that muſt convict that Man of a preceding Agreement to do the Fact; and if it doth not appear plainly and manifeſtly, that he agreed before hand, or acted then, and abetted and contributed to the thing, I ſay, unleſs this be clear and manifeſt, it is no Queſtion, but in Law, he is innocent of the Murder.

For in ſuch a Caſe it is plain he never had prepenſed Malice expreſs, nor is there any Evidence of that which the Law calleth Malice implied; which is when a Man killeth another without Provocation, that is, when he that doth the Act had no Provocation, or killeth an Officer in the Proſecution of his Office, That the Law calleth Malice implied. But then that is never but in the Perſon that did the Act, and not in the Perſons who were preſent at that time, unleſs before hand they had agreed to do that Act; and therefore they cannot be guilty of Murder.

And this, my Lords, is what I humbly offer to your Lordſhips Conſideration, in relation to the Caſe put by that Noble Lord.

Mr. Hawles. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to favour me with a Word on the ſame ſide with Sir Tho. Powys, and I ſhall be very ſhort in the matter.

The King's Council did complain that the laſt Caſe was not fully ſtated, and therefore they could not ſpeak to it; my Lords, with Submiſſion, this Caſe is fully ſtated, there was nothing in the other Caſe ſaid of Malice between him that was murdered, and him that killed him; but here it is ſaid, That the Perſon preſent was not conſcious of any Malice, nor had any manner of hand in the doing of it: And then with Submiſſion, my Lords, upon the Queſtion, Whether he was not guilty of Murder? If this was a Special Verdict, found by 12 Men, and referred to the Judges, I do not at all doubt but their Judgment would be, That he was not guilty. For tho' in a Special Verdict, where Malice is not found, the Priſoner would be acquitted; yet if it be expreſly found in the Verdict that he did not know of any Malice between them, then, with Submiſſion, there would be no Colour to find him guilty of any thing.

A Lord interrupted him, and ſaid, The Caſe was put of one conſcious of the Malice.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I beg your Pardon, I confeſs it is ſo, I did miſtake it; but with Submiſſion, that will not much alter the matter. If he was conſcious, that will not make him guilty; for that Conſciouſneſs of his is no matter of Crime, if he did not act any thing, or agree to do any thing before hand, but only was in Company with the Perſon that had Malice againſt another, that will not make him guilty of any Crime whatſoever.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I ſhall ſpeak but one word to it; I obſerve the great ſtreſs of the Caſe lieth upon the Word being conſcious of the Malice between B and C. Now as to that with Submiſſion, I conceive, and am of Opinion, that as this Caſe is, A is not guilty of Murder; and for Authority, I ſhall rely upon the Caſes in Stampford's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 40. And my Lord Coke's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51: The Caſe is this, If a Man happen to be in Company where Murder is committed, or Felony, and he cometh not there on purpoſe, or by confederacy to do it, In that Caſe, tho' Murder be committed, and he doth not endeavour to part them, this is no Murder in him, for he is puniſhable by Fine and Impriſonment, if not an Infant; but if he was an Infant, he is not puniſhable at all, for he is not Conuſant of the Law in ſuch a Caſe. But in this Caſe, except Malice prepenſed, expreſs, or implied, be proved, without doing any thing, or abetting, he is not guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Council, have you any thing to ſay to this Queſtion?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, here is a Caſe put, which I hear from the Council on the other ſide, is certainly enough ſtated. My Lords, if this be ſtated to us, as that which is agreed to be the Fact of the preſent Caſe, we are ready to ſpeak to it; but if this be not taken by your Lordſhips, to be my Lord Mohun's Caſe, and as ſuch ſtated to us, then we muſt humbly beg to be excuſed. I know your Lordſhips will be tender in this matter, and as well pleaſed that we hold to that which we conceive to be our Duty in reference to that Station in which we ſerve the King, as with any forwardneſs in us to anſwer Queſtions: And therefore we beg your Lordſhips Excuſe for ſaying nothing more to it.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I did not propoſe it as a Caſe ſtated and agreed by your Lordſhips, it is only a Caſe particularly ſtated for my own Satisfaction.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. If your Grace pleaſe, let the King's Council know, that they are not to ask you the Queſtion, Whether the Lords are agreed what the Caſe is? They are to anſwer ſuch Queſtions as are propoſed, and not to ask any ſuch Queſtion.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with that noble Lord's Pardon I did not ask any Queſtion; all that I ſaid was, That when a Caſe is agreed to, and ſtated by your Lordſhips to be the preſent Caſe, we would be ready to ſpeak to it, and till we receive that Intimation from your Grace, we ſhall think our ſelves excuſed from giving any Anſwer to other Queſtions.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think we muſt go on, and if any Lord has any more Queſtions to propoſe, he may propoſe them.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham.

Earl of Nottingham. Your Lordſhips will not certainly require of the King's Council to anſwer any Queſtions that they think improper for them to ſpeak to, but when a Queſtion hath been propoſed by any noble Lord, to which the Council for the Priſoner hath been heard, and the King's Council think not fit to ſpeak to it, there is nothing more requiſite, but that in the preſence of the Priſoner (as the Law requireth it ſhould be) you do demand the Opinion of the Judges.

L. H. St. What ſay to it my Lord Chief-Juſtice?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will repeat the Queſtion.

> A conſcious of an Animoſity between B. and C. A. accompanieth B. where C. happeneth to come, and B. killeth him; Whether A. without any Malice to C. or any actual hand in his death, be guilty of Murder?

And my Lords, as this Caſe is ſtated I do conceive, that A is not guilty of the Murder, for it appeareth the meeting was caſual, and there was no Deſign in A. againſt C. and therefore though A. did know of the Malice between B. and C. yet it was not unlawful for A. to keep Company with B. but he might go with him any where, if it was not upon a Deſign againſt C.

Therefore I take it as this Caſe is put, that C. came accidentally into the Company where A. and B. were, and then without any Deſign in A. B. killeth C. This is not Murder, indeed no Offence in A.

L. C. J. Treby. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, as this Caſe is put, I think it is not an Offence of Murder or Manſlaughter in A. it dependeth upon the Words as the laſt Queſtion did. For the former Queſtion was put generally, Whether there might not be a Caſe found or framed, wherein one might be guilty of Murder, and the other of Manſlaughter. So here it dependeth upon the Word [Happeneth], which I take to ſignifie, (as my Lord doth) a caſual coming into, or being in the Company.

Now my Lords, when B. had communicated to A. this malicious purpoſe to kill C. it ſtood uncertain, whether he to whom B. had communicated it did conſent; if he had any way declared his Conſent, that he would go to ſuch a place, and ſtay there with B. for ſuch a Purpoſe, then it had been Murder in both; but if he meerly was ſilent, and only kept B. Company, perhaps with an intent to diſſwade him from it, or poſſibly without any Conſideration at all, and then the Perſon intended to be killed accidentally came by, and is killed by B. A. doing nothing towards it. In that Caſe, it is neither Murder nor Manſlaughter in A.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, as this Caſe is, it ſeemeth to be meer accidental the coming of C. into their Company, for it is ſaid, Happeneth to come; and ſo though A. did know that there was an Animoſity between B. and C. yet declaring no intent of going with B. to that Purpoſe, but coming with B. into a place where C. accidentally came or happened to be, between whom and B. there is a Quarrel, and C. is killed;

I do

I do not take it at all that A. is concerned, but meerly as any other Person that accidentally was there, and in that Case he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter, or any other Crime.

Earl of Devon. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

Earl of Devon. If the rest are of the same Opinion, you need not give them any further trouble I think.

Judges. We are of the same Opinion.

Earl of Scarborough. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Scarborough.

Earl of Scarborough. I humbly beg your Lordships Leave, that I may offer a Question to your Lordships, to be proposed to the Judges, and the Question is this:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design, where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, give your Paper to the Clerk. (Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, doth your Lordship desire that your Council may have a Copy of this Question, and be heard to it?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

Then a Copy was given to him for his Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third the Judges had.

Sir Tho. Powys. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a few Words, and I shall trouble your Lordships very little, because I have said that already to your Lordships which will be an Answer to a good part of this Case? The Case is this:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some Days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design, where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. Whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lord, with humble Submission we do take it, that the Law in this Case is likewise very clear, that A. is not guilty of Murder: For as this Case is put, there doth not appear (nay, the contrary doth appear) that he had any manner of Malice to this Man that was killed, nor any Hand in the killing of him: And as I said before to your Lordships, (and I hope the Judges will verifie us in that, and your Lordships will be of the same Opinion) there can be no Case wherein a Man shall be guilty of Murder, but where there is Malice against the Person so murdered, or some way abetting and assisting in the killing of him, or what the Law calleth Implyed Malice.

But in this Case that is now put, there is neither express Malice, but the contrary appearing, nor any implyed Malice, which is by Construction of Law; the Person that was by, and heard B. threaten C. before, yet doth no way aid or assist to the killing of him; and therefore I think, with Submission, the Law, and all our Law-Books, and Reason it self, are clear for the acquitting of A. in this Case.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Resolutions that have been given in the Cases before, will warrant us in our Opinions in this, that A. is not guilty of Murder in this Case: For I think it was said by the Judges, That notwithstanding a Man knew another had a Design upon a third Person, yet it was lawful to keep Company with him, if he did not joyn with him in the Design. Now here it doth appear, that A. keepeth B. Company, but not upon that Design, for he had no Malice to C. nor had any Hand in his Death, and C. cometh in by accident into the Company or Place where they are: With Submission, my Lords, A. is totally not guilty, for there was no Malice in him; and though he was there, he was there upon his lawful Occasions; and if they two fight, the best course he can take is to stand still, and do nothing; and therefore he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but this Word to say, His being there was lawful, C. cometh there but by accident, and when they two do fight, his not parting of them doth not make him guilty of the others Death; here is no Malice, therefore he is not guilty of Murder, and he hath done nothing towards the Fact, therefore he is not guilty of Manslaughter.

L. H. Stew. Will you say any thing to this Question, you that are of the King's Council?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to speak to the present Case, when we receive Intimation from your Lordships that what is put is the present Case.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. My Lords, if they put a Case of Fact to be argued as a Case of Law, and from time to time alledge Facts which are not in the Case before us, we cannot speak to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to argue the Case of the Prisoner at the Bar when it is stated; but till then, we humbly beg your Pardon: We think we are not bound to speak to other Cases.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief Justice, What say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will put the Question:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some Days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. Whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that A. in this Case will not be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter:

ſlaughter. For it doth not appear by the ſtating of the Caſe, that A. did conſent to the Deſign, or in any wiſe contribute to the Fact.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Juſtice Treby.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I take this Queſtion to be the ſame in Subſtance as to the Point in Law with the laſt; and am of Opinion that A. is not guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter.

Mr. J. Nevill. I am of the ſame Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If all the reſt of you are of the ſame Opinion, you may ſpare your ſelves the trouble of delivering it particularly.

Judges. We are all of the ſame Opinion.

[Then there was a little pauſe; and afterwards the Earl of Kingſton ſtood up.

Earl of Kingſton. My Lords, I deſire for my own private Satisfaction to know;

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of that Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, I muſt crave your Excuſe, there is another Queſtion to precede this.

Earl of Devon. My Lords, I had a Queſtion to ask; but it being much to the ſame Purpoſe with the two laſt, I think it better to wave it, for there hath been given an Anſwer to it already.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord of Kingſton, will you be pleaſed to deliver up your Paper to the Table? [Which was done.]

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you deſire your Council may have a Copy of this Queſtion?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I deſire your Grace will hear the Queſtion. Pray let it be read, that we may know what it is.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl. of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I think, my Lords, in a Caſe of this Nature we cannot be too exact: I humbly conceive that is not a proper Queſtion to be put, therefore I move that we may adjourn to conſider of it, whether it ſhall be put or not, if that Lord do inſiſt upon it.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingſton, Doth your Lordſhip inſiſt of this Queſtion being put?

Earl of Kingſton. Yes, my Lords, I do, and I muſt inſiſt upon it; for I think I cannot give my private Opinion in this Caſe without Satisfaction in it.

Lords. Then Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned into the Houſe of Lords.

Then the Lords went back to their own Houſe in the ſame Order, and debated this Matter amongſt themſelves for about an Hour.

Between ſix and ſeven in the Evening the Lords returned into the Court in the ſame Order, and being ſeated on their Benches, and his Grace in the Chair before the Throne, they proceeded thus:

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Juſtice, and you the Judges——

L. Cornwallis. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lord, Before your Grace giveth any Directions, I think you ſhould call the Priſoner.

L. H. Stew. Is not the Priſoner at the Bar?

L. Cornwallis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call for the Priſoner.

Then Proclamation was made for the Governour of the Tower to bring forth the Priſoner, and he was brought as before.

L. H. Stew. I am to let you that are of Council for the King, and the Priſoner know, That if any Queſtion be put by any of my Lords, which any of you ſhall not think fit to give an Anſwer to, my Lords will take it for granted either on the one part or on the other, that the Reaſon is, becauſe it is not neceſſary to give any Anſwer; and then they will proceed to have the Anſwer of you, my Lords the Judges. And now for my ſelf, I muſt deſire your Lordſhips will give me leave to come down again to the Wool-Pack.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and ſeated himſelf on the Wool-Pack.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingſton, Will you pleaſe to propoſe your Queſtion?

Earl of Kingſton. My Lord, my Queſtion is this, which I deſire the Judges Opinion in for my own Satisfaction:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you deſire your Council may have a Copy of that Queſtion?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. Stew. Read it aloud, and deliver a Copy to my Lord.

The Queſtion was read by the Clerk of the Crown, and one Copy of it delivered to the Priſoner's Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure, That my Council be heard to this Caſe?

Lords.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Sir Tho. Powys. The Caſe that is put my Lords is this:

> Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lye in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

My Lords, I ſhall not inſiſt upon the ſame Privilege that the King's Council did even now do, to decline ſpeaking to any Caſe that your Lordſhips ſhall put. But I hope your Lordſhips will permit me to ſay, That I do not admit this to be the Caſe of my Lord Mohun, and I hope that my ſpeaking to it ſhall not be taken as any Admiſſion that this is his Caſe. But as this Caſe is put with that allowance, that I ſpeak to it not as his Caſe, I do take it, that this Perſon thus preſent at the killing of the third Man is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, there are but two Circumſtances in the Caſe that can draw him into any danger: The Firſt is, That he knew another Perſon had a Deſign to make an Aſſault upon a third Man. And,

The Second is, That he who had the Knowledge of this Deſign, was alſo preſent when upon that Aſſault that third Perſon happened to be killed.

But my Lords, I do take it, that in this Caſe neither of theſe Ingredients will make this Man guilty of Murder.

As to the Firſt, The knowing that a Man has a Deſign to make an Aſſault upon a third Perſon, that taken by it ſelf is no Crime. It frequently happeneth, that a Man heareth what others threaten, that they will aſſault and beat ſuch an one, I may know that another doth ſo deſign, and that he will watch his Opportunity for the doing of it, and yet my meer Knowledge, my meer knowing of it, doth not make me guilty of any Crime, tho' I do not endeavour to prevent it.

I confeſs, it doth become a good Man upon ſuch Knowledge to do all that he can to prevent ſuch beginning of Miſchief, but if he doth not prevent it, that is no Crime.

The Second Matter is, That tho' he did know of this Deſign, he was alſo ſo unfortunate as not to prevent it; nay more, he was preſent when the Aſſault was made, and that Aſſault is attended with the Death of the Party aſſaulted, but he never acted in it, never abetted it. Take all this together, and yet he is not guilty of Murder, nay, perhaps not of any Crime, at moſt only of a Miſdemeanour.

For it is no more than this: I knew another Perſon did intend to aſſault a third Man, I was preſent when he did aſſault him, but did not prevent it either before he made it, tho' I knew he deſigned it, nor whilſt he was making the Aſſault upon which the Man is killed. That is all that this thing doth amount to, and no Man can ſay with humble Submiſſion, That this can involve me in the Crime of Murder.

It is true, if I command A. to beat C. and he according to my Command doth fall upon him, and ſo beat him, that he dieth; this maketh me guilty of his Death, becauſe what is done by that Command of mine is my doing; therefore tho' I only commanded him to beat him, yet he dying upon that beating, which was made purſuant to my Command, I that gave the Command muſt anſwer for it, and am guilty of all that followeth thereupon.

But if I only know, that another Perſon deſigneth to do ſuch a thing, and am neither commanding, aiding nor aſſiſting in the doing of it, but only preſent at the time, but did not interpoſe to prevent it; that doth not make me ſuch an Agent in this matter, as that I ſhould be any ways guilty of his Death if it doth enſue. I take it this Caſe cometh to no more than this, there is no Malice precedent, no ſort of abetting, aiding or aſſiſting, but a bare declining to prevent the Aſſault, and that will not amount to any thing that is Capital; if it be any Offence, it can only be conſtrued as a Miſdemeanour, but neither Murder, nor Manſlaughter.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordſhips pleaſe to ſpare me one word on the ſame ſide: It is no manner of Crime for a Man to know, that another doth deſign to lie in wait to know, that another doth deſign to lie in wait to murder a third Perſon, much leſs to aſſault him.

There is but one Caſe that I know of in Law, where the Knowledge of an ill Deſign without diſcovery and endeavour to prevent it, is an Offence, and that is in the Caſe of High-Treaſon; and yet even there the bare Knowledge doth not make a Man guilty of Treaſon: And it was a hard Caſe if it ſhould, for it is not in the Power of any innocent Man to ſay, that he ſhall not know of an ill Deſign, either of Murder, or High-Treaſon.

It is true, in the Caſe of Treaſon, if I conceal it, it is a Crime, but it is not Treaſon, but only miſpriſion of Treaſon; which is forfeiture of Lands, and perpetual Confinement in Priſon during my Life: But it doth not extend to any other matter; for tho' I know, and do conceal it, that is no manner of Crime at all, tho that is further than this Caſe putteth it; for it only goeth to the knowing, and not to the concealing.

And my Lords, with Submiſſion, this would be likewiſe a hard Caſe if the Law was otherwiſe; For ſometimes a Man may apprehend he knoweth of a Deſign, when there is no ſuch thing deſigned. Your Lordſhips know where a certain Gentleman ſaid he would kill any Man that did oppoſe him, when he neither deſigned it, nor executed any ſuch purpoſe: And in ſuch a Caſe, tho' it had been well done of the Perſon that heard of the Deſign, to have gone and informed the third Perſon (and if he had, I believe your Lordſhips would have had no occaſion of a Tryal at this time, for it might have been determined another way) yet his not doing it is not a Crime.

Then further my Lords, a Perſon's being preſent at ſuch a time is his misfortune, but not at all his fault; he can no more help the Action, than he could the ill Deſign, or his own Knowledge of that Deſign. It is a complicated misfortune, both to know it, and be preſent at the Execution of it; but without having any hand in it, it can be no Offence: For indeed, it is as to him no more than a Man's being preſent that did not know of ſuch a Deſign. And if this was a Special Verdict, upon an Indictment for Murder, I doubt not but my Lords the Judges would give their Judgment, that the Defendant was not guilty.

give

Mr. Price. I have only this word to add, my Lords; I do take it, That the bare privity of this design, with the bare personal Presence of him that was so privy when this Act is committed by another Man, will not amount to make him principal; and so he will not be guilty of Murder: For we find, that to make a Man principal in Murder, there must be aiding and abetting, and only being present will not do it. Now the aiding and abetting must be, either by commanding or assisting, or putting the Person assaulted in Terror and Fear, or he must be there ready, and designing to assist in case of Opposition. These are Facts that the Law requireth to the making a Man principal in Murder; and bare privity, with a mind to Assault, and bare Presence, when upon the Assault the Man is killed, will not amount to make a Man Principal, and consequently guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorny, Do you think fit to say any thing to what the Council for the Prisoner have alledged?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor no other of the King's Council?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Are ye all of that mind?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I am of that mind, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. And so am I.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lord Chief-Justice, what say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question:

> Whether a person knowing of the design of another to lye in wait to assault a third Man who happeneth to be killed (when the person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime, with the party who had the Design and killed him, tho' he had no actual hand in his Death?

My Lords, I am of Opinion this is no Murder nor Manslaughter, he that knew of the Design of assaulting, only happened to be present when the Assault was made, and the Party killed; but if he did not contribute to his Death, he is not guilty of Murder. This Question is much to the same effect with the Question that was put before: But if the Person that knew of this Design did advise it, or agree to it, or lay in wait for it, or resolv'd to meet the third Person that was killed, with him that killed him, it would be Murder: But as this Case is put, it is neither Murder nor Manslaughter.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion as this Case is put. The Person to whom this matter of the Design to lye in wait to assault another is communicated, is only passive; he only receiveth the notice of it, and doth nothing towards the Fact. But if by going to the place, directing, perswading, promising Assistance, or encouraging, he had discovered his Consent, or had layen in wait himself, then he had been guilty: But if he did nothing, but only receive this notice, and then the Person assaulted happened to come by, and is killed in his Presence, this is but an Accident, and doth not involve him in the Murder. And I think in Effect, it is the same with the second Question that was proposed. There it was put, of one that had an Animosity against another, here it is put, of one that lay in wait to assault him; There it was put, of accompanying him to the place where the Party was killed; here it is, of his being killed in his Presence: So that the Resolution must be the same in this Case that was given in that.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I shall not spend any of your Lordships time. I am of the same Opinion with my Lords that spoke before, and for the Reasons that they have given.

L. H. Stew. If they are all of the same Opinion, I suppose your Lordships will not require their particular delivering it.

Lords. No, no.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. I am now to know of your Lordships, whether there be any of you that have any more Questions to ask?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham?

Earl of Nottingham. The Question that I have to propose to your Lordship is the same that hath been already offered to you, but with some little Variation; for I do find, my Lords, the Judges do interpret this Persons being killed in the Presence of another, to be upon an accidental meeting. I would propose to your Lordships, that the Judges may answer what the Law would be, when a Person, knowing of the Design of another to lye in wait to assault a third Man, accompanieth him at that time that that Design is to be executed, Whether it be the same Crime in the one as the other?

L. H. Stew. If your Lordship have your Question in Writing, pray deliver it in.

Earl of Nottingham. I will immediately, my Lord.

(Then he did put it in Writing.)

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship please that it may be handed to the Table.

(Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl of Crown. Readeth.

> Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen that the third Person be killed at that time in the presence of him who knew of that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had that Design and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire a Copy of this?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Carry my Lord one.

(Then Copies were deliverd as before.)

L. H. Stew. Well, Sir, What say you to that Question?

Sir Tho. Powys. The Case that is now propounded is this:

Whether

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to Aſſault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Deſign, if it ſhall happen that the third Perſon be killed at that time in the preſence of him who knew of that Deſign, and accompanied the other in it, be Guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I ſhall not, (though I am of Council for this Noble Lord) decline or refuſe Speaking to this Queſtion; ſtill, my Lords, with that ſaving which I know your Lordſhips will allow me, that I am very far from admitting that this which goeth much further than the laſt Caſe, is the Caſe of my Lord Mohun. Whether your Lordſhips will permit the King's Council who have declined Speaking to any of the Caſes hitherto, as not being, as they pretend, my Lord's Caſe; now to ſpeak to this which we do much leſs admit to be ſo, than they did the others, will be in your Lordſhips Pleaſure to determine, but I ſhall not decline to ſpeak to it with that Saving.

And truly, my Lords, with humble Submiſſion, I do take it, that as this Caſe is put, the Party who accompanied the other in ſuch manner as in this Caſe it is ſtated, is not Guilty of Murder. I know it was intended by that Noble Lord who propoſed the Queſtion, that it ſhould be admitted that beyond all doubt the Fact was ſo as here it is ſtated; and then the Queſtion is, What the Law will be where the Fact is thus admitted and agreed to on all ſides: And if there was ſuch a Caſe, (for my Lords I ſpeak to this as a Caſe at large) if there was ſuch a Caſe where the Fact is beyond all Queſtion made out to be ſo as it is here Stated; yet I take it that in a Caſe of Life, which is the Caſe now before your Lordſhips, the Party will not be Guilty of Murder.

My Lords, here is a further Circumſtance added in this Caſe than what hath as yet been inſerted into any of the other Caſes, that is, That the Party knoweth of the deſign of him that he accompanieth to Aſſault a third Man, and doth accompany him in this Deſign, and then is preſent when the Deſign is executed; yet all theſe together, will not, as I humbly conceive, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips Judgment, make this to be Murder, becauſe it doth not appear in this Caſe that he did accompany him with an Intention to execute this matter, or to aid and aſſiſt him in the doing of it: There is no ſuch Circumſtance in the Caſe, and 'tis that which muſt be the thing that will draw him in to be guilty of Murder.

For if two Men (to put a Caſe which I hope I may do with your Lordſhips Pardon to explain my ſelf) ſhould be Travelling upon the way, and one of the Perſons ſhould acquaint the other, that at ſuch an Inn, there is a Servant that he is reſolved to Beat, and this Perſon that has this matter imparted to him doth accompany the other in the Journey, (which I take it anſwereth the knowing the Deſign and accompanying him in the Deſign) and when they come to the Inn the thing is executed in the preſence of the Party that knew of ſuch a Deſign, and it doth fall out that Death doth enſue upon it, unleſs he that did accompany him did ſome way or other act, contribute, or aſſiſt in the doing of it, it doth ſtill remain a thing whereof he had only Privity and Knowledge, which he had done well, (eſpecially in regard of the Conſequence of it) to have prevented. And he is highly blameable, that he would accompany a Man who had ſuch a Deſign to do an unlawful Act, and did not prevent him from executing of it.

All this is blameable in him, but it will not, as I conceive, be Murder in him; for I muſt inſiſt upon that in point of Law, that to make any thing Murder, there muſt be prepenſed Malice in the Perſon that is to be found Guilty of it, or ſome precedent Agreement to do it, or ſome Act of Aiding or Aſſiſting of the Perſon who doth it; but as this Caſe is, here is nothing of Malice doth appear, or that the Perſon who accompanied the other in his Deſign had any ſort of Malice againſt the Perſon Aſſaulted And it doth not appear, that he did any way aſſiſt in the doing of it. He was preſent at the time when the other Executed the Deſign he had imparted to him, but he never joyned in it, nor had any Malice precedent, nor did aſſiſt or do any Act at that time; and therefore I take it in this Caſe (which, as I ſaid,) I am very far from admitting to be my Lord Mohun's Caſe, that the Party who accompanied the other is not Guilty.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, Though who are of Council for this Noble Lord, the Priſoner, do not think this Caſe that is put to be his Caſe, for with Submiſſion, if the Indictment be looked upon, your Lordſhip will find ——

L. H. Stew. Sir I muſt ſtop you there, you you are not to tell my Lords what your Opinion is as to the Fact, for of that my Lords are the Judges, you are to take the Caſe fairly, as a Caſe put, and you are to inform my Lords what the Law, in your Opinion, would be upon ſuch Caſe. It is not before you, but before my Lords only, to conſider whether this be applicable to my Lord Mohun's Caſe or not.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I ſhall obſerve your Directions in that Matter, and with humble Submiſſion this is not Murder in him who accompanieth the other, as this Caſe is put; for in every Caſe of Murder the Indictment muſt be either that he actually killed him, or aided and aſſiſted him that did kill him. But, with Submiſſion, there is neither of theſe in this Caſe.

He did know of the Deſign, there is no Crime: he did accompany him in it, that is, he bore him Company at that time, he went with him to the place where he Executed his Deſign but he did nothing when he came there to further, promote, or encourage the Execution of it; and therefore it can never make him Principal, nor Acceſſory to the Murder.

Mr. Price. I ſhall only ſay this, my Words, that I take it, that the bare going with him in this Deſign without doing any Act, doth not involve him in the Confederacy, as Aiding and Abetting. Something muſt be done or ſaid, either he muſt aſſiſt or adviſe, or otherwiſe he cannot be Principal, and conſequently cannot be guilty of this Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any thing to ſay to this?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not deſire to be heard to this Caſe neither.

L. H. Steward. I do not hear you, Sir, what you ſay?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not deſire to ſpeak to it.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lord Chief Juſtice.

L. C. J. Holt. This is the Queſtion:

Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to Aſſault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Deſign, if it ſhall happen, that the Third Perſon be Killed at that time in the Preſence of him who knew that Deſign, and accompanied the other in it, be Guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had that Deſign, and Killed him though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, as for this laſt, I deſire to make ſome Obſervations upon the Words, Had no actual Hand. By theſe Words, I ſuppoſe, is meant he did not draw his Sword, or lay any Hand upon the Perſon ſlain, or give any actual Aſſiſtance to the other Perſon at that time when the Third Perſon is ſlain, but was only in Company, and a Looker on.

E. of Nottingham. My meaning in thoſe Words is, That with his Hand he gave no Stroke.

L. C. J. Holt. That my Lords, I take to be the meaning, he did not give an actual Stroke, nor held the Perſon whilſt the other Killed him, nor uſed any Violence.

Now, I am of Opinion, my Lords, that this is Murder in the Perſon that did accompany the other in the Deſign. For he being acquainted with the Deſign, and knowing of the Intention of the Party to Commit Murder, or do an unlawful Act, upon which Death might enſue, accompanying him in that Deſign, he ſhews an Approbation of it, and gives him greater Courage to put it in Execution. Which is an Aiding, Abetting, Aſſiſting and Comforting, which are the Words uſed in ſuch Indictments, and ſo my Humble Opinion is, it is Murder in that Perſon that accompanied the other, as well as in him that did the Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, as this Caſe is, I think the accompanying of him in that Deſign (which are the effectual Words upon which the Queſtion turneth) is Murder.

Here is firſt of all the Party that deſigneth the Aſſault, and he doth, purſuant to that Deſign, make this Aſſault, and thereupon doth Kill the Third Man, this undoubtedly is Murder in him, for here was Malice prepenſed, and intent of Bodily Hurt to the Party, and in purſuance of this Intent, Death enſueth, this is unqueſtionably Murder in him.

Then the Queſtion is, What Crime it is in him to whom this is made known, and who accompanied the other in that Deſign, knowing of it. I take this to be a Conſent to the Deſign, and to the Execution of it. It is more than knowing and not revealing of it, though that was his Duty to have done, (and ſo the Council for the noble Lord did admit, that it was a Miſdemeanor in him not to hinder ſuch a breach of the Peace.)

But here I ſay is more than that: He goeth with him to the place, and accompanieth him in order to the executing the Deſign, and this is an Aiding and Abetting of it. If a Man ſay to another, I intend to aſſault and beat ſuch a one, come along with me, ſtand by me, and ſee it done; and the other conſenteth, and accordingly goeth along with him, and accompanieth him whilſt he beats and kills the Man. This is an Approving, Encouraging, and Emboldening of him in his miſchievous Purpoſe, and ſhews ſuch concurring Malice in that other Perſon, as renders him guilty of the ſame Crime with him that with his Hand and Weapon beat and killed the Man.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Caſe is, and as I take the Law to be, this is murder. It is a Caſe of one's lying in wait, and another Perſon doth accompany him in the Deſign, he that did deſign the lying in wait having told it to him, and then he is preſent at the Execution. I take it as Law, if the Party is killed, he that is preſent, and cometh with the other upon that Deſign, ſhall be taken to come to aſſiſt or abet the other, or defend him if any thing of oppoſition ſhould happen, and that I take to be Murder.

L. H. S. Are you all of the ſame Opinion?

Judges. We are all of that Opinion, it is Murder in both in that Caſe.

E. of Devon. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I deſire they may all give their Reaſons, as well as their Opinions, as this Caſe is.

Mr. J. Gregory: My Lords, I am humbly of the ſame Opinion with my Lords Chief Juſtices that ſpoke before me, that this is Murder, and my Reaſon is this: Firſt, He knew of the Deſign, which was an unlawful Deſign; then he accompanied him as this Caſe is put, not only to the Place, but in the Deſign, which differs the Caſe from his being preſent by Accident; for by his going along with him he doth encourage him to do that, which perhaps ſingly the other would not venture upon, and going and being preſent when the Deſign is executed, upon which the Man is ſlain; I take it he is as much guilty as the Perſon that ſtrook the Stroke in point of Law.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I am humbly of the ſame Opinion, I take it to be murder in him that knew the Deſign, and did accompany the other in it, though he did nothing at all towards the killing of the Man.

For, my Lords, it is the Intention of the Party that diverſifieth the Act. If he came there with an ill Intention, and to aſſiſt him if need did require, as it is plain he did if he did accompany him in the Deſign, which is a ſtrong Evidence of the Intention: And my Lords, Nature hath allowed no Man a Caſement into anothers Heart, and therefore we can judge of no Man's Intention, but by Circumſtances of the Fact appearing without; and then I ſay, if the Fact be ſo apparently from the Circumſtances of it, that he knew of the Deſign, and accompanied him in it, it is a ſtrong Evidence that he came to aſſiſt him; and though he doth nothing actually in the Matter, yet being preſent to aſſiſt him if Occaſion did require, it is plain he did aid and abet him in the Action, and ſo it is as much murder murder in him, as in the other that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am humbly of the ſame Opinion; the thing that differeth this from the former Caſe is, That this Perſon was in the Deſign with the other, for that, my Lords, I take to be accompanying him in the Deſign in order to the Execution of it, for bare Privity and Knowledge of the Deſign would not do it; but if he be with him at the time, and accompany in order to the Execution, that maketh him as much Criminal, as he that did actually occaſion the Death of the Perſon, for he was preſent in the Company, and ready to aſſiſt him in the Evil Deſign, which I conceive is as much murder as the other.

Mr. B. Powel. My Lords, I am of Opinion, as this Caſe is now put, That this is murder in both, and my Reaſon is this: Where one Perſon is privy to a Deſign of Felony, or committing ſome Perſonal Violence as this Caſe is, and is not only privy to it, but goeth along with him, and accompanieth him in putting this Deſign in Execution, though he may not think it will extend ſo far as Death, but doth only intend Beating, and hath no Perſonal Hand, or doth otherwiſe contribute; but by his being with the other Perſon when he executeth his Deſign of Aſſaulting, and the Party beaten dieth, they are both guilty of murder.

L. Mohun. My Lords, Will your Lordſhips give leave, that my Council may anſwer ſome things that the Judges have ſaid?

L. H. Stew. No my Lord, you muſt not Reply after the Judges have given their Opinions. Have any of your Lordſhips any more Queſtions to propoſe?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I have one.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I am very ſorry to have occaſion to ask any Queſtions in this Caſe, but I humbly deſire a Queſtion may be anſwered by the Judges, which is this:

> If a Perſon be by, named William, when Thomas ſaid, He would ſtab John, upon which William ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is preſent at the ſame Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

L. H. Stew. Pray deliver in your Paper, my Lord.

It was deliver'd in, and read by the Clerk of the Crown, and Copies given of it as before.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to this Queſtion, Gentlemen?

Sir T. Powys. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, this Queſtion runneth thus:

> If a Perſon be by, named William, when Thomas ſaid he would ſtab John; upon which William ſaid, he would ſtand by his Friend; and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is preſent at the Murder; Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I do not queſtion but many Caſes may be put which will be plainly Murder, and if this Caſe ſhould be attended with Fact equal to the ſtate of this Caſe, I believe it will amount to Murder. But upon this difference the Reſolution of it will depend, and every Caſe muſt ſtand upon its own Circumſtances.

If a Perſon do generally ſay, I am fully reſolved, I will ſtab ſuch a Man, and ſay ſo without condition or limitation, that he will do it; and another doth declare his Intention to aſſiſt and aid him, by ſaying, I will ſtand by you in it, and afterwards the thing is executed in his Preſence, who ſo concurred; I do take it, that that is an Evidence that he is equally guilty with the other.

But on the other hand, if a Man ſay, I will ſtab ſuch a one if he oppoſe me in ſuch a Deſign, and ſo maketh his Reſolution conditional, and the Perſon that is preſent doth ſay, I will ſtand by you in it, that is in your doing it, if you are oppoſed in ſuch a particular matter; My Lords, with ſubmiſſion, if he is not oppoſed in that particular Thing or Deſign upon which he did ſay he would ſtab him, but if he doth afterwards, upon ſome other occaſion different from the former, and not relating to what he was talking of before; or upon ſome other Provocation, ſtab him, and the other Perſon happeneth only to be preſent, I take it, that the Words which he ſpoke with a limitation to a particular matter, will not make him liable to the Guilt of the Murder that is committed upon quite another account.

The Words, Standing by him, are capable of two Senſes; but I would not, in ſo ſerious a matter as this, offer to put a Jocular Senſe upon them, as if it was meant he would ſtand by and not meddle; but I take it, that ſuch a Caſe as this will turn upon the manner of the Man's engaging himſelf; if he engaged to ſtand by him in a particular matter, and the other doth ſtab the threatned Perſon afterwards, not upon that particular occaſion, but upon another account, and he happeneth only to be by, theſe words will not draw him in, though they ſhould be well proved to be ſpoken, ſo as to involve him in the guilt of that Murder.

For the Law is favourable to a Man in the Caſe of Life, and will judge according to the Intention of the Party; and he having not abetted or contributed to the Fact, his Words ſhall not be carried to his Prejudice, further than his Intention, or farther than the concomitant Circumſtances of the Matter will make them plainly import.

This Caſe is put generally, and without reſtraint; and there is no queſtion but many Caſes may be put that will undoubtedly be Murder; but every Caſe muſt, as I ſaid, ſtand and fall by its own Circumſtances.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Caſe as it is put ſingle, and upon theſe Circumſtances, would be Murder; and my reaſon is this, The Perſon that ſaith he will ſtand by a Man, who ſaith he will kill or ſtab another, is as much guilty as that Man himſelf, and will be thought as malicious; but if it ſhould happen that between the Words pronounced, and the Murder committed, that the Perſon that ſaith he will ſtand by his Friend, cometh to have a friendſhip and kindneſs for the Party that is threatned to be killed, and upon meeting him careſſes him extreamly, and there being no Malice continuing (as there muſt be to the time of the ſtroke given, to make Murder) but he happeneth to be killed by that other, ſuddenly in his preſence, thoſe words will not make him guilty of Murder; but as the Caſe is put, I think it is Murder.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I ſhall not take upon me to trouble your Lordſhips with making a Caſe, but as this Caſe is put without any Condition, or other Circumſtance annexed to it, I think it will be Murder.

L. H. Stew. There will be no need to ask the King's Council upon this Queſtion whether they will ſpeak to it, becauſe the Council for the Priſoner agree it to be Murder; Therefore if your Lordſhips pleaſe, we may now proceed to ask the Judges Opinions; And firſt, What ſay you, my Lord Chief Juſtice?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lords, the Queſtion is this.

> If a Perſon be by, named William, when Thomas ſaid he would ſtab John, upon which William ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually Murder John, and William is preſent at the ſame Murder, Whether the Law will make William Guilty with Thomas; or what Crime William is Guilty of?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is a great evidence of Murder in William, that was thus actually by. I cannot ſay it is Murder, as the Caſe is put; but upon ſuch an Evidence, Fact is to be left to the Conſcience of a Jury in the Caſe of a Commoner, or the Conſcience of the Peers in the Caſe of a Peer.

For when William ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend, who ſaid he would Stab John, That is plainly a Conſent, or at leaſt ſuch an Expreſſion, from which, a Conſent to the Stabbing of him may be inferred.

Then afterwards it ſeemeth Thomas actually murdereth John, and William was preſent. Now if William was deſignedly preſent with the other that committed the Murder, then it is plain it will be Murder in William, but if there be no Evidence to prove upon what account he was preſent, it may be preſumed he was preſent in purſuance of his former Agreement, ſo that it may be Murder, or not Murder, as Circumſtances may happen upon the Evidence; if he was preſent in purſuance of his Promiſe, then no doubt it is Murder; But if he did not meet in purſuance of that Agreement, it may not be Murder. But this is all Matter of Evidence, and that reſts upon the Conſciences of thoſe that are to Try the Priſoner.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is Evidence, and great Evidence of Murder, the Fact conſiſteth of Two Parts.

Firſt, Here was a deliberate Expreſſion of his Intention, that he would ſtand by his Friend Thomas, when his Friend Thomas had ſaid before he would Stab John, and this I take properly to be Interpreted, and underſtood as a Promiſe of Abetting him in the Murder he would commit; for, I preſume, ſtanding by him in this Caſe to be meant in a grave Senſe, ſignifying that he would befriend, and if there ſhould be occaſion, defend and ſupport Thomas in what he reſolv'd to do.

Secondly, He was preſent at the Stabbing, which was before Deſigned and Spoken of: Now I think, his being preſent when that Reſolution of his Friend was executed, coupled with his preceeding Declaration of his Intention, is a ſtrong Evidence of Murder.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, the Queſtion I take to be, Whether the Law of England ſaith William is Guilty of this Murder? Truly, my Lords, I muſt ſay as my Lords have ſaid before, that as this Caſe is, This is a very ſtrong Evidence of Murder: For when he doth ſay, That he will Murder ſuch a Man, and the other ſaith, he will ſtand by him, in the common acceptation of thoſe Words, it is taken, that he doth then agree with him in that Deſign, which he declareth to be to Stab John.

But then it ſeemeth to me truly, that this Caſe is not put full, how long it was afterwards that the Fact was done, and what Circumſtances attended it; for if any Circumſtance happened afterwards that did amount to a Countermand of this Promiſe, or any thing thing interpoſed to interrupt it, that this Agreement was not performed, perhaps the Caſe might not be Murder, but ſtill it is Evidence, ſo far as your Lordſhips may judge upon the Circumſtances that attend it, whether it be Murder or no. But to declare a further Opinion, as this Caſe is put, truly I cannot.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I do upon this Caſe humbly conceive, there is a little difference from the former, only there it is put poſitively but here as Evidence. Now, my Lords, I do humbly conceive that in common Diſcourſe, I will ſtand by my Friend, is, I will aſſiſt my Friend. If my Friend ſhould ſay, I will Kill ſuch a Man, or I will do any other Act, and I ſay I will ſtand by him, I think the import of the Words is, I will aſſiſt him in it.

My Lords, As to the latter part, as this Caſe is put, for I can go no further, it doth not appear, whether when the Man was killed, he came by accident, or in purſuance of his Agreement, knowing of the Deſign. Now that is but matter of Evidence, if he came by Accident it will not be Murder, but if he came with Deſign, no doubt it is Murder in one as well as in the other.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. If any of my Lords deſire that the reſt of the Judges ſhould give their Opinion, it is fit they ſhould be heard; but if no Lord doth deſire it, and they ſay they are of the ſame Opinion without any more to do, becauſe it may ſave a great deal of time; I deſire your Grace may only ask them, Whether they agree in their Opinions with thoſe that went before?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I humbly deſire the Judges may all ſpeak.

Lords. Go on then.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I humbly conceive this is a Queſtion of Fact, and not of Law, and it is a very ſtrong Evidence, if a Man hear another ſay he will Stab ſuch a Man, and he ſaith he will ſtand by his Friend, and accompanieth him him at the time when the Fact is done, it is a ſtrong Evidence, that he came with a murderous intent with his Friend; and doth as much manifeſt his Intention to commit Murder, as if he had actually given the Wound, and a great Evidence to involve him in the Crime, as much as the Perſon that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion with my Lords and my Brothers that have ſpoke before me; my Lords, I confeſs I do not think it cometh up ſo cloſe to the matter as the Queſtion that was put laſt before; for this, as my Brother Eyres ſaith, is rather a Queſtion of Fact and Evidence, than Law. But certainly a very ſtrong Evidence it is of the Intenrion of that Party that was preſent when the other ſaid he would Stab the third Perſon, and his going away preſently, and accompanying him when the Stab was given, and Murder done, I ſay his Preſence after this Determination is a very great Evidence, that it was done in purſuance of that Agreement: It is a matter of Fact which your Lordſhips will determine, according as the Circumſtances appear before you, which may vary the Reſolution one way or other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion as this Caſe is put, that it may be Murder or not Murder, according to the Concomitant Circumſtances. If a Man ſay, I will Stab ſuch a one, and another ſay he will ſtand by him, and afterwards when he is with his Friend, the Man is ſtabbed, if that is at ſome diſtance of time from the Words ſpeaking, and the meeting be accidental, or other Facts happen that may alter the Caſe, it may receive another Determination. But if after this is ſaid there be any immediate going to look after this Man, or they be near the way where this Man is to come, and then he is killed; this is a mighty ſtrong Evidence that ſomething was done in purſuance of this Reſolution, and that the one went along with the other to countenance him in the Action.

L. H. Stew. Have any of my Lords any other Queſtions to propoſe?

Lords. No.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords, If there had been any other Queſtions propoſed by any other Lords, I would have ſtaid till they had all been over; but I ſee their Lordſhips are at an end with their Queſtions: I have one which I think is nearer the Caſe than any has been yet, and of more Importance to the Matter in Hand, and more fit for the Council to inform you in, and for your Lordſhips to ask, and the Judges to anſwer. The Queſtion is this:

> If A. accompanieth B. in an unlawful Action, in which C. is not concerned, and C. happeneth to come in the way of B. after the firſt Action is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B. without the Aſſiſtance of A. Whether A. is guilty of that Man's Murder?

This Queſtion was handed to the Table, read by the Clerk, and Copies given as before.

L. H. Stew. What ſay you to it Gentlemen, who are of Council for the Priſoner?

Sir Tho. Powys. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I will not trouble your Lordſhips with the repeating of the Caſe again, becauſe my Copy is agreeable with what was read at the Table: Nor ſhall I trouble your Lordſhips with many Words upon this Caſe, becauſe I take it, the Law is very plain.

If two Perſons accompany each other to do an unlawful Act, and in the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth go beyond what was firſt deſigned, and a third Man is killed whilſt they are in Execution of that Act, though the one did the Fact, and the other did not immediately contribute thereto, yet he being joyned with him in the unlawful Action, upon which this doth enſue, he is anſwerable for all the ill Conſequences of it; the Law herein is clear according to the Caſe that was put at firſt of two Perſons going together to rob a Park and ſteal Deer.

But if that unlawful Action be executed, or the two Perſons who joyned in the Deſign have totally deſiſted from it, or are diſappointed in it, if afterwards when they are together upon ſome other Occaſion, it happeneth that one of them killeth another Man, but his Friend no way aided him or aſſiſted him in the doing of it, your Lordſhips and the Law will ſeparate theſe Perſons who were at firſt joyned together for another Purpoſe; and will diſtinguiſh between them in this new Matter that is ſubſequent to the former Agreement, though they were in Company together.

Becauſe in the firſt Caſe, he that joyned in an ill Action muſt look to himſelf, and be anſwerable for all that followeth thereon: In the ſecond Caſe, he is in no fault at all, it is only his Misfortune to be in ill Company if he had no Hand in the Fact. This the Law is very plain in, and therefore I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips further with ſpeaking to it.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I would only add one ſhort Word; There is but this one Difference between an Acceſſory and a Principal; The Principal is always preſent, the Acceſſory is always abſent. And I would only put you one Caſe of an Acceſſory in Felony out of my Lord Coke; he ſaith, It muſt be the ſame Numerical thing in which they are joyned, and therefore if A. bid B. rob the Vintner's Boy of Plate as he cometh to a Gentleman's Chamber to bring Wine, but B. doth not purſue the Inſtructions, but breaketh into the Vintner's Houſe, and ſtealeth the Plate there; this is a different matter, it is not the ſame thing wherein A. and B. agreed at firſt, and A. is no way concerned in it.

The ſame Law is, if A. and B. agree to kill C. and B. killeth D. tho' A. be preſent, it will not be Murder in A; for the Agreement was for the killing of C. and not of D.

My Lords, as this Caſe is put, they did agree in the unlawful Act, but that Matter was over, and there is no Agreement as to the other Matter, nor is that purſuant to the Matter agreed upon; and therefore the Preſence of the Party that agreed to the unlawful Act doth not make him guilty of Murder, unleſs he agree to that too.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but one Word on the ſame ſide. I take it, that when a Man is doing an unlawful Act, there is an inſeparable Incident that doth attend it, which is Malice implyed. And this is ſo inſeparable, that when his his ill Deſign is at an end, his Malice is at an end too, and hath no being, and therefore if he entereth upon an ill Deſign afterwards, tho' another be preſent that was joined with him in the ill former Deſign, yet his Malice who was ſo joined, being coupled with the ill Deſign that is over, muſt be gone too; and there is no Malice in his being barely preſent. And therefore for that Reaſon, he that was aiding and aſſiſting before cannot be principal in ſuch a ſudden Act as this new one is, and conſequently cannot be guilty of Murder, or of Manſlaughter.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorny, Do you, or any of the King's Council think fit to ſay any thing to this Queſtion?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not think we have any occaſion to be heard to this Queſtion.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lords the Judges, what ſay you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will again repeat the Queſtion, it is this:

If A. accompanieth B. in an unlawful Action, in which C. is not concerned, and C. happeneth to come in the way of B. after the firſt Action (that is the unlawful Action, I ſuppoſe) is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B. without the Aſſiſtance of A. Whether A. is guilty of that Man's Murder?

And I do humbly conceive with great clearneſs, That A. is not guilty at all. For here is no Relation to the firſt unlawful Act that he was engaged in, but that is all over and determined; and then C. cometh in the preſence of B. who killeth him, and of A. who had no knowledge of any Malice between them, or any Deſign of his Death. This is meerly accidental, and doth not depend upon the firſt unlawful Action; and therefore A. is not guilty.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I think there can be no difference of Opinions in this Caſe: For it is plain there was an unlawful Action in which they did agree, (as a Riot or Aſſault to beat or wound a Man or the like) and if Death had enſued, they both had been guilty of Murder, as well he that looked on, as he that gave the mortal Wound. But then the Queſtion addeth further, That the Action to which they agreed was fully over, and there only happeneth to be a continuance of their Preſence together; and there being an old Grudge between one of the Parties and a third Man, and the Party who had that old Grudge, meeting with his Enemy, executeth it then upon him, and murdereth him; this doth in no ſort affect the other that was preſent, and had joined in the former unlawful Action that was over. In the former, he did joyn and concur, and therefore if Death had enſued, they had been both guilty: In the latter, he did not joyn and concur; and therefore though Murder did happen in his Preſence and Company, he is not guilty, but only the Party that actually killed is.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I am of the ſame Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If you are all of the ſame Opinion, I think you need ſay no more.

Judges. We are all of the ſame Opinion, my Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, all the Judges are of the ſame Opinion; and now I think it is your Lordſhips Reſolution to adjourn to the Houſe.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned to the Houſe of Lords.

And then the Lords returned to their Houſe in the ſame Order, and there preſently Adjourned till the next Morning.

Die Sabbati Quarto Februarii 1692.

ABout four of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Lords came from their Houſe in the former Order into the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall; and being ſeated on their Benches, and his Grace the Lord High-Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Judgment of the Peers was demanded, and delivered in this manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, Your Lordſhips have now heard all the Evidence both againſt the Priſoner and for him: The next thing is your Lordſhips Judgment, and for that the Method is this, Your Lordſhips Opinions are to be delivered in the abſence of the Priſoner. The Queſtion that your Lordſhips are to deliver your Opinion about will be this:

Whether my Lord Mohun be guilty of the Murder of William Mountford, whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

The Order of delivering your Opinions muſt be, to begin with the youngeſt Baron, and ſo upwards; and therefore I muſt deſire your Lordſhips to allow me to take your Judgments diſtinctly, and that I may write them down.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Lemſter, is my Lord Mohun guilty of the Murder whereof he ſtandeth indicted, or not guilty?

The Lord Lemſter ſtood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right-hand on his Breaſt, pronounced his Judgment thus:

L. Lemſter. Not guilty upon my Honour.

The ſame Queſtion was ſeverally asked of all the Lords, who in the ſame Form delivered their Opinions as followeth:

Duke of Somerſet. Not guilty upon my Honour.
Duke of Norfolk. Not guilty upon my Honour.
L. H. Stew. My Lord Privy Seal, &c.
Earl of Pembroke. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Then his Grace the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncovered, and laying his Right-Hand upon his Breaſt, pronounced his Grace's own Judgment thus:

L. H. Stew. My Opinion is, That my Lord Mohun is not guilty, upon my Honour.

Then his Grace ſeated himſelf again in the Chair, and numbred up the Opinions of the Peers.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I have carefully taken your Lordſhips Opinions, and find the Numbers to be thus: My Lords that have found my Lord Mohun to be guilty are Fourteen; my Lords that have found him not guilty are ſixty Nine. Call for the Priſoner.

Proclamation was made for the Chief Governour of the Tower to bring forth the Body of the Priſoner, and he was brought to the Bar as before: And Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, you have been indicted for the Murder of William Mountford; upon your Arraignment you have pleaded not guilty, and have put your ſelf upon the Judgment of your Peers; and your Peers have conſidered what hath been ſaid both for and againſt you, and the Judgment of my Lords is this, That your Lordſhip is not guilty: Your Lordſhip is therefore diſcharged. Make Proclamation for diſſolving the Commiſſion.

Cl. of Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.

Cl. of Crown. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace, doth ſtraightly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons who have given their Attendance here, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen; for his Grace the Lord High Steward of England intendeth to diſſolve his Commiſſion.

Which the Serjeant at Arms repeated, and at the end of it, his Grace ſtanding up, and holding the White-Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, by which his Commiſſion was diſſolved.

Marq. of Carmarthen. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to your own Houſe?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Marq. of Carmarthen. This Houſe is Adjourned into the Houſe of Lords.

And then the Peers returned to their own Houſe in the ſame Order.

The Tryal of Thomas Roſewell, for High-Treaſon; in the Months of October and November, 1684. 36. Car. II.

N. B. This Tryal, in point of time, ſhould come between that of Titus Otes for Scandalum Magnatum, and that of Robert Bailie of Jerviſwoode.

Die Jovis 23. Oct. An. Dom. 1684. Term. St. Mich An. Reg. Regis Car. II. 36. B. Regis.

THIS Day, being the firſt Day of the Term, Mr. Attorney General moved the Court of King's-Bench for an Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of the Gate-houſe, to bring up the Body of Thomas Roſewell, Clerk, to be arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treaſon, found againſt him at a late Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, held at Kingſton in the County of Surrey; and it was deſired returnable to Morrow, but was not taken out till that Day, returnable immediate, and upon Saturday it was returned.

Die Sabbati 25. Oct. 1684. B. Regis.
Dominus Rex verſ. Roſewell.

THIS Day Mr. Roſewell was brought upon the Writ of Habeas Corpus, to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, and was thus Arraigned:

Clerk of the Crown. Thomas Roſewell, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did) 'Thou ſtandeſt indict-'ed by the Name of Thomas Roſewell, late of the 'Pariſh of Rotherhith, in the County of Surrey, 'Clerk; For that thou, as a falſe Traytor, a-'gainſt the moſt Serene, and moſt excellent 'Prince our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, 'by the Grace of God, King of England, Scot-'land, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, '&c. thy Supreme and Natural Lord; not 'having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor 'weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance; but 'being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of 'the Devil; the cordial Love, and true, due 'and natural Obedience, which a true and faith-'ful Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the 'King doth, and of right ought to bear towards 'him, altogether withdrawing: and contriving 'and intending to diſturb the Peace and com-'mon Tranquillity of this his Kingdom of Eng-'land, and to ſow Sedition and Rebellion with-'in the Kingdom, and to depoſe our ſaid So-'vereign Lord the King from the Stile, Honour 'and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of 'this Realm, and to bring our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction, 'the 14th Day of September, in the 36th Year of 'the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King 'that now is, at the Pariſh of Rotherhith afore-'ſaid, in the County of Surrey aforeſaid; didſt 'propoſe, compaſs and imagine to ſow Sediti-'on, and raiſe Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sove-'reign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of 'England, and to make a miſerable Slaughter 'among the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King, and to cauſe our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King to be depoſed from the Regal 'State, Title, and Honour of the Imperial 'Crown of this Realm; and to put to Death, 'and final Deſtruction, our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King; and the Government of this his 'Kingdom of England, at thine own Will and 'Pleaſure to change and alter; and the State 'of this Kingdom of England, in all its Parts 'well order'd and conſtituted, to overthrow 'and ſubvert; and to levy War againſt our ſaid 'Sovereign Lord the King, within this King-'dom: And to compleat thy ſaid moſt wicked 'Treaſons, and traiterous Purpoſes, and Ima-'ginations; and to raiſe Diſcord between our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord the King and his People, 'Thou the ſaid Thomas Roſewell, the aforeſaid '14th Day of September, in the 36th Year afore-'ſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County 'aforeſaid; falſly, unlawfully, ſeditiouſly, ma-'liciouſly and traiterouſly, in a certain unlaw-'ful Aſſembly, and in the Preſence and Hear-'ing of divers Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King, then and there unlawfully 'and ſeditiouſly, and againſt the Laws of this 'Land, aſſembled and gathered together; didſt 'ſpeak, aſſert and declare, That the People (mean-'ing the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King) made a flocking to our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King, upon pretence of healing the King's-'Evil, which he (meaning our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King) could not do; but that we (mean-'ing thy ſelf, and other traiterous Perſons, Sub-'jects of our ſaid Lord the King) are they to whom 'they (meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Lord 'the King) ought to flock, becauſe we (meaning 'thy ſelf, and the ſaid other traiterous Perſons) 'are Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers can 'heal the Dolours and Griefs of the People. We (mean-'ing the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King) have had two wicked Kings, (the 'moſt Serene Charles the Firſt, late King of 'England; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the 'King that now is, meaning) together, who have 'permitted Popery to enter in under their Noſes; 'whom (meaning the ſaid Charles the Firſt, late 'King of England, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King that now is) We can reſemble to no other

'no other Perſon but to moſt wicked Jeroboam: And 'that if they, (meaning the ſaid evil-diſpoſed Per-'ſons then and there, ſo as aforeſaid with thee 'unlawfully aſſembled, and gathered together) 'would ſtand to their Principles thou (meaning thy 'Self) didſt not fear, but they (meaning thy Self, and 'the ſaid evil-diſpoſed Perſons) would overcome 'their Enemies, (meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King and his Subjects) as in former Times 'with Rams horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in 'Sling; againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, a-'gainſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the 'King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the 'Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and 'provided. How ſay'ſt thou Thomas Roſewell; Art thou guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour to ſpeak a Word.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. What is it you would ſay, Sir,? You muſt Plead.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, my Charge is very high; and I bleſs my God, I am not conſcious to my ſelf of any Guilt as to thoſe Things, that you have heard read, and charged upon me——

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. If you will Plead, Sir, to this Indictment, ſo; that is all you have to do now.

Mr. Roſewell. My Innocence is my great Comfort under the God of Heaven; who knows they have lay'd to my Charge Things that I know not. I do proteſt my Abhorrence of theſe Things alledged to be ſaid by me againſt my Sovereign, whom I honour in my Heart, and daily pray for; I bleſs my God for it.

Mr. J. Holloway. I hope then your Innocence will clear you. But we have nothing to do now but to take your Anſwer to this Queſtion, Whether you are Guilty, or not Guilty, of what you ſtand Indicted for.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly crave your Lordſhips Patience a little. Pray, my Lord, give me Leave——

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Sir, you will be heard whatever you have to ſay, at the time of your Trial.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray hear me a few Words, my Lord; I would not treſpaſs upon your Patience: I have but a few Words to ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. You muſt plead, Guilty, or not Guilty, firſt.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I beſeech you——

Mr. J. Holloway. Sir, We cannot hear you in a Caſe of ſo great weight and moment as this, 'till you have Pleaded. You will have time enough at your Tryal to make your Defence; and all we can do now is to take your Plea of Guilty, or not Guilty.

Mr. Roſewell. May it pleaſe your Honours, You are ſenſible of my great Weakneſs and Ignorance in Matter of Law, and Things of this Nature; I therefore humbly beg I may have Council to aſſiſt me in this Buſineſs.

Mr. J. Walcot. If there be any thing of Matter of Law doth ariſe upon your Tryal, the Court will aſſign you Council.

Mr. J. Holloway. We cannot aſſign you Council at preſent, for we have nothing to aſſign it upon. If there do any Queſtion of Law ariſe in your Caſe, then the Court will, (as they are bound to do,) take Care of you, that you ſuffer no Prejudice for want of the Aſſiſtance of Council; and in Matters of Fact upon your Tryal, the Court are of Council for you.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank you, my Lord: I hope you will pardon my Weakneſs and Ignorance. I crave the Favour to have a Copy of my Indictment.

Mr. J. Holloway. We cannot allow it. You cannot be ignorant of that, it has been denied in many Caſes of late.

Mr. J. Walcot. We cannot grant it, except Mr. Attorney will conſent to it.

Mr. J. Holloway. You muſt poſitively ſay Guilty, or not Guilty. Sir Samuel Aſtry, call him to his Plea.

Clerk of Crown. How ſay'ſt thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. J. Holloway. Look you Sir, you ſhall not be ſtraitned, you ſhall have convenient Time to conſider what Defence you have to make. In the mean time, we have nothing to ſay, but to know of you what you Plead; Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. If you deſire to have the words read again to you, you ſhall.

Mr. J. Holloway, Ay, with all our Hearts.

Mr. Roſewell. I thank you, Sir, and my good Lords. I deſire, if you pleaſe, to have it read in Latin.

Mr. J. Holloway. Read them in Latin.

Cl. of Crown. How ſay'ſt thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. J. Holloway. Now what do you ſay to it, Are you Guilty, or not Guilty? for indeed we cannot ſpend our Time impertinently, we have other Buſineſs. Here is a Queſtion you ought to make a direct Anſwer to, one way or other.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour it may be read once more in Engliſh.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Aſtry, Read the Words without the Inuendo's.

[Clerk of Crown reads] That the People made a flocking to the King, upon pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, becauſe we are Prieſts and Prophets, who can heal their Griefs. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to enter under their Noſes, whom we can reſemble to no other Perſon, but to the moſt wicked Jeroboam: And if you will ſtand to your Principles, I do not fear but we ſhall be able to overcome our Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Now you hear your Charge, both in Latin and Engliſh; Pray, therefore, let the Court know what you do Plead; Guilty, or not Guilty to it.

Mr. Roſewel. Not Guilty, my Lord; and I bleſs my God for it.

Clerk of Crown. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

Mr. Roſewell. By God, and my Country.

Clerk of Crown. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Roſewell. Theſe are Things that my Soul abhors, I thank my God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Juſtice Holloway, will you pleaſe to appoint ſome time for his Tryal?

Mr. J. Holloway. What time would you have, Mr. Attorney? When can you be ready, Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Roſewell. I deſire, my Lord, it may be on the 19th of November.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Day of the Week is that?

Mr. Clerk. Upon Wedneſday.

Mr. J Holloway. Are there no Arguments appointed for that Day?

Mr Clerk. There is a Jury of Northamptonſhire, for that Day.

Mr. J. Holloway. Then it cannot be that Day.

Mr. Roſewell. Then, if it pleaſe your Honours, I deſire it may be the next Day; upon Thurſday.

Mr. Att. Gen. When it is moſt convenient for the Buſineſs of the Court.

Mr. J. Holloway. Sir Samuel, you will ſee when it will be moſt convenient at the Return of the Venire.

Cl. of Crown. Muſt I return it?

Mr. Att. Gen. No; The Sheriff muſt: And the Courſe is to make it returnable the ſame Day the Cauſe is tryed.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly deſire I may have Council allowed to come to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can have no Council allowed you.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I requeſt that my Friends may be allowed to come to me in the mean time; I have been a Priſoner above this Month, and not permitted to ſee my Friends, nor they to ſee me.

Mr J. Holloway. What Friends would you have?

Mr. Roſewell. My Relations.

Mr. J. Walcot. That Relations is a large Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, Sir, I think he may have liberty to diſcourſe with any Perſon in the preſence of the Keeper. I ſhall not oppoſe that.

Mr. Roſewell. Yes, my Lord, I deſire no otherwiſe.

Mr. J. Walcot. Who do you name to come to you?

Mr. Roſewell I have poor Children, that deſire and long to ſee me.

Mr.

Mr. J. Holloway. Who do you ſay, you would have come to you?

Mr. Roſewell. My Wife and Children, my Lord, that are my Bowels.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the preſence of the Keeper I cannot oppoſe it.

Mr. Roſewell. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to allow Council to come to me?

M. J. Holloway. We cannot do it by Law. The Court is to be of Council for you when you come to your Tryal. The Court will not ſuffer any thing to be done to your Prejudice againſt Law.

Mr. Roſewell. Is there any Statute, my Lord, that forbids the giving of Council?

Mr. J. Holloway. The Law forbids the allowing of Council in Capital Cauſes; unleſs where Matter of Law doth ariſe.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, as I remember, Fitzharris had Council allowed him.

Mr. J. Holloway. That was in a different Caſe, in a Matter where there were Special Pleadings; this is a General Iſſue.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was in a Matter of Law, that was inſiſted upon, but it is not ſo here: If this Gentleman had any matter of Law to Plead, he ſhould have Council aſſign'd him too. But, Sir, I think Tueſday the Eighteenth of November will be the freeſt and moſt convenient Day.

Mr. J. Holloway. Let it be that Day then.

Cl. of Crown. The Eighteenth of November is the Day of your Tryal.

Mr. Roſewell. But, my Lord, was not Council allowed him before his Tryal came on?

Mr. J. Holloway. Yes; but that was upon a Special Plea, of a Matter in Law.

Mr. Roſewell. I hope you will conſider my Caſe as of one that knows not the Law.

Cl. of Crown. Tueſday the Eighteenth of November is the Day.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly requeſt the Favour that any Perſon that can ſpeak of my Integrity, may come and Teſtify for me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, Ay; you may have Subpœna's out of the Office for any body, who you will, that are to be Witneſſes for you.

Mr. J. Walcot. The Officers of the Court will do all things that are requiſite and legal for you.

Mr. J. Holloway. Then take back your Priſoner, Keeper.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do not know truly, whether the Practice of the Court is not to commit to the Marſhalſea, being the Priſon of the County of Surrey.

Cl. of Crown. Sir, it may be one or th'other way, as the Court thinks fit. As long as the King's Bench ſits in Middleſex, he may be Priſoner ſtill in the Gate-houſe.

Keeper. Then the Rule of the Court is that he ſhall come agen then.

Cl of Crown. Yes, he is, by Rule, to appear here the 18th of November next.

Whereupon he was carried back to the Gate-houſe.

Die Martis 18. Nov. Anno Dom. 1684. R. Regis.

Dominus Rex verſ. Roſewell.

THIS Day the Priſoner was brought, by Rule, from the Gate-houſe to the Bar of the King's-Bench Court to his Tryal, at which all the Judges of the ſaid Court were preſent.

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Roſewell, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thoſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and do perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord, and thee, upon the Tryal of thy Life and thy Death: If therefore thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thou art to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn. Sir George Sheers, Baronet.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I would humbly crave the Favour of your Lordſhip, that I may have the Uſe of Pen, and Ink.

* Sir George Jeffreys. Lord Ch. Juſt.* Ay in God's Name, let him have Pen and Ink.

Cl. of Crown. Swear Sir George Sheers, Baronet.

Mr. Roſewell. I beg I may have Pen, Ink and Paper, before he be Sworn.

L. Ch. Juſt. Ay, let him.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner. Sir, You ſhall well and truly try, and true deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge; and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Jurat' Sir George Sheers.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I challenge him.

Lord Ch. Juſt. That you cannot do now he is Sworn.

Mr. Roſewell. I was ſurprized, my Lord; I did not know it.

Lord Ch. Juſt. I cannot help it, Mr. Roſewell, you muſt mind your Buſineſs. We cannot unſwear him agen. Go on.

Cl. of Crown. Sir St. John Broderick.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner, Sir; You ſhall well, &c. Jurat' Sir St. John Broderick.

Mr. Roſewell. I challenge him.

L. Ch. Juſt. You cannot Sir; he is Sworn now.

Mr. Roſewell. I beg your Lordſhips Pardon, I was ſurprized.

L. C. Juſt. Let us not ſpend time in ſuch Talk as is to no Purpoſe; I tell you we cannot unſwear him.

Mr. Roſewell. I deſire, my Lord, my Challenge may be received, I was going to ſpeak——

L. C. Juſt. It cannot be after he is Sworn; we cannot make a new Law for you. Mind what was ſaid to you; if you have a Mind to challenge any body, you muſt challenge them before they come to be Sworn.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Robert Knightley.

L. C. Juſt. Mind the thing you are about, Man: Speak now, if you have a Mind to challenge him.

Mr. Roſewell. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Then Swear him.

Cryer. Look upon the Priſoner, &c.

Jurat' Sir Robert Knightley.

L C. J. Pray now mind the Thing you are about; you are looking about you for ſome private Mark, or hint to be given you by some body, and so lose your time of Challenging. You must challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they are Sworn.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordships Pardon; I was minding to set down the Names in my Paper, because I am to take notice of those I challenge for their Number.

L. C. J. You shall have all the fair Advantages that the Law will allow; you shall have your full Number to challenge, which you may do peremptorily, and without Cause as to 35; and as many more as you can with Cause.

Mr. Rosewell. Is there any one to note the Number?

L. C. J. There shall be sure to be notice taken that you be not surprized that way. You shall have all fair Advantages, I tell you.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship.

Cl. of Crown. Sir William Elliot.

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir George Woodroffe.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Cornwall Bradshaw.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Thomas Bludworth.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Anthony Thomas, Esq;

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

Cryer. You shall well and truly, &c.

(Jurat' Anthony Thomas.)

Cl. of Crown. Francis Brend, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Weston, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. James Reading, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. Is it Mr. Justice Reading of Southwark?

L. C. J. Do you challenge him or not? you may if you will.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, my Reason is, I have heard much of him, but never had any Opportunity to know him till now. I have no Exception against him.

L. C. J. Then Swear him.

[Which was done.]

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Newton, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Vincent, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ambrose Muschamp, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ralph Freeman, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Joseph Reeves, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Anthony Rawlins, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Overman, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I have no Exception against him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. George Meggot, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

L. C. J. Cryer, Besure you bid them look upon the Prisoner; and the Prisoner look upon them, that he may see what he does.

Cryer. I do so, my Lord.

Cl. of Crown. Samuel Lewin, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I have nothing to say against him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Lawrence Marsh, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I desire to know how many I have challenged.

L. C. J. He shall tell you. Count them.

Cl. of Crown. Twelve. What say you to Mr. Marsh?

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ambrose Brown, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Halsey, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Awburn, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Henry Flood, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Parsons, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Pettyward, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Richard Coldham, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Robert Sanders, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Heather, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. John Austin, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Sir, doth this make Twelve if he be sworn?

Cl. of Crown. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. Then I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Cryer, count these. Sir George Sheeres.

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Crown. John Austin.

Cryer. Twelve, good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

The Twelve Sworn were These,

Sir George Sheeres.	Jury.	Thomas Overman.
Sir St. John Broderick.		Samuel Lewin.
Sir Robert Knightley.		John Pettyward.
Anthony Thomas.		Richard Coldham.
James Reading.		John Heather, and
Anthony Rawlins.		John Austin.

Clerk of Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Gentlemen, you of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Thomas Rosewell, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis)——Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God, and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this High-Treason, in manner and form as he stands Indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the time of the High-Treason committed, or at any time since to your Knowledge. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him guilty. If you you find him not guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorny-General, or this Inqueſt now taken, of the High-Treaſon whereof the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted; let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard: And all manner of Perſons, that are bound to give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence; for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: Or they forfeit their Recognizance.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Mr. Roſewell. Hold! Hold! I crave the Favour that the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart, let it be read in Latin.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly crave leave to ſpeak a Word or two.

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Roſewell. I beg your Patience for a Word or two. I find, my Lord, as I told my Lords upon the Day of my Arraignment, that my Charge is very black, and high: And truly if I were guilty of thoſe Things that are laid to my Charge——

L. C. J. You are now going to be tried for them. I hope you are innocent.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip: I beg you would hear me but a Word or two.

L. C. J. You muſt keep up to the Method of Proceedings, your time is not yet come. What is it you would have?

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, my Soul abhors theſe Things, I thank my God for it. I was going to ſpeak to your Lordſhip, to know whether the Words of a Natural, or a Mad-man be Treaſon in Law.

L. C. J. No.

Mr. Roſewell. Then, my Lord, the Ground of the Queſtion is this, I find by Recollection and Conſideration of the Words lay'd to my Charge, that my malicious Enemies have accuſed me of what any Man in his Senſes,——

L. C. J. This is not proper, Mr. Roſewell, at this time; for this is but an Anticipation. You muſt hear what is firſt proved againſt you. We muſt keep up to the Forms of Law, you ſhall have your full time to be heard whatſoever you will ſay for your ſelf; but you muſt not anticipate the Cauſe with previous Diſcourſes.

Mr. Roſewell. I would only aſſert my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Not yet; you muſt not do it, nor you ſhall not do it. When it comes to your turn to ſpeak, you ſhall have liberty enough to make your Defence as long as you will. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn: The Priſoner at the Bar, Thomas Roſewell, ſtands indicted, That he, as a falſe Traytor, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and endeavouring to diſturb the Peace and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, and to depoſe the King, the 14th of Sept. in the 36th Year of this King, at the Pariſh of Rotherhith, in your County; did falſly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, purpoſe and imagine to raiſe a Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to deprive the King, and depoſe, and put him to death and Deſtruction, and the Government to change and alter, and to levy War againſt the King within the Kingdom: And theſe wicked Purpoſes to bring to paſs, he the ſaid Thomas Roſewell, the ſaid 14th of September in the thirty ſixth Year aforeſaid, at the Place aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, ſeditiouſly and traiterouſly, in a certain unlawful Aſſembly, then and there congregated, did ſay and declare, The People make a flocking to the King, upon pretence of Healing the King's-Evil, which he cannot do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock: for we are Prieſts, and Prophets, that can heal their Grievances. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to come in under their Noſes; and whom we can compare to none, but the moſt wicked Jeroboam. But if they would ſtand to their Principles, he did not doubt, but they ſhould overcome their Enemies, as in former Times with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. And this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity; and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. To this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty; If we prove him guilty of this Matter, you are to find him guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; theſe traiterous Words, that the Priſoner at the Bar is accuſed of, were ſpoken in a Sermon, or Preachment at a Conventicle. And tho' the Gentleman does pretend to much Innocency; yet you will find that in open Defiance of the Law, he takes upon him to Preach againſt the Law, not only of the Land, but even againſt the Laws of Almighty God: For he takes upon him to be a Preacher againſt a Rule, than which nothing is more plain in all the Word of God, viz. That he ſhould not ſpeak Evil of Dignities, nor revile the Prince of his People. He knows this to be the Rule of the Scripture; and yet in his conſtant Diſcourſes, (as we ſhall prove) he makes it his Practice to revile the Government on all Sides. And by theſe doings at this Day, Gentlemen, you will eaſily underſtand what the Deſigns of theſe Conventicles are; only to nurſe up People in Sedition, and train them up to Rebellion; that they may be ready to break out into it when their Teachers adviſe them to it. We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove to you, that this is, and has been the conſtant Tenor of his Diſcourſe; viz. Reviling of the Government; and there is almoſt no Text of Scripture, but, in his way of perverting it, he has turned againſt the Government. We ſhall ſhew this to be the habitual Courſe and Practice of him who pretends to be ſo honeſt, and ſo innocent a Man. Cryer, call Elizabeth Smith,——Hilton and Farrar.

Then ſome of the Council at the Bar, being talking among themſelves, the Lord Chief Juſtice reproved them for it.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, you muſt not have Interlocutions among your ſelves. And you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I muſt tell you, If any one whiſper any of you, you ought to acquaint the Court with it. It is your Du y

to

to be directed by the Court, and the Evidence. Here is a Man's Life in Queſtion, and that is a very weighty Thing: and you muſt not take any private Inſinuations, but only hearken to your Evidence, and mind what is ſpoken publickly, that the Priſoner may be able to give anſwer to it.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where are Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith?

(They were all ſworn.)

Mr. Roſewell. I do humbly requeſt one Favour of the Court.

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly beg they may be examined ſeparatim.

L. C. J. They ſhall.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Who do you begin withal, Mr. Attorny?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, we ſhall begin with Mrs. Smith.

L. C. J. Then you muſt make way, that the other Witneſſes may go out of hearing. You Cryer, make way for them; and ſee that they be ſet where they may not hear.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mrs. Smith, pray give my Lord and the Jury an account whether you have been at any Meeting, where this Gentleman has been. Whether you know him; and what you heard of him.

Smith. I heard him ſay this——

L. C. J. Hold a little. What is this Woman's Name, Elizabeth Smith?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. Were you by at any of his Conventicles?

Smith. Sir, I have been ever ſince the 20th of July, till that Day for which he was taken, but one Sunday.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lord an account of what you heard.

Smith. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Where was it that his Meeting-Houſe was?

Smith. He had ſeveral Houſes, private Houſes and a publick Houſe of his own.

L. C. J. Where? In what Place?

Smith. In Salisbury-ſtreet, near his own Dwelling.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Smith. In Rotherhith.

L. C. J. You were frequently there, you ſay?

Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What number of People might be there, as you gueſs?

Smith. I believe there might be 400 People or 300 commonly.

L. C. J. What ſort of People were they?

Smith. Men and Women, Houſe-keepers.

L. C. J. Well, what did you hear him ſay?

Smith. I can give you an Account of his Sermons ſeveral Days.

L. C. J. Do ſo.

Smith. The firſt Notice that I took of any thing concerning the Government, was upon the 17th of Auguſt, and that was concerning His Majeſty; and then in his Prayer after Sermon, he wiſhed he might not offend God in not praying for the King; but that it might pleaſe God to open his Eyes, and the Times might turn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Things have you heard him ſay?

Smith. The next time that I heard him was the next Sunday again, and that was in Weſt-lane, in a Houſe there, and then he was ſpeaking of Sodom and Gomorrah, and he brought in this Proof, not doubting but if there had been ten righteous Perſons, the City had not been deſtroyed: But he did not mean Recorders, nor Lord Mayors.

Mr. Roſewell. What Day was that Miſtriſs?

Smith. The 22th of Auguſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him ſpeak, upon the Day in the Indictment, the 14th of September?

Smith. He ſaid, The People made a flocking to the King, to cure the King's Evil which he could not do; but, ſays he, we are they they ſhould flock unto, for we are Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers can cure their Grievances. He ſaid, We have now had two wicked Kings together, which have permitted Popery to come in under their Noſes, and could be compared to nothing but to moſt wicked Jeroboam. And then, after he had preached a good while, agen he ſaid, If they would ſtand to their Principles, he did not fear, but they ſhould overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with broken Platters, Ram's Horns, and a Stone in a Sling.

L. C. J. When was this?

Smith. This was upon the 14th of September.

L. C. J. Where was it?

Smith. At one Captain Daniel Weldy's Houſe.

L. C. J. What is he? a Seaman?

Smith. Yes, and he pray'd for him, being then at Sea and his Son both, who was ill.

L. C. J. How many do you think might be preſent there at that time?

Smith. There was a low Parlour full, and a little Room up ſix Steps; and where he preached was up one pair of Stairs, there was a large Room and a Garret.

L. C. J. Where did he ſtand?

Smith. In the Door-Caſe of that Room, that the ſound might go up and down.

L. C. J. How many People in number might there be think you?

Smith. I cannot tell, my Lord; a great many.

L. C. J. How many, as nigh as you can gueſs, or think?

Smith. Several Hundreds of them.

L. C. J. Do you know any of them? Were they People of any Quality?

Smith. Yes, I know a great many of them; ſeveral of them are in the Court, and about the Hall now.

L. C. J. Who ſtood at the Door and let you in?

Smith. One Mr. Paul Shed; and he was angry at my coming with Pattens, for they made an Impreſſion in the Ground, and gave notice to others, that there was Company there: and I promiſed him I would come no more with them.

Mr. J. Walcot. Was he Door keeper? What is he?

Smith. A Braſier, I think.

Mr. J. Holloway. Had you any notice of a Conventicle that was to be there?

L. C. J. Ay; Tell us how you came thither.

* Sir Thomas Jenner. * Mr. Recorder. How came you to find it out that there was a Meeting at ſuch a Place?

Smith. At firſt I found it by dogging of People as they went along; and afterwards, there were were People ſet commonly at a Place called Cherry-garden Stairs to give notice; and ſometimes I asked there, and ſometimes I went to Mr. Shed's Houſe to enquire.

L. C. J. Shed, you ſay, was preſent there then?

Smith. Yes, he let me in.

L. C. J. What; he was the Man that managed the Conventicle. He was Clerk, I ſuppoſe; was he not?

Smith. I never heard him ſay Amen; but I have heard him expound in the Conventicle ſometimes.

L. C. J. Oh, he was a Journeyman Preacher it ſeems.

Mr. Recorder. Pray was there any ſtore of Watermen and Seamen there?

Smith. Yes, abundance from Rotherhith, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Which way came all the People that were there?

Smith. From Deptford and Rotherhith, and all thereabouts.

L. C. J. Was it near the Water-ſide?

Smith. Yes, not far from it.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorny, have you any more Queſtions to ask her?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I think not. Mrs. Smith, you have heard him, you ſay, at other Days; how did he uſe to treat the Government in his preaching at other times?

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I beſeech your Lordſhips to tell me whether theſe Queſtions are proper to be put, it not relating to the Matter that I am accuſed of?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, to give an account of the Diſpoſition of your Mind; very proper as can be.

Mr. Roſewell. Becauſe it is not part of my Charge, and I cannot be prepared to anſwer it.

L. C. J. When the King's Council have done with her, you may ask her any Queſtions; but you muſt let them go on firſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is charged that he ſpoke theſe words with a traiterous, malicious Mind; and what better Evidence of ſuch a Mind than his uſual Diſcourſes?

Smith. The 31ſt of Auguſt, I heard him preach at Paul Shed's Houſe; and there he preached that there was a certain great Man, that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church-ſtreet about this time eighteen Years agone; I name no body, ſays he, you all know him whom I mean: and there came a certain poor Man to him; he was not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter by Trade, one that wrought for his Living, a labouring Man; and told that great Man, if he would take his Advice, he would tell him how to quench the Fire; but he Piſh'd at it, and made light of it and would not take his Advice. Which if it had not been for that great Man, and the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs that have been ſince, neither that Fire in London, nor the Fire at Wapping, nor the Fire at Southwark, had gone ſo far, or come to what they did.

L. C. J. There was a great Man that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church ſtreet!—— Who did he mean by that?

Mr. Recorder. He meant, we ſuppoſe, Sir Thomas Bloodworth, that was Lord Mayor at the Fire-Time.

L. C. J. He did not live there then.

Mr. Recorder. It ſeems he ſaid ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mrs. Smith, let me ask you one Queſtion. How far were you off from him; and where did you ſit this 14th Day of September, when you heard him ſay thoſe Words you ſpeak of?

Smith. I ſat upon the Bed, and he was ſtanding at the Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witneſs at the preſent.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Roſewell, if you will, you may ask her what Queſtions you pleaſe.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I was before going to beg your Pardon for my Weakneſs, being altogether unacquainted with theſe Things; and that you would look upon me as one that is inops conſilii, and pardon any thing that comes from me impertinently. I cannot ſpeak to her as a Lawyer to ſift her, and ſearch out the Truth; will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak to her as a Divine?

L. C. J. Ask her what Queſtions you will, but we will not have any of your Preachments here. You muſt conſider where you are, you are not now in your Pulpit, but at the Bar; I aſſure you we do not intend to make a Conventicle of the King's Bench Court.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I meant only to endeavour to convince her, by putting ſome Queſtions, like a Divine, to her. For I pity them, tho' they envy me; and I bleſs my God, have pray'd for them many times ſince my Impriſonment.

L. C. J. Well, well; do not ſtand to commend your ſelf now, this is not your time of making your Defence: Only, if you will ask this Witneſs any Queſtions, you may.

Mr. Roſewell. You are under an Oath, Mrs. Smith.

Smith. I am ſo, Mr. Roſewell.

Mr. Roſewell. Are you ſenſible what an Oath is, and the great Obligation you are under by it to teſtify nothing but the Truth? as you will anſwer it to the great God——

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Roſewell, ask her any Queſtions to the Buſineſs that ſhe has here teſtified; but do not preach to her. It is not your Work to Catechiſe the Witneſſes, that is the Duty of the Court, and we ſhall, no doubt, take care to do our Duty. And I will tell her, to ſave your Preachment, ſhe is in the Preſence of the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom we muſt appear at the great Day of Judgment, to give an account of every Word we ſpeak. And you are under an Oath, and if in Caſe you tell one Tittle of a Lie in your Teſtimony againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands now to be tried for his Life, it will be juſt with the Great God to ſink you down into Hell Fire immediately. Therefore, I require you, upon your Oath, not to ſpeak one Word but what is Truth.

Smith. My Lord, I aſſure you, I will rather ſay leſs, than add any one Tittle.

L. C. J. Mr. Roſewell, ask her what you will, but do not give your ſelf, or us, the trouble of a Preachment to teach her the Obligation of an Oath; for ſhe very well knows it ſeems what it is, and ſays ſhe will rather ſpeak leſs than more than the Truth.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip for what you have ſaid to her. Mrs. Smith, Pray was you at Rotherhith the 14th Day of September?

Smith. Yes, that I was.

Mr. Roſewell. Did you come alone? or, who came with you?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton came along with me, and another Gentlewoman, and Mr. Shed let us in all together.

Mr. Roſewell. Who is that Mrs. Hilton?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will ſee her by and by Mr. Roſewell.

Mr. Roſewell. Where did you meet together?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton lay with me all Night, and we were together the Day before.

Mr. Roſewell. What time did you come thither, pray Miſtriſs?

Smith. I came thither before Seven of the Clock, before you came, Sir.

Mr. Roſewell. And I pray whoſe Houſe came you to at Rotherhith?

Smith. We were informed it was Captain Weldy's Houſe.

Mr. Roſewell. Are you ſure it was his Houſe?

Smith. As they did tell us it was Captain Daniel Weldy's.

Mr. Roſewell. I pray Miſtriſs what Room were you in there?

Smith. We were up one pair of Stairs. There is a little Room we come at ſooner; but we were in the Room with the Bed; and there was one Mr. Atkinſon there that was in Mourning, and there were two or three Boys of his with him that ſate upon the Bed, and their Shoes were plucked off, that they might not dirt the Bed; and I gave him his Boys Shoes from under the Bed.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray where did I ſtand, Miſtriſs, do you ſay?

Smith. In the Door-Caſe.

L. C. J. What Boy is that you ſpeak of?

Smith. Two Boys that came in with one Mr. Atkinſon; his Relations, I ſuppoſe they were.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray how did the Service begin?

Smith. You took your Text out of the 21ſt of Geneſis; that was the Chapter to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. Roſewell. But I ask you Mrs. how did the Worſhip, the Service begin?

L. C. J. You mean your Prayer, you do not uſe to call it Service.

Smith. You made a Prayer.

Mr. Roſewell. Was it begun with a Chapter, or a Pſalm, or how?

Smith. There was no Pſalm; a long Prayer you made, as you uſed to do formerly.

Mr. Roſewell. How long was that?

Smith. It was always uſed to be about three quarters of an Hour long.

Mr. Roſewell. Was there any Chapter read?

Smith. There was no Chapter before you took your Text, as I heard, and I was there before you.

Mr. Roſewell. Upon what Occaſion then were theſe Words ſpoke, if there was no Chapter read?

Smith. I ſay there was none till you took your Text, and then you ſpoke thoſe Words.

Mr. Roſewell. But how came thoſe Words in?

Smith. You always took a whole Chapter, and expounded all along.

Mr. Roſewell. A long Text for one Sermon, Miſtreſs.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, We know you have a fine way of Preaching.

Mr. Roſewell. Well, Miſtreſs. Upon what Verſe of the Chapter were theſe Words ſpoke, about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?

Smith. I cannot be punctual to the particular Verſe.

L. C. J. Nay, I ſuppoſe you ſeldom keep to your Text. I am ſure there was never a Verſe in any Chapter that warranted the ſpeaking of any ſuch Words as theſe.

Smith. My Lord, I cannot be punctual to the particular Verſe. It was within five or ſix Verſes of the beginning, I believe.

Mr. Roſewell. Then upon what Occaſion came in the Words about the two wicked Kings?

Smith. In Preaching you brought it in by other Proofs.

L. C. J. Why, Man, there can be no Occaſion for ſpeaking of thoſe Words. You ſpoke them without any Occaſion at all. No body can tell what Occaſion you had to ſpeak them.

Mr. Roſewell. But, my Lord, I ſuppoſe there may be ſome coherence in my Diſcourſe. I would know how they were brought in?

L. C. J. Who can tell the Occaſion? Do you ask me what Reaſon any Man has to ſpeak Treaſon? I tell you there is none at all to be given for it.

Smith. One of your Proofs in your Preaching was concerning Dalilah and Sampſon, and you brought in that Proof concerning the King's uſing of Women, it was out of the Judges. And he ſaid he did not Queſtion, but that in the end the Whores would ſerve the King, as that Whore Dalilah did Sampſon.

L. C. J. Was this at the ſame time, upon the ſame Day?

Smith. Yes, it was upon the 14th of September.

Mr. Roſewell. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, theſe are not Words that are charged in the Information——

L. C. J. You draw it upon your ſelf by your Queſtions.

Mr. Roſewell. If they were ſpoken, (upon that Hypotheſis, I ſay if they were ſpoken; but I deny the Theſis, I abhor the thoughts of them.) I would know how they were brought in, under what Verſe?

L. C. J. Ay, I take you right as to that, you do deny it; and they are not in the Indictment.

Smith. I cannot be punctual as to the Verſe.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray upon what account did come in the two wicked Kings?

Smith. I cannot tell the Verſe, truly.

Mr. Roſewell. How came in that about Jeroboam?

L. C. J. How can ſhe tell how you bring in Treaſon?

Mr Roſewell. My Lord——

L. C. J. Nay, pray, Sir, hear me a little. You ſhall have all the Liberty to defend your ſelf that the Law can allow of. We are accountable to the Law upon our Oaths to do Juſtice, and are as much accountable to Heaven for our Actions, ons, as you or any Priſoner that comes to this Bar is to the Law for your Actions. But do you ask what Reaſon you ſpoke Treaſon for? I tell you no Reaſon can be given for it.

Mr. J. Holloway. Do you think any of your Auditors can give an account of the Connexion of your whole Sermon?

L. C. J. When you talk beſides the Cuſhion, do you think any Man alive is able to give an account how you come to ramble and talk Treaſon?

Mr. Roſewell. Can you tell, Miſtreſs, when that was ſpoken, of ſtanding to their Principles, and the Rams-horns, &c.?

Smith. That was at the latter end of your Sermon.

L. C. J. When you had ſaid there were two wicked Kings, then preſently you were for ſtanding to your Principles, and over coming your Enemies.

Mr. J. Holloway. It ſeems ſhe was very intent upon your Sermon.

L. C. J. For my part, I wonder ſhe can remember ſo much as ſhe does. It is much ſhe can remember ſuch Stuff as this.

Mr. Roſewell. The God of Truth, my Lord, I hope will manifeſt the Truth. Pray, Miſtreſs, were theſe Words ſpoken one juſt after another in my Diſcourſe?

Smith. No, they were not; but they were all ſpoken at that time.

Mr. J. Holloway. Have you done with her?

Mr. Roſewell. No, my Lord, I humbly beſeech your Favour and Patience a little. Pray Miſtreſs Smith did you write?

Smith. I did not write till I came home, and after I came home I did write it down. Several that were there did write down your Sermon.

Mr. Roſewell. Several of whom do you mean?

Mr. Smith. Several of your Congregation, Sir.

Mr. Roſewell. Did your Companions write? and pray where did you firſt write down theſe Words?

Smith. After I came Home I ſet them down, Word for Word to a Tittle, as they were ſpoken, as near as I could remember, what you ſpoke.

Mr. Roſewell. Was any body with you when you ſet them down?

Smith. Yes, my own Family ſaw me write them down: and the other Witneſs was with me; and afterwards we went to the Bull and Mouth, the Quakers Meeting-Houſe.

Mr. Roſewell. What other Witneſſes were by when you ſet them down?

Smith. There was my Husband, my Apprentice, and my Child.

Mr. Roſewell. And did you ſet them down juſt exactly, as you have ſworn them upon this Indictment?

Smith. Yes, to the beſt of my Knowledge:

Mr. Roſewell. Upon your Oath in the preſence of the great God, did you ſet them down as they were ſpoken?

Smith. Yes, I tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, I would ask you that Queſtion; Did you, (I ſpeak to you as in the Preſence of the great God, and upon your Oath) ſet down his Words juſt as he ſpoke them in Subſtance?

Smith. Yes, I did to the ſame Subſtance as near as I could remember.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray what other Words were ſpoken between theſe Words in the Indictment, if they were not all ſpoken together?

Smith. One thing I do remember more, that you ſaid that Day. You ſaid there was a Word they called Canting; but for your Part you did not underſtand what it meant, unleſs it were this; You ſaid, you chanced to go by one of the great Churches; where peeping in, you ſaw a Man with a white Surplice, and the Organs were going, and they were canting, and ſinging the Litany, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments with a Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha. For your part, you were aſhamed to hear it: and this you ſaid was all the Canting you knew.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will draw this upon your ſelf.

Mr. Roſewell. I am ſorry to hear this indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. So am I too, with all my Heart, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Roſewell. You ſay you ſet down the Words the ſame Day, when you came Home?

Smith. Yes, I reſolved ſo to do, when I came away from the Meeting, to write them down as ſoon as I came home.

Mr. Roſewell. Did you confer with any body about theſe Words?

Smith. Not till I came to a Juſtice of Peace, and diſcovered it.

Mr. Roſewell. What Juſtice of Peace was that whom you diſcover'd it to?

Smith. The Recorder of London.

Mr. Roſewell. And you ſwear theſe were the Words that I ſpoke?

Smith. Yes, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. If ſhe ſwear the ſubſtantial part of them it is enough, tho' the very exact Words ſhe doth not ſwear: For the Words are laid in this Indictment in Latin, and by way of Aſſertion.

Mr. Roſewell. Your Lordſhip will pardon my Weakneſs, I am ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. And we will take care you ſhall have nothing done to your Prejudice that is againſt Law.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip. Miſtreſs Smith, upon your Oath you ſay Mr. Shed was at that Conventicle?

Smith. Yes, he let me in at the Door, and was angry with me that I would come ſo near the Place with my Pattens; he ſaid it might give occaſion of Suſpicion.

Mr. Roſewell. You were ſaying you heard him expound. Where was that, pray?

Smith. Yes, that I did, at Mr. Crookſhank's Houſe; and I heard him another time.——

Mr. Roſewell. What was the Day in Auguſt that you ſay you came firſt to hear me?

Smith. I do not ſay it was in Auguſt, but in July that I came firſt to hear you, the 20th of July.

Mr. Roſewell. You ſay I preached in the publick Meeting-Place; What Day was that pray?

Smith. The 10th of Auguſt, to the beſt of my Remembrance; it was the fourth Sunday, as I remember that I heard you there.

Mr. Roſewell. Have you not ſworn againſt Conventicles in other Places?

Smith. Yes.

Mr. Rosewell. What Conventicles?

Smith. If my Lords please to ask me, I shall give an account.

Mr. Rosewell. Have you, or have you not?

Smith. Yes, several; tho' I never heard any thing spoken in any of them against the King, but at yours.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you swear a Conventicle against one Mr. Hales?

Smith. I swore it by Confession.

Mr. Rosewell. Were you at that Conventicle?

Smith. No, I was not, but I swore it by Confession.

Mr. Rosewell. What day was that Conventicle?

Smith. As they told us, it was the 13th of July.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there any thing done upon that Conviction?

Smith. Yes, he paid his Money that was set upon him, and never made any Appeal; his Wife confessed it.

Mr. Rosewell. What other Conventicles have you been at?

Smith. Concerning you, do you mean?

Mr. Rosewell. No, any other Conventicles of the Fanaticks that you have sworn against.

Smith. I do not know whether that be a proper Question.

Mr. Rosewell. What say you, Mistress Smith?

L. C. J. No, no; that you must not ask her, that is to accuse her self.

Mr. J. Holloway. You must not ask her to any thing but that you stand here charged with.

L. C. J. You must not ask her any thing that may make her obnoxious to any Penalty.

Mr. J. Walcot. Do you ask her any other Questions?

Mr. Rosewell. I will presently, my Lord, I beg your Patience.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, take your own time.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Mistress Smith, were you a Witness against a Conventicle at one Mistress Batho's?

Smith. Yes, that I had by Confession of her own Mouth.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there not some Money offer'd her——

L. C. J. That is not to be asked, you must not ask her any Question that may make her accuse her self criminally.

Smith. Never by me, Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordships Pardon.—

L. C. J. I'll tell you the Reason for it, and it is that which ought to be satisfactory to you or any body. They are not bound to answer any Questions that you ask the Witnesses, whereby they charge themselves with any Crime, or by answering may subject themselves to any Penalty. Whether it be so or no, you must not ask them, but prove it.

Smith. I never did offer any, my Lord.

Rosewell. I thought I might offer any thing against what she had sworn.

L. C. J. Prove what you can in your Time; but do not ask her any such Questions. The Law is so, and the same for you as it is for every body else.

Mr. Rosewell. Mistress Smith, you swear these Words were spoken in the Forenoon upon that place, the 21st of Genesis, one after another.

Smith. Yes; those Words, as near as I can speak them, were spoken then.

L. C. J. Are those the Words you heard at that time?

Smith. In Substance they are, my Lord; as near as I can discover.

Mr. Rosewell. I have no more Questions to ask her at present my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mistress Smith, since he has started such a Question; Have you been tamper'd with, and been offer'd any Money; and what, and for what?

Smith. There came one Cartwright, and one Norton to me one Day, I cannot give an account exactly what Day it was; and first they spake to me about Mistress Batho's Business, and afterwards they fell into Discourse about Mr. Rosewell, and they told me, They wonder'd I would have my hand in any Man's Blood. Said I to them, Suppose you had heard what I did, what would you have done? Says Mr. Norton, you had better take 20 Guineas, and not appear against him, said he; not that any body, that I know of, that he is concerned with, will give you that sum of Money, but you had better take it. Says I, what is the Truth no Money nor Gold shall buy me off from telling. What was Truth I would speak, and no more; and I had already given Evidence of it, and would not retract it. Said Mr. Cartwright then to me, But if you had not discovered it, no body else would. Said I, yes, others heard it as well as I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Has any body else tamper'd with you? have you had any Letter sent to you?

Smith. Nothing till Yesterday Morning: A Letter came then.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that?

Smith. I suppose my Lord saw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but you must tell the Jury what it was.

Smith. One came to my Brothers, and brought a Letter thither, which I read over; and he said to my Brother, if I could be any ways Assistant to Mr. Rosewell in not coming in against him I might have 200 l. paid down to Morrow, not that Mr. Rosewell knew of it, or would give it me, but it was a Wager that was lay'd. Some laid he would be hang'd, and some lay'd he would not; and so he said he would come and give me an account who it was that spoke to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with her now. Call Mistress Hilton.

Mr. Rosewell. Will your Lordship please to indulge me so far that I may ask her another Question or two?

L. C. Just. What is it you would have, Sir?

Mr. Rosewell. I desire her before she goes out to recollect one thing.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, she shall not go away; If you have a Mind to ask her any thing before she goes away, do so; or she shall come again if you have any Questions to put to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, she is big with Child, and cannot well crowd in and out.

L. C. J. If she be with Child, then let her sit upon the Stool there.

Mr. Rosewell. With your Lordships Indulgence, I would ask Mistress Smith this Question; The Gentlewoman that was with you, Mistress Hilton, I think you call'd her, did she agree with you as to the same Words, and as to Time and Place? Smith.

Smith. If you pleaſe to examine her, I ſuppoſe ſhe will give you an account.

Mr. Roſewell. Then I would ask her this Queſtion, with your Leave, my Lord; whether was that other Gentlewoman with you in the ſame Room?

Smith. Yes, ſhe was, and ſate upon the Bed with me, and I pulled her by the Sleeve when the Words were ſpoken, to take notice of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Miſtreſs Hilton, give my Lord and the Jury an account; have you been at this Conventicle at any time, and what have you heard there?

Hilton. I came to Miſtreſs Smith's on Saturday Night, and on Sunday Morning I went with her to this Place; I was never there before in my Life, they ſaid it was one Daniel's Houſe, one Captain Daniel's; it was near Weſt-Lane in Rotherhith. And when we came there, there was one that Miſtreſs Smith knew, that ſtood at the Door, they call him Paul Shed, a little Man: And when we came to the Door, he ſaid to us, Pull off your Pattens, ſays he; for they will give too much Occaſion of Diſtruſt of Peoples coming: So we pulled off our Pattens, and ſaid we would take care the next time. When we came in, we went through a kind of a Hall, and when we came there into the Hall, there was a little Parlour againſt it: We went up the Stairs, and when we came up Stairs, there were two more Rooms; that Room we came into was hung with ſad-colour'd Paper, and upon the Left-hand there ſtood a Sweetwood kind of Cheſt, a little Cabinet, and a little Glaſs over that. Mr. Roſewell came, and ſtood at the Entrance in of the Door; ſo there was a little Child in bed when we came up, and we ſate down on the other ſide of the Bed; and the Child was taken out of the Bed preſently afterwards. Mr. Roſewell preached upon the 20th or 21ſt Chapter of Geneſis, I cannot be poſitive which of them, but one of them it was.——

Mr. Roſewell. But upon your Oath cannot you tell which it was?

L. C. J. You muſt not interrupt her, Sir; you ſhall have your time to aſk her what you will.

Hilton. It was the 20th or 21ſt of Geneſis, I will not be poſitive which of them it was. But the thing was as to Abraham and Sarah; that was the Contents of the Chapter that Mr. Roſewell was then pleaſed to preach upon. After he had took his Text, and preached a little while, he ſaid, the People went flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; for they ought to flock to them, that were Prieſts and Prophets, who by their Prayers could cure their Grievances. Then he preached a great while of the Chapter following agen; and then ſays he, We have had two wicked Kings that have ſuffered Popery to come in under their Noſes, which I can compare to nothing but the moſt wicked Jeroboam. There was another King named, and I think it was Rehoboam. I cannot be poſitive as to that, but Jeroboam I am ſure was named. Then he ſaid, If the People would ſtand to their Principles, he did not queſtion but to overcome all their Enemies with broken Platters, Rams Horns, and a Stone in a Sling. Theſe were the Words Mr. Roſewell was pleaſed to ſay.

L. C. J. Can you remember what day of the Month this was?

Hilton. It was the 14th of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you remember what number of People were there?

Hilton. I believe there were four or five hundred People; there was a Garret full, and two Rooms below, the Parlour full, and the Hall full; and one Paul Shed, (as Mrs. Smith told me his Name was,) let us in. I did not know any of them; nor ever had Convicted any of them; that was the firſt time I ever was at a Meeting in my Life, and I had enough of it then.

L. C. J. You ſay you came on Saturday Night to Miſtreſs Smith's Houſe.

Hilton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time that Night?

Hilton. About eight or nine a Clock.

L. C. J. What time in the Morning did you go along with her to this place?

Hilton. We went by ſeven a Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Roſewell come before you, or after you?

Hilton. No, he came preſently after we were there.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other Words he utter'd there that Day?

Hilton. He was pleaſed to talk of ſeveral things between whiles in his Sermon; among the reſt, I heard him ſpeak about Canting. He ſaid there was a Word they called Canting, but he did not underſtand what that Word meant, except it were the Fellows in their white Gowns. For he was going by one of their Churches, where he heard them ſing the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, with a Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha; for my part, ſays he, I was aſhamed to hear it.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other part of the Diſcourſe?

Hilton. He had a great many other of thoſe things, that I cannot now remember; it affrighted me to hear it, out of my Wits.

L. C. J. Where did you go from thence?

Hilton. We went Home to Mrs. Smith's. It was two a Clock, and we had not eat a bit of Bread all the while; and as ſoon as ſhe came Home, Miſtreſs Smith took her Pen and Ink preſently, and writ down thoſe Words; her Husband and I, and ſhe, were together; and when we had done this, we went to the Quaker's Meeting.

L. C. J. What Quaker's Meeting is that?

Hilton. It is that by Cheapſide; I do not well remember the Name, I think it was called the Bull and Mouth.

Mr. J. Holloway. What time of the Day was it that the meeting was done at Mr. Roſewell's?

Hilton. We came from Mr. Roſewell's a little after two a Clock.

L. C. J. From Seven to Two did he hold? that is pretty long winded.

Hilton. No, he went into Dinner, and left us there, and abundance in the Congregation eat Sweet-Meats, or Biskets, or ſuch things as they had. But I am ſure we had nothing there. I was never among you before, nor ever Convicted any of you.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to make her ſenſible of the Obligation ſhe is under by her Oath.

L. C. J. Ay, Ay; I will. Look you Miſtreſs, you muſt take notice, here is the Life of a Man in queſtion, which is a thing of great Conſideration. And for you to have any concern in taking away the Life of a Man, if it be upon falſe Grounds, is a very diſmal thing; beſides, that there is a thing which is yet of greater weight and moment to you your ſelf, it concerns your own immortal Soul. You muſt conſider, what Guilt you contract upon your ſelf, if you tell a Lie; but there is a much greater Guilt contracted, if you offer to ſwear a Lie in a Court of Juſtice, upon a Cauſe of this Concernment. Conſider, I tell you, you are in the Preſence of Almighty God, that ſeeth into the Hearts of all Mankind; that is the Avenger of all Lying and Perjury; that may juſtly ſink you into Hell if you offer to ſwear a Falſhood. Therefore, I charge you, in the Name and Preſence of that great God, the Judge of Heaven and Earth, to anſwer me truly to this Queſtion: Are theſe things that you have ſworn here true?

Hilton. My Lord, they are every Word true. There is a Gentlewoman here, one Mrs. Collingwood, that ſhall witneſs, I ſet them down that Day; and went away to the Recorder, and gave him an Account of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, if you have done, go over.

L. Ch. Juſt. No, hold Sir, will the Priſoner ask her any Queſtions?

Mr. Roſewell. Yes my Lord with your Leave.

Lord Ch. Juſt. Ay, in God's Name, what you will, that is fitting to ask.

Mr. Roſewell. Miſtriſs, what is your Name?

Hilton. My Name is Hilton.

Mr. Roſewell. Was your Name ever Shaftoe?

Hilton. Yes, but my Name now is Hilton.

Mr. Roſewell. Or otherwiſe Smith, I ſuppoſe: for I have heard ſo.

Hilton. No Sir.

Mr. Roſewell. Then Mrs. Hilton, upon the Oath you have taken, (for I hope you have obſerved what my Lord has ſaid to you about the Sin, and Danger of Falſe-ſwearing.) ——

Hilton. Mr. Roſewell, God forbid I ſhould ſtand here to tell ſuch a Lie as this; if it were not all Truth to my Knowledge, I would rather ſpeak leſs than more.

Mr. Roſewell. Were you at Rotherhith that 14th Day of September?

Hilton. Yes, I was. I was with Mrs. Smith at her Houſe over Night, and went with her to Rotherhith at Seven a Clock next Morning.

Mr. Roſewell. Whoſe Houſe were you at there?

Hilton. I cannot ſay whoſe Houſe it was of my own Knowledge, for I was never there before in all my Life; but they ſaid it was one Captain Daniel's Houſe.

Mr. Roſewell. What Street was it in?

Hilton. I do not know what Street it was in, it was near Weſt-Lane.

Mr. Roſewell. What kind of Buildings were there in the Street?

Hilton. Over againſt it, a little way from the Houſe, is a Bridge, that we went over; I believe it may be ſome ten or twelve Doors from the Houſe.

Mr. Roſewell. In the Street, you ſay, over againſt the Houſe?

Hilton. A little way from it. Mr. Roſewell, if you do remember, (I can remember theſe things very well,) there were Shutters in the Windows, and the Sun came in, and you were afraid leaſt the People that went by ſhould hear you. Firſt, There was not light enough, and you deſired that one part of the Shutters might be opened; which was done: And then you deſired that half might be ſhut again, for fear the People ſhould over hear you.

Mr. Roſewell. What kind of Entrance is there into the Houſe?

Hilton. There is an Entry, and from the Entry we went into a little Hall, the Rooms were but of a low Height.

Mr. Roſewell. Was it in an upper Room, or a lower Room that I preached?

Hilton. It was in an upper Room, you were up two pair of Stairs, the Chamber was hung with ſad coloured Paper, and a ſad coloured Bed was in the Room; upon the Left hand, as you ſtood, there was a Cheſt of Sweet Wood ſtood, and a little Cabinet upon it, and a Glaſs over that; and upon the Right hand, on the ſide of the Chimney, was a Cloſet. I took very good Notice of all theſe things.

Mr. Roſewell. Two pair of Stairs, upon your Oath, you ſay it was?

Hilton. Yes, It was two Pair of Stairs, upon my Oath, Sir.

Mr. Roſewell. How many Steps, Mrs. Hilton, were there?

Hilton. They were low Stairs, eight or nine to a Pair, I think; I did not number them, Mr. Roſewell.

Mr. Roſewell. The other ſays, there was a little Room up ſix Steps; and that I was but one Pair of Stairs high.

Hilton. And there was a Garret, my Lord; which I am ſure there was above four Hundred People there at that Meeting.

Mr. Roſewell. Did you ſee that Number of People there?

Hilton. Yes, I did.

Mr. Roſewell. If you were within in the Room, how could you ſee them all there that were below, and in the Garret, as you ſay?

Hilton. When you went down to refreſh your ſelf, to Dinner, as I ſuppoſe; ſaid I to Mrs. Smith, for the Lord's ſake let me go out, for I am affrighted out of my Wits to hear ſuch Stuff as this.

L. C. Juſt. Frightful Stuff indeed.

Hilton. Says ſhe, you cannot go out till they all go; there is no Body to let you out; but I would fain have been gone out thence.

Mr. Roſewell. What time did you come thither, ſay you?

Hilton. We came by Seven a Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Roſewell. How did the Exerciſe begin?

Hilton. Between Seven and Eight.

Mr. Roſewell. I do not ask you what time, but how it began.

Hilton. You made a kind of a Prayer, I do not underſtand your way, for I never was uſed to your Meetings, I never was at any before in my Life. You took your Text, (I cannot be poſitive which, but it was) either out of the 20th or 21ſt Chapter of Geneſis.

Mr. Roſewell. But can you remember theſe Words, and not the Chapter?

Hilton. I can tell you more that you ſaid, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Roſewell. Mrs. Hilton ——

L. C. Juſt. Let her go on; you ask her a Queſtion, and will not ſtay for an Anſwer, but go

go to another thing. She is telling you what was done.

Hilton. This I am poſitive in, it was the 20th or 21 Chapter of Geneſis: the Story was about Abraham and Sarah, how he bid her call her ſelf his Siſter.

Mr. Roſewell. That is the 20th Chapter.

L. C. Juſt. Nay, I ſuppoſe you can remember the Text better than this Woman.

Hilton. I believe it was the 20th, that you did moſt expound upon that Day; for you ſaid at laſt Abimelech made Abraham a Preſent, which you did think might be about 20 Guineas.

Mr. Reſewell. I ſee you are thorough paced.

L. Ch. Juſt. Methinks ſhe brought away much of your precious Stuff for one time upon my word.

Mr. Roſewell. How long did you ſtay there, Mrs. Hilton?

Hilton. I ſtay'd there from the time you came in till the end of all; about eleven or Twelve a Clock you went down to Dinner; They that were there ſtay'd till you came up agen, which was in the Afternoon; and then you began upon a Text which you took in the Pſalms, I think; I cannot poſitively ſay where; but a new Text you did take, that you did.

Mr. Roſewell. In the Pſalms did you ſay?

Hilton. And if it pleaſe you Sir, I never ſaw you but then, and now, in my Life.

Mr. Roſewell. What Habit was I in?

Hilton. You had a Camlet Cloak on that had an Eye of blew in it, and a mourning Hatband about your Hat; and upon the Bed-ſide by me ſate Mr. Atkinſon in a mourning Cloak, and his two Boys.

Mr. Roſewell. There was ſome Stop or Pauſe you ſay; you call it a Dinner?

Hilton. You went to Dinner, I ſuppoſe; I know not where you were.

Mr. Roſewell. Pray how did the Exerciſe begin in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot very well tell.

Mr. Roſewell. Was you there to the End of it?

Hilton. To the very End of all.

Mr. Roſewell. What Pſalm was read, or what Chapter that I preached upon?

Hilton. Sir, I cannot remember what your Pſalm is. Theſe are the Words that you ſaid, and that you Preached. Sir, I cannot remember how all theſe came in, nor all the Stuff that was ſaid.

L. C. Juſt. She ſays ſhe cannot remember all your Stuff.

Hilton. I was never uſed to a Conventicle in my Life; and I would I had not been there then.

Mr. Roſewell. What was the Text I preached upon?

Hilton. In the Morning it was, I tell you the 20th or 21ſt Chapter of Geneſis. But the Heads of your Sermon, and after you had talked about the King, and all thoſe things, was about Abraham and Sarah ——

Mr. Roſewell. But what was the Text in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot tell that truly.

Mr. Roſewell. Then upon what Occaſion were thoſe Words in the Morning about flocking to the King to cure the Evil?

Hilton. Sir, you ſaid——

L. C. Juſt. How can any Body tell what occaſion you could have. You had no Occaſion from that Text, nor any other Text that I know of to talk of the King, or the King's Evil.

Mr. Roſewell. But I ſpeak of the Coherence of the Diſcourſe, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. You Preach without any Coherence, or you never had been brought here. When you give your ſelf the Liberty to talk of theſe things, you ramble from your Text.

Mr. Roſewell. I mean by it, my Lord, what part of the Chapter it was that did lead to it.

L. C. J. No Man living can tell; it was the Devil led you to talk Treaſon; The Indictment tells you ſo, that you had not the Fear of God before your Eyes, but were moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil to do it. Who leads People to do all ſorts of Wickedneſs but the Devil? you can give no reaſon for it your ſelf, nor no one elſe.

Mr. Roſewell. Were theſe Words delivered all in the Forenoon Diſcourſe?

Hilton. I do not know what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon: I am ſure we had no Dinner.

Mr. Roſewell. But was it all before or after I broke off, and went down?

Hilton. Before, Sir.

L. C. Juſt. She ſays it was before you went to Dinner; but for her part ſhe had no Dinner at all ſhe ſays. If you have done with her, then go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mrs. Joan Farrar?

Farrar. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord, and the Jury; were you preſent at this Houſe when Mr. Roſewell preached there?

Farrar. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him ſay?

Farrar. Do you ask me of the 14th of September firſt, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes.

L. C. Juſt. Why? were you there at any other time?

Farrar. Yes, ſeveral times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, take your own way of delivering your Evidence, and give an Account what you know of the Priſoner.

L. C. Juſt. But hark you, be ſure you tell nothing but what is Truth. You muſt conſider, here is the Life of a Man at the Stake, and your own immortal Soul is at ſtake too. You are in the Preſence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, that ſeeth into all your Actions and Thoughts, and ſearcheth the Hearts of all Mankind, and therefore have a Care of contracting any Guilt upon your ſelf by telling any Lie; be ſure to ſay nothing but what is Truth.

Farrar. Sir, I was not in the Room with him; I was in a Parlour or Hall, what do you call it, a low Room; and he was up Stairs above it.

Mr. Att. Gen. But were you in the Congregation? Were there any other of the Hearers in that Room among whom you were?

Farrar. Yes, Sir; there were a great many of them there, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him ſay?

Farrar. Sir, concerning the Evil was the firſt thing I heard him ſay; and he made it ſo, that it was not the King that cured it, but it was they, they ſhould Flock to. It is we they ſhould Flock to, ſays he; for we are they which

which are the Prieſts and the Prophets, that by our Prayers do cure the Grievances of the People.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him ſay more in that Diſcourſe?

Farrar. The next that I obſerved was, he ſaid, we had had now two wicked Kings together; but I could not tell who he compared them two wicked Kings to; but he bid the People ſtand to their Principles, and in time they ſhould overcome their Enemies.

Mr. Recorder. Pray have you heard him at any other time?

Farrar. Yes, I have heard him at other times.

Mr. Recorder. Did you take Notice of any thing he ſaid againſt the Government?

Mr. Roſewell. I beſeech your Lordſhip, may theſe leading Queſtions be asked?

L. C. J. Yes, I have told you already to ſhew your Practice. It is not at all a leading Queſtion. What did you hear him ſay at any other time about the Government?

Farrar. In a Mill, it was by Rotherhith Wall, at one Hudſon's, he prayed that he might not offend the Lord in not praying for the King; but the Lord might pleaſe to open his Eyes, or turn the Times.

L. C. J. Can you remember when that was?

Farrar. It was the 17th Day of July, —— no, of Auguſt to my beſt Remembrance; and upon the 17th Chapter of Geneſis.

L. C. J. That he preached upon there, did he?

Farrar. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſay any thing at any other time?

Farrar. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What do you remember about People in Scarlet?

L. C. J. Tell us what you have heard him ſay elſe?

Farrar. At Weſt-lane end, at one Paul Shed's, I heard him preach concerning the Fire of London about eighteen Years ago. That there was a certain great rich Man, that lived in Gracechurch-ſtreet; he ſaid, he needed not name him, he ſuppoſed they all knew who he was; and he ſaid there went a poor Man to him, not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter, an Houſe-keeper, a labouring Man, and told him how to quench the Fire; and then he preached, that if it had not been for that great Man, that Fire had not been, nor the Fires in Southwark or Wapping, if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs ſince.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ask her?

Mr. Recorder. What have you heard him ſay elſe?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we have done, I think.

L. C. J. Anſwer my Brother Jenner's Queſtion.

Mr. Recorder. What about People in Scarlet?

Farrar. Then after he had preached concerning the Fire, he ſaid it was a fine Sight to ſee Fools in Scarlet Gowns; and he heard the Recorder was to be made a Judge.

L. C. J. He hears ſtrange Stories it ſeems. What do you make of this Brother Jenner?

Mr. Roſewell. God forbid, my Lord, this ſhould be true.

L. C. J. You ſee ſhe ſwears it.

Mr. J. Withins. Mr. Roſewell, will you ask her any Queſtions?

Mr. Roſewell. Miſtreſs, you ſay you were at the Meeting on the 14th of September; pray in whoſe Houſe was it?

Farrar. It was at a Houſe at the end of Weſt-lane; there are a Row of Houſes that face to the Fields.

Mr. Roſewell. But whoſe Houſe was it?

Farrar. They ſaid it was one Daniel's Houſe.

Mr. Roſewell. In what Room of the Houſe were you?

Farrar. In the lower Room.

Mr. Roſewell. Did you ſee me there?

Farrar. Sir, you were gone up Stairs before I came in.

Mr. Roſewell. You did not ſee me there upon your Oath?

Farrar. No, my Lord, I did not ſee him.

L. C. J. She ſaid at firſt, you were gone up before ſhe came, and ſhe was in a lower Room.

Farrar But I knew his Voice.

L. C. J. Did you know his Voice?

Farrar. Yes, Sir; I had heard him ſeveral times.

Mr. Roſewell. Did not you tell ſome Body that you heard none of theſe Words?

L. C. J. Were you aſleep all the while?

Farrar. No, Sir, I was not aſleep, I did not Sleep while I was in the Room. I never ſlept in your Preſence in my Life.

Mr. Roſewell. Were you there at the beginning? What time came you in?

Farrar. Sir, I believe you had read half your Prayer; I was at the beginning of the Sermon.

Mr. Roſewell. Who came along with you?

Farrar. I came alone; my Child was not well, and ſo I came late.

Mr. Roſewell. What was the Chapter I was upon?

Farrar. It was upon the 21ſt of Geneſis, Sir.

Mr. Roſewell. Upon what Verſe of the 21ſt of Geneſis, was it that you heard theſe Words?

Farrar. I cannot tell what Verſe it was.

Mr. Roſewell. I ask my Lord, becauſe I went diſtinctly upon Verſes.

L. C. J. Prithee Man, I care not how thou went'ſt on.

Mr. Roſewell. Cannot you tell how they came in?

Farrar. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Nor any one elſe, I dare ſay; how ſuch Words can come in.

Mr. Roſewell. Were the Words ſpoken together in that Exerciſe that you have ſworn?

Farrar. Yes, in that Exerciſe.

Mr. Roſewell. How long did you ſtay there?

Farrar. Till you had done, I believe it was two a Clock.

Mr. Roſew. Was it in the Forenoon?

Farrar. We had no Dinner at all; I cannot tell what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon.

Mr. Roſew. Was it all ſpoken upon that Chapter, upon your Oath?

Farrar. Truly, Sir, I think it was upon your firſt Text.

L. C. J. If you have done with her, let her go over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſhall call one or two more of his Auditors at other times, that will give ſome account of his Way. Where is your Man, Mr. Atterbury? What is his Name?

Mr.

Mr. Atterbury. Peter. But here is one of the Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear him then. What is his Name?

(He was ſworn.)

Mr. Atterbury. Robert Cook, he ſays.

Mr. Recorder. Were you an Officer in this place?

Cook. Yes, in St. Mary Maudlin's I was; Saint Mary Magdalen Bermondſey Pariſh.

Mr. Recorder. Were you at the executing of any Proceſs againſt Roſewell's Conventicle?

Cook. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I had a Warrant from Sir Thomas Jenner, to ſerve at one Weldy's Houſe a Brick-layer in Rotherhith; and when I came to the Houſe to ſerve it, there was abundance of People, and a great Riot was made, but no Blows I confeſs; but a great Tumult of People, that had not I, and the Beadle, one Samuel Bennet by Name, cauſed the People to ſtand clear, I do not know but there might have been miſchief done. Of which, we upon that gave an account to Sir Thomas Jenner, and he hath bound ſome of the People over to the Seſſions.

L. C. J. What do you mean by this, Gentlemen?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done; this is only about ſome Diſturbances that the King's Officers meet with, in executing Proceſs againſt theſe Conventicles.

L. C. J. But what is this to the Priſoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are ſome would have him called; but I confeſs we cannot make any uſe of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, only as to what is hinted in the Indictment, that he did it to diſturb the Peace.——

L. C. J. Piſh, that is nothing, the Officer did his Duty; but what is that to this Buſineſs? Have you done, Gentlemen, for the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done.

L. C. J. Then Mr. Roſewell, now is your time to make your Defence; and you ſhall have time to make it as full as you will.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, may I have the Favour to have the Indictment read agen in Latin?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, if you will. Read it agen.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip, only the Words, my Lord.

Cl. of Crown. (reads.) In quadam illicita aſſemblat', in præſentia & auditu diverſorum ſubdit' dicti Domini Regis, adtunc & ibidem illicitè & ſeditioſè aſſemblat' & congregat', aſſeruit & declaravit quod populus (ſubdit' dicti Domini Regis nunc, innuendo) coadunationem fecere (Anglice made a flocking) dicto Domino Regi nunc, ſub prætextu ſanandi morbum regni (Anglice the King's Evil) quod ipſe (dictum Dominum regem nunc, iterum inuendo) facere non poteſt; ſed nos ſumus illi (ſeipſum Thomam Roſewell & al' ſeditioſas & proditor' perſon' inuendo) ad quos illi (ligeos ſubdit' dict' Domini regis nunc, inuendo) debent accedere (Anglice flock to) quia nos (ſeipſum predict' Thomam Roſewell & al' ſedit' & proditor' perſon' iterum inuendo) ſumus Sacerdotes & Prophetæ qui precibus, dolores ipſorum (ligeos ſubdit' dicti Domini regis nunc, iterum inuendo) *ſanaremus. Mr. Roſewell. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, that which I object againſt, and deſire to be ſatisfied in by your Lordſhip, is this; I am charged with ſpeaking words about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil; and it is in the Indictment called Morbus Regni Anglici, that is, the Diſeaſe of the Engliſh Kingdom——

L. C. J. No, no; It is Morbus Regni, Anglicè the King's Evil.

Mr. Roſewell. I do not underſtand how Morbus Regni can be the King's Evil.

L. C. J. Therefore becauſe there is no apt Word in the Law for that Diſtemper, they help it up by the Word Anglicè to ſhew what they meant.

Mr. Roſewell. But my Lord, I underſtand there are proper Words for the Diſeaſe; as Struma, and Scrofula, thoſe are proper Words for it, not Morbus Regni.

L. C. J. Not at all in Law, thoſe may be the Words uſed among Phyſicians; but in legal Proceedings we are to keep up exactly to the legal Names and Phraſes; and where we have not an uſual Word, then we help it up by Anglices: And ſo here we expreſs that very Diſtemper, which is called by the Name of the King's Evil, by a Word framed as near to a Law Phraſe as we can; and to ſhew our meaning in it we add, Anglicè the King's Evil.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, is that the Phraſe that is proper for it in Law?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very well expreſſed to ſhew what is meant.

Mr. Roſewell. But my Lord, Morbus Regni is in Engliſh properly the Diſeaſe of the Kingdom.

L. C. J. It is ſo, the Diſeaſe of the Kingdom; if they had gone no further, but left it there, it might have had ſuch an Interpretation put upon it. But becauſe the words are ſo ambiguous in Latin, they are reduced to a Certainty, by putting an Anglicè to them.

Mr. Roſewell. I thought it had been Anglici. My Lord, there is another Phraſe that I object againſt, it ſays Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges inſimul. My Lord, this cannot be underſtood of two Kings one after another; but inſimul makes it to be both at once.

L. C. J. No, we have had now together two wicked Kings.

Mr. Roſewell. That we do not uſe to expreſs ſo in Latin.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. The Words do thus ſound in Engliſh.

Mr. Roſewell. Here are two Words Inſimul and nunc that do ſignify the preſent time. My Lord, I am now only ſpeaking all this while upon the Hypotheſis that theſe Words were ſpoken by me; for I ſtill do and always muſt deny the Theſis.

L. C. J. We take it ſo.

Mr. Roſewell. It ſhould have been Succeſſivè.

L. C. J. Then it had not agreed with your Words. For the Witneſſes ſwear that you ſaid we have now had two wicked Kings together, and not ſucceſſively.

Mr. Roſewell. If that be an Angliciſm, this cannot be true Latin.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be a Blunder in the Latin, it was a Blunder of your making; for you ſpoke it ſo in Engliſh, and the Indictment in Latin muſt exactly purſue your Engliſh.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, here is another Expreſſion, that they ſuffered Romanam ſuperſtitionem, Popery to come in.

L. C. J. Ay, is not that well expreſſed?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, there may be Superſtition in the Worſhip of the Church of Rome, and yet that not be the thing we call Popery.

L. C. J. There may ſo, you ſay right; but then this comes under the ſame reaſon, as the former Phraſe you objected againſt about Morbus Regni. Becauſe Romana ſuperſtitio is ſuch a general Word, and becauſe there are ſeveral Superſtitions in the Romiſh Church, abundance of them; and this may make it uncertain; and becauſe we have no other Word to expreſs what we call Popery by, therefore there is an Anglicè put in, to ſhew what is meant.

Mr. Roſewell. Then my Lord, it is ſaid in eorum conſpectu: is that right, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, Anglicè under their Noſes.

Mr. Roſew. That is in their Sight.

L. C. J. Pray how would you put that into Latin, under their Noſes?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, if I ſhould ſpeak according to the other parts of the Latin of this Indictment, which your Lordſhips ſays muſt exactly purſue the Engliſh, I would render it Sub naribus illorum.

L. C. J. Such People ſuffer Conventicles under their Noſes, in eorum Conſpectu.

Mr. J. Holloway. 'Tis not your Noſe that ſees.

L. C. J. Suffer Rebellion under your Noſes; are theſe things Sub naribus, or in Conſpectu?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, this could not poſſibly be ſpoken of the late King, and this King; when the Precedent King died a profeſſed zealous Proteſtant; and his preſent Majeſty has ſo often, and earneſtly declared againſt it.

L. C. J. We know that very well; but yet withal we know 'twas the Pretence of Popery and Arbitrary Power, and thoſe things that brought that bleſſed Martyr to the Scaffold; and the great Cry now at this Day by all Factious, and ſeditious buſy Fellows, is againſt Popery; as if it were juſt breaking in upon us, and the Government abetted it; when it is all falſe, nothing more untrue; the Indictment calls it ſo, ſays theſe Words are ſpoken falsò, & malitiosè; and all Treaſons are ſo.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, there is another thing, Si ipſi ſtarent ad Fundamentalia eorum, Anglicè if they would ſtand to their Principles, or Principals; for I know not how it is in the Indictment. Pray, my Lord, How comes Fundamentalia to ſignifie Principles?

L. C. J. Their Principles, that is their Foundations, or Fundamentals. If the Foundations be deſtroyed, what can the righteous do? Says the Pſalmiſt. The Latin Bible expreſſeth it by Fundamentalia.

Mr. Roſew. Then it is ſi ipſi in the third Perſon; now my Lord, in common Senſe that muſt needs refer to the two wicked Kings, that were ſpoken of juſt before; or to the King, and his Subjects ſpoken of afterwards; and then ſure it cannot be Treaſon.

L. C. J. No, they; that is, I and you that are here. 'Twas ſpoken to your Congregation. If they would ſtand to their Principles, then come the broken Platters, &c.

Mr. Roſew. If it were ſpoken to them, and of them, it muſt have been you, or we. Then it is added in the end, my Lord, Fractis Patinis, broken Platters: Your Lordſhip has remembred me of that Word. My Lord, I did hear that Miſtreſs Smith did ſwear at Kingſton Aſſizes, it was Pewter Platters.

L. C. J. I do not know what ſhe ſwore there; now I am ſure ſhe ſwears as it is in the Indictment.

Mr. Roſew. Miſtreſs Smith, Pray did not you ſwear it was Pewter Platters at Kingſton?

Smith. No, I never ſaid otherwiſe than I do now; and that is, broken Platters.

Mr. Roſewell. I did hear ſhe ſwore Pewter then. But, my Lord, I conceive, if it refers to me, and the People that were there, it ſhould have been as the former Sentence is in the firſt Perſon; We have had, &c. but here it is changed into the third Perſon, and therefore cannot be ſo meant.

L. C. Juſt. But it plainly ſpeaks its own meaning, that it is meant of the People there.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, then as to theſe Inuendo's, I ſee there are Eight or Ten of them. Whether are theſe to make ſuch a Conſtruction of a Man's meaning, which doth not otherwiſe ſufficiently appear, as to bring a Man under the guilt of Treaſon?

L. C. Juſt. I tell you, the meaning is plain; if you and we, ſuch falſe Traytors as are ſaid to be there aſſembled with you, will but ſtand to our Principles, we ſhall overthrow and deſtroy our Enemies with broken Platters and Ramshorns.

Mr. Roſewell. It is ſaid here ipſe non timebat quin——Of whom ſhould I ſpeak that ipſe?——

L. C. J. You were ſpeaking of your ſelf and your Congregation.

Mr. Roſewell. But that is in the third Perſon, and the ſingular Number.

* Mr. Sol. Gen. No, the Jurors that find this Indictment ſay, that he ſaid ſo, and that muſt be in the third Perſon. * Mr. Finch.

Mr. Roſewell. That is not according to the reſt.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. They, is the People with him; and he, is he himſelf; that is plain, and can have no other Conſtruction.

Mr. Roſewell. Now, my Lord, will your Lordſhip pleaſe to accept a free Declaration of the Truth of this matter?

L. C. Juſt. Ay, ay, go now to the Fact; now we are got over the Exceptions to the Indictment. To anſwer the Fact is moſt proper at this time.

Mr. Roſew.

Mr. Roſewell. Then here in the Preſence of the great God of Heaven, the righteous Judge of all the Earth; before whom you and I, and all that are here, muſt one Day appear, at that terrible Bar of impartial Juſtice, (and a glorious Tribunal it will be) to give an account of all things that we have done in the Body, whether they be good or evil; and I am told by my bleſſed Redeemer, (who ſhall alſo be my Judge that Day,) that an account muſt be given of every idle Word that I ſhall utter, how much more for Lying and Perjury, and Falſe-witneſs bearing, as your Lordſhip, (I humbly thank you for it,) did very ſeaſonably ſuggeſt to thoſe that have witneſſed theſe things againſt me; I ſay, in the Preſence of that great God, and this Honourable Bench of Reverend Judges, and you Gentlemen of the Jury and my dear Countrymen, that have been now ſworn, as well as returned by the Proceſs of Law for that end; I do here moſt ſolemnly declare the Truth unto you, as in the Preſence of this God I ſhall anſwer it hereafter. And I ſhall begin with the latter part of theſe Words firſt; where this Indictment ends; for that ſeems to refer to ſome things of the late Times, and alſo to my Treaſonable Intentions now. My Lord, and dear Countrymen, becauſe I heard ſomething mentioned as to the late unhappy Civil Wars in theſe Nations; I can declare, my Father was no ways concerned in thoſe Wars, for he was dead before they began; and I was then but a Child, and did not underſtand the thing. But for the Death of the King, (Death did I ſay? that is too ſoft a Word; the Murther, the barbarous Murther of His Majeſty King Charles the Firſt, whom I had once the Happineſs to ſee the Face of; or rather the Unhappineſs to ſee in reſpect of his Condition at that time; being at Dinner under a Tree, with ſome few Perſons about him, which very much affected my Heart, tho' then but young. So far was I from being one that would compare him to Jeroboam, &c. as your Lordſhip will hear, that) I always bewailed and abhorred that Act. For my preſent Sovereign, I declare in the Preſence of God, I honour him with my Soul, and daily pray for him; and if I could do him any real good, I would Sacrifice my Life moſt chearfully to do it; I would die at his Foot to do him any real good. My Lord, I was once threatned with the loſs of my Life for declaring for His Majeſty in his Exile; when, it is well known, few durſt appear in thoſe Days on the behalf of an injured Prince. It was objected againſt me, that I never prayed for Oliver Cromwell, that had Uſurped the Government. My Lord, I knew he ſtood upon a falſe Bottom; he was an Uſurper. And for declaring, that the Kingdom would never be at Peace till the Right Heir, our Sovereign that now is, were reſtored to his Right, I was threatned that a Gibbet ſhould be ſet at my Church Porch, and I hanged upon it, or at my own Door. I preached upon that place of Scripture, Ezek. 21. and the 27th Verſe, I will overturn, overturn, overturn; and it ſhall be no more, until he come whoſe Right it is, and I will give it him. And I declared in my Sermon the ſeveral overturnings, that God hath given them then in Power. And tho' they threatned me, yet God preſerved me then here at Home, as he did my dear Sovereign abroad; for whom I have prayed many hundreds and thouſands of times. And it is well known, immediately after his Majeſty's happy Reſtoration, I did upon one of His Majeſty's Days preached upon that Subject: For the Tranſgreſſions of a Land, many ſhall be the Princes thereof. I preached concerning the Excellency of Monarchy, which I ſhewed to be the chiefeſt and beſt of Governments, practiced almoſt every where: And I proved it from the Example of the great God of Heaven, the Monarch of all the World, down to ſome of the meaneſt Species of Creatures. I ſhewed it was the Government God had ſet up in his Church; appointing the Lord Chriſt to be the King there: Among the Angels there was the Prince of them: Among the Celeſtial Bodies, the Sun in the Firmament——

L. C. J. Mr. Roſewell, I am very unwilling to give you any Interruption, becauſe of the Condition you ſtand in, being a Priſoner pleading for your Life, upon an Accuſation of High-Treaſon. But I tell you, theſe things that you have now inſiſted upon are not at all to the purpoſe, as to what you are brought here for. You are not here Arraigned for your good Works, but for your evil Works. If you commend your ſelf for two Hours together; it ſignifies not one Farthing; and the Gentlemen of the Jury muſt let it go for nothing. It only ſerves to pleaſe your Humour of talking, and captivate the Auditory; but it is not at all to the purpoſe. Keep cloſe to the matter, that it is incumbent upon you to anſwer; to the Buſineſs you are upon here. It is our Duty who are upon our Oaths, and who are accountable to the Government and the Law for what we do, to ſee that things be done according to Law. You are not here called in Queſtion for your good Works or Actions; but for Treaſonable and Seditious Words. I would to God, you had never done worſe than what you have ſaid of your ſelf. But here is an Indictment for Traiterous Preaching at one particular Place, and one particular Time; anſwer to that, The Jury muſt go, not according to your way of Speaking; but according to the Evidence, relating to the Matters laid in this Indictment. Do not talk of your Preaching for Monarchy; and your Overturn, Overturn, Overturn; for if this be true, that the Witneſſes have Sworn againſt you, you have at once overturned all the good you ever did, or ſaid in your Life before.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I know very well, one ſuch evil Action is enough to marr a Life of former good ones. But this that I have ſaid was to ſhew, how inconſiſtent thoſe things that they have Sworn, are with my conſtantly declared Judgment and former Practice.

L. C. Juſt. There are abundance of People, to whom the King has formerly extended Mercy, not only his Pardon, but even all the Promotions their ambitious Fancies could make them pretend to: But 'tis well known, the Devil has not had more ready Inſtruments to carry on bloody Deſigns for the Murthering this Gracious King, their Princely Benefactor, than theſe very Men that were thus gratified and advanced by him. Therefore, we can ſay nothing to what is alledged of former Loyalty; the Devil ſurprizes Men into theſe things; they do them as the Indictment ſays, by the Inſtigation of the Devil. Keep to the Matter before you.

Mr. Roſew. Well then, my Lord, to cut ſhort. As to the Buſineſs ſince his Majeſty's Return: I have been a conſtant Obſerver of his Days; and particularly the 30th of January I have always obſerved as a Day of Humiliation: And I did upon one of thoſe Days preach upon that Text——

L. C. Juſt. And all this ſignifies juſt nothing; and upon that Day you went to a Conventicle againſt the Law, and Preached there; which ſhews, what a conformable Man to the Government and the Law you are. You can have your Congregation of Hundreds of People, and I know not what; now I tell you all this makes nothing againſt you, nor doth all your Commendation make any thing for you.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I do not know any Law of the Land that is againſt Preaching the Goſpel.

L. C. Juſt. Yes, in Conventicles to preach, is againſt the Law of the Land.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I humbly conceive it is the Circumſtance of Number that makes the Tranſgreſſion.

L. C. Juſt. It is not only a Circumſtance, but the Subſtance to preach in a Conventicle, and all againſt Law.

Mr. Roſew. If you call that a Tranſgreſſion to preach the Goſpel, I humbly acknowledge my ſelf a Tranſgreſſor.

L. C. Juſt. I tell you it is a Tranſgreſſion; but it is not ſuch a Tranſgreſſion as that for which you are here Indicted: But becauſe you commend your ſelf ſo much; a Man, I muſt tell you, that every Day doth notoriouſly tranſgreſs the Laws of the Land, need not be ſo fond of giving himſelf Commendations for his Obedience to the Government and the Laws.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I was only ſaying that upon the 30th of January I preached upon that Text; 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. I exhort therefore, that firſt of all Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions and giving of Thanks be made for all Men; for Kings and all that are in Authority; that under them we may lead quiet, and peaceable Lives, in all Godlineſs and Honeſty.

L. C. Juſt. Amen! I ſay to that Petition.

Mr. Roſew. Amen! I am ſure I ſay to it, with all my Soul; and it is my daily Prayer to my God for my Sovereign. And here I ſhewed, that it was the Duty of Subjects to pray for their Prince——

L. C. Juſt. I tell thee, I care not a Farthing what thy Text was, nor thy Doctrine; I wiſh you had been at Church tho', and been conformable to the Laws. But this is nothing to our Buſineſs.

Mr. Roſew. I had therein a ſharp Reproof and Invective againſt thoſe that inſtead of praying for their Civil Head, cut it off; and thoſe that deſign and plot againſt the Government.

L. C. Juſt. You did abundance of good by your Sermon, no doubt; I ſhall not now ſtand to examine that.

Mr. Roſew. So far was I from harbouring any Traiterous Thought——

L. C. Juſt. Come, Come; All this is beſides the Cuſhion; come to the Matter that is here before us Man. I would not reſtrain you of any part of your Defence, either in Time, or any thing elſe; but let us not have the time taken up with that which no way concerns our Queſtion. Our Buſineſs relates to what was ſaid at your Meeting, at that Time the Witneſſes ſpeak of.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, as to the Truth of this particular Caſe, I ſhall now declare all that paſt then; as in the Preſence of that God who ſearcheth the Heart, and trieth the Reins, and who ſhall judge us all. Upon the 14th Day of September laſt, I did preach to ſome People that were met at a Friend's Houſe, one Capt. Daniel in Rotherhith: and as my Courſe hath been to expound the Scriptures, (to make them underſtand them) I was, my Lord, that Day upon the 20th Chapter of Geneſis. The Chapter is about Abraham and Abimelech King of Gerar. Now, my Lord, will you pleaſe that I ſhall deliver to you what was ſaid, by repeating it by Word of Mouth, or read it.——

L. C. Juſt. No, no; I do not deſire any of your Expoſitions, or Preachments; Anſwer to the Indictment, and what is charged upon you there.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I am about it, in telling you what was really ſaid; and I ask the favour of delivering in Court what I then delivered to them. My Lord, it was thus: In the 2d Verſe it is ſaid, And Abraham ſaid of Sarah his Wife, ſhe is my Siſter; From whence I obſerved, that he had been guilty of this once before, in the 12th Chapter, when he told the very ſame Lie to Pharaoh King of Egypt. And thence I raiſed this Note, That a Good Man, or a Friend of God might fall into the ſame Sin once and agen. And in proof of it, I brought three, or four Inſtances. That of Lot in the foregoing Chapter, his falling twice into the ſame Sins of Drunkenneſs and Inceſt with his own Daughters. That of Samſon, in the 16th of Judges, (and there came in the mention of Dalilah, that ſhe ſpoke of, which ſhe only remembers the Name of, and not the Truth of the Quotation.) That of Peter's denying his Maſter, Once, twice, and agen; firſt, with a Lie; ſecondly, with an Oath; and thirdly, with an Imprecation. But the Proof which they in this Point have moſt diſtorted, is that of Jehoſaphat, who ſinfully joyned with two wicked Kings: Firſt, with a wicked Father, Ahab in his Expedition into the Land of the Syrians againſt Ramoth Gilead, 2 Chro. 18th Chapter; for which he is reproved as a great Tranſgreſſor, and threatned by the Prophet in the 19th Chapter, and the beginning: And yet he afterwards joyned with another wicked King, Ahaziah, Ahab's wicked Son, to go to Tarſhiſh; as we may ſee in the 20th Chapter, and the latter end. And here, my Lord, is the whole of the Buſineſs concerning the two wicked Kings. In the Preſence of the Holy and great God there was not one word ſpoken of the Kings of England, either King Charles the Firſt, or his preſent Majeſty. This was as to the two wicked Kings. And then, my Lord, I came to the 7th Verſe, which has theſe Words, He is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt Live. Upon this I obſerved, That the Prayers of God's Prophets have been very prevalent for the Healing, and helping of others in a time of need. And three Proofs I brought of this: The laſt of which, was that of the Prophet Iſaiah's praying for King Hezekiah in the time of his great and dangerous Sickneſs. But that which has reference to this Buſineſs, was that out of the 1 Kings 13. and the beginning; When the Prophet came to Bethel, and there rebuked Jeroboam, and propheſied againſt the Alter there; Jeroboam put forth his hand, and ſhook it at him, and ſaid, Lay hold of him

him; upon which the King's hand was dried up. Thereupon the King intreated the Prophet, that he would pray unto the Lord his God for him, that his hand might be reſtored, which the Prophet did; and the King's hand was reſtored again, and became as it was before. And here is the Buſineſs of Jeroboam. In the Preſence of God, I ſpeak it, there was not any the leaſt Compariſon of my Dear Sovereign to that accurſed wicked Prince Jeroboam, who made Iſrael to Sin: No, my very Soul trembled at the Thoughts of it when I heard it. Upon this Head I had this Sentence, or Obſervation (which I will give you to a Word.) If I were to die the next Moment, and appear before the glorious Tribunal of the Heavenly Majeſty, I tell not the leaſt Lie, or Equivocation, or Prevarication) That a Godly Man's Prayer is a ſovereign Cure of the King's Evil; whereby the meaneſt, or the pooreſt Chriſtian may gratify, and ſerve the greateſt Monarch. And this is not my Saying neither, but the Saying of an Expoſitor upon that very place of Scripture, out of whom I did quote it. Nor did I ſpeak of it, or he write of it, with reſpect to that particular Diſeaſe, that the Indictment calls Morbus Regni, but the King's Evil as the King's own Diſeaſe, in reference to Abimelech; who was King of Gerah. For it followeth in the Cloſe of the Chapter, God heard Abraham's Prayer, and healed Abimelech and all his Houſe. But as for that Word they ſpeak of; of the People's flocking to his Majeſty to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; and that we were Prieſts and Prophets to whom they muſt come for Cure; in the Preſence of the Eternal God there was not a Word of it. Then, my Lord, for that of the Ram's-horns; I ſhall obſerve how that came in by and by; but firſt I will premiſe, That all this that has been how ſpoken of, was upon the Expoſition of that Chapter in the Morning. In the Afternoon I preached upon a particular Text; I began with the reading of a Pſalm, and a Chapter; and ſo far I conceive it was after the manner and Uſage of the Church of England, which enjoyns the reading of the Scriptures as Part of its Worſhip. I Preach'd upon the 11th of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and the 12th Verſe, (tho one of the Witneſſes ſaid it was a Pſalm)——

L. C. J. She would not be poſitive, but ſhe thought a Pſalm, ſhe could not tell.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, it was the 11th of Heb. v. 12. the Words are theſe, Therefore ſprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, ſo many as the Stars of the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand which is by the Sea-ſhore innumerable. Upon which I had this Note, That the great God can effect great Matters by very ſmall and unlikely Means: As here, (of one) what was leſs than one? none at all: And this one too as good as Dead; and yet from him to raiſe as many as the Stars in the Sky, and the Sands on the Sea-ſhore. What great things did God effect by the Rod of Moſes? which was but a little Wand in his Hand, and yet a Sign and Symbol of Authority; as our Sheriffs white Staves are. Never was there any great Plague to be ſent upon the Enemy of God, and his Church, Pharaoh and his Ægyptians; but upon the ſtretching forth that little Rod, it came. And ſo, at the Siege of Jericho; What dreadful Dilapidations in that great City, did the Sound of the Rams-horns make? What a Terrible Army of the Enemies of the Iſraelites did Gideon's ſmall Hoſt deſtroy, with a few broken Pots or Pitchers? (much leſs did I mention Platters, or Pewter Diſhes; as I have been informed they firſt Swore.) And what a tremendous Champion did David ſtrike down with a Stone in a Sling? And what a glorious Work did our Lord Chriſt, the Son of David, do, in his curing the Blind Man with a little Clay and Spittle; more likely to dam up the Eyes of one that could well ſee, than to open the Eyes of one that was born Blind. Now here, my Lord, is the whole truth in the Preſence of the Eternal God. Here your Lordſhip ſees is mention made upon the ſecond Verſe of the Twentieth of Geneſis of two wicked Kings; but how? not (as they have repreſented it) with any Reflection upon the Kings of England: Nor were they ſpoken in that order as they have Sworn them; but as I have now repeated them. Here is mention of healing the King's Evil, and of Jeroboam; but no way in that manner as they ſay. And here is likewiſe mention of Rams-horns, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling; but not with the leaſt application to the Government, or reference to it, or Reflection upon it or the King: and this is the Truth. I have made an ingenuous Confeſſion of the whole as it paſſed, that your Lordſhip may ſee how much I am abuſed by theſe falſe Wretches. And if they have ſo good Memories as really, and indeed to remember what was then ſaid, their Memories and their Conſciences cannot but go along with me, and confirm what I have ſaid; that all that was ſpoken by me that Day, was as I have related it, without the leaſt Reflection upon, or Application to his former Majeſty and our preſent Sovereign, or either of them, or any thing relating to the Government. And if you be not convinced here, I am ſure there will be a Day come wherein you will find and ſee, that theſe are none of the King's Friends, but his Enemies, that thus have falſly accuſed an innocent, faithful Loyal Subject of Treaſon; a Crime which my very Soul abhors the thoughts of. In Proof whereof, if your Lordſhip will give me leave, I will now call my Witneſſes to Teſtify the Truth of all this Matter. And after this free and ingenuous Confeſſion of the Truth, and what the Witneſſes I ſhall call will teſtify about it, I hope, and truſt in my Good God, that he will let you my Dear Countrymen, ſee the Truth and Sincerity of my Heart in whatever Words were ſpoken by me. Had I been guilty of thoſe Things that are laid to my Charge, I were not worthy to live. Pray Mr. Cryer, Call Mr. Thomas Hudſon.

L. C. J. Ay; Come call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, One thing I would deſire to ſpeak to your Lordſhip. Your Lordſhip was ſpeaking, that what I declared of my former Loyalty was nothing to what the Witneſſes have depoſed; My Lord, I have read in a true Hiſtory, (I think the Scriptures will be owned by all Perſons that are here to be ſuch,) of two falſe Witneſſes, they were ſuch; they are called Sons of Belial; (I pray God theſe be not accounted Daughters of Belial) that Swore Naboth did blaſpheme God and the King. Doth your Lordſhip believe it?

L. C. J. What would you have of us, Man, by that Queſtion?

Mr. Roſew. I am confident, my Lord, your Lordſhip, and the Court, do not believe he did ſo.

L. C. J. The Scriptures tell us it was not true; Do you think we do not believe the Scrip-

Mr. Roſew. Well then, my Lord, to cut ſhort. As to the Buſineſs ſince his Majeſty's Return: I have been a conſtant Obſerver of his Days; and particularly the 30th of January I have always obſerved as a Day of Humiliation: And I did upon one of thoſe Days preach upon that Text——

I would not reſtrain you of any part of your Defence, either in Time, or any thing elſe; but let us not have the time taken up with that which no way concerns our Queſtion. Our Buſineſs relates to what was ſaid at your Meeting, at that Time the Witneſſes ſpeak of.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, as to the Truth of this particular Caſe, I ſhall now declare all that paſt then; as in the Preſence of that God who ſearcheth the Heart, and trieth the Reins, and who ſhall judge us all. Upon the 14th Day of September laſt, I did preach to ſome People that were met at a Friend's Houſe, one Capt. Daniel in Rotherhith: and as my Courſe hath been to expound the Scriptures, (to make them underſtand them) I was, my Lord, that Day upon the 20th Chapter of Geneſis. The Chapter is about Abraham and Abimelech King of Gerar. Now, my Lord, will you pleaſe that I ſhall deliver to you what was ſaid, by repeating it by Word of Mouth, or read it.——

L. C. Juſt. No, no; I do not deſire any of your Expoſitions, or Preachments; Anſwer to the Indictment, and what is charged upon you there.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I am about it, in telling you what was really ſaid; and I ask the favour of delivering in Court what I then delivered to them. My Lord, it was thus: In the 2d Verſe it is ſaid, And Abraham ſaid of Sarah his Wife, ſhe is my Siſter; From whence I obſerved, that he had been guilty of this once before, in the 12th Chapter, when he told the very ſame Lie to Pharaoh King of Egypt. And thence I raiſed this Note, That a Good Man, or a Friend of God might fall into the ſame Sin once and agen. And in proof of it, I brought three, or four Inſtances. That of Lot in the foregoing Chapter, his falling twice into the ſame Sins of Drunkenneſs and Inceſt with his own Daughters. That of Samſon, in the 16th of Judges, (and there came in the mention of Dalilah, that ſhe ſpoke of, which ſhe only remembers the Name of, and not the Truth of the Quotation.) That of Peter's denying his Maſter, Once, twice, and agen; firſt, with a Lie; ſecondly, with an Oath; and thirdly, with an Imprecation. But the Proof which they in this Point have moſt diſtorted, is that of Jehoſaphat, who ſinfully joyned with two wicked Kings: Firſt, with a wicked Father, Ahab in his Expedition into the Land of the Syrians againſt Ramoth Gilead, 2 Chro. 18th Chapter; for which he is reproved as a great Tranſgreſſor, and threatned by the Prophet in the 19th Chapter, and the beginning: And yet he afterwards joyned with another wicked King, Ahaziah, Ahab's wicked Son, to go to Tarſhiſh; as we may ſee in the 20th Chapter, and the latter end. And here, my Lord, is the whole of the Buſineſs concerning the two wicked Kings. In the Preſence of the Holy and great God there was not one word ſpoken of the Kings of England, either King Charles the Firſt, or his preſent Majeſty. This was as to the two wicked Kings. And then, my Lord, I came to the 7th Verſe, which has theſe Words, He is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt Live. Upon this I obſerved, That the Prayers of God's Prophets have been very prevalent for the Healing, and helping of others in a time of need. And three Proofs I brought of this: The laſt of which, was that of the Prophet Iſaiah's praying for King Hezekiah in the time of his great and dangerous Sickneſs. But that which has reference to this Buſineſs, was that out of the 1 Kings 13. and the beginning; When the Prophet came to Bethel, and there rebuked Jeroboam, and propheſied againſt the Alter there; Jeroboam put forth his hand, and ſhook it at him, and ſaid, Lay hold of him

him; upon which the King's hand was dried up. Thereupon the King intreated the Prophet, that he would pray unto the Lord his God for him, that his hand might be reſtored, which the Prophet did; and the King's hand was reſtored again, and became as it was before. And here is the Buſineſs of Jeroboam. In the Preſence of God, I ſpeak it, there was not any the leaſt Compariſon of my Dear Sovereign to that accurſed wicked Prince Jeroboam, who made Iſrael to Sin: No, my very Soul trembled at the Thoughts of it when I heard it. Upon this Head I had this Sentence, or Obſervation (which I will give you to a Word.) If I were to die the next Moment, and appear before the glorious Tribunal of the Heavenly Majeſty, I tell not the leaſt Lie, or Equivocation, or Prevarication) That a Godly Man's Prayer is a ſovereign Cure of the King's Evil; whereby the meaneſt, or the pooreſt Chriſtian may gratify, and ſerve the greateſt Monarch. And this is not my Saying neither, but the Saying of an Expoſitor upon that very place of Scripture, out of whom I did quote it. Nor did I ſpeak of it, or he write of it, with reſpect to that particular Diſeaſe, that the Indictment calls Morbus Regni, but the King's Evil as the King's own Diſeaſe, in reference to Abimelech; who was King of Gerah. For it followeth in the Cloſe of the Chapter, God heard Abraham's Prayer, and healed Abimelech and all his Houſe. But as for that Word they ſpeak of; of the People's flocking to his Majeſty to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; and that we were Prieſts and Prophets to whom they muſt come for Cure; in the Preſence of the Eternal God there was not a Word of it. Then, my Lord, for that of the Ram's-horns; I ſhall obſerve how that came in by and by; but firſt I will premiſe, That all this that has been now ſpoken of, was upon the Expoſition of that Chapter in the Morning. In the Afternoon I preached upon a particular Text; I began with the reading of a Pſalm, and a Chapter; and ſo far I conceive it was after the manner and Uſage of the Church of England, which enjoyns the reading of the Scriptures as Part of its Worſhip. I Preach'd upon the 11th of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and the 12th Verſe, (tho one of the Witneſſes ſaid it was a Pſalm)——

L. C. J. She would not be poſitive, but ſhe thought a Pſalm, ſhe could not tell.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, it was the 11th of Heb. v. 12. the Words are theſe, Therefore ſprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, ſo many as the Stars of the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand which is by the Sea-ſhore innumerable. Upon which I had this Note, That the great God can effect great Matters by very ſmall and unlikely Means: As here, (of one) what was leſs than one? none at all: And this one too as good as Dead; and yet from him to raiſe as many as the Stars in the Sky, and the Sands on the Sea-ſhore. What great things did God effect by the Rod of Moſes? which was but a little Wand in his Hand, and yet a Sign and Symbol of Authority; as our Sheriffs white Staves are. Never was there any great Plague to be ſent upon the Enemy of God, and his Church, Pharaoh and his Ægyptians; but upon the ſtretching forth that little Rod, it came. And ſo, at the Siege of Jericho; What dreadful Diſapidations in that great City, did the Sound of the Rams-horns make? What a Terrible Army of the Enemies of the Iſraelites did Gideon's ſmall Hoſt deſtroy, with a few broken Pots or Pitchers? (much leſs did I mention Platters, or Pewter Diſhes; as I have been informed they firſt Swore.) And what a tremendous Champion did David ſtrike down with a Stone in a Sling? And what a glorious Work did our Lord Chriſt, the Son of David, do, in his curing the Blind Man with a little Clay and Spittle; more likely to dam up the Eyes of one that could well ſee, than to open the Eyes of one that was born Blind. Now here, my Lord, is the whole truth in the Preſence of the Eternal God. Here your Lordſhip ſees is mention made upon the ſecond Verſe of the Twentieth of Geneſis of two wicked Kings; but how? not (as they have repreſented it) with any Reflection upon the Kings of England: Nor were they ſpoken in that order as they have Sworn them; but as I have now repeated them. Here is mention of healing the King's Evil, and of Jeroboam; but no way in that manner as they ſay. And here is likewiſe mention of Rams-horns, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling; but not with the leaſt application to the Government, or reference to it, or Reflection upon it or the King: and this is the Truth. I have made an ingenuous Confeſſion of the whole as it paſſed, that your Lordſhip may ſee how much I am abuſed by theſe falſe Wretches. And if they have ſo good Memories as really, and indeed to remember what was then ſaid, their Memories and their Conſciences cannot but go along with me, and confirm what I have ſaid; that all that was ſpoken by me that Day, was as I have related it, without the leaſt Reflection upon, or Application to his former Majeſty and our preſent Sovereign, or either of them, or any thing relating to the Government. And if you be not convinced here, I am ſure there will be a Day come wherein you will find and ſee, that theſe are none of the King's Friends, but his Enemies, that thus have falſly accuſed an innocent, faithful Loyal Subject of Treaſon; a Crime which my very Soul abhors the thoughts of. In Proof whereof, if your Lordſhip will give me leave, I will now call my Witneſſes to Teſtify the Truth of all this Matter. And after this free and ingenuous Confeſſion of the Truth, and what the Witneſſes I ſhall call will teſtify about it, I hope, and truſt in my Good God, that he will let you my Dear Countrymen, ſee the Truth and Sincerity of my Heart in whatever Words were ſpoken by me. Had I been guilty of thoſe Things that are laid to my Charge, I were not worthy to live. Pray Mr. Cryer, Call Mr. Thomas Hudſon.

L. C. J. Ay; Come call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, One thing I would deſire to ſpeak to your Lordſhip. Your Lordſhip was ſpeaking, that what I declared of my former Loyalty was nothing to what the Witneſſes have depoſed; My Lord, I have read in a true Hiſtory, (I think the Scriptures will be owned by all Perſons that are here to be ſuch,) of two falſe Witneſſes, they were ſuch; they are called Sons of Belial; (I pray God theſe be not accounted Daughters of Belial) that Swore Naboth did blaſpheme God and the King. Doth your Lordſhip believe it?

L. C. J. What would you have of us, Man, by that Queſtion?

Mr. Roſew. I am confident, my Lord, your Lordſhip, and the Court, do not believe he did ſo.

L. C. J. The Scriptures tell us it was not true; Do you think we do not believe the Scriptures, becauſe we do not hear you Preach in your Conventicles? We do believe the Scriptures, Man; and we believe too they have been perverted by you, and other People, to very ill Purpoſes. Yes, I do remember the Story of Naboth; and to ſhew you that I can remember ſome Holy Hiſtory as well as you; I can tell you of another Story, and that is the Story of Suſanna, and the Elders, and there was Circumſtance of Time and Place teſtified to; but it ſeems they were defective in their Proof, and thereby diſcovered. You would do well to detect the Witneſſes if you can, in ſome Contradiction, or Falſhood; that will do you more Service, than all your Harangues and Speeches.

Mr. Roſew. The God of Heaven will do it this Day, I truſt; for to him I have open'd my Cauſe.

L. C. J. Well, well, Call your Witneſſes, and prove what you can.

Mr. Roſew. My dear Redeemer himſelf was ſerved ſo; nay condemned by the Teſtimony of falſe Witneſſes. (Mr. Hudſon came in.)

L. C. J. Come, here is your Witneſs; What ſay you to him?

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Hudſon, were you preſent at the Meeting at Rotherhith on Lord's-Day the 14*th* of September laſt?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes Sir, I was ſo.

Mr. Roſew. Here is Mrs. Smith hath ſworn that ſince the beginning of Auguſt, we had a meeting in our Publick Meeting-Houſe; Was there any, pray Sir?

Mr. Hudſon. There was none ſuch, that I know of.

Mr. Roſew. She ſwears, that we were at the Houſe of Captain Daniel Weldy's the 14th of September. Was it ſo?

Mr. Hudſon. No, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. What place was it then?

Mr. Hudſon. It was one Capt. Daniel's.

L. C. J. That is the ſame, as they ſay.

Mr. Roſew. The firſt Witneſs, Mrs. Smith ſaid Capt. Weldy's; indeed, the other ſaid Capt. Daniel's.

L. C. J. She ſaid ſhe was told ſo, but ſhe could not tell; but ſhe remembers you pray'd for him, and his Child too who was then ill.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, as to the Truth of the Buſineſs; Did you hear me ſpeak of two wicked Kings? That, my Lord, came in, I ſay upon the ſecond Verſe of the 20th of Geneſis, which I then was expounding.

L. C. J. Nay, ask him in general what he heard you ſay? and whether he heard you ſay any thing of two wicked Kings, and what it was?

Mr. Roſew. Ay, about Ahab, and Ahaziah his Son——

L. C. J. Nay, nay, I muſt have none of thoſe Things, we muſt have fair Queſtions put; for, as you ſee we will not admit the King's Council to put any Queſtions to the Witneſſes, nor produce any Witneſſes againſt you, that are leading, or not proper, ſo nor muſt you: But if you have a mind to ask him any Queſtions, what he heard concerning two wicked Kings generally; do ſo.

Mr. Hudſon. Upon the 2d Verſe he was then.

L. C. J. Of what Chapter?

Mr. Hudſon. Of the 20th of Geneſis. I was then in the Place, and writ. He was upon the ſecond Verſe, and concerning Abraham's denying of Sarah his Wife. Says Mr. Roſewell, doth Abraham here fall again into Lying? I thought he had ſmarted enough in the 12th Chapter, for the ſame he told to Pharaoh: And doth he fall again, and not take warning by it? From that you may take notice, that the beſt of God's Children may fall agen and agen into the ſame Sin. And there you quoted what Miſchief good Jehoſaphat had like to have brought upon himſelf, by joyning with two wicked Kings: Firſt, with wicked Ahab King of Iſrael; and, after he was reproved for it by the Prophet, yet he fell into the ſame Sin agen, by joying with Ahab's wicked Son King Ahaziah. And ſo he quoted Sampſon, who got Miſchief by taking a Wife among the Daughters of the Philiſtines; and yet after he had felt ſome ſmart and hurt by it, yet like good Jehoſaphat, and good Abraham, he falls into the ſame Sin agen, by going to Timnah and taking Dalilah.

Mr. Roſew. What ſaid I, pray, upon the Seventh Verſe?

Mr. Hudſon. The Seventh Verſe was, concerning God's appearing to Abimelech in a Dream; where God ſays, He ſhall pray for thee, for he is a Prophet, and thou ſhalt be healed. And there Mr. Roſewell ſpoke concerning the Worth and Value of the Prayers of God's Prophets; wherein he inſtanced in one thing, that they were good to cure the King's Evil. And he quoted ſeveral Texts of Scripture of the Worth and Value of them; and among the reſt was that in the Firſt Book of Kings, the 13th Chapter, and the 6th Verſe, wherein the Prophet came to reprove Jeroboam at the Altar at Bethel; and the King ſtretched forth his Arm, and bid lay hold on him, and the King's Hand was dried up: Upon which, the King ſaid to the Prophet, Intreat now the Face of thy God for me, and he did ſo; the Prophet prayed unto the Lord, and the King's Arm was reſtored whole as the other. And he did quote that of Hezekiah too.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, this Man did take Notes; and therefore may be the more exact.

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, my Lord, I have my Notes, and can read them at large; and I did generally write, my Lord.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray Mr. Hudſon, will you declare, whether you heard any thing in that Expoſition or Diſcourſe, concerning Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling?

Mr. Hudſon. That was in the Sermon, Sir; in the Afternoon.

Mr. Roſew. She ſwears it was all in the Morning Diſcourſe.

Mr. Hudſon. There was not ſuch a Word in that, as I know of. The Sermon was not in the Morning; you did only Expound, as you uſed to do, in the Morning.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, I would ask him a Queſtion or two. Hark you, Sir, Pray what time did this Exerciſe begin?

Mr. Hudſon. It begun about Eight a-Clock.

L. C. J. What number of People do you think there were there?

Mr. Hudſon. I cannot judge how many they were.

L. C. J. How many do you think?

Mr. Hudſon. I believe there were a matter of Forty or Fifty there.

L. C. J. No more than Forty or Fifty?

Mr. Hudſon. Alaſs, we could ſee but in one Room.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What Room were you in?

Mr. Hudſon. I was in one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. How many Pair of Stairs high?

Mr. Hudſon. Two Pair of Stairs high.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Hudſon. No, I could not ſee him at all.

L. C. J. Was there ever a Bed in the Room where you were?

Mr. Hudſon. No, my Lord, there was not.

L. C. J. Was there a Dinner-time between?

Mr. Hudſon. There was at Noon a Reſting a little while.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Roſewell go down?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, my Lord, he did, I believe, go down Stairs.

L. C. J. Do you remember any thing that was ſpoken of Sampſon and Dalilah?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, as I ſaid before, there was about Sampſon's going down to Timnah to take Dalilah; ſhewing his failing, how he fell twice into the ſame Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any Diſcourſe about Canting? Did you obſerve he uſed that Word Canting?

Mr. Hudſon. No, not that Day, as I know of.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him uſe that Word?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, I did one Day.

L. C. J. Ay; What did he ſay that Day aboout Canting?

Mr. Hudſon. I am not able to tell you very exactly.

L. C. J. You muſt, you muſt indeed.

Mr. Hudſon. I do aſſure your Lordſhip, I know not how to repeat his Expreſſions about it.

L. C. J. For look you, Sir; Tho' you are not upon your Oath, becauſe the Law doth not allow it; yet the ſame thing that I told thoſe Witneſſes before, the ſame I muſt tell you; you muſt conſider, Friend, you come here to ſerve no turn, nor Party; you are in the Preſence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, who will call you to Account for every thing you Teſtify here; and therefore without any Subterfuges tell us the Truth, and the whole plain Truth without Welt or Guard.

Mr. Hudſon. My Lord, I will not deny one Tittle of the Truth, nor tell any thing that is untrue. I know I am in the preſence of a great Court of Juſtice, and in the Preſence of the God of Heaven.

L. C. J. Tell us then, what the Priſoner ſaid about Canting.

Mr. Hudſon. He was ſpeaking of the wicked Men of the World, that when they ſpoke concerning ſerious Religion called it Canting, and ſays he, what is Canting? Canting, ſays he, is a whining Tone.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſpeak any thing concerning Organs, and Surplices, and white Gowns?

Mr. Hudſon. No, my Lord; nothing of Surplices nor white Gowns?

L. C. J. Nor any thing concerning Organs?

Mr. Hudſon. No; but ſomething he had concerning the Cathedrals, and their canting Tone there.

Mr. Roſew. Will your Lordſhip accept an ingenuous Confeſſion from me my ſelf about this Matter?

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Roſewell, that will not be Evidence; you can neither acquit, nor condemn your ſelf by theſe Things either confeſſed or denied. It is your Witneſſes that I muſt ask, and that I expect an Account from. Therefore I ask you Friend, and pray recollect your ſelf, How was it that he talked concerning the Canting in Cathedrals?

Mr. Hudſon. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give a better Deſcription of it than I have done. For I neither do particularly remember what time it was that I heard him uſe that Expreſſion, nor can I tell you where it was; neither where, nor when.

Mr. Roſew. Shall I tell your Lordſhip the Occaſion——

L. C. J. Why do you think I believe any Word you ſay, notwithſtanding any Imprecations or Aſſeverations you make about your ſelf? It muſt neither weigh with the Court nor the Jury; we muſt go according to the Evidence. St. Peter himſelf, that you ſay you talked of, denied all with a great many Aſſeverations; but that Denial did not make him Innocent, no it was his Sin. So all your Imprecations, and Aſſeverations and Affirmations of your own Innocence, do not ſignify one Farthing to this Cauſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hark you, Mr. Hudſon; Let me ask you one Queſtion. Pray when Mr. Roſewell had explained thoſe Texts of Scripture, did he not uſe frequently to make Application of his Quotations?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, pray Sir, after he had ſpoken of the two wicked Kings, how did he apply that?

Mr. Hudſon. My Lord, I will tell you how he applied it. After he had made thoſe Quotations, ſays he, take notice, if Abraham fell, and good Jehoſaphat fell, and Sampſon fell, and Peter fell, then what are we? Let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall: and that was the Application he made of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you ſpeak to all that Mr. Roſewell ſpoke in that Diſcourſe at that time touching theſe Matters?

Mr. Hudſon. No, Sir, not all; I cannot remember all: But the Subſtance of the diſtinct Heads I do remember.

Mr. Roſewell. Then about the King's Evil; how did you apprehend it was meant?

Mr. Hudſon. My Lord, I do not believe he ſpoke it with reſpect to that Diſeaſe which we call the King's Evil; becauſe he ſpoke it with reference to the Diſeaſe that the King was under.

Mr. Roſew. Did you hear any thing about Twenty Guineas?

Mr. Hudſon. No, I did not hear a Word of any Guineas that Day.

Mr Sol. Gen. Did you hear him ſay any thing about the Peoples flocking to the King?

Mr. Hudſon. No indeed, Sir; not I.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Mr. Hudſon, Did I name the Word Prieſts?

Mr. Hudſon. No, Sir, I did not hear you name Prieſts, but Miniſters and Prophets; and what a Judgment it was to have the Prophets taken away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect your ſelf, Is that a Phraſe they uſe, Miniſters and Prophets; or do not they call themſelves Prieſts?

Mr. Hudſon. Miniſters and Prophets, my Lord, are the uſual Words.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Prieſts is the Word I am told they have.

Mr. Roſew. Then Sir, Pray will you give an Account how that about the Rams-horns came in?

Mr. Hudſon. That my Lord was upon that Text, 11 Heb. 12.——

Mr. Roſew. Do you remember what time it was; Forenoon or Afternoon?

Mr. Hudſon. I do remember it was in your Sermon in the Afternoon. The Words are theſe, Therefore ſprang there even of one, and him as good as Dead, ſo many as the Stars in the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand by the Sea-ſhore innumerable. From whence he raiſed this Note, or Doctrine; That the great God could by very ſmall Means bring great things to paſs. And then he came to prove his Doctrine, by ſeveral Inſtances. Says he, What Works did God do by Moſes's Rod? And by Gideon's broken Pitchers, routing a whole Army? What great Works has God done by ſmall Means? That by the ſounding of Rams-horns the Walls of Jericho ſhould fall down? And what great Wonders he wrought when David ſlew the tremendous Giant Goliah with a Stone out of a Sling! And what great Works and Wonders did the Son of David our Lord Jeſus Chriſt do, in opening the Eyes of him that was born Blind, with a little Clay and Spittle? The Application of that was, A little Grace——

L. C. J. We do not deſire to hear your Applications.

Smith. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, Mr. Hudſon uſed to Expound himſelf.

Mr. Hudſon. My Lord, I uſed to repeat what I write in my own Family, that is all.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt he is a moſt excellent Expoſitor; there are ſeveral People take upon them to Expound that can neither read, nor write. But pray Friend, let me ask you one Queſtion more; Was the Captain, at whoſe Houſe you were the 14th of September, at Home or at Sea?

Mr. Hudſon. My Lord, he was not at Home, but at Sea; and is ſtill at Sea.

L. C. J. Do you remember that he pray'd for him at that time?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, my Lord, 'twas his common Practice to pray for the Family whereever he came.

L. C. J. And did he pray for his Son that was Sick?

Mr. Hudſon. I cannot tell whether he were Sick or no, I do not remember that; but he prayed for the Father and all his Children, the whole Family.

Mr. Roſew. Pray did you hear any one Word mentioned of the Kings of England, or of his preſent Majeſty, but only in Praying for him; as I bleſs God I daily do, that God would give him Grace and all good Things here, and his Glory hereafter?

Mr. Hudſon. Not one Word did I hear named of the Kings of England; nor of any Kings, but thoſe mentioned in the Scriptures, that were quoted; The Kings of Iſrael, and the like.

Mr. Roſew. Was there any Word ſpoken about Popery being permitted to come in under their Noſes?

Mr. Hudſon. Not one Word of that was ſpoken, that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear the King of England mentioned at all that Day?

Mr. Hudſon. Yes, in his Prayer. It was his conſtant courſe to pray for the King.

L. C. J. Ay; what did he pray for?

Mr. Hudſon. He uſed to expreſs himſelf very heartily in Prayer, that God would enable him to Rule and Govern the People under his Charge; and bleſs him. And he uſed to ſay, God forbid that he ſhould Sin againſt God in neglecting to Pray for the King.

Mr. Roſewell. It was Samuel's Speech to Saul. Pray Sir, did you hear that?——

L. C. J. Nay, nay, ask him what he did hear you pray.

Mr. Roſew. Did I pray about opening the Eyes——

L. C. J. But you muſt not open your Witneſſes Eyes: Do not lead him.

Mr. Hudſon. It was his Common Practice to pray for the King, that God would preſerve him from all his Enemies.

L. C. J. And we ſay the ſame thing too.

Mr. Hudſon. And that God would remove all Evil Councellors from him.

L. C. J. Ay, no Queſtion.

Mr. Hudſon. And eſtabliſh his Throne in Righteouſneſs, and lengthen his Life, and proſper his Reign; and he uſed to pray as heartily, and as favourly for the King, as ever I heard any Man in my Life.

L. C. J. So there was praying in this Hall, I remember, for his late Majeſty; for the doing of him Juſtice: We all know what that meant, and where it ended.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Cryer, prav call Mr. George Hall. (who came in) Mr. Hall, Were you preſent this 14th Day of September at Rotherhith?

Mr. Hall. Yes Sir, I was.

Mr. Roſew. When I expounded upon the 20th of Geneſis?

Mr. Hall. Yes, you did ſo, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray will you inform my Lords what you heard me ſay.

Mr. Hall. I will inform them to the beſt of my Memory.

L. C. J. What Trade are you, Friend?

Mr. Hall. I am a Mealman my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Hall. The 14th of September laſt it was my Lot to hear Mr. Roſewell expound the 20th Chapter of Geneſis; as it was his uſual Courſe to expound a Chapter.

Mr. Roſew. It was not of Choice, but taken in Courſe. And pray what do you remember was ſaid by me about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Hall. Sir, I remember you brought a Scripture concerning Jehoſaphat joining with two; firſt of all with wicked Ahab, and afterwards with wicked Ahaziah his Son; and you proved it out of 2 Chron. 18th Chap. and 19th and 20th Verſes.

Mr. Roſew. Do you remember there was any one Word ſpoken of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hall. There was not one Word of his preſent Majeſty, nor his Father, nor any of the Kings of England; but of the Kings of Iſrael, Ahab and his Son.

Mr. Roſew. Well then, concerning Jeroboam, what do you remember of that?

Mr. Hall. As to Jeroboam——* You were expounding from the 7th Verſe of the 20th Chapter of Geneſis——And in the opening of that 7th Verſe among ſeveral Texts of Scripture,

* This Witneſs was wont to ſay that ſome Perſon or Perſons pinch'd his Legs as he was giving his Evidence, which occaſioned thoſe frequent breaks.

ture, Mr. Roſewell had this Note, —Hold—Jeroboam.——

L. C. J. Ay, about Jeroboam.

Mr. Hall. My Memory fails me——

L. C. J. Ay, ſo I perceive it doth wonderfully.

Mr. Hall. As to Jeroboam, he brought a Text from the 2d Book of Kings, the 13th, and the former part of the Chapter. There was a Man of God that came to Bethel, and propheſied againſt Dan and Bethel, and there were theſe Words, that Jeroboam——

Mr. Roſew. He had his Hand dried up——

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? If your Witneſs be out in his Story, muſt you prompt him? Go on, Friend.

Mr. Hall. He propheſied, that the Bones of the Prieſts ſhould be laid upon the Altar and burnt, as we read in that Text of Scripture, 2 Kings 13. and the beginning. And Jeroboam was there, and put forth his Hand——and bid ſome body take hold of him——whereat the Hand of Jeroboam dried up.

Mr. Roſew. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I will call another.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, you may ſet him going, for he is out.

Mr. Hall. If it pleaſe you, I can go a little further. I have ſomething to ſay as to that——

L. C. J. You had beſt go out, and recollect your ſelf; you have forgot your Cue at preſent.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Cryer, pray call Mr. James Atkinſon.

(Who came in.)

L. C. J. You Mrs. Smith, I will ask you, (I will not ask him himſelf, becauſe he may accuſe himſelf by it.) Is this the Miller at whoſe Houſe one of the Meetings was?

Smith. No, my Lord, the former Witneſs Hudſon is the Miller where he preached.

L. C J. Well, what do you ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Atkinſon, were you at our Meeting the 14th of September laſt?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, I was there the 14th of September.

Mr. Roſew. Were you there at the Beginning?

Mr. Atkinſon. I was there from the Beginning to the End.

L. C. J. Pray, what Trade are you, Sir?

Mr. Atkinſon My Lord, I am a Mathematical Inſtrument-Maker.

Mr. Roſew. What Chapter was I upon?

Mr. Atkinſon. The 20th of Geneſis in courſe, and not out of Choice. His uſual Cuſtom was to expound a Chapter before he preached.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, what do you remember was ſaid by me of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Atkinſon. Of two wicked Kings! I remember that was upon the ſecond Verſe; how Abraham ſaid of Sarah his Wife, She is my Siſter: And upon that Mr. Roſewell had this Note, That a Child of God may fall into the Commiſſion of the ſame Sin again and again, after he had been reproved and ſmarted for it. And he quoted ſeveral Inſtances: As that of Lot, committing Inceſt over and over again; that of Peter, denying his Lord three Times; that of Sampſon out of Judges, taking two Wives among the Philiſtines, one after another; and then quoted that of Jehoſaphat joining with two wicked Kings; Ahab, in the 2d of Chron. 18. Chap. and afterwards, tho' reproved by the Prophet Jehu, he joined with Ahab's wicked Son Ahaziah.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, what did you hear of the King of England?

Mr. Atkinſon. Not a Word, unleſs it were in his Prayer; in which he always uſed to pray earneſtly for the King.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember was ſpoken about the King's Evil?

Mr. Atkinſon. There was an Expreſſion concerning the Evil, upon the 7th Verſe; He is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt be healed. And he had this Expreſſion, or to this ſame Effect, for I hope you cannot expect I ſhould ſpeak every Word exactly; but I ſhall endeavour to ſpeak the Senſe, and the Truth, as near as I can, and nothing elſe. He ſaid, the Prayers of God's Prophets were very prevalent for the healing and helping others in time of need. And he quoted ſeveral Inſtances; as that out of the Prophet Jeremy, 27th Chap. and 18th Verſe, to the beſt of my Remembrance. And he alſo quoted that of the 1 Kings 13. concerning Jeroboam. The Prophet came to reprove him, and Jeroboam ſtretched out his Hand againſt him, and it dried up; and then he deſired of the Prophet to pray for him; which he did, and his Hand was healed.

L. C. J. Look you, what you ſay may be true, and ſo may what they ſay too; for he might ſay both. You uſed to ſay abundance of good things, as well as ſome bad ones; therefore I would ask him this Queſtion, whether he heard any thing of the King's Evil, or that had any Reference to the King of England?

Mr. Atkinſon. This is all that I heard that comes to my Memory concerning the King's Evil. That a godly Man by his Prayers may help to cure the King's Evil, and thereby the pooreſt Chriſtian may gratify the greateſt King, as ſays our Engliſh Annotator upon that 7th Verſe; but I never underſtood him to mean it of the Diſeaſe of the King's Evil.

Mr. Roſewell. Do you remember that I preached in this Diſcourſe about Rams-horns or broken Platters?

Mr. Atkinſon. I did not hear of any ſuch thing upon all that Chapter.

L. C. Juſt. But did you hear him ſpeak of any ſuch thing at all that Day?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, my Lord I did.

L. C. Juſt. Come then let us have it. What was it?

Mr. Atkinſon. His Courſe was after the Expoſition, to preach a Sermon.

Mr. Roſewell. Was it in the Forenoon, or in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinſon. It was after the Expoſition; he prayed, and then ceaſed for a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Roſew. Was it diſtinct in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinſon. It was another diſtinct Diſcourſe after the People had received ſome Refection in the Afternoon; I cannot tell exactly the time. But the Diſcourſe was preached from Heb. 11. 12. I ſuppoſe that I need not repeat the Words.

L. C. J. No, no, I care not for that.

Mr. Atkinſon. But he thence raiſed this Doctrine, That the great God can effect great Matters by very unlikely means; and he inſtanced in ſeveral ral Particulars to prove it. As the Miracles God wrought by Moſes's Rod; and the Walls of Jericho falling down at the ſound of Rams-horns, in the 6th of Joſhua; and then he quoted that of Gideon, a dreadful Rout of a great Army, by a few Earthen Pots and Pitchers; and what a tremendous Champion did David ſmite down with a Sling and a Stone?

Mr. Roſew. I have this one Queſtion more to ask you; did you hear me ſpeak any thing of ſtanding to their Principles?

Mr. Atkinſon. Not one Word; and I was there all that live long Day, from beginning to end.

L. C. J. Then, Sir, I would ask you a Queſtion or two, if Mr. Roſewell have done with you.

Mr. Roſew. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, what Room were you in?

Mr. Atkinſon. I was in the ſame Room that Mr. Roſewell was, he ſtood at the Door.

L. C. J. What, one Pair of Stairs?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes.

L. C. J. Is there not another Room between the Floor or the ground Room, and that you were in?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, Sir; there is another little Room, a little lower than that.

L. C. J. Was there a Bed in that Room you were in?

Mr. Atkinſon Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you ſit upon the Bed?

Mr. Atkinſon. I did ſit upon the Bed ſometimes.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Cloak on that Day?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Hatband?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Do you remember who ſate by you?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, my Lord, I do not know.

L. C. J. Do you remember any Body gave you your Boy's Shoes from under the Bed?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, my Lord; but I cannot tell who.

L. C. J. Well then, I ask you, did you hear any mention made that Day about Dalilah and Sampſon?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You did?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, my Lord, as an Inſtance of a good Man's falling twice into the ſame Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any mention made at that time concerning any other matter that you remember?

Mr. Atkinſon. My Lord, that of Sampſon and Dalilah, was one of the Inſtances that I repeated before.

L. C. J. Mrs. Smith, was it the ſame Day that he ſpoke about Canting?

Smith. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Do you remember, Friend, any thing that was ſpoken by him that Day concerning Church-muſick?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, my Lord, not a Word that Day that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing about Canting that Day?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, not a Word.

L. C. J. Did you hear him talk any thing of Surplices or white Gowns?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, my Lord, not one Word all that Day; but that of Sampſon and Dalilah, my Lord——

L. C. J. You remember that?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, it was one Inſtance of a good Man's committing the ſame Crime once and agen.

Mr. Roſew. Yes, I own it, it was ſo; but not as the other Witneſſes ſwear.

Mr. Atkinſon. Truly, my Lord, I would not tell one tittle of a Lie; to the beſt of my Remembrance——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Queſtion: I ſee you are very perfect in the Proofs of the Sermon, did you take Notes that Day?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember then any one Obſervation that he made upon any other Verſe? Pray what Obſervation did he make upon the eighth Verſe?

Mr. Atkinſon. None at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What upon the 12th or 13th Verſes?

Mr. Atkinſon. I cannot tell; I can upon the 5th.

Mr. Roſew. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to acquaint you with that?

Mr. Atkinſon. He only explained that which was difficult; but when it was a little Hiſtorical, he only read it. But what he obſerved upon the ſecond and the ſeventh Verſes, was the ſubſtance of the whole Expoſition almoſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Has no body read the Notes of that Sermon to you ſince?

Mr. Atkinſon. I endeavour'd to recollect my ſelf, after I heard Mr. Roſewell was accuſed; and writ, what I could remember, down.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did any body read their Notes to you ſince?

Mr. Atkinſon. No, indeed, there has no body read any Notes to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath how came you to remember the word Tremendous?

L. C. J. He is not upon his Oath, Mr. Attorny.

Mr. Atkinſon. Becauſe when he made ſuch ſhort Notes, I endeavour'd to remember them; I thank God I have a pretty good Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, upon my Word, a very ſtrong one.

Mr. Atkinſon. He did uſe the Word tremendous Champion.

Mr. Recorder. Had you and Mr. Hudſon any Diſcourſe about this Matter ſince?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, Sir, we might talk what we did remember to one another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he write down the Sermon?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, I ſuppoſe he did; but I did not ſit by him.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Cryer, Pray call Mr. William Smith.

(Who came in.)

Mr. Smith, Were you at this Meeting the 14th of September laſt?

Smith. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, what you heard me ſay there? What Chapter did I expound?

Mr. Smith. The 20th Chapter of Geneſis.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember of it?

Smith. I remember the Chapter concerned Abraham and Abimelech.

Mr. Roſew. What did you hear of the People's flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. I heard no ſuch Word.

Mr. Roſew. Or that His Majeſty could not cure the King's Evil?

Smith:

Mr. Smith. No, Sir, not a Word of it.

Mr. Roſew. Did you hear any thing at all concerning the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. Sir, you did quote ſomething out of the Annotator about the King's Evil.

Mr. Roſew. Do you remember what that was?

Mr. Smith. I cannot remember it fully at length, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray did you underſtand it as meant of the King's Evil; or of the Evil of Abimelech, King of Gerar?

Mr. Smith. I did not underſtand it of the Diſeaſe ſo called; but of the Evil of Abimelech.

Mr. Roſew. What did you hear concerning Prieſts and Prophets?

Mr. Smith. You ſaid it was the Function of the Prophets to pray for the People.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember was ſaid of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Smith. You did make mention of two wicked Kings, Ahab and Ahaziah; that Jehoſaphat ſinned, in joyning with them one after another.

Mr. Roſew. Was there any thing of the Kings of England, or of my Sovereign?

Mr. Smith. No, not at all, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing concerning Jeroboam?

Mr. Smith. Yes, that Jeroboam ſtretched forth his Hand, and his Hand withered; and the Prophet prayed for him, and his Hand was reſtored.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing in the Expoſition of broken Pitchers; I mean in the Forenoon?

Mr. Smith. No, I think not.

L. C. J. What did you hear of them? and when?

Mr. Smith. To the beſt of my Remembrance it was in the Afternoon; That God could do great matters by ſmall means; and you quoted ſeveral things. I did not ſtand well, ſo that I could not hear all the Particulars.

L. C. J. But what did you hear?

Mr. Roſew. Pray did you hear any Word of ſtanding to their Principles; or of overcoming, that Day?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Mr. J. Holloway. It ſeems you did not ſtand in a good Place to hear.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Cryer, Pray call Mr. William Bates.

(Which he did, but he did not appear.)

Cryer. He is not here, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, call Mr. George Hales then.

(Who came in.)

Were you this 14th Day of September at this Meeting, Sir?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Were you there from the Beginning to the End?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray then will you tell my Lord what you heard me ſay, with reference to flocking to the King, or curing the King's Evil.

Mr. Hales. I heard nothing that you ſhould ſay of Peoples flocking to the King; but you were ſpeaking of the King's Evil, and that was thus: my Lord. It was from the 7th Verſe of the 20th Chapter of Geneſis, He is a Prophet, and ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt be healed. God is ſpeaking to Abimelech in a Dream; and after a little Paraphraſe upon the Words, Mr. Roſewell ſaid, That a godly Man's Prayer was a Sovereign Cure for the King's Evil; and quoted ſome Scripture Inſtances, as in 1 Kings, where God having ſent a Man of God to reprove Jeroboam for his Idolatry, he ſtretched out his Hand, and his Hand withered; and he deſired the Prophet to pray to the Lord his God, that his Hand might be reſtored; and accordingly it was accompliſhed.

Mr. Roſew. Did you hear any thing of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hales. No, not one Word all that Day; only you Prayed for His Majeſty as you uſed to do.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember was ſaid about Rams-horns?

Mr. Hales. I remember you were preaching out of the 11 Heb. 12. and the Words were theſe, Therefore ſprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, as many as the Stars in the Sky for Multitude, and as the Sand upon the Sea-ſhore innumerable. From whence he had this Obſervation, That God is able to bring great Matters to paſs by ſmall Means. And ſo accordingly Mr. Roſewell inſtanced how the Walls of Jericho were ſhook down by the ſounding of Rams-horns; or ſomething to that purpoſe.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember of broken Platters?

Mr. Hales. I remember you brought in an Inſtance concerning Gideon: and I think it was thus, that by breaking a few earthen Pitchers he routed a great Army.

Mr. Roſew. And ſo of a Stone and a Sling. But was there any thing of ſtanding to Principles?

Mr. Hales. Not a Word.

L. C. J. As you heard?

Mr. Hales. That I heard.

L. C. J. Or that you remember?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord. But you ſaid what a tremendous Champion did David ſlay with a Sling and a Stone.

L. C. J. Did you take Notes?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray how came you to remember that Word tremendous?

Mr. Hales. I do remember he did uſe that Word.

L. C. J. Have you had any Diſcourſe about this matter ſince?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. With whom?

Mr. Hales. With ſeveral Friends.

L. C. J. Did you diſcourſe with Atkinſon about it?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you with William Smith?

Mr. Hales. No; I do not remember I did.

L. C. J. Did you diſcourſe with Hudſon?

Mr. Hales. I cannot ſay I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor you cannot ſay you did not.

L. C. J. Did you hear any Notes read?

Mr. Hales. I think I did.

L. C. J. Whoſe Notes were they you heard?

Mr. Hales. Thomas Hudſon's Notes, I think; I am not ſure of it.

L. C. J. It is ſo hard and difficult to get out the Truth from this ſort of People; they do ſo turn and wind. How long after the Sermon was preached was it that you heard the Notes read?

Mr. Hales. I was in the Country when Mr. Roſewell was taken; and when I came home agen, I heard of it.

L. C. J. But you did not remember it till after he was taken?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord; and I read the Chapter my ſelf, and remember'd theſe things.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray is the Word tremendous in Hudſon's Notes, or no?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell whether it be or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was the next Day after this?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell, I was in the Country.

L. C. J. Did he take Notes in Long-Hand, or Short?

A Stranger that ſtood by. In Characters, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not heard him preach ſince that time?

Mr. Hales. Sir, I went into the Country ſoon after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was his Text at any other time? can you tell?

Mr. Hales. No, I cannot readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor what he diſcourſed upon?

Mr. Hales. As to any particular time I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you remember his Text at any other time?

L. C. J. When was the time before this 14th of September, that you did hear him preach? You have heard him before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord, I have.

L. C. J. Was that upon a Sunday?

Mr. Hales. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you hear him the Sunday before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Well, what did he preach upon then?

Mr. Hales. This I know, that in his Courſe of Reading and Expoſition, he was upon the 19th of Geneſis.

L. C. J. What was his Diſcourſe upon that Chapter?

Mr. Hales. That I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Nor the Day afterward?

Mr. Hales. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Upon my Word you have a lucky Memory for this Purpoſe; to ſerve a turn, it can juſt hit to this very Day. You are very punctually inſtructed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any other part of the Sermon of this Day than what you have related?

Mr. Hales. Yes.

L. C. Juſt. Ay; tell us what you remember beſides.

Mr. Hales. I muſt conſider a little; I am not ſo ready at it.

L. C. J. Ay, Come let us hear it.

Mr. Roſew. Theſe Things he might have more occaſion to recollect by reaſon of my Charge.

L. C. J. You ſay right, juſt occaſion for this Purpoſe. But I thought theſe Men that have ſuch ſtupendious Memories, as to tell you they remember the Chapter, and the Verſe, and particular Words when it ſerves a Turn, might remember ſomething before or after, at leaſt in the ſame Sermon. Why do you think they were enlightned to underſtand, and remember that one Day more than any other? They can remember particularly as to ſuch things, and can Clan it together to anſwer ſuch particular Queſtions; but as to any thing before or after, they are not prepared.

Mr. J. Withins. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Cryer, pray call Mr. John Wharton. (Who came in.)

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Where do you dwell, Wharton?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Calling are you of?

Mr. Wharton. A Gardiner.

Mr. Roſew. Were you at the Meeting the 14th of September?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember pray of the Expoſition then concerning Flocking of the People to the King to be cured of the King's Evil?

Mr. Wharton. Sir, I do remember upon your Expoſition of the 20th of Geneſis, you were ſpeaking concerning Abimelech King of Gerar; and you took your Expoſition thus, That Abimelech had taken away the Wife of Faithful Abraham, that I do remember very well; and that you did ſay in your Expoſition, That the Prayers of the Prophet were prevalent for the curing of the King's Evil. And then you brought your Proof to the beſt of my remembrance concerning King Jeroboam; that Jeroboam ſtretched out his Hand againſt the Prophet of the Lord, and that the King cryed, Lay hold of him, when he came to cry againſt the Altar at Bethel, and his Hand dried up; whereupon the King deſired the Prophet to pray to the Lord, that his Hand might be reſtored; and he did ſo. This was the Expoſition that you made upon that Verſe in Part.

Mr. Roſew. Do you remember any thing of comparing the King of England to Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. I do not remember any ſuch Paſſage.

Mr. Roſew. Do you remember any thing about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Wharton. I do remember this Paſſage, concerning Jehoſaphat, that he had fallen twice into the ſame Sin, by taking part firſt with wicked Ahab, and then with his wicked Son Ahaziah.

Mr. Roſewell. Was there any thing of the Kings of England mentioned in this Diſcourſe?

Mr. Wharton. No, nothing Sir. It was but an accidental thing that I heard you then. I heard nothing of the King of England in your Expoſition or Sermon, but only in your Prayer; when you pray'd for his long Life and happy Reign.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ever hear him before that time?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. Did you ever hear him ſince?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, once ſince.

L. C. Juſt. Now let us know his Text, and the ſubject Matter he was upon ſince.

Mr. Wharton. Truly, as to the time ſince I did not take much Account; for I did not write.

L. C. Juſt. Canſt thou tell us of what paſt at any time before?

Mr. Wharton. Once before, I heard him upon the 19 of Geneſis, where he made his Expoſition—Truly, I have not any Notes—

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Then hark you Friend, have you ſpoken with any Body ſince that 14th of September that did take Notes?

Mr. Wharton. I am not acquainted much with them that were his conſtant Hearers that did take Notes.

L. C. Juſt. But anſwer my Queſtion that I ask you; did you ever diſcourſe at all about this Matter? and with whom?

Mr. Wharton. I came thither by my ſelf, I ſay; I had not much Acquaintance with them.

L. C. Juſt. Nay, do not prevaricate, Friend, with the Court, but ſpeak the Truth out plainly. I ask you in the Preſence of Almighty God, did you ever ſpeak with any Body ſince the 14th of September about this Buſineſs?

Mr. Wharton. Mr. Hudſon did ſpeak with me about it.

L. C. Juſt. Did he read his Notes to you?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. It is a ſtrange thing, Truth will not come out without this Wire-drawing. You cannot help this Canting for your Life; this is Canting, if you would know what Canting is. Did you ever ſpeak with Hales, or Atkinſon, or Smith about it?

Mr. Wharton. I do not know Atkinſon, or Hales. I know Mr. Smith; but I never ſpoke with him about it? nor he with me.

L. C. Juſt. When was it that Hudſon and you ſpoke together of this thing?

Mr. Wharton. It was laſt Thurſday.

L. C. J. Did he come to you, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. I met him.

L. C. Juſt. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.

L. C. Juſt. Did he ſpeak to you of it firſt, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. He ſpoke to me.

L. C. Juſt. Then I ask you, (and remember, though you are not upon your Oath, yet you are to teſtify the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath,) did he mention any thing of Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. Of Jehoſaphat? and of Abimelech?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. Did you mention any of theſe things to him?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, Sir, I repeated more then, than I have done now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was your Meeting accidental, or appointed?

Mr. Wharton. It was accidental in the Street; I dwell below him a great deal.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where was it?

Mr. Wharton. We were talking in the Street.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did not you go into ſome Houſe?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Diſcourſe at that time of being preſent at the Tryal of Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Wharton. No, I did not know any thing of it till I ſaw the Subpœna.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you diſcourſed with him, did you remember all theſe things?

Mr. Wharton. Yes I could remember them as well as he; and a great deal more then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, cannot you remember what was done the next Day?

Mr. Wharton. No, I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you then to remember ſo well what was ſaid that Day?

Mr. Wharton. Becauſe there was a remarkable Paſſage, that I had never heard before expounded. I had not ſtaid at that time, but that he was expounding of a very remarkable thing, which I had never heard expounded before.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any more Witneſſes Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Roſew. I have ſome Witneſſes to call more, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, to teſtify concerning my Life, and that I always prayed for the King, that God would Crown him with Grace here, and Glory hereafter; and that he would remove all his Enemies from him.

L. C. Juſt. Ay, Mr. Roſewell, firſt remove all his Friends from him; and then remove his Evil Counſellors.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Cryer, call Mr. Charles Arthur. (but he did not appear.)

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Come it ſeems, he is not here, call another.

Mr. Roſew. Call Mr. Tho. Jolliff.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. Juſt. What do you call this Man to?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, this Perſon I call to teſtify with reſpect to my Converſation and Carriage towards His Majeſty and the Government.

L. C. Juſt. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Jolliff. Thomas Jolliff.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Jolliff. In Mary Magdalen's Pariſh.

L. C. Juſt. Why not St. Mary Magdalen's?

Mr. Roſew. He is my Neighbour, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. But, I ſuppoſe, he thinks that would have made the Name ſo much the longer; or elſe, he thinks, that there is Popery in calling it ſo.

Mr. Jolliff. No, my Lord, I have called it a Hundred times, and a Hundred times St. Mary Magdalen.

L. C. Juſt. Prithee then do it again, it will never be the worſe for thee, I dare ſay. Well, Mr. Roſewell, what do you ask him?

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Sir, will you teſtify what you know of my Converſation towards the Government, and particularly towards His Majeſty?

Mr. Jolliff. My Lord, in the time of Indulgence I have heard Mr. Roſewell once, or twice, or more; and I heard him pray for the King, and the Peace and Wellfare of the Nation, as heartily as ever I heard any Miniſter in England in my Life.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, for my Converſation; did you ever hear any thing of my Diſloyalty or Diſaffection to his Majeſty, or the Government?

Mr. Jolliff. No, Sir, I never heard any thing of any Diſloyalty, or any ſuch thing in my Life; but all the Pariſh will give you an Account, that you have behaved your ſelf as an honeſt Man; and I never knew that either in Word, or Deed, you were accuſed of any Diſloyalty. And, my Lord, if you pleaſe to give me my Oath, I will ſwear it; for it is the ſame thing to me to teſtify here in ſuch a Court under an Oath, or without it; for I ought, I know, to teſtify the Truth.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I am confident that what he ſays he would Swear; and he is a very honeſt Man.

L. C. Juſt. Well Mr. Roſewell, if you have any more Witneſſes, call them; and make what

Mr. Hales. I was in the Country when Mr. Rosewell was taken; and when I came home agen, I heard of it.

L. C. J. But you did not remember it till after he was taken?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord; and I read the Chapter my self, and remember'd these things.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray is the Word tremendous in Hudson's Notes, or no?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell whether it be or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was the next Day after this?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell, I was in the Country.

L. C. J. Did he take Notes in Long-Hand, or Short?

A Stranger that stood by. In Characters, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not heard him preach since that time?

Mr. Hales. Sir, I went into the Country soon after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was his Text at any other time? can you tell?

Mr. Hales. No, I cannot readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor what he discourst upon?

Mr. Hales. As to any particular time I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you remember his Text at any other time?

L. C. J. When was the time before this 14th of September, that you did hear him preach? You have heard him before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord, I have.

L. C. J. Was that upon a Sunday?

Mr. Hales. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you hear him the Sunday before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Well, what did he preach upon then?

Mr. Hales. This I know, that in his Course of Reading and Exposition, he was upon the 19th of Genesis.

L. C. J. What was his Discourse upon that Chapter?

Mr. Hales. That I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Nor the Day afterward?

Mr. Hales. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Upon my Word you have a lucky Memory for this Purpose; to serve a turn, it can just hit to this very Day. You are very punctually instructed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any other part of the Sermon of this Day than what you have related?

Mr. Hales. Yes.

L. C. Just. Ay; tell us what you remember besides.

Mr. Hales. I must consider a little; I am not so ready at it.

L. C. J. Ay, Come let us hear it.

Mr. Rosew. These Things he might have more occasion to recollect by reason of my Charge.

L. C. J. You say right, just occasion for this Purpose. But I thought these Men that have such stupendious Memories, as to tell you they remember the Chapter, and the Verse, and particular Words when it serves a Turn, might remember something before or after, at least in the same Sermon. Why do you think they were enlightned to understand, and remember that one Day more than any other? They can remember particularly as to such things, and can Clan it together to answer such particular Questions; but as to any thing before or after, they are not prepared.

Mr. J. Withins. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Cryer, pray call Mr. John Wharton. (Who came in.)

Mr. Just. Holloway. Where do you dwell, Wharton?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Calling are you of?

Mr. Wharton. A Gardiner.

Mr. Rosew. Were you at the Meeting the 14th of September?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember pray of the Exposition then concerning Flocking of the People to the King to be cured of the King's Evil?

Mr. Wharton. Sir, I do remember upon your Exposition of the 20th of Genesis, you were speaking concerning Abimelech King of Gerar; and you took your Exposition thus, That Abimelech had taken away the Wife of Faithful Abraham, that I do remember very well; and that you did say in your Exposition, That the Prayers of the Prophet were prevalent for the curing of the King's Evil. And then you brought your Proof to the best of my remembrance concerning King Jeroboam; that Jeroboam stretched out his Hand against the Prophet of the Lord, and that the King cryed, Lay hold of him, when he came to cry against the Altar at Bethel, and his Hand dried up; whereupon the King desired the Prophet to pray to the Lord, that his Hand might be restored; and he did so. This was the Exposition that you made upon that Verse in Part.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember any thing of comparing the King of England to Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. I do not remember any such Passage.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember any thing about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Wharton. I do remember this Passage, concerning Jehosaphat, that he had fallen twice into the same Sin, by taking part first with wicked Ahab, and then with his wicked Son Ahaziah.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there any thing of the Kings of England mentioned in this Discourse?

Mr. Wharton. No, nothing Sir. It was but an accidental thing that I heard you then. I heard nothing of the King of England in your Exposition or Sermon, but only in your Prayer; when you pray'd for his long Life and happy Reign.

L. C. Just. Did you ever hear him before that time?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Did you ever hear him since?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, once since.

L. C. Just. Now let us know his Text, and the subject Matter he was upon since.

Mr. Wharton. Truly, as to the time since I did not take much Account; for I did not write.

L. C. Just. Canst thou tell us of what past at any time before?

Mr. Wharton. Once before, I heard him upon the 19 of Genesis, where he made his Exposition—Truly, I have not any Notes—

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Then hark you Friend, have you ſpoken with any Body ſince that 14th of September that did take Notes?

Mr. Wharton. I am not acquainted much with them that were his conſtant Hearers that did take Notes.

L. C. Juſt. But anſwer my Queſtion that I ask you; did you ever diſcourſe at all about this Matter? and with whom?

Mr. Wharton. I came thither by my ſelf, I ſay; I had not much Acquaintance with them.

L. C. Juſt. Nay, do not prevaricate, Friend, with the Court, but ſpeak the Truth out plainly. I ask you in the Preſence of Almighty God, did you ever ſpeak with any Body ſince the 14th of September about this Buſineſs?

Mr. Wharton. Mr. Hudſon did ſpeak with me about it.

L. C. Juſt. Did he read his Notes to you?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. It is a ſtrange thing, Truth will not come out without this Wire-drawing. You cannot help this Canting for your Life; this is Canting, if you would know what Canting is. Did you ever ſpeak with Hales, or Atkinſon, or Smith about it?

Mr. Wharton. I do not know Atkinſon, or Hales. I know Mr. Smith; but I never ſpoke with him about it? nor he with me.

L. C. Juſt. When was it that Hudſon and you ſpoke together of this thing?

Mr. Wharton. It was laſt Thurſday.

L. C. J. Did he come to you, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. I met him.

L. C. Juſt. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.

L. C. Juſt. Did he ſpeak to you of it firſt, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. He ſpoke to me.

L. C. Juſt. Then I ask you, (and remember, though you are not upon your Oath, yet you are to teſtify the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath,) did he mention any thing of Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. Of Jehoſaphat? and of Abimelech?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. Juſt. Did you mention any of theſe things to him?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, Sir, I repeated more then, than I have done now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was your Meeting accidental, or appointed?

Mr. Wharton. It was accidental in the Street; I dwell below him a great deal.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where was it?

Mr. Wharton. We were talking in the Street.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did not you go into ſome Houſe?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Diſcourſe at that time of being preſent at the Tryal of Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Wharton. No, I did not know any thing of it till I ſaw the Subpœna.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you diſcourſed with him, did you remember all theſe things?

Mr. Wharton. Yes I could remember them as well as he; and a great deal more then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, cannot you remember what was done the next Day?

Mr. Wharton. No, I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you then to remember ſo well what was ſaid that Day?

Mr. Wharton. Becauſe there was a remarkable Paſſage, that I had never heard before expounded. I had not ſtaid at that time, but that he was expounding of a very remarkable thing, which I had never heard expounded before.

L. C. Juſt. Have you any more Witneſſes Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Roſew. I have ſome Witneſſes to call more, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, to teſtify concerning my Life, and that I always prayed for the King, that God would Crown him with Grace here, and Glory hereafter; and that he would remove all his Enemies from him.

L. C. Juſt. Ay, Mr. Roſewell, firſt remove all his Friends from him; and then remove his Evil Counſellors.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Cryer, call Mr. Charles Arthur. (but he did not appear.)

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Come it ſeems, he is not here, call another.

Mr. Roſew. Call Mr. Tho. Folliff.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. Juſt. What do you call this Man to?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, this Perſon I call to teſtify with reſpect to my Converſation and Carriage towards His Majeſty and the Government.

L. C. Juſt. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Folliff. Thomas Folliff.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Folliff. In Mary Magdalen's Pariſh.

L. C. Juſt. Why not St. Mary Magdalen's?

Mr. Roſew. He is my Neighbour, my Lord.

L. C. Juſt. But, I ſuppoſe, he thinks that would have made the Name ſo much the longer; or elſe, he thinks, that there is Popery in calling it ſo.

Mr. Folliff. No, my Lord, I have called it a Hundred times, and a Hundred times St. Mary Magdalen.

L. C. Juſt. Prithee then do it again, it will never be the worſe for thee, I dare ſay. Well, Mr. Roſewell, what do you ask him?

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Sir, will you teſtify what you know of my Converſation towards the Government, and particularly towards His Majeſty?

Mr. Folliff. My Lord, in the time of Indulgence I have heard Mr. Roſewell once, or twice, or more; and I heard him pray for the King, and the Peace and Wellfare of the Nation, as heartily as ever I heard any Miniſter in England in my Life.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, for my Converſation; did you ever hear any thing of my Diſloyalty or Diſaffection to his Majeſty, or the Government?

Mr. Folliff. No, Sir, I never heard any thing of any Diſloyalty, or any ſuch thing in my Life; but all the Pariſh will give you an Account, that you have behaved your ſelf as an honeſt Man; and I never knew that either in Word, or Deed, you were accuſed of any Diſloyalty. And, my Lord, if you pleaſe to give me my Oath, I will ſwear it; for it is the ſame thing to me to teſtify here in ſuch a Court under an Oath, or without it; for I ought, I know, to teſtify the Truth.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I am confident that what he ſays he would Swear; and he is a very honeſt Man.

L. C. Juſt. Well Mr. Roſewell, if you have any more Witneſſes, call them; and make what Remarks upon the Evidence you please afterwards, for this is not the time for making Remarks.

Mr. Rosew. I humbly thank your Lordship for your great Favour.

L. C. Just. I do not speak it to cramp you in your time; but call your Witnesses, and then make what Remarks you will: For, God forbid, we should hinder you from taking your full time; for you stand here for your Life.

Mr. Rosew. Is Mr. Winnacott here?

(He did not appear.)

Then pray call Captain Richard Cotton.

(But he did not appear.)

Call Mr. Thomas Fipps.

(Then Capt. Cotton appear'd.)

Mr. Rosew. This Gentleman, my Lord, hath known me for several Years. Captain Cotton, I pray Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, and Life, and Loyalty, with respect to the King and Government?

Capt. Cotton. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, of late I have not frequented Mr. Rosewell's Company, or his Congregation; but when the Door stood open, without opposition, I have been there; and have heard him pray for the King and Government several times; and bless God that we lived under so peaceable a Prince, when all our Neighbours were in Blood and War.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, have you ever heard, that either in Word or Deed, I should ever declare against His Majesty, or the Government?

Capt. Cotton. No, I never heard any such thing in my Life; but what I heard now upon this Trial up and down the Hall, as I was walking below.

Mr. Just. Withins. How long ago is it, that you speak of, Mr. Cotton?

Capt. Cotton. I was abroad most of the time at Sea; but this was three, or four, or five Years ago.

Mr. Just. Withins. What time was that?

Capt. Cotton. It was in the time of the Indulgence.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, then it may be, he could speak kindly enough of the Government.

Mr. Rosew. He has known me these ten Years. Have you not, Sir?

Capt Cotton. Yes, I believe, I have, ever since you came thither. (Then Mr. Fipps came in.)

Mr. Rosew. This Gentleman hath known me several Years, have you not Sir?

Mr. Fipps. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, will you give my Lord and the Court an Account, what you know of my Life and Conversation, and of my Loyalty or Disloyalty to the King or Government.

Mr. Fipps. My Lord, I have known this Gentleman divers Years. He lived in Wiltshire, and there he had the Reputation of a very honest Man, a good Scholar, and a pious Man. I never heard him Preach in my Life, because I never go to Conventicles; but I have been in the House where I have heard him pray in the Family; and there he pray'd very earnestly for the King and Government, for the Prosperity of it. Since I came to London, he came to London too, and has been here in London about ten Years; and has been often in my Company since, and in the late Times, the Bethelitish Times, when every Body did take Liberty to say what they would of the King and Government; I have been often in his Company, and heard him speak with a great deal of Respect of the King, and of the Government, and thank God for the Liberty he did enjoy, and the Protection he had from the Government; but I never heard him speak an ill Word of the Government in my Life; and I have known him as much (I believe) as any other Man that was not his Hearer; he was always reputed a very ingenious Man; and that is all I can say. I never heard, or knew any thing of ill of him in my Life.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray call Mr. Caleb Veering.

(Who came in.)

Sir, you have known me several Years. Pray be pleased to testify to my Lord, and the Court, what you have known of my Conversation, with Respect to His Majesty and the Government.

Mr. Veering. My Lord, I have known Mr. Rosewell these several Years; and I have been in Company with him upon the Occasion of receiving Money on Account of Rent for a Friend of mine; and likewise have heard him formerly when he preached publickly; and never heard any thing from him that reflected upon the Government, or shewed any disrespect to the King. I have heard him pray often very heartily for the King, and he never meddled with any publick Business, nor spoke of any News while I was concern'd with him.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Sir, did you ever hear of any ill I should speak of my Sovereign?

Mr. Veering. I have heard him often pray for the King and Government; and I never heard any Man say that he did otherwayes, or that ever he spoke an ill Word concerning any of them.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. John Hitchcock——

(Who came in.)

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me for several Years; pray will you testify what you have known concerning me? And if you have heard, or known any ill of my Conversation towards the King, pray speak it out, and let me be shamed before God and this great Assembly.

Mr. Hitchcock. I have known him (my Lord,) several Years, and have heard him formerly, though not of late; and when I heard him, he used constantly to pray for the King and Government; I never knew him to speak any thing against the King and Government in my Life; but always spoke very worthily of them.

Mr. Rosew. Have you heard me often pray for the King?

Mr. Hitchcock. I have so, Sir, a great many times.

Mr. Rosew. How long is that ago?

Mr. Hitchcock. About two or three Years ago, my Lord; and I never knew him to be but a very worthy Gentleman.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. Michael Hinman——

(Who came in.)

My Lord, here is another Gentleman that hath known me several Years. Pray Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, with Respect to His Majesty, and the Government?

Mr. Hinman. My Lord, I have known him many Years, and been in his Company several times, and never heard him speak any thing of ill relating to the King or Government.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, have you not been, (upon some Occasions,) present where I have prayed?

Mr. Hinman. Yes, Sir, I have heard you pray; pray; and I have heard you pray for the King very heartily.

Mr. Rosew. Have you heard of any Evil I should either say or do? Or any thing by Word or Deed, against the King or Government?

Mr. Hinman. No, never in all my Life, one way or other.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. Nicholas Wanley.

(Who came in.)

Sir, you have known me for these many Years; pray will you be pleased to speak the Truth of what you know of my Conversation, with Respect to the King and Government?

Mr. Wanley. My Lord, I have known the Prisoner at the Bar several Years; I have been frequently in his Company; and never heard him speak an ill Word against the King or Government in my Life: But have often heard him wish, that the King might live, and have a long and prosperous Reign; I never heard him say one ill Word of the Government in my Life; but always when he spoke of it, it was with all the Respect that any Person could do.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear from any other Person directly or indirectly, that I have spoken reflectively upon His Majesty?

Mr. Wanley. Never in my Life, my Lord.

Mr. Rosew. One way or other?

Mr. Wanley. No, not any way at all.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. John Strong——

(Who appeared)

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me many Years too, ten or twelve Years I believe.

Mr. Strong. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of me with respect to my Behaviour in Word, or Deed, in reference to His Majesty or the Government?

Mr. Strong. Sir, I have heard you teach several times formerly; I was not at this time indeed (for which you now stand Accused) at that Place: But I never heard you speak a Word against his Majesty or the Government. But you always pray'd very earnestly for his Majesty.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear that I should say any thing ill of the King, or Government?

Mr. Strong. No, never.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. John Cuttloe——

(Who appear'd.)

Sir, You have known me too, very many Years; What do you know pray, concerning my Behaviour towards his Majesty and the Government?

Mr. Cutloe. My Lord, I never knew him speak one Word disrespectfully of the Government, or the King in my Life; tho' I have known him some Years.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear from any body else, that I did speak ill of the King or Government, directly or indirectly?

Mr. Cuttloe. No, never a Word; I assure you, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Have you been where you have heard me pray for his Majesty?

Mr. Cuttloe. Yes, Sir; I remember at Bristol once occasionally I heard you in the time of Liberty; otherwise I cannot say I have heard you: But I never heard any thing against the Government; but you always behaved your self Loyally and Peaceably that I know of.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. Charles Melsum——

(Who appeared.)

My Lord, I call this Gentleman, who will acquaint you that he liv'd with me many Years in an honourable Family, a Person of Quality of this Nation, one of the Hungerford's: Where (my Lord) I was Tutor to Sir Edward's Son for near Seven Years; a Gentleman well known for his great Loyalty to the King and Government: So that if I had been such an Enemy to the King or so disaffected as these People would make to be, sure he would never have entertained me. Pray, Mr. Melsum, will you please to acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, how many Years I was in that Family?

Mr. Melsum Seven Years; and I was above Fourteen my self.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, what do you know of my Carriage in that honourable Family, with respect to the King and Government?

Mr. Melsum. As far as I know for my Life, I will declare. I do not remember he did trouble himself, or meddle or make with any Man's business but his own. He was a Man that kept much to his Study: And when he came up to Prayer, he prayed heartily for the King; and had the good Word of all his Neighbours thereabout.

Mr. Rosew. Have you often heard me pray for the King?

Mr. Melsum. I have heard him a Hundred times pray for the King; I never mist Prayers when I was at Home; and it was his constant Practice.

L. C. J. Did he Pray in the Family then?

Mr. Melsum. Yes, he did

L. C. J. Did he use to go to Church?

Mr. Melsum. Yes, he went to Church, to the beginning of the Prayers; he did frequently attend Divine Service.

L. C. J. Did he receive the Sacrament in all that time?

Mr. Melsum. Yes, I believe he did; I cannot say it directly.

Mr. Rosew. I was a constant Attender upon the Publick Ministry. It is now above a Dozen Years ago; it was in the Year 1664, my Lord, and so downward. Sir, you know I was a constant Attendant upon the Ministry of the Church, and the Worship of God there.

L. C. Just. Did you ever hear him make use of the Common Prayer himself in the Family?

Mr. Melsum. I cannot say he did.

L. C. J. Well; Have you any more Witnesses, Sir?

Mr. Rosew. Yes, my Lord. Pray call Mr. Robert Medham. (Who appeared.)

Here is another Gentleman, my Lord, that lived in that Family. Pray Mr. Medham, how long did you live in that honourable Family?

Mr. Medham. About four Years.

Mr. Rosew. Was that in the time that I was there?

Mr. Medham. Yes, it was.

Mr. Rosew. Pray then, Sir, will you declare what you know of my Conversation in that Family with respect to the Publick?

Mr. Medham. My Lord, it is a great while ago; but at that time Mr. Rosewell did always keep to the Parish-Church. He was Chaplain to my Lady Hungerford; and always pray'd for the King at every time of Prayer.

to

Mr. Roſew. Did you ever hear that I ſhould ſpeak or declare any thing againſt the King, or Government in all my Life, all my time, or your time that I was there?

Mr. Medham. I muſt needs ſay, I never did hear any ſuch thing in my Life.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. But it was not the Prayers of the Church that he uſed?

Mr. Medham. I cannot ſay that.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him uſe the Prayers of the Church?

Mr. Medham. The Prayer that I heard, was that which was uſually made in the Family.

L. C. Juſt. But pray ſpeak plain; Did he uſe the Common-Prayer?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord; I cannot ſay he uſed the Common Prayer.

L. C. J. I tell you what I mean; did he pray out of the Book of the Common-Prayer?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord, I cannot ſay that.

L. C. J. Doſt thou take his EX TEMPORE Prayer to be the Prayers of the Church?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. My Lord, he does not know the difference, I believe; I believe he does not go to Church.

Mr. Medham. Yes, I uſe to attend upon the Publick; and ſo did Mr. Roſewell.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Well, Sir, have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Roſew. Yes, my Lord; Pray call Mrs. Ann Broadhurſt.

(Then Mr. Winnacott appear'd and offered himſelf.)

Mr. Winnacott. My Lord, I heard I was call'd; and am come as ſoon as I could get in.

Mr. Roſew. Ay, Mr. Winnacott, you have known me many Years; I deſire you would teſtify what you know concerning my Converſation and Behaviour.

Mr. Winnacott. Formerly, when I heard him, I never heard him ſpeak a Word againſt the King or Government; and it is ſome three years ago, ſince I heard him.

Mr. Roſew. Have you heard of any Evil that I have ſaid or done againſt the King or the Government?

Mr. Winnacott. No; but I have heard him often Pray for his Majeſty.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Well, there is your other Witneſs Anne Broadhurſt; what ask you her?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, this was a Servant that lived ſeveral Years in my Family. Pray Nan, how many Years did you live there?

Anne Broadhurſt. Four Years, my Lord.

Mr. Roſew. Pray declare what you know of me in my Family, with reſpect to the King and Government.

Ann Broadhurſt. I have generally heard you twice a Day pray in your Family; and I never heard you Pray in my Life, but I heard you Pray as earneſtly for the King as you did for your own Soul. This I can declare during the time that I lived there.

Mr. Roſew. Did you ever hear me ſpeak Evil of the King in my Family; or Reflectively upon the Government?

Anne Broadhurſt. No; You always Pray'd for the King, (as I ſay) as earneſtly as for your Self or your Family.

Mr. Roſew. If you know any ill Carriage in Word or Deed towards my Sovereign, I deſire you to ſpeak it out, without favour or affection, or any reſpect to me in the World.

Ann Broadhurſt. No, I never did; but have often heard you heartily Pray for him.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray, how long ago is this?

Anne Broadhurſt. Two Years ago I lived with him.

Mr. Roſew. Pray tell my Lord again, how long it was, and when that you lived there.

Anne Broadhurſt. I lived there four Years; and it is two Years ago ſince.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray how often were you at Church in that time?

Anne Broadhurſt. When I had occaſion to go, I did go; but I did uſually hear my Maſter, when I dwelt with him.

Mr. J. Withins. Well, who is your next Witneſs?

Mr. Roſew. Call Anne Manning.

(Who came in.)

You lived with me in my Family ſeveral Years?

Anne Manning. Three Years, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Pray will you declare what you know of my Carriage and Behaviour towards the King and Government, in my Family while you were there?

Anne Manning. My Lord, he prayed for the King, for his long Life in his Family Duties, Morning, and Evening; and in Private, when no body heard him but my ſelf.

L. C. J. What! you and he were at Exerciſe together?

Ann Manning. My Lord, I have gone by his Study-door, and have heard him pray for the King's long Life, when he knew not that any body heard him.

Mr. Roſew. This, my Lord, is more than I expected; for I little thought that any body could give a Teſtimony of my private Devotion; tho' I never then omitted to pray for the King, and never ſhall as long as I live.

Anne Manning. My Lord, he pray'd as heartily for the King's Life as for his own Soul; and I have heard him often praying and deſiring God to preſerve him in his Kingdom, and give him long Life; and have heard him inſiſt upon that Scripture, Speak not evil of the King, no, not in thy Bed Chamber; for the Birds of the Air ſhall declare it.

Mr. Roſew. Pray ſpeak the Truth. Did you ever hear me utter an ill Word, or Reflection upon His Majeſty, or the Government?

Anne Manning. No, my Lord, he was always mightily for the King.

Mr. Roſew. Speak the Truth of what you know; I hope you would ſpeak the Truth, and nothing more than the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath.

Anne Manning. I do ſpeak the Truth, and it is what I can declare, and would, if I were to die the next Moment; and I can ſafely ſwear it.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray call Iſabella Dickeſon——

(Who appear'd.)

My Lord, ſurely I would not ſpeak Evil of his Majeſty, or the Government in publick in the Congregation, when I prayed for him in my Family and my Cloſet. But here's another Servant that liv'd in my Family; Pray will you ſpeak what you know concerning my Behaviour in my Family, with reſpect to the King and Government?

Iſabella

Iſabella Dickeſon. He uſed to pray twice a day in his Family, Morning and Evening, and he always pray'd earneſtly for the King, for his good Health, long Life, and Proſperity.

Mr. Roſew. Did you ever hear me ſpeak any Evil of the King or Government in any Reſpect?

Iſabella Dickeſon. No, never, Sir, in my life; nor do I believe you ever had an evil Thought of the King.

Mr. Roſew. Pray then will you call Mr. James Atkinſon?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. We have had him already, and I ſuppoſe he is gone; he is not here.

Mr. Roſew. I call him now to teſtify another Thing, if your Lordſhip pleaſes; and he is at hand, my Lord, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. You ſhould examine your Witneſſes together, but we will not ſurprize you; we will ſtay.

Mr. J. Holloway. Pray call any body elſe, in the mean time, if you have any other.

L. C. J. Nay, Brother, it may be he hath obſerved a Method to himſelf; he is for his Life; let him take it.

(Then Mr. Atkinſon came in.)

Mr. Roſew. That which I call you now for, Sir, is to teſtify, what you heard upon the 30th of January from me, about praying for the King and all that are in Authority?

Mr. Atkinſon. My Lord, he kept that Day, the 30th of January, as a Day of Faſting and Prayer; and he preached from that Text on the 1 Tim. ii. 1. Pray for Kings and all in Authority: And then he did aſſert that Kingly Government was moſt agreeable to the Word of God, and the Conſtitution of the Government of England, which was the beſt in the whole World; and had been ſo approved by Writers, both Foreign, and of our own Country: And he did urge it as a Duty incumbent upon all People to pray for the King, and Magiſtrates, that they might live a peaceable and quiet life under them in all Godlineſs and Honeſty.

(Then he ſeem'd a little faint and ſtop'd.)

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, will you recollect your ſelf? My Lord will indulge you a little.

Mr. Atkinſon. I have been acquainted with Mr. Roſewell theſe ten Years.

Mr. Roſew. But, pray Sir, what do you remember of the Application of that Sermon upon the Text about praying for Kings, and all in Authority?

Mr. Atkinſon. That Perſons were to pray for them, and to obey them, and that it was their Duty. That is all that I can remember.

Mr. Roſew. What do you remember of my Invectives againſt thoſe that practiced the Contrary?

Mr. Atkinſon. Why truly as to thoſe Things, he did highly condemn thoſe Perſons that had any way acted againſt it. And I have heard him both in publick and private, inveigh againſt thoſe that had any hand in the murder of the late King, and condemned the Fact as a diabolical Deſign.

Mr. Roſew. Is Mr. Smith there?

Mr. Atkinſon. I was very ill on Sabbath-day laſt, and I thought I ſhould not have come out now; and I would not to the beſt of my remembrance ſpeak a Lie, as I am in the preſence of this honourable Court, and in the preſence of God, to whom I muſt give an account another Day.

Mr. Roſew. God will reward you for what you come to do for an innocent Perſon this Day.

Mr. Atkinſon. I never heard an ill Word againſt the King or Government drop from Mr. Roſewell in my Life. I am not upon my Oath, but know my ſelf to be bound to declare and tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Roſew. I am confident, my Lord, he would not ſpeak what he would not ſwear.

L. C. J. The Jury are Judges of that, Mr. Roſewell, I muſt leave it to them.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Mr. Atkinſon, was Mr. Smith with you?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, and I have ſent one to call him.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Sir, let me ask you as to what Miſtreſs Smith ſays, that I ſhould ſay of the Recorder being made a Judge?

Mr. Atkinſon. I never heard you ſpeak any ſuch Words in my Life.

Mr. Roſew. Upon the laſt day of Auguſt laſt, at Mr. Shed's Houſe, ſhe ſays, that I did uſe that Expreſſion.

Mr. Atkinſon. As to Shed's Houſe, I was then Sick, and was not there. If my Lord will give me leave to look upon my Note-book, I can tell what Day I was there.

Smith. It was at one Daniel Weld's Houſe, as I think, that you ſpoke about the Mayors and the Sheriffs; but what you ſaid about Fools in Scarlet Gowns was at Shed's Houſe.

Mr. Roſew. Was there any meeting at the Meeting-houſe, ſince July laſt, upon the Sabbath Day?

Mr. Atkinſon. Truly I be not able to remember; but if my Lord pleaſe to give me leave to look upon my Note-book, I can give an account; for I writ down every Day the Place where we met.

L. C. J. Prithee look upon thy Note book; for I have a mind to know ſomething out of that Note Book. Prithee tell me what was inſiſted upon the 14th of September.

Mr. Atkinſon. My Lord, I only have a Note of the Day, of the Place, and of the Text.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Sir, did you hear me ſpeak of a great Man in Grace-church-ſtreet at the upper end; and that if it had not been for him, the Fire had been quenched?

Mr. Atkinſon. I never heard that Expreſſion from you in all my Life.

(Then Mr. Smith came in.)

Mr. Roſew. Pray did you hear any ſuch thing, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord I can bring all the reſt to teſtify the ſame thing if your Lordſhip will let me call them over again.

L. C. J. Do as you will, I would not reſtrain you from any thing of a legal Indulgence, that is fit to give to any Man in your Condition.

Mr. Atkinſon. What day of the Month do you ſay it was, Sir, that ſhe ſaid you ſpake of the Recorder?

Mr. Roſew. The 31ſt of Auguſt, I think.

Mr. Atkinſon. At that time I was Sick, and was not there.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Mr. Smith, have you ever heard me preach upon the 30th of January?

Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir; I have heard you upon that Day, and upon that Text, that we ſhould Pray for Kings, and all in Authority. You kept it

it as a Day of Humiliation, and you abhorr'd the Action of that Day. It was kept very ſolemnly, for the bewailing the horrid Murder of our late King. And you were ſo far from giving any Countenance to the Action of that Day, that you deteſted it, and preached very much againſt it, and you have always preached up Kingly Government.

Mr. Atkinſon. Sir, you were asking me, if there were a Meeting ſince July, in the Meeting-houſe.

Mr. Roſew. Yes, becauſe ſhe ſays there was one upon the 10th of September.

L. C. J. If you look upon your Notes again, Mr. Roſewell, you'll find it was the 10th of Auguſt.

Mr. Roſewell. Where were you upon the 10th of Auguſt?

Mr. Atkinſon. I was at home Sick then; it is written down, your Lordſhip may ſee it.

L. C. J. Do you take notice where you heard the Meeting was, when you were Sick?

Mr. Atkinſon. Yes, my Lord, I have a ſhort Note of it.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting then?

Mr. Atkinſon. In the Meeting houſe, as I heard.

L. C. J. Pray recollect your ſelf, and look upon your Book, how is it enter'd there?

Mr. Atkinſon. My ſelf at home the 10th of Auguſt.

L. C. J. When didſt thou take that Note, upon your Word now?

Mr. Atkinſon. When my Family came home, ſome body did tell me that Day, or the next day.

L. C. J. Well, where was it the time before?

Mr. Atkinſon. The 3d of Auguſt, at Mr. Crookſhanks; the Text was the 11 Heb. 7. The 10th at the Meeting houſe, my ſelf at home; and Canticles the 7th and 13th.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, theſe Gentlewomen ſay, they were at ſeveral Meetings. I deſire my Lord, that theſe Witneſſes may be called.

L. C. J. Call whom you will. Who do you call firſt?

Mr. Roſew. Thomas How. My Lord, I could bring Hundreds of Witneſſes as to this Point.

L. C. J. Well, there is Thomas How; to what purpoſe do you call him?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, to teſtify that ſhe ſhould ſwear before Sir George Treby, that Mr. How was at a Conventicle ſuch a time, when he was not. And therefore I deſire him that he would pleaſe to teſtify the Truth of that matter.

Mr. How. My Lord, I will teſtify the Truth as far as I know it; ſhe ſent three Ten——

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. How. So they ſaid.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence; and I care not what they ſaid: if you know any thing your ſelf of your own Knowledge, ſpeak it.

Mr. How. They offered——

L. C. J. I tell you their offering ſignifies nothing.

Mr. How. My Lord, it is a Year and an half ago.

L. C. Juſt. Let it be never ſo long ago, if it be only what they ſaid, it ſignifies nothing, it is no ſort of Evidence; but if you can ſay any thing of your own Knowledge, you ſay well; in God's Name we will hear it.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, ſome Queſtions I deſire I may have leave to put to Mr. Recorder.

L. C. Juſt. If Mr. Recorder be ready to anſwer your Queſtions, with all my Heart.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Recorder, I deſire you would pleaſe to do me the Juſtice to teſtify, whether you know any thing concerning Miſtreſs Bathoe.

L. C. Juſt. Who is She?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, it is whether there was not a Conventicle ſworn before Mr. Recorder againſt one Miſtreſs Bathoe.

Mr. Recorder. I can't well tell, Mr. Roſewell. There was a Conviction before me, (as I remember) of one Miſtreſs Bathoe for a Conventicle; and as I take it, (as the Witneſs told you juſt now) ſhe had it from her own Confeſſion.

Mr. Roſew. Do you know any thing, pray, Sir, of a Compoſition that was made upon that Conviction?

Mr. Recorder. No, Sir; you don't think ſure, that I make Compoſitions; or know any thing of them.

Mr. Roſew. Was not the Money, Sir, paid back again?

Mr. Recorder. Not a Penny that I know of, or any Agreement for it.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, Sir, will you acquaint the Court, how that matter was really?

Mr. Recorder. Miſtreſs Bathoe came to me, and ſaid ſhe was miſtaken, if any ſuch Words did paſs from her; for indeed there was never any ſuch Conventicle, as Miſtreſs Smith ſwore ſhe had confeſt. Upon that, I ſent for Miſtreſs Smith, and bid her conſider of it, whether there was really any ſuch Conventicle: and Miſtreſs Bathoe hath brought her Appeal, and it is depending now, and will be heard the next Quarter Seſſions.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, Did you tell her that ſhe might have her Money again?

Mr. Recorder. I did tell her, Miſtreſs Smith was miſtaken, and did not inſiſt upon it, and ſhe would have her Money return'd again.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, Did you ſend your Warrant for one Cartwright under your Hand?

Mr. Recorder. You ask me a hard Queſtion; I might ſend a Summons for ſeveral Perſons, I cannot remember all their Names.

Mr. Roſew. By whom, I pray, Sir?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell who I ſend all my Summons by.

Mr. Roſew. Was it not by theſe two Women, Miſtreſs Smith and Miſtreſs Hilton?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell; it may be it might be ſo.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, What did you ſay to Mr. Cartwright, when he came thither?

Mr. Recorder. I can't remember particularly.

Mr. Roſew. Sir, did you not ask him what he had to ſay againſt theſe Witneſſes that are produc'd againſt me?

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I remember when Mr. Cartwright came to me, I did ask him ſome ſuch Queſtion; for they had told me that he had, by a Perſon, been tampering with them, to take them off from proſecuting a great many Perſons.

Mr. Roſew. By whom were you told ſo, Sir?

Mr.

Mr. Recorder. By themſelves. I know nothing of it; But I tell you the reaſon why I ſent for him; becauſe they told me they went in Danger of their Lives; that they could not walk the Streets in Safety, but they had Stones thrown at them; and they were reproach'd as common Informers, and were beſet hard with Applications of Money, to take them off from Proſecuting. And among the reſt, they complain'd of one Cartwright, that he had been dealing with them; and it was upon that account that I ſent for him, to know what he had to ſay againſt them; and he ſatisfied me, that he had nought to ſay againſt them.

L. C. J. Theſe Queſtions, Mr. Roſewell, perhaps, may be better let alone.

Mr. Recorder. I have ſeen a Letter that does threaten them very much; but I cannot ſay whence it comes.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I deſire to ask Mr. Recorder, whether or no he did not ſend for ſome of my Witneſſes.

Mr. Recorder. I don't know your Witneſſes, Sir.

Mr. Roſew. Did you ſend for one Richard Gibbs of Rotherhith?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, he was Conſtable at Rotherhith.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Sir, upon what account did you ſend for him?

Mr. Recorder. I did it, becauſe I heard the Conſtables of your Side durſt not execute their Warrants, for fear of the Rout of the People.

L. C. J. I tell you, theſe Queſtions were better let alone.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. How, that which I call you for, is, whether Mrs. Smith has not offered to Swear before a Juſtice, that you were at a Conventicle, when you were not?

L. C. J. She ſays, ſhe does not know any thing of her own Knowledge.

Mr. Roſew. She offered it a Year and a Quarter ago, before Sir George Treby.

L. C. J. Were you by when ſhe offered any ſuch thing?

Mr. How. I was by when ſhe was before Sir George Treby; and ſhe went into a Yard, and offered to inform againſt one Mr. How, for being at ſuch a Conventicle; but I was not the Man, ſhe ſaid.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, ſhe had Sworn it.

L. C. J. No, no, ſhe had not Sworn it, ſhe only offered it, and for ought I perceive, ſhe is a very careful Witneſs, to ſee that ſhe does not fix upon the wrong Perſon.

Mr. Roſew. Then if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I deſire John Townſend may be called.

(Who came in.)

Pray will you teſtify what you know concerning Mrs. Smith's ſwearing that Mr. How was at a Conventicle?

Mr. Townſend. Sir, I will tell the Truth as near as I can, I cannot tell the Day, it was about a Year and an half ſince, that he was out of Town of the Lords Day, and that Day was remarkable; for I met him coming to Town, and it was about Evening, about five of the Clock, and that Day they had brought him ſome notice of a Warrant for the ſeizing of his Goods, for that he had been at a Meeting; now he underſtanding when they were to make Affidavit of it before Sir George Treby, he deſired me to go with him thither, and I went with him, and he asked her if ſhe knew the Man. There he was, and I was, and one more, and there came one Stranger: And we went out to the Light, and ſhe look'd upon all of us, and knew never an one of us.

L. C. J. You uſe to go to Conventicles, all of you, I warrant you.

Mr. J. Withins. She was not much out in her Conjecture, I dare ſay.

L. C. J. But ſhe ſeems to be very careful, that ſhe did not ſwear againſt the wrong Perſon. And (Speaking to Mr. Townſend;) If ſhe had Sworn that thou hadſt been there that Day, I warrant you ſhe had Sworn true.

Mr. Roſew. Is Sir George Treby here?

(He did not appear.)

Then I deſire Mr. Thomas Harvey may be call'd.

L. C. J. There he is; what do you ask him?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, to prove that this Elizabeth Smith Swore that ſeveral Perſons were at ſeveral Conventicles, which ſhe afterwards confeſs'd in truth they were not; and made Applications to Compound for the Forfeitures, and they ſhould have their Money again.

L. C. J. Prithee, ask him in general, what does he know of her.

Mr. Harvey. Elizabeth Smith came to a Friend of mine in April, or May laſt——

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you by?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, I was by. She came to a Friend of mine, I ſay, and ſhe told him that ſhe could Swear againſt him, and ſome others, for a conſiderable Value of Forfeitures upon Conventicles——

L. C. J. What Friend of thine was this?

M. Att. Gen. Where does that Friend live?

Mr. Harvey. In Southwark.

L. C. J. What's his Name?

Mr. Harvey. One Games.

L. C. J. What Trade is he?

Mr. Harvey. A Sail maker.

L. C. J. Whereabouts does he live in Southwark?

Mr. Harvey. By St. Mary Overy's Dock. And he came to me, and deſired me that I would meet and ſpeak with her; I met her, I think it it was about the Exchange at the Roe-Buck; there was ſhe, and another fellow with her. She told me ſhe could Swear againſt ſuch and ſuch; and deſired me to give her a Cup of Drink, which I did; and then ſhe told me her Story, and demanded either 10 or 20 Pounds; and that that ſhould take her off from Swearing againſt them. I told her, I could ſay nothing to it; but I would acquaint them; which I did, particularly Mr. Games; They thought not fit to give her any thing; which Anſwer I return'd to her. She told me ſhe was very Poor, and if ſhe could have but ſomething, ſhe would declare who it was that would Swear; but upon reaſonable Compoſition (though ſhe had offer'd to Swear) ſhe would not. But ſhe had taken the Copy from a Siſter of hers; and I think ſhe ſaid her Siſter's Name was Mary Farrar, as I remember.

L. C. J. Did ſhe offer to Swear any thing againſt you?

Mr. Harvey. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You know that Games very well, don't you?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does he uſe to frequent the Church conſtantly?

Mr. Harvey. I don't know that my Lord; I have known him many Years.

L. C. J. Do you live near him?

Mr. Harvey. No, I do not.

Mr. Roſew. Pray call Mr. John Cartwright, and Mr. George Norton.

(Mr. Cartwright appear'd.)

Mr. Cartwright, I deſire you would pleaſe to teſtify what you know here concerning Mrs. Smith, who hath teſtified againſt me?

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, may it pleaſe your Honour; the 22d of July laſt, Mrs. Smith and I were together from Seven o' Clock in the Morning, till half an Hour after Eleven; and that Morning we went to a Conſtable, one Alexander Venner in Alderſgate-ſtreet; and from thence we went to Moorfields to look for a Meeting in Petty-france; but there was none: And from that place we went into Moorfields again, and followed an ancient Man, whom we ſuppoſed was going to a Meeting; and this Man we followed the ſpace of almoſt an Hour's time, that it was almoſt this time of Day that it now is that I am ſpeaking. That Day ſhe convicted Mrs. Bathoe for having a Meeting in her Houſe; when ſhe own'd to me and another Man, that ſhe never was in the Houſe of Mrs. Bathoe; and then for the ſame Morning there was one Rice Bowing that was convicted of a Conventicle at Bermondſey, upon her Oath.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Cartwright. As I was told.

L. C. J. But it may be you were told a Lye; you muſt only ſpeak what you know your ſelf.

Mr. Cartwright. Then, my Lord, ſeveral times ſhe has asked me to convict with her, when I never had been at a Meeting; and alſo, ſhe has offered to convict with me, when I have been there, and ſhe hath not been there; and ſhe alſo asked my Wife to Convict one Dod's Meeting at Shoreditch, and my Wife refuſed it, becauſe ſhe was not there.

L. C. J. Were you by when ſhe asked your Wife to do it?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, and pleaſe your Honour.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this firſt to? Becauſe I ſee you hunted along with her, why did not you go and complain when ſhe had ſeveral times propoſed ſuch a thing to you?

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, I did not ſo well underſtand it at that time.

L. C. J. Who did you firſt of all tell it to, I ask you?

Mr. Cartwright. I firſt of all told it to one Smith.

L. C. J. Was this before Mr. Roſewell was taken, or after?

Mr. Cartwright. It was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you go to Smith, or did he come to you?

Mr. Cartwright. It was through another's means that I came to ſpeak with Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Who was that?

Mr. Cartwright. It was through a Goldſmith's means.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Cartwright: His Name is Ferne; he lives in Newgate-ſtreet.

L. C. J. How came he to underſtand it, to bring you together?

Mr. Cartwright. Becauſe he underſtood that I was with Mrs. Smith that time that ſhe convicted Mrs. Bathoe, and was concern'd with her. I did not know any thing of Mr. Roſewell, at that time at all.

Mr. Roſewell. Did ſhe not tell you, ſhe would do as much for me?

Mr. Cartwright. She did offer me this; that if I would go and diſcover any Meeting, ſhe would Convict them, though ſhe was not there.

L. C. J. Who didſt thou tell a thing of this Nature to? only to Mr. Smith and that Goldſmith?

Mr. Cartwright. I told it firſt to that Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. When theſe Witneſſes, and things drop out of the Clouds, I never put any great Value upon them. Theſe come to ſerve a Turn, and never make any Diſcovery till you are taken.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, you may obſerve it was her common Practice to Convict upon a Report, not having any Eye or Ear-Witneſs.

L. C. J. Well, I will obſerve what he has ſaid; but I tell you what I think of it.

Mr. Cartwright. She has asked me to do it ſeveral times.

L. C. J. All that I can ſay to it, is, it ſeems ſhe look'd upon thee as ſo very a Knave, as that thou wouldſt have done ſuch a thing; and it may be ſhe was not miſtaken.

Mr. Roſew. Then call Mr. George Norton.

(Who appear'd.)

I call you as a Witneſs, to declare what you know of Mrs. Smith's importuning you, or any one to Swear againſt Meetings.

Mr. Norton. Yes, ſhe has offered to Swear, but I cannot ſay with him; for I was not preſent all the time. All that I can ſay, is, that ſhe own'd ſhe was never at Mrs. Bathoe's Houſe.

L. C. J. So ſhe ſays ſtill; and it agrees with all the reſt of the Evidence: It was only Hearſay.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray, will you pleaſe to call John Hobſon?

L. C. J. There he is: What ſay you to him?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I bring this Witneſs to teſtify, that Mrs. Smith ſwore there was a Conventicle at ſuch a Place, when there was none.

Mr. Hobſon. Sir, there was none ſince I came into the Houſe to my Knowledge.

L. C. J. What Houſe?

Mr. Roſew. At Mr. Hale's; ſhe ſwore there was a Meeting upon the 13th of July.

Mr. Hobſon. There was none, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. J. Withins. We muſt not Convict People of Perjury upon ſuch Evidence. Indict her of Perjury, if you have a mind to it.

L. C. J. Where is the Inſtrument Maker, Atkinſon? Bid him ſend me his Book.

(Which was done.)

L. C. J. Were you at every Meeting always that he preach'd at?

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then there might be many Meetings that you do not know of.

Mr. Hobſon. I live next Door to this Mr. Hales.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. You uſe to go frequently to hear Mr. Roſewell, did not you?

Mr. Hobſon. No Sir.

L. C. J. (Having look'd upon the Book.) Was there any Meeting that you know of, the 13 of July?

Mr. Hobſon. None there: He lives the next Door to me.

L. C. J. Was there no Meeting no where there away?

Mr. Hobſon. Not that I know of.

L. C. J. She Swears to that Day at Mr. Hales's.

Mr. Roſew. Ay, and to the very Place.

L. C. J. Do you know one Hodgeſon?

Mr. Atkinſon. It is Hudſon, my Lord.

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord; I do not know him.

L. C. J. Were you ever at his Houſe at any Meeting?

Mr. Hobſon. No my Lord; I never was at any Meeting this two Years.

Mr. Roſewell. He lives next Door to the Houſe.

L. C. J. There may be a Meeting next Door to my Houſe twenty times over, and I not know it.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray call John Crook.

(Who came in.)

Pray, Sir, do you know whether there was any Meeting at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July?

Mr. Crook. No; I never heard of any ſuch thing, but what was according to his own uſe amongſt his Family. I live under his Roof, and never yet did know that there was a Meeting there.

Mr. Roſew. Pray call Sarah Whibby. (Who came in.) I deſire ſhe may be asked, whether Mrs. Smith did not Swear there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hale's the 13th of July; and whether there was any ſuch thing.

Mrs. Whibby. There was none.

L. C. J. That you know of, you mean.

Mrs. Whibby. I am certain of it.

L. C. Juſt. How came you to remember the Day particularly?

Mrs. Whibby. I can tell you by a very good Token; becauſe the Chimney of my Houſe was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. How do you recollect it was the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. Becauſe there was a Neighbour of ours, that is a Waterman, that was ſent for to wait upon His Majeſty; and I went that Day to call him to quench the Fire; not finding him at home, I went further to call more Help.

L. C. J. How can you tell that it was the 13th? It might be the 20th for ought you know.

Mrs. Whibby. No; it was the 13th.

L. C. Juſt. How can you tell that?

Mrs. Whibby. Becauſe there was another Meeting on the 20th Day, for which I paid 20 Shillings; and I can remember my Chimney was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Whibby. It was Sabbath-Day.

L. C. J. Why, if my Chimney was on Fire the 14th or 15th, it may be I can remember it a little while, but how came it that you do remember it ſo long?

Mrs. Whibby. It was the 13th of July.

L. C. J. How can you be ſure of that?

Mrs. Whibby. Becauſe it was the Sunday before the Meeting at Mr. Bowen's.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting that Day your Chimney was on Fire?

Mrs. Whibby. I did not know then; but I knew ſince, it was at Mr. Hudſon's.

L. C. J. Then you have been inſtructed about it; But pray don't think you come here to ſerve a Turn.

Mrs. Whibby. It was at Mr. Hudſon's.

L. C. J. Was there a Meeting on the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. By Relation there was; but I was not at it.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I bring her to teſtify there was no Meeting at Mr. Hale's that Day.

L. C. J. We know well enough you ſniveling Saints can lye.

Mrs. Whibby. I have anſwered the Truth as far as I know.

Mr. Roſew. I only ask her about Mr. Hales.

L. C. J. She ſhall anſwer ſuch Queſtions as the Court ſhall think fit to ask her.

Mr. Roſew. How far is your Houſe from Mr. Hales?

Mrs. Whibby. Next Door.

L. C. J. How far is your Houſe from Mr. Hudſon's?

Mrs. Whibby. A great Way.

L. C. J. Was it half ſo far as you went to fetch the Waterman?

Mrs. Whibby. That was but three Doors off; but Mr. Hudſon's is half a Mile, I believe, or a Mile.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray call Anne Collins.

(She appeared.)

Mr. J. Withins. Well; what do you ask her?

Mr. Roſew. Mrs. Smith hath Sworn, that there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hales the 13th of July; I deſire to know of you, whether there was ſuch an one or no?

Mrs. Collins. The 13th of July there was none.

Mr. Roſew. Upon your certain knowledge?

Mrs. Collins. Upon my knowledge there was none; I can juſtify it.

L. C. J. Not there you mean, at Mr. Hales's: But do you know there was any, any where elſe?

Mrs. Collins. No, not to my knowledge.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Hobſon? Was there any there that Day?

Mrs. Collins. I know one Hudſon.

L. C. J. I thought you had ſaid Hobſon.

Mrs. Collins. No, it was Hudſon.

L. C. J. Was there any Conventicle there?

Mrs. Collins. I cannot tell any thing as to that.

Mr. Roſew. Then pray call Sarah Bathoe, and Suſan Bathoe. (Sarah Bathoe appear'd.)

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to this Witneſs?

Mr. Roſew. That which I call Mrs. Bathoe for, is to prove that Mrs. Smith was miſtaken, when ſhe Swore that Mrs. Bathoe permitted a Conventicle at her Houſe the 20th of July: Upon which Mrs. Bathoe was Convicted, and brought her Appeal.

L. C. J. You do miſtake, Mr. Roſewell. She ſays, that Bathoe confeſs'd that there had been a Conventicle at her Houſe, as ſhe heard.

Mrs. Bathoe. She has convicted me.

L. C. J. Ay, but it was upon your own Confeſſion.

Mrs. Bathoe. No, I never confeſs'd any ſuch thing; for I had none there at that time, nor did confeſs any ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Had you ever any Conventicle at your Houſe?

Mrs. Bathoe. That is not it that I am to anſwer to now. I deſire to be excuſed from anſwering that Queſtion.

L. C. J. Then I will not believe her, if ſhe talk'd as long as you Preach.

Mr. Roſew. There was an Appeal brought, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. She is not a Witneſs, it is in her own Caſe. It would be a fine thing if an old Woman's Story ſhould prevail here againſt poſitive Teſtimony.

(Then Suſan Bathoe came in)

Mr. Roſew. Mrs. Smith hath Sworn, that Mrs. Bathoe had a Conventicle at her Houſe the 20th of July.

L. C. J. No; She only Swears that Mrs. Bathoe confeſs'd it; but her ſelf was not there, ſhe ſays.

Mr. Roſew. Did you confeſs it?

L. C. J. No matter what ſhe ſays; it all agrees with that Teſtimony that ſhe has now given: This Matter, it ſeems, is depending upon an Appeal, and ſo ſhe teſtifies for her ſelf. And when I ask her whether ſhe ever had any Conventicle at her Houſe, ſhe will not tell me; which induces a Suſpition that ſhe does not come for a fair Purpoſe, but only to ſerve a Turn.

Mr. Roſew. Pray Mrs. Suſan Bathoe, was there any ſuch Conventicles?

Mrs. Bathoe. There was none.

L. C. J. Why I tell you, you miſtake ſtill. Mrs. Smith ſwears that Mrs. Bathoe confeſs'd to her that ſhe had a Conventicle, but ſhe ſwears ſhe was not there. And take all together, ſeeing ſhe will not anſwer whether ſhe ever had a Conventicle; and ſo it may be only a Miſtake juſt of the Day: Or ſhe might tell her ſo, for any thing appears; and for ought I know Hales has had Conventicles: and what is all this to the Purpoſe of which you are Accuſed?

Mr. Roſew. Call Mr. John Ferne.

(He did appear.)

My Lord, I deſire Mrs. Bathoe may not go away.

L. C. J. Let her ſtay then. What do you call this Man for?

Mr. Roſew. It is to prove ſhe has compounded Convictions. Pray Sir, do you know whether Mrs. Smith hath compounded with Mrs. Bathoe ſince the Conviction, to ſet by the Proſecution; and Mrs. Bathoe was prevail'd with ſo to do?

Mr. Ferne. Mrs. Bathoe came to me about 8 or 10 Days ago; ſays ſhe, I muſt get you to go with me to the Recorder's. I am promiſed my Mony again, that was paid upon the Appeal I brought. I was glad to hear it, and went with her; the Time appointed was five or ſix a-Clock. I was there a little after five; and Mrs. Smith was not there, that was one of the Witneſſes upon her Conviction, Elizabeth Smith, for I ſerved her with a notice to attend the Recorder. We were there a ſecond Time at the Recorder's Chamber about ſix a-Clock; ſhe was not come. We waited hard by, and went a third Time; and then ſhe was there, and deſired my Siſter to excuſe her that ſhe was not there earlier; but ſhe did not doubt but ſhe ſhould have her Money; and waited to ſee the Recorder. Mr. Recorder had ſeveral above with him. We waited an Hour or better. Mrs. Smith went up, and my Siſter went up with her, or followed her: And ſays the Recorder to her, Are not you the Woman that was with me ſuch a Time, with Mrs. Williams? Yes, Sir (ſays ſhe) I was. Says he, What made you make ſuch haſte away? Upon that, Mr. Courthope ſteps forward with the Book; Sir, (ſays he) I have paid it in to the Clerk of the Peace. Then, ſays the Recorder, It is out of my Hands, I can go no further: But promiſed afterwards to ſpeak with Sir William Smith, the Chairman of the Seſſions about it.

L. C. J. I can make Nothing of all this. What a Buſineſs is here?

Mr. Ferne. She ſeems to be a Raſh Woman, ready to Swear any thing.

L. C. J. Oh dear, Sir! and you ſeem to be a grave, prudential ſort of a Man.

Mr. Roſew. If ſhe did not Swear that this Meeting was at Mr. Hale's, why was he convicted for that Meeting?

L. C. J. I know nothing of the Conviction at all; it is the firſt time that I have heard of it.

Mr. Roſew. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we deſire to have the Record of it read; here it is.

L. C. J. Make it appear that ſhe ſwore, and that what ſhe ſwore was falſe; and then you ſay ſomething.

Mr. Roſew. We deſire to have theſe Copies of Records read. Here it is per Teſtimonium Elizabethæ Smith, or per Sacramentum.

L. C. J. Prove that ſhe ſwore it.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, we had a very graeious Anſwer concerning the Petition that my poor Wife deliver'd to His Sacred Majeſty in reference to her coming to me; which His Majeſty granted with a great deal of Compaſſion: He remitted it to your Lordſhip, and your Lordſhip did ſecond it, for the having the uſe of what Records ſhould be neceſſary for my Defence. And upon what Application we made to the Attorney General, it was readily granted: But for the ſearching of the Records, we have deſired the Recorder, and cannot have it.

L. C. J. You are much miſ-informed in that. I'll tell you how it was: Your Wife, and a young Man came to me, a matter of a Fortnight ago, and did tell me, there were ſeveral Records that were neceſſary for your Defence, and the Recorder refuſed to let you have Copies of them. I told her then, God forbid but that you ſhould have all manner of Helps from Records that were neceſſary for your Tryal; and thereupon I did require my Brother Jenner, who is Recorder, to attend to ſhew Cauſe, why he did refuſe to let you have any Records that you thought neceſſary for your Defence: And he gave me this for Anſwer, that they were Records of Convictions, and were return'd to the Seſſions of Peace; ſome to Surrey, and ſome into Middleſex, and ſome were in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands. Whereupon I told your Wife, if ſhe would go to the Clerk of the Peace for Copies of the Records, if they did not readily give you Copies at your Charge, I would make them do it, if ſhe came to complain to me; and if they would not, I would lay them by the Heels. When my Brother Jenner came to me, ſaid I, I believe that which they have a mind to, is to know upon whoſe Teſtimony the Convictions are made. Now that is no part of the Conviction; and that we thought ought not to be granted.

Nor

Nor is there any Law for it; for that is to open a Way to the tampering with the King's Witneſſes. After this, there was Mr. Wallop that came and moved the Court of King's-Bench about this Matter; and we gave him the ſame Anſwer, that for any one to diſcover the King's Witneſſes before they come to a Tryal, was not to be allowed by Law. If Mr. Attorney had come here, and ſaid, Pray give us a Liſt of all the Witneſſes that Mr. Roſewell will make uſe of at his Tryal; we ſhould have denied his Motion. God forbid but that the Witneſſes you bring ſhould be heard; and that the Witneſſes they bring ſhould be heard; but we muſt prevent tampering with the Witneſſes on all ſides.

Mr. Roſew. If the Witneſſes are ſuppreſs'd, it is impoſſible to encounter their Teſtimony.

L. C. J. What do you mean by ſuppreſſing the Witneſſes? They are here produced.

Mr. Roſew. Their Names, my Lord, upon the Records.

L. C. J. Their Names are never expoſed, nor ought to be.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, it is that which muſt enable me to make my Defence. If we could have their Names, we could prove them Perjured.

L. C. J. It cannot be by Law. You have the ſame Benefit that all the reſt of the King's Subjects have. If any one be Convicted of Treaſon by Witneſſes (twenty in Number) we never enter them upon the Record; and if any be acquitted, the Teſtimony of the Evidence upon that Acquittal, is never enter'd upon Record. It may be in your Matter, it was not upon the Teſtimony of Witneſſes, that the Conviction was; but upon the Notoriety of the Fact, or by Confeſſion, as in the Caſe of Mrs. Bathoe; that was by Confeſſion, and Witneſſes. The Notoriety of the Fact, or the Confeſſion of the Party, are all, and each of them, ſufficient to make a Conviction by Record. You have the ſame Liberty that every Subject has.

Mr. Roſew. Mr. Courthope is the Recorder's Clerk, that ſaw the Convictions in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands.

L. C. J. We cannot tell that, without the Clerk of the Peace was here.

Mr. Roſew. Pray, where is Mr. Charles Walker? (He appear'd)

I deſire you, Sir, to teſtify what you know concerning the Conviction of Elizabeth Smith upon Mr. Hales, for a Conventicle at his Houſe the 13th of July?

Mr. Walker. You had a Copy of it from the Clerk of the Peace; I made it out.

Mr. Roſew. Of Mr. Hales and Miſtreſs Bathoe, do you mean?

Mr. Walker. No, only of Miſtreſs Bathoe.

Mr. Roſew. Then I ſuppoſe we may have it; and the Clerk will teſtify it to be a true Copy.

Mr. Walker. This is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Then make what uſe you pleaſe of it. Will you have it read?

Mr. Roſew. No, my Lord, not yet. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I deſire Richard Drew may be call'd; but however, if your Lordſhip will, let him read that Paſſage in it, that I cannot ſo well read, 'tis in Court Hand.

(Clerk of the Crown reads.)

Memorandum quod ad generalem Seſſionem pacis pro Com' Midd' ſeptimo die Octobris, triceſſimo ſexto, &c.

L. C. J. What do you make from this? Here is a Record of the Conviction, which ſays, that by two credible Witneſſes, and the Notoriety of the Fact ſhe was convicted.

Mr. Roſew. Pray call Richard Drew.

(Who came in)

Pray Sir, what do you know about Miſtreſs Smith's Practice in relation to Conventicles?

Mr. Drew. Upon the eleventh of July laſt, there was an Acquaintance of mine that ſhe did pretend was at a Meeting——

L. C. J. Who was that that did pretend ſo?

Mr. Drew. Elizabeth Smith; and ſhe would have had ſome Money of him. He came to me, and asked my Advice. Yes (ſaid I) I think you had better give her Money, than to run the Hazard of ſwearing againſt you: So he did. He took me along with him to a Place where they were to meet, where ſhe took ten Shillings, and promiſed he ſhould come into no further trouble about it.

L. C. J. Had he been at a Conventicle, or not?

Mr. Drew. That I cannot ſay.

L. C. Juſt. Do you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I cannot ſay that he was, or was not.

L. C. J. But that is not the Queſtion I ask you; for you would not perſwade him to give her Money, if he had not been at a Conventicle.

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I did not know whether he was, or was not.

L. C. J. I ask you again, did you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. I believe he might, by his being ſo willing to take my Advice; tho' he ſaid it was a baſe thing to give her any Money in ſuch a matter.

Mr. Roſew. Pray call James Howard.

L. C. J. There he is; what would you have with him?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I crave leave firſt to ask Miſtreſs Shaftoe; Are you Mr. Hilton's Wife?

Smith. Yes.

Mr. Roſew. Then I deſire Mr. Howard may teſtify what he knows concerning this Miſtreſs Smith: But firſt, which Hilton's Wife are you?

Smith. George Hilton's.

Mr. Roſew. What then do you know of her, Sir?

Mr. Howard. I was once drinking a Cup of Ale in Grub ſtreet, where ſhe did take a parcel of Money in the Concern of the King, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee ſpeak up: In what Concern?

Mr. Howard. She took a Bribe in the Concern of the King.

L. C. J. What doſt thou mean?

Mr. Howard. Of a Perſon that had been at a Meeting.

L. C. J. Prithee, what Bribe was it?

Mr. Howard. About 11 or 12 Shillings.

L. C. J. Prithee, of whom was it?

Mr. Howard. The Man I never ſaw, nor the Woman before: I came in by chance.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mr. Howard. About the middle of July laſt.

L. C. J. Who did you diſcover this matter unto?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was only drinking

a Cup

a Cup of Ale; and I diſcover'd it to Mr. Drew, that was call'd laſt.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Drew one of them?

Mr. Howard. No; Mr. Drew I am acquainted with; he is my Neighbour.

L. C. J. When were you at Church laſt?

Mr. Howard. The laſt Lord's Day.

L. C. J. When did you receive the Sacrament there?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I never did. We have no Pariſh-Church at preſent; it is now a Building.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Howard. In Mugwell-ſtreet.

L. C. J. Have you no publick preaching in the Pariſh?

Mr. Howard. I do hear Doctor Fowler, and Mr. Smythies too, ſometimes.

L. C. J. That is when there is no Conventicle (I ſuppoſe) in the way. That Mr. Smythies and Doctor Fowler are both very well known.

Mr. Roſew. Is Mrs. Anne Fary here?

(She did not appear.)

Pray call Mrs. Anne Higgerſon.

(Who appeared.)

Do you know Mrs. Shaftoe, or Mrs. Hilton, as ſhe is call'd?

Mrs Higgenſon. My Lord, I have very little Knowledge of her; I have known her but a very little while.

Mr. Roſew. What Teſtimony can you give of her Converſation?

Mrs. Higgenſon. Since I have known her, I have heard ſome ill things of her: But I cannot ſpeak to any thing of mine own Knowledge.

L. C. Juſt. Why, ſo People may ſay a great many ill things of you, that you do not deſerve, nor know any thing of.

Mr. Roſew. Call Anne Carter.

(She did not appear.)

I deſire Sir John Talbot would pleaſe to be examined.

L. C. Juſt. Here is Sir John Talbot by me.

Mr. Roſew. Sir, I deſire you would pleaſe to teſtify to the Court and the Jury, what you know concerning the Converſation of Miſtreſs Shaftoe, otherwiſe called Mrs. Hilton.

Sir John Talbot. She was a Servant, that liv'd in my Houſe a great many Years; but I did not uſe to converſe with her.

Mr. Roſew. No, Sir John; but what do you know of her Converſation while ſhe lived in your Houſe?

Sir J. Talbot. All that I know of her is, ſhe had no very good Character in the Family.

L. C. Juſt. Do you know any thing of your own Knowledge?

Sir John Talbot. As to any thing of my own Knowledge, I cannot ſpeak; it is all no other than Hear-ſay from all the Family.

L. C. J. But I ask you what you know of your own Knowledge, Sir John. Tell us the Particulars you your ſelf know.

Sir J. Talbot. It was the Complaint of all the Servants of the Houſe, that ſhe was guilty of telling Lyes and Stories in the Family.

Mr. Roſew. Was ſhe reported in the Family a frequent Lyer?

Sir J. Talbot. She had that Character in the Family; all the Servants complain'd of it. I only know of other things ſince ſhe was gone out of the Family; and that ſhe has been concern'd in an odd ſort of Practice, about attempting to ſteal away a young Lady.

L. C. J. Do you know of it of your own Knowledge?

Sir J. Talbot. I had it from her ſelf, and upon her own Affirmation.

L. C. J. What was that?

Sir J. Talbot. It was about the Practice that had been ſet on foot of cheating People of Money for procuring Fortunes; particularly concerning the Daughter of one Sir Harry Jones. And there have a great many Gentlemen been abuſed about Town in that Matter, and made believe that this Woman had an Intereſt in her, and would put this great Fortune into their Hands: I have not been privy my ſelf to any of the Negotiations, but I have underſtood there were ſuch Practices; there was one Salem, and ſhe that were ingaged.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John, do you know this of your own Knowledge? for we muſt not hear Evidence to take away People's Reputation by Hear-ſay: If ſhe hath confeſs'd any thing to you, you may ſpeak that, and let us know it.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, if it be not too long to give you the Circumſtances, how I come to know it; I will tell you what I have been informed about it.

L. C. J. No, that is not Evidence, Sir John; unleſs you know it your ſelf, or had it by her Confeſſion.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I do not come here as a voluntary Evidence, but I am here called upon, And my Lord, I think I ought to give my Teſtimony if a Man's Life be concerned.

L. C. J. And ſo ought we who are upon our Oaths, to inſiſt upon it, that you give legal Evidence; what you know of your own Knowlege; and I ask you here again, whether what you relate be of your own Knowledge, or what was by Hear-ſay?

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I had notice ſent me by a Letter, That there was a Gentleman came to Thiſtleworth with a Coach and four Horſes, with a Deſign to ſteal Mrs. Jones. I cannot remember whether there was any Name to the Letter, but ſuch a Letter was ſent, and I was to enquire about it of this Ellinor Shaftoe, who was engaged in the Deſign. I ſent to her to come to me, and ſhe did come; and told me that there had been ſuch a Practice of one Salem, and ſhe would bring a Gentleman to diſcover the whole Buſineſs, and ſhe did ſo; and brought this Hilton (by whoſe Name, (as her Husband) ſhe owns her ſelf) and he came to me, and gave me a Note of ſeveral Gentlemen's Names that were concern'd in it; and I believe, I have a Book wherein their Names are. I then asked why ſhe did let it ſo long run, and the Buſineſs go on ſo far. Mr. Hilton did confeſs, that one particular Gentleman had been kept in treaty, who was a Country-man, and came to live in Town, and was in Town the greateſt Part of the Winter upon this Deſign; and did walk that Way expecting that this Nan Carter ſhould bring down this Heireſs, that ſo they might have an Opportunity to Steal her. Mr. Hilton had no other way of Application to me, but by this Shafto; and he confeſs'd himſelf that he was a Party concern'd in the Deſign.

L. C. Juſt. Ay; but what did Hilton's Wife

ſay?

ſay? for what he ſaid is nothing to the Purpoſe in this Point.

Sir J. Talbot. She is one that I had no Communication with, nor converſe, while ſhe was in my Family, otherways than as an ordinary Servant; but this ſame Mrs. Jones was my Ward.

L. C. Juſt. Did ſhe confeſs ſhe had any Deſign in this matter; or was to have a Reward for ſetting the matter on foot?

Sir J. Talbot. No, my Lord; ſhe did not particularly confeſs ſhe had any hand in the Deſign; but it was that which ſeveral other Perſons have come and enquired ſince of my Family about; who have told me, that there was one Shafoe, otherwiſe Hilton, that was concern'd in it.

L. C. Juſt. That is not Evidence, Sir John, I muſt tell you agen.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I can't make the Evidence otherways than as it is. I tell you what I know.

L. C. J. You underſtand your ſelf ſo well, Sir John, that you know it is not Evidence; and you are not to talk of what other People have told you.

Mr. J. Withins. How long did ſhe live in your Family?

Sir J. Talbot. I can't tell how long (my Lord) but I believe ſhe was there ten Years.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That's a ſtrange thing, that you ſhould keep an ill Woman ſo long.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, with your Permiſſion, ſhe was a Servant when that Child came to me, and when the Mother died; and my Wife did not think fit to put her away; ſo ſhe came and ſtaid with the Child as long as my Wife could keep her; but at laſt ſhe did foment Differences in the Family, Lyes and Stories; and was found to be a Perſon not fit to live in the Family; and therefore my Wife was afraid to keep her any longer, and put her away.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Roſewell, have you any other Witneſſes?

Mr. Roſew. Pray call Anne Dillingham.

L. C. Juſt. Well, what do you ask her?

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I bring this Witneſs to prove concerning Mrs. Shafoe alias Hilton, that ſhe offered to ſwear againſt People as being at Conventicles, whom ſhe had never ſeen.

Mrs. Dillingham. She lodged in my Houſe, and is a very ill Woman; and asked me to ſwear of Meetings, that I never knew any thing of at all in my Life. I never was at Meetings but about Thirteen Years ago. I asked her why I ſhould ſwear, or what I could ſwear to? She told me, I ſhould have a ſhare of the Money if I would ſwear to what ſhe ſaid; whether it were right or wrong, I ſhould have a Share if I would but ſwear.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mrs. Dillingham. Two Years ago.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this to firſt?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I am Subpœna'd here to give my Teſtimony.

L. C. J. That's true; but who did you tell this that you talk of firſt to?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I never told it to any body but her, except it was to my own Husband.

L. C. J. But why would you keep this as a Secret, and not tell it to any body?

Mrs. Dillingham. Why, my Lord, I don't ſpeak it for any Malice to her at all, I aſſure you.

L. C. Juſt. Where do you live?

Mrs. Dillingham. In Long-Acre at the Golden Ball.

L. C. J. If you live in Long-Acre, how came you to diſcover any thing of a matter that was tranſacted at Rotherhith?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I know nothing of it, of my own Knowledge; but what ſhe would have perſwaded me to.

L. C. J. But how come ſhe to talk to you about a matter of Rotherhith? or, you to know any thing about her? that I deſire to know; and how you came here?

Mrs. Dillingham. One Mrs. Peirce, that is a Neighbour, ask'd me what I knew of her; and ſo would Subpœna me, becauſe ſhe lodged at my Houſe.

L. C. J. How long did ſhe lie at your Houſe?

Mrs. Dillingham. I can't tell; I believe about half a Year.

L. C. J. Well, what became of her? How did ſhe behave her ſelf?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Husband turn'd her out of the Houſe, and would not entertain her; becauſe ſhe kept Company with a Man that was none of her Husband.

L. C. Juſt. Why, can you tell when they were married?

Mrs. Dillingham. She went as the Wife of Mr. George Hilton, when ſhe was not married.

L. C. J. How! Was ſhe not married then?

Mrs. Dillingham. No, they were not married then. He was not her Husband then. There are a great many of our Neighbours that can ſay more than I. She is a naughty, filthy Woman; a very ill Woman; if I ſhould call her Whore, I believe ſhe might trouble me for it; but I believe it to be true.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Roſewell?

Mr. Roſew. No, my Lord; but I hope your Lordſhip will give me leave to ſay ſomething to the Court and Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorny, have you any more Witneſſes to call for the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have ſome Witneſſes to ſupport the Credit of theſe Witneſſes that we have produced: But we don't think there is any need; nor that it is any way diminiſhed by the Defence of the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. C. Juſt. Do as you pleaſe, Mr. Attorny; go on your own way.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord; we ſhall trouble your Lordſhip no further with any Evidence.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Roſewell, let's hear what you have to ſay further for your ſelf; for all the Witneſſes have been heard, of one ſide and t'other.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, and dear Countrymen who are to be my Judges in this Cauſe this Day; What I now ſpeak, is with reſpect as much to their precious Souls, who are concern'd either in Proſecution or trying of me, as my own Safety. There is not a Man of you of the Jury, tho' you are Strangers to me, but I would lay down my Life to Morrow to ſave one of your Souls, if I might be an Inſtrument therein: How much more then all of them, if the Conſideration be taken of the Worth of an immortal Soul? Your Lordſhip knows, and I am ſenſible,

ſenſible, how unfit I am now to do ſuch a thing as this is, in the Company of ſo many learned Gentlemen of the long Robe. I have betray'd already too much of my Ignorance in ſuch Affairs, and I beg your Pardon for it; and I humbly thank your Lordſhip, and the Court for the Indulgence that you have ſhewed towards me in my Infirmities. You are my Lord, as in the Preſence, ſo in the Place of the great God, the Judge and Lord of all, at this Day: You are Elohim, I have ſaid ye are Gods; whoſe Property it is to help the Weak, and compaſſionate the innocent; therefore I make this Apology in reference to my own Innocency, and my great inability to ſum up the Proofs that have been in this Cauſe. If you will put my Weakneſs in competition with their vaſt Abilities, who are of Council for the King againſt me; and my ignorance in the Laws of the Land againſt their great Knowledge; I cannot but expect to be overthrown, notwithſtanding my Caſe is very innocent, and I have declared in the Preſence of God the Truth of my Heart this Day. And if I were to be call'd to the Bar of the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, before I ſleep; I ſhould ſpeak the ſame thing, and muſt, and no other. I am ſenſible, a Lye is both a baſe, and a very wicked thing; and that the Lake that burneth with fire is prepared for all Lyars. And I pray God convince theſe Gentlewomen wherein they have wrong'd and abuſed me; that they may repent of their Sin; which (I bleſs God) I have prayed for them moſt Days ever ſince I was confin'd, and beg'd it of God with Tears, in Charity to their poor Souls. And I believe I have pray'd more for His Majeſty in one Week, than they have done in all their Lives. They are not the King's Friends, but his Enemies, in bringing ſuch Allegations againſt thoſe that are his true, faithful and innocent Subjects; as I am, my God knoweth.

And here, my Lord, I would firſt obſerve the Variations that are in their Evidence. In the firſt place, Mrs. Smith ſwears, That the Text I preached upon was the 21ſt Chapter of Geneſis. And here is Mrs. Hilton comes, and ſhe ſwears afterwards, that it was the 20th: herein they vary. Then I ſuppoſe, my Lord, if they vary and differ, in Law they are not two Witneſſes: But differing ſo, are both of them incredible: And I think the Statute Law of this Land is, that a Man muſt be convicted upon the Oath of two Credible Witneſſes.

Next my Lord, here's Miſtreſs Smith ſwears, that theſe Things were delivered, which are charged in the Indictment, altogether in the Morning-Exerciſe, in the Forenoon: Whereas your Lordſhip has heard from ſeveral Witneſſes (and I do not know one Man of them but fears a Lye; and would have ſworn to the Truth of what they have ſpoken. They tell you) how every Paſſage that theſe People would pervert muſt come in, and how it was divided. I hope your Lordſhip will pardon the Infirmity of two or three, a few illiterate Men, that are weak, and could not ſo well inſtruct themſelves to ſpeak in a Court of Juſtice upon ſuch an Occaſion. But upon the whole matter, they give ſuch an account, all, that it cannot be preſumed, or thought that they ſhould agree to ſpeak any thing that was not true. And I am confident, there is not a Man of them but would take his Oath, (as I ſaid) of the Truth of what he has here declared. And they have declared that there were two diſtinct Exerciſes, as I have proteſted in the Preſence of the great God. That in the Morning was upon the 20th of Geneſis: And th' other in the Afternoon (there being an Hour that paſt between,) was upon one particular Verſe of a Chapter in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, quite diſtinct from the other Diſcourſe that was in the Morning. She not only varies from the Truth, but alſo from her Fellow-witneſs, that it was all in one Exerciſe. This I ſubmit to your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Conſideration (theſe worthy Gentlemen that are to judge of my Life, and Death) whether they are two Credible Witneſſes, thus varying.

There be ſeveral other Things (my Lord) that becauſe of my preſent Infirmity, I may not ſo readily call to Mind; but which ought to be recall'd and recollected; as in reference to the Perſon whoſe Houſe we met at; One ſays it was one Capt. Daniel Weldy's: Another that it was one Mr. Daniel's. Therein again they vary, in reference to the Perſon; and if they are out in one Thing, they may be out in another.

Smith. I can ſay nothing about his Name, I never was there in my Life before.

L. C. J. Mrs! Mrs! You muſt not interrupt him; he is upon his Defence for his Life.

Mr. Roſew. Then, my Lord, ſhe ſays that my Text in the Afternoon was upon a Pſalm; and there was no ſuch thing as your Lordſhip has had it particularly made appear to you. I have ingenuouſly told you the Text, and the Truth; I have ſpoken it from my heart in the Preſence of the great God; and upon what occaſion every Paſſage that they have wreſted was ſpoken: And your Lordſhip may thereby perceive how moſt abominably they have perverted my Words. Now they having wreſted my Words that are innocent in themſelves (ſo far from being Treaſon, that I do not know there was any Fault or Crime in them; being only plain Scriptural Proofs of Doctrinal Propoſitions in Divinity, without thoſe Applications that they have pretended to) certainly your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider, what is moſt probable or likely; what they have declar'd, or what you have heard from the ſeveral Witneſſes that have come in to teſtify concerning me.

My Lord, I was going to ſpeak ſomething to your Lordſhip of the great Wickedneſs of their making the Application of what was innocently ſpoken and meant, to the late King of England, and his preſent Majeſty, whom I daily pray for, and always did; whatſoever theſe Witneſſes have declared concerning me. And your Lordſhip has heard my Maid teſtify (which I little expected) That I uſe to pray for the King every Morning and Evening in my own Houſe; and God knows that to him I have addreſſed my ſelf for him daily: And more than that ſhe heard me (when I thought none but the God of Heaven himſelf had heard me) pray for him in my Cloſet. I would deſire your Lordſhip and the Jury, to conſider, whether theſe are not the Criminals (and not I) that have made application of innocent Paſſages, and wreſted the Words that were plain and innocent in themſelves, to a wrong meaning, to make me Guilty of High-Treaſon; applying them to His Majeſty jeſty, when I never intended, or thought the leaſt of any ſuch thing.

My Lord, I doubt not but there have been ſeveral that have joyn'd in it, that have help'd to frame and forge this Accuſation againſt me. And there is that which I ſuggeſted to your Lordſhip in the Morning, in the beginning of this Cauſe: Theſe Perſons have not only, or ſo much Sworn me a Knave; but a perfect Fool and a Mad man to ſpeak ſuch abſurd, incoherent, inconſiſtent, ſolleciſtical and nonſenſical Things. I believe there is no Man of common Senſe and Reaſon, no Gentleman that's here this Day, that can imagine that a Perſon that had the uſe of common Senſe and Reaſon, ſhould ſpeak ſuch abſurd Things as theſe are. Beſides, my Lord, I have brought Witneſſes, ſeveral of them, to teſtify there never was any ſuch Thing ſpoken by me as they have teſtify'd againſt me, and miſapply'd. I have likewiſe produced ſeveral Perſons to give Evidence of my uſual and conſtant Practice with relation to the King and Government all along; my contending for Monarchy, and againſt Anarchy, which did too much reign in theſe late Days of Confuſion, which I remember by very ſad Experience, tho' I was then indeed but a Child. And when I came to be a Man, I uſed always to obſerve the 30th of January, and the 29th of May: Preaching upon thoſe Days, and preſſing People to Obedience; and inveighing againſt thoſe that had acted againſt their Principles, and were Rebels either againſt his preſent Majeſty, or had been concern'd in that barbarous Act againſt his Royal Father; which I did utterly abhor.

And, my Lord, Methinks it ſhould have been very unlikely that a Man that ſhould make it his common Practice ſo to do, as I have teſtify'd concerning my ſelf, ſhould fall under ſuch a Suſpicion and Accuſation as I now am; Or, that ſuch an one ſhould fall into ſuch a Solleciſm, as the Words that are teſtified againſt me muſt import; it is very unlikely. I leave it to the great God of Heaven to vindicate my Innocency in the Matter; which I do not queſtion but he will do.

Then, my Lord, here are ſeveral Gentlemen of the Church of England that have teſtify'd concerning my Converſation. They have had Acquaintance with me many Years, ſome of them near 20 Years; the leaſt, 8, 10, or 12. They never heard an indecent Word, with reſpect to His Majeſty, or the Government, fall from me; any unworthy Reflection upon either of them: But my conſtant Practice was to pray for His Majeſty with all earneſtneſs and ſollicitude. There are ſeveral of them Gentlemen of repute in the City. There are particularly two Perſons that belong'd to an honourable Family, in which I lived ſo many Years, who give a Teſtimony what my Converſation there was; and my conſtant Practice of practice of praying for the King, while I was there. This your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, have heard and obſerved; I doubt not.

But, beſides that; your Lordſhip and the Jury, I hope obſerve as to theſe People who Swear againſt me; what my Witneſſes have teſtify'd; that they would ſwear any thing, and forſwear it; And what a Character is given concerning one of them particularly, your Lordſhip has heard from that worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, whoſe Face I never ſaw before it was in this Place. And by the laſt Witneſs, you have a Teſtimony concerning her lewd Converſation. And ſeveral other Witneſſes prove ſhe would Swear any thing for them, if they would Swear for her. So that it appears ſhe would, and does Swear at a venture ſuch and ſuch Conventicles; only upon hear-ſay, and meer report: And that ſhe has taken Money, and made ſome Compoſitions too. Theſe things I muſt refer to your Lordſhip, and theſe worthy Gentlemen, who are of the Jury.

If then my Carriage and Converſation (ſo well known in the World) be compared with that Character that is given of theſe Perſons; I muſt humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, how far they are to be believed againſt me; and might argue from the Incredibility of their Teſtimony; but your Lordſhip cannot but remark it.

My Lord, It is very ſtrange that theſe two Women ſhould ſo exactly remember theſe Words. They agree in every particular Circumſtance. I durſt appeal to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, particularly to the Jury, if now they would undertake to repeat upon their Notes, the Words that have ſo often been repeated here; and whether there is any of them would be able to agree in all the particular Words? They have an incredible Memory that could ſo exactly agree together that theſe were the Words. I do humbly ſubmit this to your Lordſhip. For, my Lord, I lay the ſtreſs of my Defence very much not only upon the incredibility and improbability, but even the impoſſibility of the Evidence that they have given. I humbly ſubmit it, I ſay, to your Lordſhip, and theſe Gentlemen; and leave it with them and the great God of Heaven, whom I pray to direct them. I hope they will conſider the Life of a Man, and the worth of Blood. My Lord, however I am repreſented this Day, I know my ſelf to be a faithful Subject to His Majeſty; and to the great God of Heaven, whoſe I am, and whom I deſire to Serve.

My Lord, I will now, if you pleaſe, ingenuouſly confeſs my Crime, if it were any. I have been frequently Preaching, in my Congregation, out of the Scriptures; and it is true, as your Lordſhip ſees, the Chapter came then in courſe to be Expounded: Which I uſe to do, to let the People underſtand the Scripture, as well as I could; for the People periſh for lack of Knowledge; and it is by the Knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt that they muſt come to Life and Salvation; for him to know is Life Eternal. It has been my way to Expound the Scriptures to them.

In the Preſence of the great God, before whom I ſpeak, to whom I can appeal for the truth and integrity of what I ſay, that God before whom we muſt all ſtand, (all whoſe Faces I ſee here ſhall meet, and ſee one another at the great Tribunal,) It is to this God that I appeal as to the Truth of my Heart in theſe Things. And, my Lord, I ſhall continue as I have done, however God diſpoſe of me, to Pray for the Life, and Happineſs of His Majeſty; my uſual Prayer, Morning and Evening being, that God would crown him with Grace here, and Glory and Honour hereafter. And this I ſhall do by the grace of God unto my Dying day; For my Soul does abhor ſuch Things as have been testify'd against me this Day.

Thus, my Lord, I have dealt as plainly with your Lordship and the Jury as I can. My Infirmities are great. I desire to leave my whole Cause with the Lord; and with these worthy Gentlemen my Country-men, who I do not question will have a just compassion and consideration of my Case, under these Circumstances wherein I stand; and to all the Circumstances that have been made out in this Cause this Day.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Will you please, or any of the King's Council, to say any thing in this Matter?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we leave it entirely to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case has held a long Time; and Gentlemen, I must tell you, no Body ought to think Time too long in a Case of this Nature, wherein the Government is so much concern'd on the one side, and the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar on th' other. Et de vitâ hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. I think no Man ought to apprehend his Patience too much tired in finding out the Truth in the case of a Person that is tried for his Life. However, Gentlemen, by the way; because the Case has been long, it is fit that there should be some recollection made of it; and in order, as near as I can, that I might help your Memories in the Evidence that hath been given, both for and against the Prisoner at the Bar; I would endeavour as well as I can, to repeat, at least the Substantial Part of it, to you; and in case any thing that is material be omitted, God forbid but it should be supply'd by any one that is able for to give any Assistance of that kind; for I cannot pretend to be so exact as to give an account of the whole Evidence my self. But Gentlemen, I must tell you, it is a Duty incumbent upon the Court, to give you all the Assistance that can be in a Matter of this Nature, and I will do it with as much Integrity, and with all the Care and Caution of doing no Injury, either to the Prisoner or to the King, between whom we are to be indifferent, both you, and the Court, as possible can be; that there may be no wrong done on the one side, or on the other; and, according as the Prisoner himself hath said, what I shall speak, I know I speak in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth; who is to be the Judge of all Men. We are upon our Oaths, and you are upon your Oaths; and we are all of us Bound by our Oaths that we have taken, to be guided in this weighty Affair, (for so I must call it) by the Evidence that has been given to us at this time, both against the Prisoner and for him. For certainly there cannot be a Thing of greater concern, nay, even in point of Compassion, than to see any Man come to be accused of so high a Crime as the Prisoner at the Bar is now tried for. And he must have a strange obdurate Heart and Conscience, that cannot so far participate of the common sympathy of human Nature and his Fellow Creatures, as to compassionate any one that stands in such Circumstances as the Prisoner does. But, then on the other hand; the Denials of the Prisoner at the Bar, with all the Imprecations that he has made; and all the Affirmations that he has offered of what he has formerly done; and all these things of his appealing to the great God of Heaven about his Innocency; that I must tell you, of themselves, they are not to weigh with you; for your Business is to know according to the Oath that you have taken, whether you have Evidence given to you, (since you are Sworn upon this Tryal) to satisfy you that he is Guilty according to that Evidence. So that if the Affirmation of the Person accused, tho' attended with never so many Imprecations one way or other, be offered to Persons that are in your case, as Jurymen, it is not to weigh with you at all one way or other, if it be only the Affirmation of the Party accused; for if so, then there would never be any guilty Person brought before any Jury whatsoever; or any Criminal could come to suffer any Judgment, or be convicted of any Crime; if his own Affirmations concerning himself, and his own Commendations of himself would be sufficient to Acquit him, and set aside his Accusation. So that now you are to go according to the Evidence offer'd; and so are we, against this Person that is here before you.

Gentlemen, I must say that it is very untoward; and I hope by this Cause there will be a warning given, at least, to other Persons; that there have been too many notorious Transgressours of the Law in this Matter of Conventicles. I speak that, not to affect this Case at all; but I speak of what the Nation hath had but too woful Experience of, as to these Seditious Meetings, that are, and have been continually kept up in Opposition to the Laws; and I speak nothing as to the Meeting that was at this time; but I speak it that others may be warned for future Times; for always Mischief attends the open and publick Transgression of the Law. God forbid, but that People should worship God, and serve him according to their own Consciences; therefore the Law has been so indulgent to them, as to give them leave to exercise their Religion in other manner than as is done in the Church of England; provided there be not any occasion of Tumult; but that there be not above Five, except those of the same Family, meeting together; which you know the Act of Parliament hath provided for. And the truth of it is, the Reason of the Law is very plain: For you all know, who are Gentlemen of Quality, that this Law, as well as another Law that has so great a relation to the Case before you, does declare, that from these Seminaries of Sedition and Faction Conventicles, and the Clubs and Cabals of discontented, irregular People, disaffected to the Laws both of Church and State, was the great Mischief and Confusion that was brought upon us, and which at length brought us into the Distractions of the late Times.

Gentlemen, I must say likewise this to you, that whatsoever the Prisoner at the Bar thinks now, that blessed Martyr King Charles the 1st. was by such means brought to that horrid, accursed, murderous Death and End; I cannot call it less than so, in relation to the Persons that brought him to it, under the Pretence of Religion. It was the Cry of Popery and Arbitrary Power, of which he was no way Guilty, tho' that was insinuated into the Minds of silly People, those ignorant Souls that were easily captivated with a base Lye; but that was the Occasion.

Occaſion. Many of you Gentlemen, that are yet in being, remember it your ſelves; and many of you have, and cannot but have ſeen and read the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and have been ſo converſant with the Practices of theſe People ſince, that you are able to make a Judgment in the Matter. All theſe ſort of Things are but Pretences, and fair ſhews of dangerous and ſeditious People; that which was moſt dangerous to us at that Time, and I am apt to believe will be ſo to the World's end. For when People come to guild over their bitter Pill of Sedition, it is always under pretence of Religion. For a lack-a-day, perhaps there were as many Rebels againſt the late King raiſed by the beating of the Cuſhion in the Pulpit, as by the beating any Drum in the Street; for it is well known theſe are the Bell-weathers of the Faction, that under pretence of Religion, come there to incenſe the People to commit all theſe Villanies that ſometimes they are incited to do, as we know; and to prepare the Way to bring us into that condition, that we were in, in the late Times: And particularly, were uſed as Inſtruments to bring that bleſſed Martyr, King Charles the Firſt, to the Block. Theſe Pulpiteers took Occaſional Texts, of binding their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and raiſed up ſuch Doctrines from Texts of Scripture, that were certainly intended for quite far other Purpoſes, to countenance their Practices, to make People kill and ſlay God's Anointed, under pretence of ſaving and protecting the Anointed of God. But who did they mean by it? Pray how did theſe People come to take upon them to preach againſt Popery, when indeed they were preaching down all manner of Religion, under the Pretence of that? So that you grew to have as many Religions as there were Sects or Diſſenters in the Nation; and never any could be tolerated that were not grown into the Party, but they came all into Office, and the more extravagant the more preferr'd; ſo that without the Bleſſing and immediate Providence of God, by a ſecond Reſurrection, reducing us into ſome ſort of Order, in reſtoring his Sacred Majeſty (whom I pray God grant long to Reign over us; and ſo ought all Loyal Subjects to pray) what a miſerable Condition had we been in? And I may call it a ſecond reſurrection, it being the Reſurrection of our Religion; we were turn'd all into Confuſion; we had no other Religion, at leaſt apparently predominant, but that that had the ſtrongeſt Army to ſupport it, and that had force enough to contribute to what the luxurious, debauch'd Profeſſors of it would make to be Religion; for they were the Profeſſors at that time of all things.

Gentlemen, I ſpeak this, becauſe even the Laws that have been made ſince the Reſtoration of the King, have taken notice, that the beginning of all the Miſchief hath been this; and that the great Incendiaries of all Sorts of Rebellion were theſe who took upon them in their Pulpits, under colour of Religion, to countenance Rebellion and Treaſon, Confuſion and Anarchy. Now how far theſe things have been known to you all, that I muſt leave to you; and muſt betake my ſelf a little nearer to the Caſe, having premiſed theſe things; to which I would add this as a Warning to all People; that they would not abet or aſſiſt in any Meeting againſt Law, or that is known to be againſt Law, whatſoever they think; for there will Miſchief come upon it one time or another, let them pretend what they will. As that Gentleman ſays, he undertook to Expound, and teach his People the Knowledge of the Lord: the Knowledge of the Lord is a very good Leſſon to be learnt, and to be taught all People; but bleſſed be God, we thank him for it, we have Church men of as great Learning, (without any reflection upon the Gentleman at the Bar) as he can pretend unto; and Men as Pious, and Virtuous; and perhaps we may ſay at this time, with a little more Confidence than ordinary, that we have as Learned a Clergy as ever was ſince Religion was known within this Kingdom. And God be Thanked, theſe Men are not only learned for themſelves, but they exert themſelves for the good of others, for the Satisfaction of that Duty in which they are imploy'd, by their due and conſtant Attendance upon the Worſhip of God, in their Places of Worſhip, the Churches which are by Law appointed for it; and we need not run into Holes and Corners, and Conventicles, and Clans to underſtand the Word of God and the Practice of our Duty towards him, or towards Men; becauſe we have Churches to apply our ſelves to, where we may learn to know God, to obey him, and them that are put in Authority under him; which I am ſure is a Duty incumbent upon every Preacher of the Word of God to inſiſt upon, and preſs and urge. And I am ſure, whoſoever preaches at a Conventicle cannot with a ſafe Conſcience preach Obedience to the Civil Magiſtrate; becauſe while they are in that very Preaching, they are acting Diſobedience againſt his Laws; in regard what they do, is againſt the Authority of thoſe Laws under which they live; and no Man can Preach well againſt that which he knows in his own Conſcience, at the ſame time, he is practiſing himſelf.

So that Gentlemen, I muſt tell you this is a wonderful dangerous thing; and therefore I give it as a Caution to all People to beware how they break the Laws by going to ſuch Meetings, and Conventicles as theſe are; for it will have at the long run one time or other a very dangerous Iſſue. And there is another thing which is wonderful dangerous too, to ſee what Shoals and Crouds of People come to theſe ſort of Meetings; People of all ſorts of mean Trades and Profeſſions. And how eaſy is it, if a Man has a Mind to inſinuate into ſome ſilly, ignorant People, common, illiterate Fellows that can neither write nor read, ſome of them; yet thereby to feel their Pulſe, to ſee whether they will ſwallow down ſuch a Thing, or ſuch a Pretence at firſt? For they did not in the late Times begin with open Rebellion, and preaching the Doctrine of depoſing of Princes, or bringing them to the Block; but they tryed with ſeveral previous Ways, and as the Bait ſunk, and was ſuck'd in, they attempted to try further. They apply'd themſelves perpetually to purſue the temper of their Auditory; and therefore we muſt have a great deal of Care to prevent all ſuch Miſchiefs as theſe are for the future, that they may give no countenance to ſuch, who pretend to be Expoſitors, but are very ill ones of the Scripture; and thereby inſtill into the Minds of Men ſuch dangerous and pernicious Doctrines; that the Scripture may not be perverted, verted, to give an Authority to ſuch deſperate Things as theſe are; for we have known over and over how eaſily People are drawn into Miſchief in this Age, even by the very ſame Train that they were, in the time of the late Rebellion.

Now, Gentlemen, theſe things being premis'd, I would take notice to you, that the thing now before you, is a Queſtion of a different Nature from what I have now ſpoken of. It is not the Queſtion that you are to try; Whether he preach'd at a Conventicle or not; or whether the doing of that which he did in ſo Preaching, is againſt the Law or not. But whether he did at any Meeting, (eſpecially as to the time that is particularly ſpecified) ſpeak Words of the ſame ſubſtance, to the ſame effect and intent that are compriſed in the Indictment. For tho' he did Preach at a Conventicle, and thereby did tranſgreſs the Law; yet in caſe he did not Preach to the Subſtance of what is contain'd in this Indictment that hath been read unto you, and that he is accuſed of, he muſt be acquitted. That I muſt declare to you for Law, as no doubt it muſt be acknowledg'd to me to be; therefore you are to take care upon your Conſciences, to try and conſider whether or no you believe theſe three Witneſſes that have been produced againſt him, ſwear true; or are guilty of wilful Perjury. For in downright plain Engliſh, they are guilty of Perjury, if he be not guilty of the Words laid in the Indictment. One of the two is certainly true; either they are guilty of Perjury, or the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of the Treaſon laid to his Charge; I pray God direct you in your Enquiry; for it is a Queſtion (I muſt needs ſay) of very great Difficulty.

Gentlemen, for the intention of a Man's Heart (I muſt tell you this for Law) as to the compaſſing and imagining of the Death of the King, it is not to be diſcovered but by ſome Action; ſome Word or Overt-Act, there might be to interpret the ſecret Imagination of the Heart. It is impoſſible to diſcover, or diſcloſe the Imagination of any Man's Heart, except we be directed to that Diſcovery by Words or Actions.

Now Gentlemen, Words that in themſelves may bear a good Conſtruction, and are good Words, yet coupled with Actions that are Evil, or other Words that are Evil, theſe very Words may be a Diſcovery of the evil Imagination that is in a Man's Heart. As to expreſs my ſelf in a very familiar Example, for the purpoſe, that I may make things as plain as I can, for that is my deſign, and ought to be every one's that is concern'd in ſuch a Matter as this. Becauſe we have had ſome Diſcourſe concerning the late bleſſed Martyr King Charles the Firſt, he was here brought to a Shambles of Juſtice; for I cannot call it a Court of Juſtice, however they called it a High Court; and there was a kind of Mockery or Pageantry of a Tryal. He was Arraign'd and Try'd for Treaſon, and a new notional Treaſon, never yet invented nor known of before amongſt us, Treaſon againſt his People; I ſay, new and never thought of till theſe Butcherly Fellows that ſprung out of the Shambles came to put it in Practice; erecting what they call'd a High Court of Juſtice, but which was truly to be call'd a High Court of Injuſtice; and there they were to have ſome come and cry Juſtice, Juſtice, Juſtice upon the King. Gentlemen, Juſtice is a good Word; but if that Word be uſed and ſpoken as it was in that caſe, in order to bring the King to his Death, that which was a good Word, and if otherwiſe uſed, had been a proper Word even at that time; that is, if apply'd to good purpoſe, to ſet the King and the Nation free; yet being apply'd to the bringing that Sacred Martyr to ſo horrid and barbarous a Death, that was plain downright Treaſon; and I make no difficulty in the World, (nor can any Man that underſtands any thing) that it was ſo by Law; and it was an Overt Act ſufficiently indicating the intention of all Perſons that were therein concern'd to put and bring the King to utter Death and Deſtruction; and all theſe Fellows that made uſe of that good Word, Juſtice, Juſtice, Juſtice, were all undoubted Traytors; making uſe of it for that ill Purpoſe.

Gentlemen, again; Suppoſe if Mr. Cook was a Man of Law, that was Sollicitor of what they call'd the Common-wealth at that time, Sollicitor to the State, (I only ſpeak this to explain my Mind) if he comes (when the King had juſt ground to diſpute the Authority of that Court of Injuſtice, that he was dragg'd to, and refuſed to Plead) and does pray Judgment againſt the King, as he did, and it was proved at his Tryal. Judgment alone might be there meant as tending to excuſe the King, as well as to Sentence him to Death; yet he being there, praying Judgment againſt the King, and which was afterwards at his Prayer ſo pronounced; that ſhew'd what his Opinion of the Word he uſed was at that time; and that made him a Traitor, and was an Overt-Act to diſcover his Guilt.

Why ſo, Gentlemen, I am to tell you, tho' there are Words that may be uſed in a Scriptural Way very well, and to very good Purpoſe; yet if they be applied to an ill Purpoſe, they may be a ſufficient Indication of a Man's compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King. Therefore, Gentlemen, you are the Judges, whether if in this caſe, he ſpeaking theſe Words, of deſtroying our Enemies, and ſtanding to our Principles, they have not an Alluſion to the former Words; and whether they are not Expoſitors of the Mind of this Perſon, the Priſoner at the Bar, of compaſſing and imagining the Death and Deſtruction of the King; and I do this on purpoſe to remind you of what is neceſſary to let you into the Queſtion.

Now for the Teſtimony againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, you have three Witneſſes. Firſt, you have Mrs. Smith, ſhe does directly Swear that ſhe did frequently, ſeveral times go between the 13th of July and the 14th of September, to hear the Priſoner at the Bar preach at ſeveral Conventicles or Places of Meeting. She tells you the particular Days; She tells you as to one, that ſhe heard him the 20th of July. She heard him another time the 10th of Auguſt, according to the beſt of her remembrance. She heard him again the 17th of Auguſt, the 24th of Auguſt, the 31ſt of Auguſt; and ſhe heard him the 14th of September; that is according to the beſt of her remembrance. She both tells you the Time and the Place, and ſhe heard him Preach at theſe Conventicles. All that ſhe ſays as to this, is introductive to what ſhe ſpeaks of the 14th of September, which is the Day to which the Indictment does refer; and this ſhe does ſay poſitively, that upon the 17th of Auguſt, he pray'd that he might be forgiven for not Praying for the King; and by that ſhe would have you to underſtand, as ſhe would inſinuate, that he did not uſe to Pray for the King.

Mr.

Mr. Roſew. [Turning to the Jury.] I made uſe of the Words of Samuel, God forbid that I ſhould ceaſe to Pray for him.

L. C. Juſt. Sir, you muſt not talk to the Jury now; I am directing of them.

Mr. Roſew. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; it was to ſet the Matter right. It was miſ-apprehended.

L. C. Juſt. All this is antecedent to the Matter for which he is accuſed; and you ſee his Anſwer to it, from a Text of Scripture that he offers to you, which he did not repeat with diſlike to pray for the King; but that he thought it his Duty always ſo to do.

Then ſhe tells you particularly at another time, which, I think, was at the Houſe of one Paul Shed; I cannot particularly tell directly the Name; there was a talk of the Recorder, and of the Lord Mayor of the City of London; but that was before this time. And afterwards, the firſt and the ſecond Witneſs, two of them more, give you an Account, tho' they were never there but then; That he began to talk about the Fire, and that he ſhould ſay there was a great Man at the Corner of Grace-Church ſtreet, I need not name his Name, for you all know him very well; that he met with a poor Man, tho indeed he was not a poor Man, he was a labouring Man, a Carpenter; and they began to talk much concerning the Fire, and he did ſay, that in caſe it had not been for that great Man, there had been no ſuch Thing as the Fire in London; nor if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs afterwards, there had been no ſuch thing as the Fire in Southwark and Wapping. And I take notice too, that at the ſame Place, which was Shed's Houſe, that they ſpoke of, there is Mrs. Farrar, againſt whom there is not the leaſt Objection that I can hear of; She agrees both in the Circumſtance of Place and Time, and of the Words, and to the Dialogue about Grace-Church ſtreet, and the Carpenter; and to the previous Words, that he was not a poor Man, and the like; and about the Diſcourſe relating to the Fires of London, Southwark, and Wapping; and likewiſe relating to the Lord Mayors, and Aldermen, and Sheriffs; theſe Diſcourſes were at that time.

Gentlemen, the next Teſtimony you have, is of theſe Witneſſes that ſpeak of the Time that is in the Record; which all the three Witneſſes that you have heard, ſpeak to; tho' the moſt of what I mentioned before, was another Time: And this is at the Houſe of one Captain Daniel; one ſays, Capt. Daniel Weldy. But that it was a Captain that was then at Sea, is plain; for this Gentleman himſelf, Mr. Roſewell, does not deny that this was at Capt. Daniel's Houſe; and that he did pray for him, as being then at Sea, and for all his Family; and all the Witneſſes ſpeak to the ſame time. Tho' indeed the firſt Witneſs did ſay, that ſhe did not know but it might be Capt. Daniel Weldy; but ſhe likewiſe ſaid, ſhe did not directly know his Name. But ſhe directly Swears to the very Words that are mentioned in the Indictment. She does directly Swear that Mr. Roſewell preached upon the 21ſt of Geneſis. Says ſhe as I remember; tho' Mr. Roſewell did think, there was a difference between the Evidence of the one and the th' other Woman about the 20th or 21ſt, yet it was only upon her remembrance, as well as ſhe could, and ſhe did not poſitively Swear it was in that place, but according to the beſt of her remembrance. And the ſecond Witneſs Mrs. Hilton, when ſhe come to Swear, ſhe ſaid it was either the 20th or 21ſt; but in ſo many Words ſhe did directly Swear, that he ſhould Preach that the People made a Flocking to the King on purpoſe for the Curing of the King's Evil; but the King could not do it; but we are they that the People ſhould flock to for the curing of all their Evils. Which are the very ſame Words in Subſtance that are in the Indictment.

The very ſame Words in Subſtance, ſays that other, the ſecond Witneſs; the ſame Day, in the ſame Place, did I hear Mr. Roſewell then ſpeak theſe Words; and they go further, and the ſame Witneſſes both Swear, Hilton and Smith, that Mr. Roſewell ſhould ſay, We have had two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come under their Noſes, who can be compar'd to no other Perſons but wicked Jeroboam. Mrs. Smith Swears theſe Words directly, and Mrs Hilton ſays, ſhe thinks there was the Name of Reboboam mention'd; but ſhe is ſure there was mention of two wicked Kings, in the ſame Words as Mrs. Smith ſpeaks. They go yet further, and ſay, both the one and th' other of them, That he ſaid if the People would ſtand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they ſhould overcome their Enemies as in ancient Times with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The two Witneſſes, both Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Hilton ſwear to the very Words, and at leaſt to the Subſtance of them; and if there ſhould be ſome little Variance in ſome few of the Words, that will ſignify nothing if the Subſtance be the ſame.

But now Gentlemen, beſides theſe two Witneſſes, there is a third Witneſs, Mrs. Farrar, againſt whom (that I can ſee) there is not the leaſt Exception in the World, if you remember any, you would do well to conſider of it; you may be better able to recollect what has been ſpoken or offered than I can in ſo long a time; and you ought to endeavour (being Men of Underſtanding, and good Quality) to refreſh one another's Memories, and make what Obſervations you can; which I perceive you have taken Notes about, ſome of you at leaſt.

She does directly Swear as to the buſineſs of the King's Evil, The ſame Words that the other two have Sworn, about flocking to the King to Cure the King's Evil which he could not do; But they were the Prieſts and Prophets that could cure the Maladies of the People. And as to the ſecond Words, She ſwears that he ſaid there had been two wicked Kings that had ſuffered Popery to come in under their Noſes. And ſhe Swears in the third place, That there was likewiſe an Exhortation to ſtand to their Principles, and that they ſhould overcome their Enemies. She does not indeed particularly tell you about Rams horns, and the Platters, and the Stone in the Sling, but only of ſtanding to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies: Which I would have you particularly to take notice of, it being the material Part of the Indictment, to make theſe Words Treaſon.

Now Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, there is great regard, and very great, to be had to the Circumſtances in this Caſe; to ſee how far theſe things are to be tack'd together. Firſt, you remember the Witneſſes were examined apart. And it does not appear that they have talk'd together; and there was all the Care taken that poſſibly could be, they ſhould be out of the Court, and out of one another's hearing; ſo that there was as much endeavour to detect the Falſhood ſhood of their Teſtimony (if it could be) as poſſible in any caſe, even in the very moſt minute Circumſtance. Mrs. Smith Swears, that Mrs. Hilton came to her Houſe on Saturday Night; that they went together to the Houſe of this Capt. Daniel upon the 14th, about Seven of the Clock; that they were there before Mr. Roſewell came in; that there was a Lower Room in the Houſe; and a little higher there was a little Room; and then there was a Room up two Pair of Stairs, where there was a Bed; that Mr. Roſewell ſtood upon the Stairs, but they both ſate upon the Bed, together with one of Mr. Roſewell's own Witneſſes, which was the Mathematical Inſtrument-maker, and that he was in a Mourning Cloak; and that there was particular notice taken of a Pair of Shoes given by Mrs. Smith from under the Bed to the Child of that Mathematical Inſtrument maker; and that there was Prayer made for Capt. Daniel the Maſter of the Houſe, who was then at Sea, and for his Child and Family. There were theſe Circumſtances, every one particularly asked of the Witneſſes, and Sworn to by them in the very ſame Words, the ſame manner of Poſture, the ſame Things done both as to the Room, the Bed, who ſate upon the Bed, the Mourning Cloak, the plucking off and delivering of the Shoes; that I may appeal to your Memories, if they did not agree to a tittle exactly.

Then they began to enquire further concerning other Expreſſions of Mr. Roſewell at other times: Something about People in Scarlet, and ſomething about Canting: And Mrs. Smith tells you, that he did ſpeak ſomething about Canting; that he was talking concerning that Word; ſays he, I will tell you what that Canting means; I went not long ago thro' a Cathedral where the Organs are, and there the People were gather'd together, and they were Singing the Lord's-Prayer, and I don't know what; I heard them Sing, and I could not but laugh out; and he broke out in his Sermon into a He! he! he! that is Canting. This, they ſay, was his Expreſſion at that time.

When Mrs. Hilton came in, ſhe tells you the very ſame Words, even to a very particular Phraſe which I had forgot before, that he ſaw the Men in white Gowns that were Singing, and which he counted Canting. It is very true, there is no ſuch thing mentioned in this Indictment; but only it is offer'd by the King's Council to ſhew the Temper of the Man, and how he uſually uſed to Preach.

As concerning the Story of Sampſon and Dalilah, that's Sworn by both Witneſſes, that there was ſuch a Diſcourſe; for he began to talk of our King's keeping of Women, and he hop'd that they would bring the ſame Deſtruction upon him that they had brought upon Sampſon; he hoped it would ſo fall out with our King. How far it is true, (they both having Sworn it) you are the Judges; they have directly Sworn it, and to all the Circumſtances both of Time and Place.

Gentlemen, There is yet another thing that is material too, tho' a ſmall minute Circumſtance, and that is about this ſame Paul Shed, that they have ſpoken of. When the firſt Witneſs came in, he chid her for coming in her Pattins, and bid her pull off her Pattins, for they would leave ſuch an Impreſſion there, that People would be apt to diſcover that there was, or would be a Meeting; and therefore ſhe promis'd when ſhe came any more, that ſhe would be ſure to leave off her Pattins. And it is proved, that Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith were in the Room above, and Mrs. Farrar was in the Room below, and it does not appear that ſhe was acquainted with the reſt. She had heard him ſeveral times, and tho' ſhe did not ſee him that Day, he being up two pair of Stairs higher, yet ſhe Swears directly to the ſame Words, the ſubſtantial Part of them that the other two Witneſſes ſpoke of. So that I muſt ſay, if in caſe they have contrived this Story to take away the Life of the Priſoner at the Bar, they have contrived it with all the deviliſheſt Subtilty that ever any could do, or that could enter into the Minds of any People. You are the Judges of the Fact, I pray God to direct you, that you may detect the Truth; far be it from the Court, or any body, to deſire that any thing but Truth ſhould prevail. For it were far better a thouſand times that a hundred guilty Men ſhould eſcape, than one innocent Man ſhould ſuffer. But on the other ſide, far be it from any Man that is upon his Oath to do his Duty between the King and the Subject, to be moved by Compaſſion, or any thing of that Nature, to go againſt the Evidence that is given in open Court; unleſs he be ſatisfy'd that the Evidence is Falſe. For in this caſe, I ſay again, either you muſt find the Priſoner Guilty of what he ſtands charged with in the Indictment; or elſe you muſt find theſe three Witneſſes guilty of wilful Perjury: And I pray God again to direct you what you are to do in it.

Gentlemen, as to the Teſtimony that has been offered on the behalf of the Priſoner; (I would follow the ſame Method that has been taken, both in the Evidence given by the King and the Priſoner, as near as we can.) Firſt, you have had brought by him half a Dozen, (for I would not injure him as near as I could one tittle) that have given you an Account of what he ſaid at that time. There was Hudſon, Hall, Atkinſon, Smith, Hales and Wharton; I took their Names, as near as I could; and all theſe People do directly ſay they were preſent at that time, and they heard nothing ſpoken of the late bleſſed Martyr King Charles the Firſt, or of Reflection upon the Government; but all that was ſaid of the King's Majeſty that now is, was in his Prayer, wherein he did pray for him; that they heard nothing come from Mr. Roſewell concerning the King's Evil in the manner that the Witneſſes ſpeak of; but what was ſpoken, was ſpoken of another King, in relation to Abimelech King of Egypt, and not relating any way to the Diſeaſe they call commonly amongſt us the King's Evil. It is true, one of them does ſay (which is a Word that has obtain'd very much amongſt ſome ſort of People) that when he pray'd for the King, he pray'd for his deliverance from evil Counſellors: And under theſe Words, evil Counſellors, and deliverance from them, we know what became of that ſo often mention'd Prince now, King Charles the Firſt. Under that Pretence they would remove all his Friends from him; and when he was left alone they could eaſily do what they pleas'd with him. Many with pretence of great Pity and Zeal for the King, cry out that all that they complain of, is not of what the King does; him they think to be a wonderful good Man; it is not he, but his evil Counſellors that they reflect upon; and ſo we muſt fight againſt theſe evil Counſellors; and when we have laid them aſide, and he ſtands alone, then it will be eaſy to ſerve him as they did his Father. Whatſoever the Pretenſions of ſuch Words are, we know what the Deſigns of the People that made the ſame Pretence heretofore came to; and I pray God that there are not the ſame Deſigns on foot ſtill; nay, that that was not the Deſign of this Prayer of the Priſoner at the Bar.

Gentlemen, they give you a particular Account how he preached upon the 29th of Geneſis; and they ſpeak as to the 2d and 7th Verſes of that Chapter, and what Diſcourſe he had upon them. But truly it is pretty ſtrange (as Mr Roſewell himſelf objected even to you of the Jury very well) can any one of you remember ſo exactly the Words that were ſpoken as theſe Witneſſes have Sworn? and truly he puts a very material Queſtion: But then the Queſtion turns t'other way; how come all your Witneſſes to give ſuch an exact Account; all except the ſecond Man, who indeed did commit a Blunder or two, your Six Witneſſes, even to the Texts of Scripture, to the very Phraſes that were uſed, particularly to the Word Tremendous? they are all as exact as can be. It is ſtrange that five People ſhould agree in all the Circumſtances; but why ſhould it not be as much believable that three ſhould have as exact a Memory as the other five? Nay, and I will tell you what is pretty ſtrange too, that theſe People muſt hear, and remember juſt what was ſaid upon the 14th of September; but that which was ſaid upon the Text the time before or after, that they cannot ſo well remember. It is plain they have been dialogueing with one another; and it is plain, that ſome People can neither write, or read, nor remember, but how they ſhall be ſure to ſerve the preſent purpoſe. That ſeems to carry an Objection in it on the other ſide, as the King's Council ſay; and it ſeems the more reaſonable on Our ſide why they ſhould remember ſo exactly, as they have Sworn; becauſe, (ſay they) that Day when we came home, we call'd for Pen, Ink and Paper and ſet down theſe Words, the Subſtance of which we have now here Sworn: So that that does ſhew you we had reaſon to remember what we have teſtify'd againſt this Perſon. But what is yet greater than all this, it cannot be imagined, (ſay the King's Council) that the Priſoner's Witneſſes are ſo much to be believed, ſince they give no Account of what was ſpoken at any time before, nor any time ſince.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Reaſon, ſays Mrs. Smith, I came on purpoſe to ſee who was at the Conventicle; tho' I had been at ſeveral Conventicles before, yet I never heard ſuch Words ſpoken. Says Mrs. Hilton, I was glad to be gone: and tells you of her unwillingneſs to ſtay there, having never heard ſuch Words ſpoken againſt the Government before; and therefore ſhe ſet them down immediately as ſoon as they came home; and they went together to the Bull and Mouth, the Quakers Meeting near Alderſgate afterwards; and that that Day, or the Day following, they went to Mr. Recorder, and gave him an Account of what had paſt in their Knowledge. This is the Anſwer that is given by them to what the Priſoner's Witneſſes ſay; But you are to weigh this Teſtimony of both Sides. For I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, tho' theſe Witneſſes that are for the Priſoner are not upon their Oaths, yet they are as much under the Obligation of giving true Teſtimony, as they can be by Law; and you ought to have regard to their Teſtimony; how far it is conſiſtent with Reaſon and with Truth. Some things they differed in; ſome things they heard in another manner; whether you believe ſuch things may ſlip out of their Memories, or how that is, you are to conſider of it. This, Gentlemen, is the firſt part of the Evidence that the Priſoner hath given for himſelf.

Next, Gentlemen, There is another part of the Evidence, and that is from the Fifteenth Witneſs, one Mr. Jolliff, Captain Cotton, Mr. Fips, Mr. Veering, Mr. Hitchcock, Mr. Hinman, Mr. Wanley, Mr. Strong, Mr. Cutloe, Mr. Melſum, Mr. Medham, Mr. Winnacott, Anne Broadhurſt, Anne Manning, Iſabella Dickeſon; all theſe were call'd to his Reputation, as to his Behaviour and Converſation towards the Government. They tell you that they have known him a long time. It ſeems they frequented the hearing of him ſometimes, when there was an Indulgence and a Diſpenſation for ſuch Meetings; then they went to hear him; and then he uſed to pray for the King; and it has been obſerved, that, it may be, meeting with favour and kindneſs from the King and Government he might be very well pleaſed with the King at that time; tho' that turn'd to the Prejudice of the Government, (as we all know.) But whether his Complexion alter'd towards the Government, when it was thought fit to reſtrain that Indulgence; that you have to conſider. They ſay they know nothing of Harm by him, and that may be true; no more do I; and I preſume you do not; if you do you will tell us. You and I pray God we had never heard of any thing of Harm come from him with relation to the King and Government; but you have heard what has been teſtify'd by theſe Witneſſes.

Then there came two Witneſſes that lived at Sir Edward Hungerford's, when the Priſoner at the Bar lived there; one of them lived Ten Years there, the other Four. And they give you an Account how he was uſed to Pray (not according to the Common-Prayer, but) he uſed to go to Church, and he did Pray for the King very earneſtly and heartily, as they ſay; he came there in the Year 1664, and he continued there Seven Years, and they always look'd upon him to be well-inclin'd to the Government.

Then you have an Account of three Servants that lived in the Houſe; one lived four Years with him, and that ſhe frequently heard him pray for the King, (for I would not willingly forget a Word that ſhould make for the Priſoner's Advantage) ſhe ſaid he prayed as earneſtly for the King as for his own Soul, with as much zeal and earneſtneſs as he could do; this is what ſhe ſays. And the ſecond lived with him three Years, and ſhe does remark particularly, that one time being in private in his own Cloſet, at Prayer by himſelf ſhe heard him very earneſt in Praying for the King: So that he would urge it as improbable, and unreaſonable to believe, that if he, in his private Family, and by himſelf ſhould ſo earneſtly pray for the King, (which was never intended to be heard by any body, and came to be thus heard by Accident) he ſhould in Publick, before a great Congregation, utter ſuch Words againſt the King and Government, as are pretended againſt him. This is the uſe he makes of that.

Then, Gentlemen, you have likewiſe afterwards the Teſtimony of thoſe two Witneſſes that had been examin'd before, that is Mr. Atkinſon and Mr. Smith; that whereas you ſeem to ſay, ſays he, I made a great Reflection upon the late King and his preſent Majeſty; it was ſo far from that, that I uſed to Teach upon the 30th of January; and then to preach Obedience to the King, and to pray for the King, and make ſharp Invectives and Reflections upon thoſe that had been concern'd in that horrid, barbarous Murder of the late King of bleſſed Memory; ſo that I cannot be thought to encourage ſuch Things as theſe, when I uſed to preach to my Auditory ſuch Doctrine as I now tell you of. This is the Subſtance of that part of the Evidence, as near as I can remember, and recollect; you have taken Notes, Gentlemen, your ſelves; you will be able for to make Obſervations, according to what Notes you have taken.

Then Gentlemen, here are eighteen Witneſſes that he has called to endeavour to perſwade you to a diſbelief, and gain a diſcredit as to the Witneſſes that are produced againſt him. Now as to that, which was offer'd by the firſt Witneſs How; that was but by Hear-ſay, he knows nothing of his own Knowledge; for my Brother, Sir Thomas Jenner, he gives you an Account of all the Queſtions that he was asked about; that ſhe never did ſay that ſhe was preſent at the Conventicle, but that Mrs. Bathoe had confeſs'd it to her; and upon that Confeſſion ſhe was Convicted. Now Gentlemen, it is a very untoward thing in this Matter, that Mrs. Bathoe it is plain uſed to have Conventicles, and ſhe is the Widow of a Non-conformiſt Preacher, and this Woman was ſo far from ſaying, that ſhe was there; that ſhe only inſiſted upon it, that Mrs. Bathoe had confeſs'd it to her. So likewiſe you have been told concerning that Buſineſs of Mr. Hales, the Conventicle at his Houſe on the 13th of July; it was ſo far from her Swearing that Mr. How was there, that tho' he was mention'd, yet ſhe refuſed before Sir George Treby to Swear that there was any ſuch Conventicle, or that he was the Man; ſhe did not know the Man, and could not ſay any thing to him. And my Brother Jenner being convinc'd that there might be a Miſtake, that there might be no ſuch Conventicle at Mrs. Bathoe's, went as far as he could to retrieve it; but it ſeems it was paſt from him into the Clerk of the Peace's hands; I cannot ſay any thing to it: But if you are ſatisfy'd that there was no ſuch Conventicle at all, all that can be ſaid is, that the Old Woman bely'd her ſelf; and my Brother Jenner as to an Accommodation between them did reſolve to do what he could, and promis'd to ſpeak to the Clerk of the Peace: Not but that for any thing yet appears, this Woman that is here brought as a Witneſs againſt Mr. Roſewell, did ſwear true, That that other Woman did confeſs to her, that there was ſuch a Conventicle; they indeed have endeavour'd to evince there was no ſuch Conventicle. I muſt leave it to you; for nothing appears clear of the one Side, or the other.

Then Gentlemen, as concerning her talking with, and about one Games; wherein you had an Account given you by one Harvey, and he adviſed to give Money rather than to be troubled; but they would not give Money. Now, for that the whole Anſwer (that it may be given together) is that you know the Proſecutor in theſe Caſes, has a Share out of the Penalties that are incurr'd by Conventicles; and tho' it may be that it was not ſo well done by ſuch Informations to compound Penalties, yet it is no Evil Thing: For if I will chooſe to inform or not inform, there is a right in me to a Part of the Penalty ariſing from the Offence: And tho' it be not a commendable Thing, yet it is not a criminal Thing for me to Compound it; for I do not obſerve that they are proved to be People that do uſe to go to Conventicles.

Then Gentlemen, There is ſomething to be obſerved concerning the Evidence of Cartwright; He comes and tells you, that he was by, and one of the Perſons that went along with Mrs. Smith to ſeveral Places, in order to make Convictions of Perſons for Conventicles; and ſhe would have him Swear ſuch and ſuch Conventicles that ſhe would dictate to him; and ſhe promis'd and offer'd to Swear for the Conviction of Conventicles when ſhe was not there: And this was a great while ago; but no body heard a Word of it till now, and that when Mrs. Smith was ingaged in this Proſecution againſt Mr. Roſewell. Now when we meet with this ſort of People, we ought to conſider of the Nature of their Evidence. It is certainly a very improbable thing, that any Perſon ſhould come and tell him, I will be Guilty of Perjury, I will be forſworn for you, if you will be forſworn for me. It can hardly be believed that any body ſhould ſay ſo to a Fellow that you ſee is likely enough to detect any ſuch thing, if it ſhould be for his Advantage: And it had been his Duty (if he had been an honeſt Man) to have diſcovered this to a Magiſtrate immediately, and detected it, ſo as that the Villany ſhould have been puniſh'd; not to come and ſerve a turn upon ſuch a Tryal juſt as this is. And therefore Gentlemen, I do not like ſuch accidental Witneſſes that ſeem to drop (as it were) out of the Clouds, and we can have no Account of them before. You have no Satisfactory Reaſon how he comes in now to make this Diſcovery. Here you have ſeveral other Witneſſes that were before, that give ſome Account of her Behaviour in theſe Matters.

As to the Conviction that they talk of upon the 13th of July; ſeveral Witneſſes give you an Account of the Matter. Firſt of all it is very apparent by that Book that is produced, That there was a Conventicle the 13th of July, and it was at Mr. Hudſon's; but indeed it was not at Mr. Hale's; and it is not alledg'd here by her that it was ſo. And for that other, my Brother Jenner gives you an Account that upon the Confeſſion of Mrs. Bathoe there was a Conviction; but there was no ſuch Conviction of Hales in the Caſe, but only of Bathoe; as appears by the Record which hath been produced.

Then Gentlemen, the next Queſtion is concerning the Clerk of the Peace, and the Writing that they talk of; which makes nothing one way, nor t'other. Then there are two Witneſſes, Drew, and the other Man, that meet with this Woman, Mrs. Smith, in Grub-ſtreet, in order to make a Compoſition for Penalties for going going to Conventicles; and they find out a Fellow that uſed to go to Conventicles, and they frighten him into a Compoſition, and ſo much as they ſay, was paid perhaps, and he ought to have paid more: But it's plain, he uſed to go to Conventicles; and it's pretty odd that he ſhould be pick'd up on a ſudden there, on this ſide the Water, to diſcover theſe Practices at the Inſtigation of the Priſoner at the Bar, who lives at ſuch a Diſtance on t'other ſide of the Water.

Then Gentlemen, as for Mrs. Higgenſon, I can only ſay this, ſhe ſays nothing to the Purpoſe, that is either material for or againſt the Priſoner; for ſhe ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of her own Knowledge; and all that ſhe did ſay, was but Hear-ſays and Reports, not by way of down right Accuſation againſt the Perſon ſhe was produced againſt. And Gentlemen, you are to conſider that Hear-ſay and Report is no Evidence at all; but it muſt be what the Witneſſes know, and ſay of their own Knowledge.

The next is a worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, and as to whatſoever he ſaid, or any of his Family told him, except he knows it of his own Knowledge, that's no manner of Evidence at all to take off the Credit of Mrs. Hilton. But what ſhe her ſelf did ſay, (if it can be teſtify'd) is Evidence againſt her. If ſhe confeſt that ſhe had any Deſign, or was ingaged in any Practice to betray the young Lady Sir John Talbot talks of; that indeed is a very evil thing. But whatſoever were the Apprehenſions of others concerning her ſhare in that matter; or any of the little things that they talk'd of concerning Miſtreſs Hilton before ſhe intermarried, it can ſignify but very little in this matter. And when we ask Sir John Talbot the Queſtion, he cannot give any Satisfactory account of it; for he ſays plainly, he had no Converſation with her. It ſeems it was not a Contrivance while ſhe liv'd there for ten Years together; and it is pretty hard to imagine in ſuch a Caſe, if ſhe had been ſuch an evil Perſon as they would repreſent her, in that time that it had not appeared, ſo far at leaſt as that ſhe had been diſcharg'd the Service long before: For Sir John Talbot is a Perſon that cannot be thought to permit any thing of ill in his Family. But yet withal, he can't know all that paſſed, any more than any of you of Irregularity in the Family. If indeed they had queſtion'd any of the Servants that were more converſant with her, and taxed her of any thing that was Evil, then it had been a much more probable Exception; but to have Peoples Reputations blaſted barely by Tittle-tattle and Stories, after Perſons are gone out of a Family, where they have liv'd for many Years, is a matter of very dangerous Conſequence; and any Man in the World may be injur'd in his Credit, if ſuch a thing be permitted. What Sir John Talbot ſpeaks of his own Knowledge, that is Evidence, and we would hear it, and give all due regard to it: But what was ſpoken of concerning Hilton, before ſhe was married; what the reſt of the Servants ſaid concerning her; or the general Reputation that ſhe had in the Family; that's no Evidence at all.

Gentlemen, in the laſt place there is a Witneſs produced, one Dillingham; and ſhe pretends that ſhe is a Woman of a very ill Reputation; and that ſhe would have hired her, (as ſhe would have it believed) to have ſworn againſt ſeveral People. Now as to that, ſhe would have done exceeding well to have made a Diſcovery of this before this Queſtion; and it had been her Duty ſo to do; and not now to come, and drop in, juſt when this Queſtion comes to be debated before you: That Gentlemen, draws a Suſpicion along with it, and a very great one: But I muſt leave the whole matter to you, which I do not queſtion but you will examine, and look into, as well as you can. Thus I have offered the Evidence that has been given on the one ſide, and on the other in point of Fact.

Now Gentlemen, there are ſome Remarks made by the Priſoner at the Bar, (as God forbid but he ſhould have the Advantage of whatſoever can be obſerved upon the Evidence given againſt him) that is, he makes a Difference between the Teſtimony of the one and the other of theſe Witneſſes, about the 20th or 21ſt of Geneſis; that the one ſaid the 21ſt, the other the 20th. Now it is to be obſerved, as has been ſaid, that ſhe that ſaid the 20th, which was the ſecond Witneſs, ſaid, it was either the 20th or the 21ſt; and Mrs. Smith ſaid it was ſo to the beſt of her remembrance; but it appears to be, and ſo I perceive, by all the Witneſſes, upon the 20th; ſo that as to her it cannot be very material, becauſe ſhe does not ſwear poſitively, either the one or the other.

Then Gentlemen, there is another thing, that is, that ſhe ſhould talk of one Weldy, Captain Weldy, or Captain Daniel Weldy, when it ſeems his Name was not Weldy, but his Name was Captain Daniel; which I think can go no great way in the Caſe. She is not acquainted with the Man himſelf; ſhe tells you one part of his Name right; deſcribes the Houſe in all the Parts of it; and ſpeaks of the Circumſtance of his being at Sea, and being pray'd for by Mr. Roſewell; therein they do both agree: So that tho' ſhe apprehended that his Name might be Daniel Weldy, yet it is ſo far right enough that it was one Captain Daniel; and that is a very ſmall minute difference, that will make little one way or other.

Then Gentlemen, he inſiſts upon the difference between their Evidence about that Circumſtance, whether it was all upon one entire Subject; or part one part of the day, and part the other. One of them ſays it was not an entire Diſcourſe; for that about the Rams-horns, and the broken Platters, and the Stone in a Sling was after Two o'-Clock, after the interval that had been, and the ſpace of time between the Diſcourſe of the King's Evil, and thoſe other things; and therefore, ſays Mr. Roſewell, whereas ſhe pretends that it was all ſpoken at the ſame time, juſt as it is laid in the Indictment, that cannot be; and ſo it appears upon his own Evidence. Now, ſays that Woman, I can't ſo well tell whether it was Forenoon or Afternoon; and truly they might call it Forenoon, becauſe they had neither Eat nor Drank; and ſays the Woman, we reckon that it's Forenoon till after we have Dined; and ſhe cannot tell whether it was in the Pſalms, or whether it was upon the Chapter; but it was in that Diſcourſe that he held that Day. She does generally apply it to the whole; and that in that Day's Diſcourſe (all which time ſhe ſtay'd, till all was over) ſuch Words did paſs. You have heard the difference that is between the two Witneſſes, and you will do well to conſider of it, if you think there is any thing material in it.

Gentlemen, I muſt confeſs it carries a notable ſort of Teſtimony in it, of which you are Judges, and will weigh it according as it ought to be weigh'd: Firſt, That theſe People ſhould luckily hit together concerning the King's Evil, and that there was ſuch a Diſcourſe as is laid in the Indictment about it; and of the Prophets praying for the People for the Cure of the King's Evil, and then they ſhould be immediately heal'd. And on the other ſide, it is pretty ſtrange (as he urges for himſelf) that that ſhould be perverted which he ſpoke concerning the Prophet's praying for the King, and thereupon his Hand being healed, whereby the Prophets have the Honour, (as he ſays) ſome time by Prayer, of curing the King's Evil: So that ſomething or other there is in the matter that gives a mighty countenance to what the Witneſſes ſpeak. There is a certain ſort of Occaſion given (as one would ſay) for ſuch Expreſſions as they have teſtify'd, in his Diſcourſes.

Then when they come to talk concerning the Rams-horns, and the Platters; the Witneſſes ſay, we heard nothing concerning Platters, much leſs of Pewter Platters; no, it was broken Pitchers, and that was occaſion'd by, and had relation to a Text, (ſays Mr. Roſewell) about Gideon, how eaſily he diſcomfited the Philiſtines Army, and there was no ſuch thing as any Diſcourſe concerning the King or the Government, or any relation thereunto; it was only a Phraſe uſed by me in the Pulpit, to ſhew how great a matter might be done by little means. And ſo likewiſe concerning the Stone in the Sling, that being an occaſional Inſtance too, what great Miracles have been brought about by little Means and Circumſtances: I have inſtanc'd in that (ſays he) how David kill'd Goliah with a Stone out of a Sling, and that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt cured the Blind man by a little Spittle mingled with Clay. So that he would inſinuate, that thoſe Words that were ſpoken were not with any ſuch Intention as the King's Council would make it, and as the Indictment inſinuates; but only in a common, ordinary Preachment, as Inferences from ſuch and ſuch Scriptures. And whether this that he talks of was the Diſcourſe he held at that time; or what the Witneſſes ſpeak, muſt be left to you; they having ſworn it. And this (as I take it) is the Subſtance of the Evidence given by the one and the other ſide.

Then Gentlemen, Mr. Roſewell put the Queſtion in the Morning, and he ſeem'd to inſiſt very much upon it in Point of Law, that the Diſcourſes of a Mad-man cannot be Treaſon. It is true that ſuch Diſcourſes cannot be Treaſon, if you take (Mad-men) in the true ſenſe that the Law commonly takes it. All Traytors, all Knaves and Villains, are ſome way, and in ſome ſenſe Madmen; for no Perſon can act with any Reaſon in any ſuch Affairs. Treaſon is not to be committed upon the foundation of Reaſon. Therefore upon his asking of the Queſtion of the Witneſſes, what Reaſon there was for him to uſe ſuch Expreſſions; I told him, you did it, according as the Indictment ſays (which is drawn according to the Preſcripts of the Law) by the Inſtigation of the Devil; you did it, not only without Reaſon, but againſt Reaſon. But if the bare ſaying that it was againſt Reaſon, and that therefore a Man was a Madman, would ſerve the turn, there would be no Traytor according to that Rule; becauſe every Traytor would be a Madman. Every Traytor is a Madman; but every Madman is not a Traytor. A Madman, in our common Acceptation, is one that is captivated in his Senſes, not one that is corrupt in his Will and Affections, which muſt be the Definition of a Traytor: So that the Argument, I muſt tell you, is fallacious. Every Man, that is depraved in his Mind and Affections, is a Madman, ſo as to be an Enemy to the Government, or to Mankind; but he is not ſuch a Madman, as is commonly meant by that Word; one whoſe Words may be miſtaken, becauſe of ſome diſorder in his underſtanding; ſo as to be excus'd from the Accuſation of Treaſon. Therefore whatſoever conſequence there may be of the Thing, I muſt tell you, all Men that talk after this rate that this Perſon is accuſed to talk in his Pulpit, they are every one Traytors, and ſo Madmen; for every Traytor is a Madman: And if in Caſe Mr. Roſewell be Guilty, he is in that ſenſe a Madman. It is true, in other Things you find him a Man of very notable Underſtanding; a Man of a very great Inſinuation; one that has a great deal of Knowledge in the Tongues; look'd upon to be a very learned and ingenious Man; who was thought fit to be a Tutor to Sir Edward Hungerford's Children; and has had very many learned Diſcourſes, and ſhewn himſelf to be a Man of very great Parts. Tho' if he be a Traytor upon this Evidence that is given, he is eo nomine a Traytor, and conſequently a Madman for preaching and publiſhing ſuch Doctrine as this; that will not ſerve to excuſe him from his Treaſon: But the rather, becauſe he is a Man of ſo much Learning, it aggravates the Treaſon; as it muſt needs do to any Body in the World that conſiders it. For he under that pretence offering to preach his Doctrine, as Goſpel-truths to ignorant People, (it ſeems 300 or more, of all Trades and Perſwaſions) whoſe Duty it was, according to Law, to have been then at Church; Men of Strength and Ability of Body, as they appear to be, for the Service of the Government; for theſe People to be debauch'd into ſuch Doctrines as theſe, of Standing to their Principles, againſt the Government; the more learned the Man is, the greater and blacker is the Crime of that Man that is guilty of it. God knows whether that be Mr. Roſewell's Caſe, and you that are of the Jury are to try it: To do it under pretence of preaching the Goſpel, is the worſt way of doing it that could be taken; to quote Scripture for Rebellion adds to the Crime; as it did to that of thoſe black Villains that were concern'd in the Murder of our late dread Sovereign, who has been ſo often mention'd; they were generally the Preachers of the late Times that contributed to that horrid Villany.

Gentlemen, it is notoriouſly known to you in this accurſed late helliſh Conſpiracy againſt his ſacred and moſt merciful Majeſty, our Sovereign that now is, (whom I pray God long to reign over us,) thoſe that had an hand in the Intention to deſtroy him, and his Royal Brother, were a great many of them black-Coat Diſſenters to the Church of England; and I cannot ſay I know any one Member of the Church of England that had any hand in it at all. How many of them ſtand now convicted by Outlawry lawry for that bloody Treaſon; I won't ſay all Parſons, but generally all of them Diſſenters; and we know theſe are thoſe baſe, profligate Villains, always made uſe of in theſe baſe Sinks of Rebellion. And they are the common Sewers of Faction; theſe Conventicles are, and of Treaſon and Conſpiracy againſt the Government in Church and State. God be praiſed, we have a Religion that teaches us much better; a Religion eſtabliſhed by the Laws of the Land, and with that Decency of Worſhip, and Care of the Souls of Men, that may bring us all to Heaven, by the Grace of God, if we pleaſe to hearken to the Dictates of it, and to mind what is enjoyn'd us our Duty by the Law; but when People are once deluded by the Inſinuation of ſuch falſe Teachers, and run into Faction and Diſcontent, then they'll ſoon run into Rebellion too. And I ſpeak this the rather to deter and give warning to other People, to have a care how they come near ſuch Places, and ſuch Practices, than to affect you.

Gentlemen, here you have had three Witneſſes examined againſt the Priſoner, who ſtands accuſed for a Crime of High Treaſon. I muſt confeſs, I have taken up a great deal of the Time; and a great deal of the Time was taken up before; but there's no Time too long, wherein a Queſtion of ſo mighty Moment as this is, is to be decided: The Government, the Preſervation of our King, the Preſervation of our Religion, the Preſervation of our Laws, are all concern'd: For by the Deſtruction of our King and of our Government, our Religion, and all that is near and dear to us in the World, will run a great Hazard, if not come to a total Deſtruction; and I am ſure it did come near to it in a former Time, by this very ſort of way. Therefore I enjoyn you, in the Preſence of the Almighty God, let neither Diſpleaſure, nor any ſort of perſonal Animoſity, in any thing that has been contracted by Hearſay from abroad, nor any Imaginations that have been ſuggeſted here without proof, any way direct you in the Conſideration of this Cauſe againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: But go according to the Evidence that has been here before you, on the one ſide and on the other ſide. For as on the one ſide you are not to be corrupted by common Talk, or any Prejudice againſt a Party or a Faction; ſo are you not to be miſled by any Affirmation or Reflection, or Comment that the Priſoner has made or ſaid for himſelf, other than what is ſupported by the Teſtimony of theſe Witneſſes that he has produced, and whoſe Evidence is left to you to conſider: For you muſt not be led by any Circumſtances, or by Diſcourſes; but what's ſworn on the one ſide for the King, or teſtifyed on the other for the Priſoner. And therefore I can with all Freedom and Zeal for the Government, and all due Compaſſion to the Priſoner at the Bar (whom with all my Soul I am ſorry to ſee accuſed, or indeed any Man, of ſuch a Crime,) leave this matter entirely upon the Evidence that has been given. And tho', I ſay, I am ſorry to ſee him accus'd; yet ſuch Tranſgreſſions are aggravated now, when we live in an Age, wherein we have all Peace and Plenty, while the reſt of our Neighbours are wallowing in their Blood round about us; ſome we have heard of are brought to the Neceſſity of eating the moſt filthy and baſeſt Animals, that never was deſign'd for the Food of Man: I ſay, when all our Neighbours are groaning under the Miſeries of War, (bleſſed be God) we live and ſleep quietly under our own Vines; we enjoy the Benefit of being Subjects to a gracious King; we enjoy the full extent of our Laws, which are ſufficient to ſecure our Liberties and Properties; and no Man can be brought (no, not one of the meaneſt Subjects the King has) to ſuch an untimely End, but by the true Methods of Juſtice.

He is to be try'd by you, Gentlemen, who are Gentlemen of Quality of the County where the Fact is alledged to be committed; againſt whom he might have made his Challenges and Exceptions, if he had any reaſon, as he did againſt the others (according to the Liberty the Law allows him) without any reaſon. So that you ſtand indifferent between the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, to try this Cauſe, whether he be Guilty, or not Guilty of the Treaſon of which he ſtands accuſed. In caſe the late intended Rebellions and Inſurrections had taken the deſigned Effect, according to the Doctrine preached in theſe Sermons, of ſtanding to Principles and overcoming Enemies; and what ſeveral of his Brethren who ſtand now accuſed of, and are upon Proſecution (and for ought I know every one of them might be actually engaged) I ſay, in caſe ſuch a thing had been, there had been nothing but cutting of Throats; there had been no Juſtice for any Subject to have expected; no Methods or Proceedings of Law; but Deſtruction would have come upon us like an armed Man.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long; ſo I hope you will give me your Pardon, that I have been the longer in inſiſting upon it; and according to my beſt Underſtanding and Memory, I have given you the beſt Account I can both of the Evidence for, and againſt the Priſoner. You are Judges of the Fact; and I pray God direct you, and guide you and your Conſciences, that the Truth may be diſcovered by your Verdict.

Mr. Roſewell. May a Loyal Subject ſpeak, my Lord?

L. C. J. No Mr. Roſewell; after the Jury are charged by the Court, you are not to ſay any thing. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury.

(Which was done.)

Then the Jury withdrew into the uſual Room for ſuch Purpoſes, to conſider of their Verdict; and afterwards they returned into Court.

Clerk of the Crown. Cryer, take the Appearance of the Jury.

Cryer. Sir George Sheers:

Sir George Sheers. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez Sir George Sheers, &c.——

(And ſo of the reſt.)

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen, Are you agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Crown. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Crown. Thomas Roſewell, Hold up thine Hand. (Which he did.) You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treaſon, whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the time of the High-Treaſon committed; or at any time ſince to your Knowledge?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Mr. Roſewell. Then the Lord have mercy upon the Jury. My Lord, I humbly requeſt this Favour, that they may be asked ſeparatim, whether they be all of the ſame Opinion.

L. C. J. That's never done, Mr. Roſewell, unleſs there be any difference ſuggeſted from amongſt themſelves:

Mr. Roſewell. I ask it in regard to them themſelves; for I have heard many times the Jury go by the major part; and I would know whether they be all of that Opinion. Therefore I beg they may be asked that Queſtion.

L. C. J. You muſt be contented, Mr. Roſewell; in caſe there were any difference, we ſhould hear of it from amongſt themſelves.

Cl. of the Crown. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it. You ſay that Thomas Roſewell is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted; but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the time of the High-Treaſon committed, or any time ſince, to your Knowledge; and ſo you ſay all?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen, the Court diſmiſſeth you.

L. C. J. Marſhal, you muſt take him into your Cuſtody, being now Convicted.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I would heartily beg, for the Jury's ſake themſelves, that that Queſtion may be asked of them.

L. C. J. We muſt not indulge any Innovations. It is not uſual. You may ask them, if you pleaſe; ſee whether they will anſwer you. We muſt go according to the Forms of Law.

Mr. Roſewell. Then, my Lord, if all theſe Gentlemen's Eſtates were joyn'd in one, I would not change Conditions with that Man of them who ſhould poſſeſs the Whole.

L. C. J. Mr. Roſewell, We muſt have no Reflections upon the Jury.

Then the Priſoner was taken away, and the Court broke up.

Die Lunæ 24 Nov. An. Dom. 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex verſ. Roſewell.

THIS Day Mr. Roſewell being brought up to the Court, to receive Sentence, the Court proceeded as follows.

L. C. J. Brother Jenner, have you any thing to move?

Mr. Ser. Jenner. My Lord, we wait upon the Priſoner at the Bar to deſire Judgment upon the Conviction that was here the other Day for High-Treaſon.

L. C. J. Againſt the Priſoner at the Bar do you mean?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Then call him to his Judgment.

Cl. of the Crown. Thomas Roſewell, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou haſt been Indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government: Upon that Indictment thou haſt been Arraign'd: Upon that Arraignment thou haſt Pleaded not Guilty: And for thy Tryal thou haſt put thy ſelf upon God and thy Country; which Country has found thee Guilty. What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, wherefore Judgement ſhould not be given againſt thee, to die according to the Law?

(Then he was made to kneel and riſe again.)

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly hope that your Lordſhip will not give Sentence againſt me upon this Indictment; conſidering the Circumſtances of it. I have, my Lord, proteſted to this Honourable Court in the Preſence of the great God, the Searcher of Hearts, my Innocency in this Caſe; but I have been found Guilty by the Jury, on whom the Lord have Mercy. I do ſtill proteſt my Deteſtation and Abhorrence of the Fact, even in my very Soul; and I do humbly beg your Lordſhip and the Court to compaſſionate my preſent Condition; and with humble Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I would enter into my Diſcourſe upon that Hypotheſis; for I would be ſtill taken thus, even in this Conviction to deny the Theſis; that I ever was guilty of ſpeaking ſuch Words as are laid in the Indictment. But upon the Hypotheſis, ſuppoſing that I were Guilty, I do humbly conceive that theſe Words, as they are laid, are not Treaſon. They are very fooliſh and ugly Words; and may be a very great Miſdemeanour in Law (if true, which ſtill I muſt over and over again inſiſt upon) but they are not Treaſon. And I beg your Lordſhip will do me the Favour to let the Indictment be read once more.

L. C. J. Av, with all my heart.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip; I deſire it may read in Latin.

L. C. J. Read it to him in Latin.

Surrey ſſ. Juratores pro Domino Rege ſuper Sacramentum ſuum præſentant, &c.

(The whole Indictment was read.)

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip. There are ſome things that I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip in Arreſt of Judgment out of this Indictment; and I requeſt your Lordſhip to hear me with Patience, being here for my Life. I pray Judgement may be arreſted for theſe Cauſes: That there is not any Crime ſufficiently ſet forth for your Lordſhip to give Judgment upon. My Lord, I humbly take it for granted that in all Indictments of Treaſon, there muſt be ſome particular Matter of Treaſon aſſign'd; and that it is not a ſufficient Indictment in general, that a Man did intend to depoſe the King or to raiſe Rebellion, without ſome Overt act poſitively aſſerted to be done by that Perſon; the general Intention being only an inducement to the Charge. The ſpecial Matters that ſet forth the particular Acts of Treaſon are thoſe that make the real Charge, upon which the Court and the Jury

Jury are to proceed. Now, my Lord, if that ſpecial Matter that is alledged be inſufficient, with all humble Submiſſion, tho' there be never ſo many ſuch ſorts of Facts proved, and found by the Jury, the Party cannot be convicted of High-Treaſon: For in this caſe the Party has the ſame Advantage to except againſt the particulars alledg'd, to prove the general ſuggeſted Treaſon, as againſt the general Treaſon it ſelf. Now, with humble Submiſſion, my Lord, again I ſay, that the Matter here ſuggeſted is inſufficient; as will evidently appear by what I am going to offer to your Lordſhip.

The firſt and principal Objection that I have, is againſt the Inuendo's, which are ſo many and ſo ſtrange in theſe Words that are alledged againſt me. Theſe Inuendo's, my Lord, I ſay, are naught and void; and I preſume that it will be allowed to me upon reading of the Words by themſelves, as bad and as fooliſh as they are. Without theſe Inuendo's, there could nothing be made out of ſuch Words as theſe are, neither Treaſon nor any thing elſe.

Then, my Lord, in the ſecond Place laying aſide the Inuendo's, I muſt inſiſt upon the repugnancy and inſenſibility of the Words laid in the Indictment, being in Latin, and ſuch Latin as I believe your Lordſhip never ſaw; and upon theſe two Points, I deſire that Judgment may be arreſted; and I humbly pray Council may be aſſign'd me to make them out in better form.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Brother Jenner, and the King's Council?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. I cannot ſee that he has alledg'd any Objection which here requires an Anſwer from any of us that are of Council for the King.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother; Methinks he does.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he does pretend to object againſt any of the Overt-Acts alledg'd in the Indictment; your Lordſhip obſerves, this Indictment is upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, wherein Words are made Treaſon, if they intend any Hurt or Impriſonment to the King's Perſon. For his Objection as to the Inuendo's, he does not aſſign wherein they are repugnant or inſufficient. He does aſſign in particular, indeed, that it is inſufficient, being a general Crime; which yet he does not ſay is not ſufficiently laid; for it is ſaid, that he did compaſs and imagine the Death and Deſtruction of the King: And to effect that compaſſing and imagination, he did ſpeak ſuch and ſuch Words, which by the Statute are made Treaſon, if they tend to attempt by Preaching or Writing any Impriſonment or Harm to the King's Perſon. Then for him to come to Talk of Standing to their Principles, after he had ſpoken of two wicked Kings together, (meaning the late King, and the Preſent) and that then we ſhould overcome our Enemies; what is that but Preaching in order to raiſe a Rebellion and Inſurrection, tending to the Deſtruction of the King, and his Government? All this is laid in the Indictment; the Jury find it ſpoken maliciouſly, and with ſuch an Intention as we have laid; and therefore we think that it is ſufficient.

L. C. J. But if I take the Gentleman right, (for I tell you before hand Juſtice muſt be done to all People impartially. The Crime is a very great Crime that he ſtands accuſed of; and the Jury have found him guilty of the Crime laid in the Indictment: But if I take him aright) he does not ſay that Words are not ſufficient to create a Treaſon, but the Words here as they are laid in this Indictment are not ſufficient: And as I take it, there is no great difficulty in the Matter; but the Words would have been ſufficient to have ſupported the Accuſation, if they be well laid. But the Queſtion is, whether the Words that you have laid here be ſo poſitively affirm'd to have been ſpoken by the Priſoner, and to relate to the Government, as they ought to be in an Indictment of High-Treaſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Indictment muſt make out; and the Jury have found him Guilty, according to the Indictment.

L. C. J. But that is his Objection, they are not ſo in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they are laid as the Witneſſes ſwore them; as your Lordſhip can't but remember.

L. C. J. That they are not poſitively affirmed, but only alledg'd under an Innuendo; that is, he ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words whereby he compared the King to Jeroboam, and the like; and we had two wicked Kings together, but if we would ſtand to our Principles, we ſhould overcome our Enemies, Innuendo the King. The alledging of the Words ſpoken in the Indictment is poſitive, if there be ſufficient Matter in the Words to make them applicable to the Government, ſo as to make it Treaſon. But if you only ſay he ſpoke them, Innuendo ſo and ſo, that is not poſitive enough to make the Indictment good. I take it the Objection runs that way.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordſhip for explaining my meaning; It is ſo.

L. C. J. In an Action on the Caſe, if you ſay the Defendant ſpake ſuch and ſuch Words, if you do not lay it that he ſpoke them of the Plaintiff; Innuendo the Plaintiff in repeating the Words won't do. So here, if you had brought it in the Indictment, that having diſcourſe of the late King and this King, he had ſpoken theſe Words, We have now had two wicked Kings, &c. You then had brought it home to him: But you do not lay it that it was ſpoken of them at all, but only in the Innuendo; whereas you ought to ſay firſt, That he ſpoke of the late King, and this King; and then ſaid, We have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo the late King, and this King.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know, how we could have done it better than we have done.

L. C. J. Look ye, we give no Opinion; but the Objection has weight in it upon my Word. As I told you before, in common Caſes, an Action of the Caſe for Words, or the like, you muſt lay a Communication concerning the Plaintiff, or an Innuendo will not be a ſufficient Averment of its being ſpoken of him. In an Action of the Caſe for Words, till within this Seven or Eight Years, they were obliged to lay a Colloquium of the Plaintiff, and of his Trade; and that to Defame him, were ſpoken of him at ſuch a Time ſuch Words, as that he was a Cheating Knave; where the Word Knave would bear an Action; a bare Innuendo would not do, that was not enough. But now I confeſs ſince Declarations are made a little more conciſe, you need only ſay dixit de Querente, ſuch and ſuch Words without without a Colloquium, but you muſt aver it to be ſpoken of the Plaintiff. I never thought it good in ſuch a Caſe, to ſay of a Merchant he is a Bankrupt Knave, (Innuendo the Plaintiff) unleſs he ſay he ſpoke of his Trade and Merchandiſe. So that the Objection does ſeem to carry very much weight in it.

Mr. Sollicitor. My Lord, if your Lordſhip would give me leave, I would endeavour to anſwer the Caſe as your Lordſhip has put it; for my Lord, no doubt in all common Actions of the Caſe for Words, it muſt be averr'd that the Words were ſpoken de Perſonâ, of the Plaintiff; but the Firſt part of the Indictment, in this Caſe, ſhews that the Words muſt be ſpoken of the Perſon of the King, and of the late King; for it ſays he did conſpire the Death and Deſtruction of the King, and to depoſe him from his Government, and to manifeſt that traiterous, wicked Intention of his; Ed Intentione he did ſpeak theſe Words of the Government, we have had two wicked Kings together, meaning this King and the late King.

L. C. J. If you had ſaid ſo, that he ſpoke theſe Words of the King, you had anſwered my Objection; but the Conſpiracy of the Death of the King being only a general form for Treaſon, will not make good an Indictment of High-Treaſon; but you muſt ſhow ſome Acts or Words to evince and prove that that was his Intention; that he did either ſpeak ſuch and ſuch Words, or did ſuch and ſuch Actions. It is not a good Indictment to prove that he did conſpire, for he ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words; but that to carry on his Conſpiracy he did ſpeak ſuch and ſuch Words of the Government; that muſt be poſitively alledged.

Mr. Sollicitor. We do ſo, my Lord; for we ſay, & ad eaſdem nefandas proditiones, &c perimplendas, He ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words, we have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo this King and the late.

L. C. J. You have Innuendo'd it too much I do doubt; for all the Facts are laid under an Innuendo, without a poſitive Averment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord; I think it is as fully laid as it poſſibly could be.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Attorney, if in Caſes of common Actions for Words, there be ſuch Strictneſs requir'd, ten Times more ought there to be in an Indictment of Treaſon, where a Man's Life, and All, is ſo much concern'd. I am not ſatisfy'd I aſſure you that this Indictment is well laid, tho' I give no Opinion; but in all Juſtice we ought to aſſign him Council to make out his Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. All this, my Lord, is only in delay.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, De vitâ Hominis nulla eſt Cunctatio longa. I think we ought to aſſign him Council; and the reſt of my Brothers are of that Opinion too.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them read Colonel Sidney's Tryal, and the Indictment there; and they'll find it the ſame thing.

L. C. J. I cannot tell whether there are any ſuch Innuendo's there, I believe not; but I know not if there were, if in caſe it had been moved in arreſt of Judgement, what the Court would have done then. But I think we ought to aſſign him Council to make out his Objection.

Mr. Sollicitor. The very Fact, that makes this Treaſon is his ſtirring up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom; and we ſay, to effect it he had theſe Expreſſions in his Pulpit, we have now had two wicked Kings together (meaning this King and the late) who have ſuffered Popery to come under their Noſes; but if you will ſtand to your Principles (meaning the People) we ſhall overcome our Enemies (meaning the King and Government.)

L. C. J. Ay, but you do not ſay that he ſpoke theſe Words of the King: This you ſhould have ſaid at firſt; becauſe the ſpeaking of theſe Words is the very Overt-act; and if he did not ſpeak them of the King (which you ought to affirm) but only by way of Innuendo, that cannot, we think, be ſo good nor ſufficient.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I take it that theſe are the main Words that are to maintain this Indictment of Treaſon; and the Queſtion is whether they ought not to have been aver'd that they were ſpoken of the two Kings.

L. C. J. We do not give any Opinion, Mr. Attorney; but becauſe there ſeems to be ſome reaſonable Doubt, and Weight in the Objection, we deſire to have it argu'd; and therefore will aſſign him Council.

Mr. Roſewell. I humbly thank your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. We do think it fit to look into it, before we proceed any further in a caſe where a Man's Life is concerned.

Mr. Roſewell. I pray God to bleſs your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Nay, you have no need to thank me; for I deſire to do Juſtice to all Men.

Mr. Roſewell. But I deſire to return my hearty thanks to your Lordſhip, for explaining and making out what my Unskilfulneſs in the Law would not permit me to do. God be your Rewarder for it.

L. C. J. Well; Who would you have to be your Council?

Mr. Roſewell. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, Mr. Wallop, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Thomas Bampfeild.

L. C. J. Let them be aſſign'd of Council for him. But, Mr. Roſewell, I think it is not improper for me upon this Occaſion to take notice of this that is in my Mind relating to your Affair; becauſe I obſerve it is a Matter of great Expectation, and ſo was at your Tryal, and here is a great Croud of People now; that as this Fact is found, if the Indictment falls out to be a good Indictment (which is the Queſtion that now depends before the Court) ſo that you come to have Judgment of High-Treaſon paſs'd upon you, and to Suffer according to that Judgment; what will become of theſe 400 People that were your Auditors at the Time that theſe Words (that are thus found and adjudged to be Treaſon) were ſpoken? And I ſpeak it for the ſake of all Conventiclers, and Frequenters of ſuch Meetings as theſe are. If you that are the Preachers and Teachers, the Mouths of ſuch Congregations, do utter Treaſon, and ſo they conceal that Treaſon, what a Condition are they in? what are they Guilty of? Therefore if People will conſider, they would do well to think, that when they go to ſuch Places, they go at a great Peril; being to anſwer for Themſelves, their Lives, and Eſtates upon the Prudence of the Expreſſions (to ſay no more) that come from the Teachers. I only put you in mind of this, becauſe I would have all Standers by, and the Auditory (which I ſee is very great) in Mind what Danger and Riſque they run in thus offending the Law.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, I do believe, that no one in the World (beſides theſe Witneſſes that here were produced againſt me) can ever teſtify the leaſt diſreſpectful Word ſpoken by me of the late King, or of his preſent Majeſty.

L. C. J. Well; when will you be ready, Gentlemen?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we deſire to have as much time to prepare our ſelves as we can.

L. C. J. Two or three Days time will ſerve.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is fit we ſhould know what Points they intend to inſiſt upon, that we may prepare to anſwer them.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that muſt be; but I perceive his main Objection is, what I tell; Let him be brought by Rule hither upon Thurſday, becauſe the Court may have time to conſider of what ſhall be ſaid on both Sides.

Mr. Roſewell. My Lord, theſe Gentlemen are Strangers to me; but I dare rely upon them, from the Character I have heard of them, that they will do me all the Juſtice that they can.

L. C. J. Well, they are aſſigned of Council for you. But I could not forbear giving that hint that I did, that this might be a Warning to People, how they tranſgreſs the Law in going to ſuch Meetings.

Die Mercurij 26 Novemb. 1684.

Rex verſus Roſewell.

L. C. J. MR. Pollexfen, Have you any thing to Move?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I have one Word to Move for my ſelf, and the others, that are appointed to be of Council for Mr. Roſewell. We think it our Duty to apply our ſelves to your Lordſhip for this Favour; that to enable us the better to do our Duty for the Perſon for whom we are aſſign'd, your Lordſhip and the Court would pleaſe to order that we may have a Copy of the Indictment. We do acknowledge, that it is not an uſual thing to have Copies granted (tho' there be no expreſs Law that we know againſt it) in capital Matters; but where any Doubt does ariſe upon the Penning the Indictment, and Council is aſſign'd; to enable them to do what is fitting for them to do for their Client, Copies of the Indictment have been granted; as particularly in the Caſe of Fitzharris, in order to the Plea that he was to put in; and I my ſelf was one of the Council at that time.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I make no doubt in the World, it is in the Power of the Court to order a Copy of the Indictment, if they ſee Cauſe; but if you remember, (for you were of Council in that Cauſe too) it is not to be granted, becauſe it is asked. For my Lord Ruſſel had no Copy of the Indictment, tho' he inſiſted very much upon it: And it was in the Caſe of Fitzharris granted, that he might particulatly apply his Plea (if he had a Mind to it) to the Indictment it ſelf.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I do not deſire a Copy of all the whole Indictment; but of ſo much thereof, as may be enough for us to know the Foundation upon which we are to go. I do remember we were call'd in, in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, upon the Point of Challenge, for want of Free-holders; but that was not in the Point of the Indictment; and there I cannot ſee what we had to do with the Indictment; but here we muſt underſtand how it is laid really in the Indictment, that we may apply our Arguments to the Caſe; and that I believe was never denied.

L. C. J. Look ye, if you ſpeak to me privately, as to my own particular Opinion; it is hard for me to ſay that there is any expreſs Reſolution of the Law in the Matter: But the Practice has been always to deny a Copy of the Indictment. And therefore, if you ask me as a Judge, to have a Copy of the Indictment delivered to you in a Caſe of High-Treaſon, I muſt anſwer you, ſhew me any Precedents where it was done: For there are abundance of Caſes in the Law which ſeem hard in themſelves; but the Law is ſo, becauſe the Practice has been ſo; and we can't alter the Practice of the Law without an Act of Parliament. I think it's a hard caſe, that a Man ſhould have Council to defend himſelf for a Twopenny-treſpaſs, and his Witneſſes examined upon Oath; but if he Steal, commit Murder, or Felony, nay, High-Treaſon, where Life, Eſtate, Honour, and all are concern'd; he ſhall neither have Council, nor his Witneſſes examined upon Oath: But yet you know as well as I, that the Practice of the Law is ſo; and the Practice is the Law.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we heard the other Day the Indictment read, and ſo may have ſome little Account of the Indictment; but we deſire ſuch a Copy as may enable us to argue as we ought to do; and as the Court will expect from us, being aſſigned by the Court.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, if we ſhould offer any thing that is not in the Indictment, it's all one as if we held our Tongues; and if we have only a looſe Account of the Indictment, that may be as bad as if we had a falſe one: And therefore we deſire, to the end that we may argue ad idem, that your Lordſhip will pleaſe to favour us that we may have a Copy of ſo much of the Indictment, as upon which our Objections may be grounded.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, you may remember a particular Caſe; I have forgot the Name; but I believe you may remember it; where a Priſoner at this Bar deſired to have the Indictment delivered to him to read; but it was denied him. It is hard, I confeſs, and ſo are many other Things in the Law; but I am wonderfully tender of making Precedents: And therefore if it has not been practiced, I do not ſee how we can do it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is the uſual Practice, my Lord; but it is in the Power of the Court ſure to grant a Copy; or at leaſt of ſo much as is neceſſary for them to apply themſelves to. There have been many Caſes of Murders where they have had Copies of the Indictment, in order der to move in Arrest of Judgment; as this Case is.

Mr. Just. Walcot. But have there been any in High-Treason?

Mr. Just. Withins. I do not take it that there is any difference between the one Case and the other; they being both capital Crimes; and Council being assign'd they must know what they are to speak to.

L. C. J. I would know when ever a Copy was granted to enable the Party to move in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, when there is a Motion in Arrest of Judgment, and Council is assign'd, that is a Thing they ought to know, how to demean themselves in their Arguments.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we submit it to you. We desire the Favour that we may acquit our selves as we ought to do; and as the Court (we know) expects from us.

L. C. J. As far forth as I could do, being in the Case of Life, I would indulge you: But I tell you, I am loath to be the Author of Precedents in Cases of this Nature, one way or other; especially in this Case, where I know you cannot but understand by what was spoken here t'other Day, what the Objection is, and where the Stress of it lies: Every Man at the Bar must needs understand it.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we know People have various Understandings; and the case is many times variously stated, not only in our Minds, but in our Books.

L. C. J. Well, we know you understand your selves well enough: And what we could grant we would.

Mr. Just. Withins. It may be Mr. Pollexfen does it only to make way for an excuse, when he comes to argue, that he is not so well prepared as he should have been; but we know him well enough.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, my Lord, if we miss the Words of the Indictment, we hope your Lordship will not think us impertinent in having made this Motion, which is for our Selves, not for our Client: And therefore we hope you will Pardon us, if in case we mistake; which we could have had no colour to have desired, if what we had to say were guided by a true Copy of the Record.

No Copy was granted, nor Rule made.

Die Jovis, 27 Novembris 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell was brought to the Bar, and the Court asked the Council assign'd for him, what they had to say.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, I am of Council with Mr. Rosewell, by your Lordship's Appointment; he being here a Prisoner now at the Bar. My Lord, I am inform'd (for I have not seen the Proceedings, nor heard the Indictment read) that it is an Indictment for treasonable Words; and many treasonable Words; and likewise, as I take it by Information, these Words are apply'd by divers Innuendo's; so that for ought I can apprehend by what I am inform'd (which I must still keep to) it is so uncertain, insensible, involved and intricate, that no safe Judgment, as I humbly conceive, can be given upon it.

My Lord, to consider these Words; First, if you please, I shall state them as discharged of the Innuendo's, and put them to your Lordship barely and nakedly, as they are in the Indictment, and as they were sworn, and are to be supposed by the Conviction to have been spoken. The Words are these, as they stand discharged of their Innuendo's. That the People make a flocking to the King under pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, because we are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolours and Griefs of the People. We have had now two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to enter under their Noses; who can be liken'd to no other Person but the most wicked Jeroboam: And if they would stand to their Principles, he did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies as in former times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.

These, my Lord, are the Words nakedly in themselves; and these are said to be spoken in a Publick Assembly, where they were likely to do hurt to the Government. Thus, I say, they stand without any of the Innuendo's. Now, tho' your Lordship will have, and justly ought to have, a good Account given you of such Words as these, how they came to be spoken, even taking them as they stand discharged of the Innuendo's; yet I humbly conceive with Submission, they do not contain any intention of deposing or destroying the King, and so can have no treasonable Intention in them: And then your Lordship, I suppose, will likewise expect to have a good account of these Words in another respect; how Words which in the hearing of them barely and nakedly spoken, could not carry a treasonable Intention, I say, how it comes to pass that in the writing of them down in an Indictment they become High Treason.

My Lord, these Words as they stand discharged of the Innuendos, are loose, extravagant, insensible Words; sounding rather towards Phrenzy, than Treason. So that as they stand without further Explanation by an Innuendo, they are perfectly insensible, and one cannot tell what they refer to, or whom; and if the Words, Ex vi termini, without further Averment, contain no treasonable intention and meaning, and so consequently have no Treason; it may seem very difficult and hard to maintain, how, out of the Assembly in which they were spoken, being put into Latin, in an Indictment, they should become Treason: They not being Treason at Rotherhith, where they were spoken; how they should be made Treason at Kingston or here, where they are dress'd up in another Form. Indeed I know no way that it can be done, but by adding some other Words by some other Hand. And, my Lord, I suppose it was so ſo done by thoſe who framed this Indictment that is before your Lordſhip, by inſerting, and adding this Multitude of Innuendos.

But I ſuppoſe then, they that would inſert theſe Innuendos muſt have a good Warrant to inſert them: For if they are inſerted without Warrant in Law, then it muſt be acknowledg'd to me that the Indictment is not good; and I humbly conceive it to be a Rule in Law, that no Innuendo can warrantably be inſerted in an Indictment, Information, or Declaration, upon an Action of the Caſe for Words, unleſs the Defendant firſt himſelf be averr'd, and that directly to have mention'd a Perſon in certain, to whom thoſe Words may be referr'd; and it muſt not ſlide in by Suppoſition, but it muſt appear in the Body of the Diſcourſe of the Defendant. And the Reaſon is evident, in all Caſes of Slander, and particularly in theſe of treaſonable Words; for how could the Hearer underſtand whom the Preacher meant, or he that diſcourſed ſo and ſo; and ſo be influenced to Rebellion, unleſs he had named the Perſon of whom he ſpoke; as here, unleſs the Defendant had named the King to whom the Words he ſpoke ſhould be referred?

My Lord, the Treaſon of the Words is in ſtirring up Sedition and Rebellion; and if then the Words cannot terminate upon the King, and the Hearers could not collect that to be the Intention of the Speaker, theſe Words could not influence a People to Rebellion and Sedition. And according to this Rule, I conceive that moſt of the Innuendos in this Indictment are not warrantable.

For my Lord, as to the firſt Words, to take them in order, tho' I take it, that that is the moſt remote Matter from the Crime charged; yet let us ſtrike off theſe Innuendos as we go along, if we can. There it is Quod populus, &c. the People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King) keep a flocking to the King, to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. Here the firſt Innuendo is the People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King). Now he had never before named the People of England; but the Innuendo faſtens that meaning upon the Word (People.) Which with Submiſſion, my Lord, is always a Sign of a naughty Innuendo; and it is without Warrant of Law; an endeavouring to give an original certainty to uncertain Words; which is more than the Office of an Innuendo will allow or warrant. I ſay, my Lord, it always bears a bad face, where Words firſt appear with an Innuendo, and have no certainty even in the Beginning of them but by the Innuendo: that with Submiſſion, is to be rejected, the Innuendo not doing its proper Office, for which it ought to be uſed in Law: For Populus may intend any People; it may intend the French People flocking to the French King, (and he does heal the King's Evil in the ſame manner; nay, pretends to it as a ſole Gift to him, his Predeceſſors and Succeſſors: But I only put that for an inſtance) and all the Innuendos, if you obſerve them, are of this Nature. The Words firſt appear without any light, but what theſe Suppoſitions give them; and therefore, I ſay, they are to be rejected.

But now, my Lord, I come to that which is more particular, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in ſimul; We (meaning the Subjects of the King) have had two wicked Kings (meaning King Charles the Firſt, and this King) together. Now that we ſay is altogether void, for there was no mention of any Kings; wicked Kings or good Kings, Pious or Bad, before in the Diſcourſe; to which, according to the Office of an Innuendo, theſe Words are to be apply'd. My Lord Coke in his 4 Rep. fol. 17. B. has this Caſe.

* John Jeames brings his Action againſt Alexander Rutlech, for ſpeaking the following words concerning him, to one John Bonner. "Hang "him (prædictum Johannem Jeames innuendo) he is full of the "Pocks. (innuendo the French Pocks.) I marvail that you (prædictum Johannem Bonner innuendo) will "eat or drink with him (prædictum Johannem Jeames innuendo) I "will prove that he is "full of the Pocks (innuendo the French Pocks.) Upon a Motion in Arreſt of Judgment, it was Reſolved by the Court, that in every Action of the Caſe for Slander, two things are requiſite. Firſt, That the Perſon who is Scandalized be certain. Secondly, That the Words ſpoken be apparent Slander. The Office of an innuendo is to deſign the ſame Perſon that has been named before: And is in Effect, inſtead of a Prædict'. But it cannot make the Perſon certain, that was uncertain before. In the preſent Caſe, it was evident that the Plaintiff did ſpeak the Words of the Defendant. But as to the ſecond Thing, it did not appear that the Words ſpoken did mean the French Pocks; and Words are to be taken in mitiori ſenſu.

And I humbly conceive this Book is a moſt pregnant Authority that ſtates the Matter truly, with a Judgment of Law, and the Reaſon of it; and all the Books that come after this, borrow their Light from what is laid down as the Rule of Law in this Caſe; as there are an infinite Number of them, which I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with particularizing; only juſt to name ſome of them. 5 Co. 20. Hob. 45. and 2 Cro. 126. wherein they ſay, That altho' the Plaintiff be particularly nam'd by a ſpecial Name; yet if the Declaration comes to Name him in an Action of the Caſe for Words, at the firſt Appearance with an Innuendo, then that Innuendo is Void; tho' his Name be expreſly alledg'd in the very Words, yet they will reject that Innuendo, as not doing the proper Office of an Innuendo: And that Judgment ſhall be Arreſted, tho' the Jury found that the Party ſpoke ſuch Words: And this is upon the Rule in 4 Co. before-mentioned.

Now, my Lord, to apply this Rule in the 4*th* Report to the Caſe before your Lordſhip; we ſay there was no mention at all before of any two Kings; nay, not of any King, in his Diſcourſe, to which the Innuendo ſhould refer; and the Innuendo being join'd to the Words firſt ſpoken, without any Diſcourſe laid concerning ſuch a Perſon, or Averment to be ſpoken of ſuch an one before, the Innuendo cannot give any certainty to that which had no ſuch original Certainty; that being againſt the Office of an Innuendo, and ſo is to be rejected. And the meaning of the Books, and of that great Rule which I firſt cited is this, That the Defendant muſt himſelf in his Diſcourſe, firſt ſet up ſuch a Light about the Words of the Perſon concerning whom they are ſpoken, that the Intention of the Speaker may with eaſe be collected; then comes the Innuendo with a Beck or a Nod, as it were; and that Collection is to be the nutus to ſhew who was meant; but it is not ſufficient to give an original Certainty, where ſuch a Certainty is not fix'd before the Innuendo comes. The Defendant himſelf muſt ſet up ſuch a Light as will carry the Intention to the End of the Diſcourſe.

Then it is ſaid Duos iniquos Reges, in the Plural Number; meaning the late King Charles and his preſent Majeſty; now King Charles the Firſt was never pretended to be mention'd before; why then according to that Rule, as to him the Innuendo ſignifies nothing at all; and then it muſt be taken in common Underſtanding, We have now had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, againſt whom the Treaſon muſt be ſaid to be committed: But this is very harſh, and inſenſible, and impoſſible; it is harſh in all reſpects both of Grammar, and Reaſon, and Law; it is inſenſible becauſe it is impoſſible; and it is impoſſible becauſe you muſt elſe make two Kings to be one, or one King to be two, and the Innuendo muſt ſerve both ways; which I believe your Lordſhip will hardly undertake to do.

And beſides, my Lord, there is another Inconſiſtency in theſe Words, habuimus nunc, that's contradictory; habuimus refers to the Time paſt, and draws one Way; nunc to the Time preſent, and draws another Way; and when there are ſuch Inconſiſtencies and Incoherences, how can any Man make a Judgement in this Caſe where the Life of a Man eſpecially is concerned?

But, my Lord, if habuimus be that which being firſt ſhall take place, then theſe Words refer to any two Kings that we have had, under whom Popery hath been let in; and ſo we muſt run back from Harry the 8th up to the Conqueſt, nay beyond the Conqueſt to the Saxons, and other former Kings, to the firſt that Eſtabliſhed the Chriſtian Religion, which was then ſubject to the Papacy. And it will be hard to conſtrue them wicked Kings for ſo doing at that Time; as any Man's reading, that knows any thing of the Hiſtory of England, will eaſily tell him. So that it is unintelligible and inſenſible, even that way; and to be ſure, if it be ſo, that we have had two wicked Kings together, referring ſo far back, it cannot at all concern the preſent King.

My Lord, I ſhall be ſhort; I only ſtate theſe things before you, and recommend them to your Lordſhip's Conſideration. Then come theſe Words, which it ſeems are moſt relyed upon, if they would ſtand to their Principles, he did not not Queſtion, but they ſhould be able Inimicos ſuos vincere; Inuendo the King and the Government. This is the moſt inſenſible, (as I apprehend) of all; and it is in the fatalleſt part, it being there that the Treaſon muſt lye, if there be any. Now my Lord, we firſt ſay, there is no mention at all of any Enemies throughout all the Words precedent; there is no Averment that the King was Enemy to any body, or any body to him; and therefore the Inuendo, for this reaſon, is to be rejected; and the rather, in that it makes the King and his Subjects to be Enemies one to another; which is an Imputation that ought not to be admitted; and I dare ſay, will not be by your Lordſhip. Therefore in this Caſe, to put ſuch a Senſe, in ſuch a Weighty Matter, (being a Matter of Fact,) upon ſuch Uncertainties without any further Averment of the Intention and Meaning of the Speaker to be ſo and ſo; and without any thing but ſuch Inuendo's, is very hard: For now perhaps the Jury only from this Inuendo were perſwaded that all theſe things pointed upon the King and the Government; and did take it that the Law was ſo; that the Words intended as much: Then do they give their Verdict of a Matter that was never averr'd, and for want of an Averment could never be put in iſſue, ſo that the Party could have a Tryal whether he were Guilty as the Indictment ſays.

My Lord, I ſhall cite no Books more than I have done. I humbly conceive that putting that great Rule in the Book I firſt mention'd, and the reaſon of the thing together, and the ſubſequent Authorities that I have cited, and they ſtand ſo fair and clear to avoid this Indictment, that to trouble your Lordſhip further were to embroil the caſe; therefore I ſhall ſay no more out of the Books. But the Rule is a firm, reaſonable, undeniable Rule, which muſt rule all Caſes that come under the Reaſon of it. And I never heard that Book was ever contradicted; but all ſubſequent Judgments were agreeable the runto.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. It is ——'s Caſe, is it not?

Mr. Wallop. Yes, Sir. My Lord, I have ſtript the Words of the Inuendo's. You will not not I am ſure put, nor can an Inuendo put ſuch a Violence or Force upon Words, as to make them Treaſon, when in themſelves they have no ſuch meaning. Inuendo's are to follow the meaning of the Words as they lie in the Record, and not to draw the Meaning of the Words after the Inuendo; for you will never, (eſpecially in a Caſe of Life) preſs Words, or ſtrain them to ſpeak more than willingly they mean or intend. It is not the practice of the Law ſo to do, to make any ſuch Stretches. Qui nimis emungit, elicit ſanguinem, he that wrings the Noſe too hard will draw forth Blood; that is the Rule of that great Lawyer, my Lord Coke, who applies that Saying to the forced Straining of Words beyond what in themſelves they naturally and eaſily will bear. And it is plain that God is not well pleaſed with ſuch Emunctions: Nor does the Law of the Land at all allow it, but abſolutely forbid it; for the Law of England ſpeaks thus, In dubiis & generalibus, benignior ſenſus eſt præferendus; in all dubious, uncertain, and general Caſes, the moſt benign and candid Interpretation is to be taken: So that if there ſhould be a doubt about theſe Words, what Senſe they be taken in; the Law of England does enjoyn your Lordſhip to take the Way that lies on the Right hand, and make the moſt favourable Conſtruction that can be of them. We ſay then, the Words (as I conceive) ſtanding quite otherways and without the Innuendo's, are inſenſible; at leaſt uncertain to what they ſhould be applyed, or to whom; and then if there ſhould be a Doubt, (though indeed in one reſpect I think there is none; yet if there ſhould remain a Doubt) I ſay your Lordſhip and the Court are to take that which is the moſt mild and gentle way of conſtruing theſe Words.

My Lord, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip further in the matter; for I think it is ſeen by its own Light, and theſe few Touches that I have given of that general Rule as applyed to the particular Caſe before your Lordſhip: And I do not queſtion but they will be apply'd by your Lordſhip and the Court, in their Conſideration of the Caſe: Therefore I lay it at your Lordſhip's Feet, and humbly pray that the Judgment may be arreſted.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am aſſign'd by the Court to be of Council for Mr. Roſewell, the Priſoner at the Bar; and therefore humbly deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to ſpare me a Word of the ſame Side with Mr. Wallop. The Caſe, that is, this Part of the Indictment hath been put (according to what our Information is) right by Mr. Wallop; but becauſe there may be many Words in the Indictment, (and there are ſo) ſome of a higher Nature than others; therefore I beg leave to put the Words diſtinctly as they lie; and I ſhall endeavour, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, to ſhew what Words are in themſelves Treaſon; and what are not Treaſon, tho' they may be a great Miſdemeanour, and highly puniſhable by the Law, and by the Court.

My Lord, Tho' the Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. does provide that for the Convicting of any for Treaſon, there ſhall be an Overt Act; yet I do not hold, nor do I think, but that there may be Words that are an Overt Act, and conſequently Treaſon within that Statute; but then what ſort of Words theſe are, is that which I would humbly offer to your Lordſhip to diſcourſe of: For my Lord it plainly appears that Words in themſelves that are very evil and wicked, yet are not Treaſon, nor are to be Puniſh'd by vertue of that Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. As in one Cro. 117. & 125. Hugh Pine's Caſe. The Words there ſpoken by Pine, are moſt evil and wicked Words; yet by all the Judges of England they are agreed not to be Treaſon.

But, my Lord, for a further Determination of this Point, what Words are Treaſon and what not; give me Leave to mention the Statute of 13 Car. 2. which I underſtand to be the Statute upon which the Priſoner is Indicted, and the two Branches of that Statute: for the Firſt tells what is Treaſon, and the Second what is not Treaſon, but only Miſdemeanour; And that ſecond Branch of the Statute ſays, That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſly and adviſedly publiſh or affirm the King to be an Heretick, or a Papiſt; or that he endeavours to introduce Popery, or maliciouſly and adviſedly by Writing, Printing, Preaching or expreſly Speaking, publiſh, utter or declare any Words, Sentences, or other Things, to ſtir up the People to hatred, or diſlike of the King's Perſon, or the Eſtabliſhed Government; then he is diſabled to have or exerciſe any Place or Office, Civil or Military, and be liable to ſuch further Puniſhment as by the Common Laws or Statutes may be inflicted in ſuch Caſes: By which, I take it, the meaning to be Fine and Impriſonment, or bodily Puniſhment; But not the Puniſhment that is appointed to the Judgment of High-Treaſon, or loſs of Life or Member.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordſhip's Judgment whether this ſhall be permitted, that the Council ſhould enter into ſuch a Diſcourſe as this. The Queſtion (I take it) that your Lordſhip appointed to be Spoke to is, Whether this Indictment as to Form, be ſufficient for your Lordſhip to give Judgment upon: But Mr. Pollexfen is going into that which is a far greater Point; whether theſe Words abſtracted from all their Innuendo's are Treaſon, or no. My Lord, the Priſoner did not move that in Arreſt of Judgment; and whether your Lordſhip expects any ſuch thing ſhould be ſpoken unto, that was not moved or ſtirred by him, I muſt ſubmit it to you. The Jury found that theſe Words were ſpoken with an intent to depoſe the King. Whether that your Lordſhip will permit it to be argued whether ſuch Words are Treaſon in their own Nature, is of quite another Conſideration.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Mr. Attorney, Pray ſpare us. We come to ſhow that if in their Nature they import not Matter of Treaſon, then the Innuendo's cannot help them, ſo as to make Treaſon of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not underſtand that it was your Lordſhip's Pleaſure the Council ſhould have liberty to argue any ſuch thing as whether the Words be Treaſon, being found to be ſpoken with ſuch an Intention; but whether theſe Innuendos have ſufficiently been laid to maintain the Indictment in point of Form.

Mr. Pollexfen. If you leave out the Words Innuendo, then ſure we may ſpeak to the Words themſelves.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, either you miſtake Mr. Pollexfen, or I do: For I take it, that he is entring into the Conſideration of theſe Words, as they are laid in the Indictment; that are uncertainly laid, ſo as that they will not ſupport an Indictment of Treaſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, He is arguing that if they were ſpoken of the King, yet they would not be Treaſon.

L. C. J. Will he ſay ſo? I dare ſay he will not.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is arguing upon the Statute, what Words are Treaſon, tho' ſpoken of the King, and what not; which, I take it, is not the Queſtion now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We humbly offer it to your Lordſhip, whether it be according to your Lordſhip's Rule and Intention that he was to argue whether the Words were Treaſon; or only whether the Form of the Indictment, as to the Innuendos, was good and ſufficient.

L. C. J. Taking the Words to be ſufficiently ſet forth in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be ſpoken of the King, eſpecially the laſt Words; Do you think we would ſuffer that Queſtion to be debated, whether they were Treaſon or not? God forbid. I will not ſit here to hear that Queſtion at all ſo much as made or put, I'll aſſure you. I took him not to argue at all any thing that way.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me; I am going only to this; for I would not offer any thing beyond what is fit for me to offer, and for the Court to hear: But this we ſay, That the Words, the effective Words are not ſo ſufficiently laid in this Indictment, as to make them amount to Treaſon; I am only going to that.

L. C. J. Ay; That's the ſtinging Part of the Queſtion, and ſo I underſtood him before.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I only mention'd that of the Statute, that there were two ſorts of Words there taken notice of; to ſhew that I thought theſe Words were not within that Branch that is ſaid to be Treaſon.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Pollexfen. I will keep my ſelf to the firſt Clauſe of the Statute; for what I mean, is this, That if theſe Words come not within that firſt Branch which makes the Treaſon, then your Lordſhip cannot give Judgment upon this Indictment. For tho', my Lord, it may be theſe Words are extraordinarily ill; and being ſpoken or Preached, may have an ill ſenſe or meaning with them; yet I would obſerve to your Lordſhip, there are other Penalties and Puniſhments provided for ſome ſort of Words, than there are for others.

But then my Lord, let us conſider the Words of the firſt Branch of this Statute. If ſo be any Perſon does compaſs the Death, or bodily Reſtraint, or other harm to the King's Perſon, or to deprive the King, or levy War againſt the King, &c. And this compaſſing and imagination does expreſs by Printing, Writing, Preaching, or malicious and adviſed Speaking, they ſhall ſuffer Judgment of High-Treaſon. Now then, all that I would come to is this, that this ſame treaſonable Printing, Writing, Preaching or Speaking, muſt be of ſuch Words as ſhall intend the Death, bodily Hurt, Reſtraint or Impriſonment of the King's Perſon; or Levying of War.

My Lord, having ſaid this, the next thing is to come to the Words themſelves; and to take them as they are in themſelves without the Innuendo's; and ſee what the Natural Senſe of them will be: And we'll take them in the Natural Order as they are laid in the very Indictment, and found by the Jury.

The firſt Paſſage of them is quod Populus, &c. (meaning the People of England, the Subjects of our Lord the King) made a flocking to the King (meaning our ſaid Lord the King that now is) to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ſhould come, being Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Griefs of the People. Now, my Lord, with humble Submiſſion, it is plain that as to theſe Words, they have not in themſelves any tendency to Treaſon at all, whatſoever Reflection they may make upon the King; they are the Words of a Prieſt magnifying his own Office, and his Power with God Almighty; but they do not come up (I think) to this Crime, for which the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands accuſed.

Then the next Words that follow are theſe, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in ſimul, qui permiſerunt Romanam ſuperſtitionem intrare in eorum conſpectu, &c. and whom can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam. My Lord, theſe I do acknowledge are very wicked and bad Words, eſpecially if they muſt be apply'd as the Indictment has ſet them forth, to the late King and his preſent Majeſty: Yet theſe very Words (under favour) will not amount to the Charge of High-Treaſon. They deſerve very ſevere Puniſhment; but they ſeem not to come up to any thing of an Intention, or compaſſing, or deſigning the Death, bodily Hurt, or Impriſonment of the King; or the levying War againſt him. This I ſpeak, my Lord with Submiſſion, and I believe your Lordſhip may be of the ſame Mind.

But then, my Lord, the next Words that follow, are the Words (I ſuppoſe) that are rely'd upon to make out this Accuſation; Quod ſi ipſi ſtarent ad fundamentalia, ipſe non timebat, &c. That they ſhould overcome their Enemies as in former times, with Ram's horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. Theſe, my Lord, ſeem to be the Words in which the Crime conſiſts. Now, my Lord, if theſe Words in themſelves are ſo uncertain, or ſuch as do not tend or relate to the preſent King, or the preſent Government, to ſtir up Sedition or Rebellion againſt them; then they will not be Treaſon, becauſe they do not ſo relate.

Now, my Lord, theſe Words if you take them alone without the former Clauſe, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in ſimul &c cloſed with the Innuendo, that he meant the late King and this, I ſee not poſſibly how they can be ſaid to relate to the preſent King and Government to make them Treaſon within this Act. Which way can it be? if they would ſtand to their Principles, they ſhould overcome their Enemies: How can they be intended to be meant of the King, and his Loyal Subjects? Then let us conſider the Words that go afore, whether they will help any thing or no; habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in ſimul. Theſe Words of themſelves ſtript of the Innuendo, do not expreſs what two Kings are meant by them. If you take the Words ſtrictly, that We have had two Kings now together, in ſimul; as the Word ſignifies, it muſt be two Kings at one and the ſame time; But take it in the Engliſh Phraſe (as perhaps they would have it turned into Engliſh) We have had now two wicked Kings together (meaning the late bleſſed Martyr, and his now Majeſty) then it muſt be, we have had now two

Kings

Kings ſucceſſively; but it is a ſtrange thing to render ſuch Latin into ſuch Engliſh, which ſeems to be in the Nature of the Words themſelves, ſuch as will bear no ſuch Senſe or Conſtruction as that. And then the qui permiſerunt Romanam ſuperſtitionem intrare in eorum conſpectu; if the firſt words do not in themſelves expreſs what Kings were meant, theſe Words that follow can give no manner of Certainty to them at all: For here's not ſo much as any Innuendo; nor can the Words that follow them (qui aſſimilari poſſunt, &c. which can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam) in any ſort ſhew any certainty to whom the Words are to be apply'd, or illuſtrate whom the Speaker meant.

But now that which is the next Clauſe is the worſt Clauſe of all, Sed ſi ipſi ſtarent ad fundamentalia, &c. Ipſi in all ordinary Conſtruction of ſpeech in all Language, being coupled to the former Words, (and ſo I think the rule in the Grammar is, and will be read by any reaſonable Perſon that reads) muſt refer to the next Antecedent. And then who are they that are laſt ſpoken of? It muſt be the two wicked Kings, let them be who they will, that were meant by thoſe wicked Kings; for there is no other Perſon that does intervene as ſpoken of, to whom they ſhould be referr'd. The former Words are ſpoken in the firſt Perſon, and plural Number; we have had, ſpeaking in the Name of himſelf, and they that were his Auditors; and then to come with ipſi after he had mention'd two Kings who had ſuffered Popery to come in, and were to be liken'd to Jeroboam, changes the form of the whole Speech. It ſhould ſeem according as it is laid in the Indictment, to run thus; and then I deſire your Lordſhip to conſider the Senſe and Grammar of them; We had now two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come under their Noſes; we cannot compare them to any but wicked Jeroboam: And if they would ſtand to their Principles, then he did not doubt but they ſhould overcome their Enemies as in former times, &c. Why then if ipſi according to Grammar and ordinary reading, being a relative muſt refer to that which went laſt before, there is nothing in all the Sentence before, but, We, (that is he and the People that heard him;) and the two Kings that he ſpoke of; and the two Kings being laſt ſpoke of, it muſt in all Grammar I ſay and Senſe be underſtood of the Kings. Then let us ſee what Senſe we can make of it; We have had two wicked Kings that have permitted Popery under their Noſes, that they can be compar'd to none but wicked Jeroboam: and if they ſtand to their Principles he did not fear but they, (the Kings) ſhould overcome their Enemies. In all ordinary and fair Reckoning, I cannot ſee how they can mend it, but the Ipſi muſt refer to the Reges; and the Eorum fundamentalia, ipſorum Regum, if you take theſe Words as they do lye; and if they have any Senſe or Meaning at all in them, this is the proper and natural Senſe and Meaning of them.

For it is pretty hard to apply the Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges to the ipſi qui ſtarent ad fundamentalia. In all Probability he ſpoke it thus, (if it continued on in a Diſcourſe, which I can ſay nothing to, being only to ſpeak to the Words as they are laid in the Indictment;) and if we do but ſtand to our Principles; I do not doubt but we ſhall overcome our Enemies as formerly, &c. But ipſi is a Variation of the Perſon, and according to all Grammatical Conſtruction, we know how it muſt be expounded. The other ſeems to be the natural reading of the Words, but the Indictment has not purſued them; but has made them inſtead of that, to be quite Nonſence, ſuppoſing them to have been ſpoken as the Jury have found them.

But my Lord; if they do not well bear that Senſe which I think they ſhould properly and naturally bear, if they had been right laid; the Queſtion then is whether we can make theſe Words as they are laid, to bear any ſuch Senſe as the King's Council (by their Innuendos) have placed upon them; that is if they, (meaning his Auditors) ſhould ſtand to their Principles, then they ſhould overcome their Enemies (meaning the King and his Loyal Subjects). Truly my Lord, I cannot ſee how that can be, how Ipſi ſhould be me; I and mine Auditors ſhould ſtand to their Principles.

But ſetting that aſide, come we then to the main Words. He did not fear but they ſhould overcome their Enemies. The great force of theſe Words lye in the Word Enemies. What is meant by Enemies? For all the reſt without that, would not ſignify any great Matter, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, as I think: And therefore here comes the great Burden, and that which is the ſharp Sting of all this Indictment. And to make Enemies to ſignify the King and his Subjects, my Lord is a very wonderful Innuendo, as I believe ever was attempted to be made. So it ſeems to me with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip; the Word Enemies it ſelf is a Word of ſo large Comprehenſion that it reaches to a great part of the World. God knows Mankind is ſo very unhappy as that every one hath very many, and too many Enemies. Who is not an Enemy? A Man ſcarce knows; its well if he does. And this is a thing that's mighty hard, that ſo general a Word ſhould have ſo hainous a particular Application.

There then reſts the Burden of the Caſe; whether Inimicos ſhould ſignify the King and his Loyal Subjects. If in the natural Grammar, the former Words of Ipſi ſtarent ad fundamentalia, be, as I have ſhown, to be referr'd to the duos Reges as the laſt Antecedent, then it muſt mean that the duo Reges would overcome their Enemies; and then there is no hurt in all theſe Words; but whatſoever was ſpoken is very commendable and very allowable: But if you would take it otherwayes, I ſee not how it can be done without the greateſt Strain in the World of ſo general a Word, to make inimicos mean the King and his Subjects.

Now my Lord, let us ſee how they intend to help it out, and that is by theſe Innuendos. The Nature of an Innuendo hath been already open'd to your Lordſhip by Mr. Wallop. I ſhall not repeat any thing of that which was ſaid before; for that I cannot take to be any Service to the Priſoner at the Bar, to take up your Lordſhip's time in Repetitions. The Books have been cited, and Reaſon it ſelf will direct to that; for muſt not a Man be convicted by his own Words as well as puniſhed for them? It is not ſure the skill of the Clerk to put in an Innuendo (or of any one elſe) that ſhall be conſtrued to make my Words to have any other Senſe than I that ſpake them intended them in. If the words are not clear, why then they cannot affect the Auditory ſo as to have any evil Influence upon them them to incite them to Sedition or Rebellion; for ſenſible words muſt influence ſenſible Men: But words that are inſenſible can have no influence at all upon rational Creatures. Then ſhall an Innuendo make that an Offence, which without it, was not an Offence; eſpecially ſo great an Offence, as that of High-Treaſon? Surely not.

Beſides my Lord, all our Books are againſt making any ſuch Conſtruction. Roll's Abr. 1. Part 84. There is a whole Bead Roll of them to prove, that Innuendos will not help where the Words in themſelves have any Incertainty in them. The bare ſetting down the Words with Innuendos are not an Averrment ſufficient to maaintain an Action, or an Indictment. The Caſes there are indeed upon Actions of the Caſe for Words, which in reaſon are under the ſame Rule.

For my Lord, there are two Ways to apply words that are uncertain, to bring out the true Intent and Meaning of them, to whom they are to be apply'd; the one is by a Colloquium precedent; and where there is a Colloquium precedent of ſuch Matter as will lead in the Senſe of the words, which without it were not to be underſtood, there the laying that Colloquium makes the words come to be ſenſible; and there is this reaſon for it, whenever that's done, the Colloquium muſt come in Evidence and muſt be proved: But I never yet knew an Innuendo offer'd to be proved. Another Way is this, where words are laid in a Declaration with an Averment precedent to be ſpoken of ſuch a Perſon, then the words with an Innuendo after that Averment, ſhow ſufficiently what is meant by them. If ſo be ſcandalous words are ſpoken, as to ſay, Thy Landlord, your Brother, your Maſter, your Servant, your Son is a Thief, or the like: In theſe Caſes the words in themſelves do not expreſs the Man of whom the Scandal is raiſed, but they give ſuch a Denomination of the Man, that may by the Hearers be ſufficiently known. Why then in that Caſe, if in the Declaration it is averr'd that the Plaintiff was his Landlord, was his Brother, was his Maſter, was his Servant, was his Son, and that theſe words were ſpoken of him; and thereby it comes to be made apparent to the Court what is meant, and who is meant, that is well; and all that muſt be proved to the Court upon Evidence; or the Action cannot be maintain'd. By ſuch means as this, it is made plain and demonſtrable, that there can no Doubt remain, either with the Court or the Jury, to whom the Injury is done, and of whom the Scandal is utter'd. And theſe are the only two Ways that ever I could obſerve were allow'd to be ſufficient to maintain any ſuch Action; And there the Innuendo comes very properly in to aſſiſt the Averment, or the Colloquium.

But now my Lord, here in this Caſe, here's nothing of that kind but only a bare Innuendo, that ſuch and ſuch were meant, without either a Colloquium that there was a Diſcourſe concerning ſuch and ſuch Perſons; or an Averment that the words were ſpoken of the Perſons.

My Lord, I cannot tell what Precedents they will offer to your Lordſhip of former or later Times. We have had but a very little time to look into it; and have not that recourſe to the Precedents on the Crown's ſide, that the King's Council have. But my Lord, for Precedents that may have paſt ſub ſilentio, without having the Queſtion ſtir'd, I ſuppoſe will not be allowed by your Lordſhip and the Court as Precedents againſt us. But I think there will be no Inſtance given where ever any ſuch thing came in queſtion, that ever Judgment was given againſt the Defendant.

My Lord, this ſeems to be the ſenſe and nature of the words as they are laid in this Indictment, ſtript of the Innuendos; and your Lordſhip knows what a Caſe we have now before you. We are in the Caſe of the Life of a Man, which is much favour'd in Law; and if there be any doubt or uncertainty, your Lordſhip will lean rather towards the favourable Side; and if according to the Rules of Law, words to make Men Criminal ſhall not be ſtrained or forced beyond their plain, natural Meaning; ſure they ſhall not to make a Man capitally ſo: For the greater the Crime is, the greater Conſideration the Court will have to ſee that there be no ſtrain'd, forc'd Conſtructions to bring the Life of a Man in danger: And therefore I humbly pray that Judgment may be Arreſted.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am of Council in this Caſe for the King; and notwithſtanding any thing that has been ſaid, I do conceive, that there is High-Treaſon well alledg'd in this Indictment, of which the Priſoner is found guilty, againſt whom I muſt demand your Judgment. My Lord, there is a great difference in this Matter; that is, whether the words are Treaſon, as they were ſpoken by him; and whether or no this Treaſon, admitting it to be Treaſon, be well diſcloſed by this Indictment: For my Lord, I think to preach in a Publick Aſſembly, that we have had two wicked Kings together who have permitted Popery to come under their Noſes, and then to go on with it to Stand to their Principles (for ſo the words are laid in this Indictment) and they ſhould overcome their Enemies as in former times with Ram's-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling, is a very high Aggravation of ſuch words. And my Lord, if you remember the Evidence, as I doubt not you do, it was all ſpoken in a Publick Aſſembly, before 4 or 500 People; and they were ſpoken without any words intervening whatſoever. Theſe were the only words that were ſpoken relating to this Matter: So that theſe muſt carry their own pregnant Senſe with them, of exciting the People to ſtand to their Arms againſt the wicked Kings, or elſe they are of no Signification. And thus they are laid in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be ſpoken poſitively to ſtir up the People againſt the King, to depoſe him, and to raiſe Rebellion within the Kingdom. This I ſay, is poſitively affirmed, and laid down in the Indictment. But now whether or no theſe words are in point of Form ſo laid, that the Court muſt underſtand them with relation to the King and Government, and as an Argument to ſtir up the People, is the Queſtion: For if they be ſo, then they are well laid to ſupport this Conviction of Treaſon.

Now for that, my Lord, I would only firſt ſay, they muſt either import Treaſon in themſelves, or they do not. If they do import Treaſon in themſelves, no Addition of the Perſon concerning whom they were ſpoken (as that they were ſpoken of the King) will mend the

Caſe,

Caſe, or make it better. Tho' it be laid never ſo much to be ſpoken of the King, and that be never ſo much averr'd; yet if it be not ſpoken to diſturb the Government, or to raiſe Rebellion and Inſurrection, the adding a thouſand times that it was ſpoken de domino Rege would not avail. They confeſs they have no Precedents to produce; and I believe truly they have not: And ſo they only go by way of Argument, taken from Actions upon the Caſe for words: Whereas there is a great Diſparity in the Caſe between Actions of the Caſe for words, and Informations or Indictments for words that are Criminal or Capital; and I know if they will look into the Precedents that are in Print, in the Entries and in the Reports of Informations or Indictments, they will find it is never, or very ſeldom, or rarely done; it being look'd upon as to no Purpoſe, or as perfect Surpluſage, to lay that ſuch or ſuch a thing was ſpoken, de domino Rege, de Gubernatione. But in Criminal Caſes, and not Capital, it is commonly thus; of which there are Multitudes of Inſtances: That ſuch a one being of an ill Mind, to raiſe Commotion in the Kingdom, and ſtir up Sedition, ſpoke theſe and theſe words. This was the conſtant Form in your Lordſhips time, as your Lordſhip can remember, in the Informations that were, or the Indictments of Perſons that had ſpoken words relating to the Duke of York. I can remember when your Lordſhip us'd to ſay, Never conſult me, but follow the ancient Precedents, which I dare undertake to ſay are all thus; and ſo I ſhall ſhew by and by, it has been in Indictments of Treaſon: And tho' perhaps one or two might at any time be otherways drawn, (of which yet we can find none) yet, this hath been the conſtant Form for any thing that I can find; and it is of very great Conſequence to ſay at this time of Day, That what has for 100's of Years together been the conſtant Practice, and way of Indictments and Informations, is not good; it were to turn all things topſie turvie, and to make great confuſion in Proſecutions, and the Practice of the Law in Criminal Matters. I ſhall therefore ſhow your Lordſhip that here is ſuch a certainty as the Law does require, and as is uſually practiſed; and that the Words in themſelves are ſuch, that they muſt have relation to what we have laid down in the Indictment, and to nothing elſe.

But then they do lay down this for a Ground, which I think I may grant them very eaſily, and yet it will ſignifie nothing to what they mean; I would wipe off all theſe Innuendos, leave them out of the Caſe, for I never expect any help from them at all; and then I do agree that an Innuendo without a ſtrong, urgent Averment that the People which hear the words ſpoke, and the Court that are to paſs Judgment upon them ſhall ſay forcibly appears from the words themſelves, who was meant, and what was meant, will not ſupport the Indictment, nor has the Verdict fortify'd it at all.

But they tell you in Actions of the Caſe, if John-a-Stiles be called a Bankrupt; if he will bring an Action againſt the Party that ſpoke theſe words, he muſt aver, and affirm, that they were ſpoken de quærente, of that particular Perſon that doth bring the Action; and ſo it is, the Law is ſo, and the Reaſon's plain; becauſe there are many John-a-Stiles's perhaps, and the Plaintiff that brings the Action is but one; and therefore if he does not ſhow that the Diſcourſe was of that John a-Stiles who brings the Action, it is uncertain who was meant, and cannot be ſupported by a bare Innuendo. But I take it in theſe Caſes, wherever the precedent Averment is neceſſary, there muſt be a diſtinct Proof of that Averment; as if John-a-Stiles be called Bankrupt, (in the Caſe I mention'd) and he brings his Action and avers the Diſcourſe to be de Quærente; and he calls Witneſſes, who prove the words to be ſpoken, that the Defendant did ſay John-a Stiles was a Bankrupt; and the Court demands this Queſtion of the Witneſſes, but do you know what John-a-Stiles the Defendant meant? and he ſhall anſwer, no, we only heard the Party ſay John-a-Stiles is a Bankrupt: It is apparent that Evidence will not ſupport the Action; for that Averment muſt be proved, that he that brings the Action was intended, and that there was a Diſcourſe concerning him. There muſt be, I ſay, the Proof of the Averment to make up that certainty of the Application of the Words which the Law requires. And therefore in what Caſe ſoever it be, if the words be the only Proof, or if the words carry ſufficient in themſelves to ſhew of whom they were ſpoken, it is ridiculous to ſay there muſt be an Averment that they were of ſuch a one; becauſe Words cannot prove themſelves.

For my Lord, where ever words by ſtrong and pregnant Intendment do carry Slander, and of ſuch a particular Perſon, there the Books are expreſs that there needs no Averment, that they were ſpoken of ſuch a one; as in the Caſe of Fleetwood and Curle, Hob. 267. which is a Rule for all Caſes upon Actions of the Caſe for Words. Sir Miles Fleetwood being Receiver of the Court of Wards, brought an Action of the Caſe againſt Curle, for that he (having Speech with one Whorewood) did ſpeak of the Plaintiff theſe Words, Mr. Deceiver (Innuendo the Plaintiff) had deceived and couzened the King, &c. He did there alledge the Words to be ſpoken of the Plaintiff. In that Caſe, upon not Guilty pleaded, it was found for the Plaintiff; and it was moved in Arreſt of Judgment, that it did not appear by the Words ſpoken, that they were ſpoken of the Plaintiff: For Mr. Deceiver had no Propriety to that purpoſe; and the Innuendo would not make it certain; when it appeared to the Court that the words would bear no certainty, tho' he did alledge the words to be ſpoken of the Plaintiff in that Caſe; becauſe there may be many Deceivers or Receivers; and he muſt prove it particularly ſpoken of himſelf. But then the Book is expreſs, that after a Verdict, tho' he did not averr it was ſpoken of him in his Office, yet Judgment ſhould be given for the Plaintiff, becauſe there is a pregnant, violent, certain Senſe, that may lead the Court and Hearers to take it ſo to be meant, and cannot be other ways imagin'd; and therefore the Court will not imagine it. As if a Man ſpoke of an Attorny, that he is a Knave, and ſpoke not of his Practice; why then the Action won't lye: But if he be named an Attorny in the Declaration, and the Hearers knew him to be an Attorny; in that Caſe, it was rul'd not neceſſary to have any ſuch Averment; for the words themſelves did import it in the Original Caſe that it was ſpoken of him in his Office by the Word Deceiver; that having an Alluſion and Ironical reſemblance to the Name of his Office; fice; and in the other Caſe, becauſe the Hearers knew him to be an Attorney.

So my Lord, upon theſe Grounds, Judgments have gone in thoſe Caſes which they themſelves do ſo much rely upon; Actions for the Caſe for Words; wherever the Words import pregnantly ſuch a Senſe, there does not need ſuch an Averment. But I ſhall ſhew that in Informations and Indictments this cannot be neceſſary, and the Reaſon ſeems plain: For here as we have laid it, and as the Truth is, we all know it, there is but one King, and one Government; and when Words are laid to be ſpoken to excite Commotions, or Rebellions, or Inſurrections, they are but external Declarations of the Mind; the Treaſon that he is charg'd with, that is inward, it is the thoughts that are Treaſon. But it is true, the laying that alone, that he did ſo compaſs and imagine, without ſome outward Declaration, would not be good in an Indictment, any more than the outward Declaration without the inward Intention. But the Treaſon is, that he did imagine to raiſe Rebellion and War within the Kingdom, to ſtir up the People againſt the King, and to depoſe the King, and bring him to Death, and deprive him of his Crown and Dignity; and then goes the Indictment on, and ſays, to the end that he might effect this Treaſon, he ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words, which by that new Law (that Mr. Pollexfen mention'd) will amount to Treaſon in Speaking, as well as Writing. I ſay, it is poſitively charged in the Indictment, that he did thus and thus ſpeak to ſtir up the People to Rebellion and War againſt the King; and then come the Words. If indeed any collateral Words be ſpoken, which in their own Nature import not a Tendency to incite and ſtir up the People againſt the King, it would be naught with Innuendo's; and ſo it would be if there were twenty Averments. But I think that this is as ſtrong an Averment as can be (what we all know to be true) that there is but one King and one Government. And then he ſpoke the Words in a Publick Aſſembly, We have had ſo and ſo, and if they would do ſo and ſo; which carries forcibly and pregnantly this Senſe, that it cannot be intended to be ſpoken againſt any one elſe, but againſt the King and the Government; eſpecially now after the Verdict, when the Jury find that he did all this to raiſe up the People againſt the King. All the Diſcourſe is in it ſelf pregnantly and forcibly tending that Way.

My Lord, we are now upon the Form of the Indictment. Put the caſe there are many idle Expreſſions in it, as I may grant there are; yet if the greateſt part import Treaſon, Sedition, and Rebellion; and are laid to be done to incite the People to Rebellion; and ſo found by the Jury; then the Indictment is well laid, and Judgment muſt be given for the King. The firſt Words are highly derogatory to the King, and muſt be underſtood to be ſpoke of him. If the Priſoner had thought theſe Words would not have been Treaſon, if he had demurr'd in the Caſe, by that, as the Jury find it now here, he wou'd have confeſs'd it to have been ſpoken of the King; for it is ſaid he ſpoke it to the People, and he ſpoke it of the People of England; and to ſay that Populus may mean the King of France's People, as Mr. Wallop would have it, certainly no Man can think that: For when he ſpeaks in Engliſh, to an Engliſh Auditory in a Publick Aſſembly, That the People make a flocking to the King, how can that King mean the King of France? And how can the Word People, by any Intendment, but a very foreign and ſtrange one, be interpreted to mean that the French People ſhould come over hither for to be cured of the King's Evil, when (as he himſelf ſays) the French King claims ſuch a Power? No, That does fix it particularly upon our own King.

Pray let's conſider then, what poſſibly can the Intendment of theſe Words be that follow, We have had now two wicked Kings together? as for that Objection of the Word inſimul, that it means together at one time; that ſure can have very little in it; it being to be taken according to common Underſtanding in our Dialect; and in Engliſh to ſay we have had now two wicked Kings together; every one will underſtand it, we have had them one after another, becauſe we have but one King at a time.

And then, my Lord, if the latter Words were left out, with Submiſſion, I conceive upon the Authorities that are in our Books, theſe Words would have been Treaſon upon the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. For, my Lord, in a publick Aſſembly of People, which is an unlawful Aſſembly as this was, to ſpeak ſuch Words of the King would be Treaſon. For put the caſe he had collected a number of armed Men, at Hounſlow Heath, and there exhorted them to ſtand together; that the King was a wicked Prince, and had miſgovern'd himſelf in the Adminiſtration of the Government; I think that would be Treaſon within the Law. By the new Statute, to ſay the King is a Papiſt, plainly is a Præmunire; but to ſay the King is a wicked King, and has miſgovern'd himſelf in introducing Popery; that's a Step further than what the Act makes a Præmunire; for theſe are Words to ſtir up the People againſt the King, eſpecially preach'd in a publick Aſſembly.

Then, my Lord, you'll take all theſe Words together; firſt after he had drawn away that great Authority, and great Power that the God of Heaven hath given to the King in curing the King's Evil, and declar'd him to be a wicked Prince, by ſuffering Popery to come under his Noſe, and that he was to be compar'd to none but wicked Jeroboam: And then to exhort the People, to ſtand to their Principles, and he did not doubt, but they ſhould overcome their Enemies. What can be plainer Treaſon? For it is plain, that he did ſpeak to the People, to the Congregation; and that can never be underſtood otherways by the Court, nor by the Hearers. For that Interpretation, that the King ſhould overcome his Enemies; it is foreign and ridiculous; and not to be imagin'd by any body that has either Senſe or Reaſon about them.

But my Lord I ſhall leave all this (the Jury having now found it) to ſhew what Precedents we could prepare for your Lordſhip; how things of this Nature have been uſed to be drawn; For we have made for the little time we had, as good a Search as we can; and I have found ſeveral: And indeed, I cannot find one otherways, than as this is. And for late Informations, and Indictments, if you examine the Clerks that now are, they'll tell you, that there is not one otherways: But that if it be ſaid to be done with an intent to raiſe Rebellion or War againſt the King, or Sedition, or the like; and then ſay, he ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words, that is ſufficient.

But

But I will ſhew your Lordſhip ſome ancienter Precedents, ſome few which will ſhew how the Practice was heretofore.

The firſt is 3 H. 8. Rot. 17. in the Indictment againſt my Lord Grey, of High-Treaſon; after the general Charge of machinating the Deſtruction and Death of the King, and Subverſion of the Government; it is ſaid there, that Proditorie he did ſpeak theſe Words, 'That the King's Grace ſhould be driven out of the Realm, and the Prince's Grace ſhould never Succeed. And it is not averr'd that theſe Words were ſpoken of the King, and of the Prince; nor was there any need it ſhould be averr'd; for the Words plainly import they were ſpoken of them; and the laying it, that it was to raiſe Sedition within the Realm, was ſufficient to make them High-Treaſon.

Then the next is my Lord Cobham's Caſe, 2 Jac. Seſſione 1mâ; for it is one of the great Records that lye in the Cheſt, amongſt the Arcana. But by the Book in the Office, we have a Copy of it; but there is the Record in the Cheſt, and there it is, 'Poſteaque 12 die Junii, 'ultimo præterit. ac diverſis aliis diebus & vicibus, 'tam poſtea quam antea, dixerunt, &c. (for there are other Defendants) Proditorie 'there will be no good till the King (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King) 'and all his Cubs (meaning the Children of our ſaid Lord the King) 'were quite taken away, &c. I leave out the general Charge of the Machination and contriving of the Death of the King; but to the intent to effect that Treaſon, ſuch Words were ſpoken, without any Averment that they were ſpoken de Rege. There was no mention of the Progeny of the King before; or that the Cubbs that were ſpoken of, were the King's Children; neither would the Words Regalis Progenies, anſwer the Engliſh Word Cubbs; which was a Word abuſively mention'd by him. But in that Caſe it was held to be a good Indictment; and Sir Walter Rawleigh was condemn'd upon it.

Another is William's Caſe; and that's very like our Caſe in the firſt Part; that is, the firſt Words inſiſted upon are laid poſitively to be ſpoken of King James, by an Innuendo. Paſch. 17. Jac. Rot. 40. there after the Machinans & intendens &c. it is laid that he ſuch a Day of September, Proditorie deviſavit a treaſonable Book, call'd Balaam's Aſs; wherein there are ſuch and ſuch Paſſages apply'd to the King by the Innuendo. There is nothing ſaid of that, to be ſpoken of the King, de Rege; but the Words of the Book, carrying their own plain Senſe and meaning in them that they muſt be intended of the King and the Government; that was ſufficient to maintain the Indictment; and he was executed. The Innuendo's are not material. If it can have no other Senſe, that is enough to maintain the Indictment.

My Lord, In Fitzharris's Caſe, which your Lordſhip and all the Court remember; part of the Libel related to the Duke of York, by the Letters D. of Y. and ſometimes only call'd by the Letter Y; and the King himſelf by the Letters Ch. And the Innuendo is, Meaning our Sovereign Lord the King; and there is nothing averr'd in that Caſe, and indeed, there can be be nothing averr'd; for by the import of the Thing it muſt have that Senſe.

Colonel Sidney's Caſe, my Lord, you'll find to be the ſame: There's no Averment; but the Words of the Libel are brought in with an Innuendo.

And you have another Indictment at Salop, 31 Car. 2. One Pitt was Indicted of High-Treaſon, and convicted for theſe Words, 'If the King ſhould hang, or baniſh any of the Papiſts, his Throat ſhall be cut. This is laid in the ſame Form in the Indictment, as we have it here in our Caſe. If you pleaſe it may be read that he did adviſatè, proditorie, ſpeak ſuch and ſuch Words if the King (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King, without any previous Diſcourſe of the King, or ſaying it was ſpoken de Rege) ſhould hang or baniſh any of the Papiſts (quaſdam perſonas male diſpoſitas, &c. innuendo) his Throat ſhall be cut. He was convicted (I ſay) and I think was executed, tho' I cannot directly tell that: But this is the Record of his Conviction.

So I take it, it is (with Submiſſion) that the Precedents go all along, both in Criminals that are not Capitals, in Indictments and Informations; and alſo in Indictments for High-Treaſon. The charging the Words to be ſpoken to ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, without the help of any Averment whatſoever, is ſufficient; that is a ſtrong Implication that they are ſpoken of the King and Government.

And my Lord, as to theſe Words they could not be laid otherways, than they are in this Indictment; for this is all that the Perſons that are the Witneſſes ſwore was Spoken. Your Lordſhip remembers it, it was ſo when they were here, they could ſwear no more. So that to have averr'd that he ſpoke to them de Rege & Gubernatione, would have put a proof upon us that our Witneſſes would not have come up to. We muſt have prov'd a Diſcourſe of the King and Government, and a Swearing of the Words would not have been a Proof of that. The Jury has found that this was done to ſtir up Sedition and to levy War; therefore I conceive according to the conſtant courſe of the Precedents, there is no need of any Averment; but the Words are well laid and well prov'd; and he well convicted.

To ſay that Enemies is a very general Word, and that we have Enemies of all ſorts, and that therefore a bare Innuendo cannot make it mean one more than another, is odd in this Caſe: For I would fain have any Man aſſign me what ſort of Enemies he could be thought to mean in ſuch a Diſcourſe; he could not mean Spiritual Enemies; becauſe the Inſtruments that they were to be deſtroy'd with, were carnal Weapons, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling. Theſe are not fit for overcoming Spiritual Enemies; but they muſt be ſuch Enemies as can be deſtroy'd by ſuch Inſtruments; Carnal Enemies, that are to be vanquiſh'd by outward Force. And then what Enemies can ſuch a publick, unlawful Aſſembly have but the Government? All that are of their own Side and Party, are none of their Enemies. And it cannot be taken diſtributively, that every particular Man has his Enemy, that's a foreign Underſtanding: But when he ſpoke to the Congregation in a Conventicle, that they ſhould overcome their Enemies, being ſo unlawfully aſſembled, that muſt be the Government. And had he not told you before who were the Enemies that he plainly meant? He had ſaid that the King was a wicked Man; and ccording as he repreſented him, an Enemy to God and Man by introducing Popery into the Kingdom. And you are to conſider the Time when, and the Place where theſe Words were ſpoken. We know that in theſe Conventicles, it has been the conſtant Cry, that we ſhould be all over-run with Popery, and the like: And therefore that is conſiderable in the Caſe.

My Lord, I make a great Difference between Words ſpoken in private, and Words ſpoken in a great and large Aſſembly. It is the ſame Thing as if it had been ſpoken at the Head of an Army; eſpecially when People meet contrary to the Laws of the Land in Defiance of the Government; and gather together in ſuch great Multitudes; and have ſuch Diſcourſes and Opinions broach'd amongſt them. I cannot ſee truly how it is poſſible to have been better laid, being Sworn directly as it is laid; and eſpecially being found to be all ſpoken to diſturb the Government, and to raiſe Sedition and Rebellion. Therefore I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip; and pray your Judgment againſt the Priſoner for the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg leave to add one Word on the ſame Side. That which I ſhall apply my ſelf to, is to ſhew that this is a very good Indictment, in the Form of the Indictment, and that upon this Matter which the Priſoner is proceeded againſt; for it could not be better.

My Lord, the Fact charged upon the Priſoner is as Mr. Attorney has open'd. Theſe Words were ſpoken in a Conventicle, The People make a flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. Theſe are the Words upon which the Priſoner was committed: Theſe are the Words upon which he is proceeded againſt; and Theſe are the Words which have been found againſt him. And, my Lord, more Words than theſe are not alledg'd to be ſpoken by the Priſoner, nor proved to be ſpoken by him at his Tryal upon this Indictment. Therefore if theſe Words are High-Treaſon, this is a good Indictment in Subſtance, if it prove ſo too in Form. And whether theſe Words are not themſelves Treaſon, I ſhall not now ſpeak, but ſhall only go to ſhew (as I ſaid) that it is a good Indictment in Point of Form. For theſe Words are his Crime, as ſpoken in that Conventicle; and the only Crime of which he was accus'd, and of which he is found guilty.

Now, my Lord, let us ſee how the Indictment is. He is charged with compaſſing, imagining, and intending to raiſe Rebellion, and levy War in the Kingdom; and to depoſe the King; and to bring the King to Deſtruction: That is the Charge of High-Treaſon, in the Kind of it. Now, as that is the Charge, it is of abſolute Neceſſity to alledge an Overt-Act, which muſt be proved too; and, if there be not an Overt-Act, the Indictment is naught. Well then, the Treaſon is compaſſing the Death of the King, and intending to raiſe Sedition, and levy War. What is the Overt-Act charg'd upon him? Why, to bring ſuch his wicked Purpoſes to paſs, he did traiterouſly ſpeak, publiſh and utter [the Words of the Act of Parliament in 13 Car. 2.] in an unlawful Aſſembly, in the Preſence of divers of the Kings Subjects, theſe Words that I repeated before to your Lordſhip.

Now, my Lord, I ask; Are theſe Words Treaſon in themſelves, or are they not? If they are Treaſon of themſelves; then the Indictment is certainly good in Form, without ſaying, that he ſpoke the Words of the King, or of the People of England, Subjects of the King. For either they do import that of themſelves, or they do not. If they do import it of themſelves, the ſaying that he did ſpeak them of the King, and of the People, would have been impertinent and idle; becauſe it is a thing manifeſtly plain of it ſelf. If they do not import this of themſelves; then had it been charged that they were ſpoken of the King and of the People, this muſt have been proved.

To go on then, my Lord: If it muſt have been proved; it muſt have been proved either by the Words themſelves, or by ſomething elſe. If it were to be proved by the Words themſelves; why then it returns to the old Queſtion, and we need not alledge it. If it were to be proved by ſomething elſe; then the Fault is not in the Indictment, but it muſt be want of other Matter than what our Witneſſes would prove; which, I am ſure, would have been a very great Fault in us to have drawn upon our ſelves. But if the Words import of themſelves the Meaning to be of the King, and of the People of England; then it is plain they make the Treaſon of themſelves, and there requires no Averment.

As now, for Inſtance, (my Lord) to change the Words a little, to illuſtrate the Caſe; as ſuppoſe it had been charged in the Indictment, that to bring his wicked Purpoſes forth to effect, he did ſpeak theſe Words in ſuch an Aſſembly, Procure to your ſelves Arms, and make your ſelves ready by ſuch a Day, and go to Whitehall and kill the King; Would any Man have ſaid here, that it was neceſſary that we ſhould ſay in the Indictment that he dixit de Populo, vel de Rege, ſo and ſo; No certainly, it is not neceſſary, becauſe the Words plainly import their own Meeting.

So here in this Caſe; if the Words themſelves neceſſarily import to be ſpoken of the King, it is as impertinent here to ſay dixit de Rege, dixit de Populo, as in that Caſe; becauſe it is no more than what they neceſſarily and naturally import of themſelves: Which ſhews that this Averment that they would have, is abſolutely immaterial; and, if it had been charg'd, would have requir'd ſome other Proof than the Words themſelves. And ſo the Fault cannot be, as they would alledge, in the Form of the Indictment; but in the Subſtance of the Words, that they do not import in themſelves ſuch a Meaning. And therefore, I think (with Submiſſion) I have maintain'd the Form of this Indictment, beyond all Contradiction; and, notwithſtanding all their Objections, it is a very good Form without the Words, dixit de Rege, vel de Populo.

As Mr. Attorney ſaid, it is neceſſary (my Lord) in Actions on the Caſe for Slander, to aver, dixit de quærente, becauſe he muſt aſcertain the Perſon of whom the Words are ſpoken, to be the very Plaintiff; for there may be divers of the ſame Name: And you muſt always, upon a Record, aſcertain the Perſon, to entitle the Plaintiff to the Action: But where Words are pregnant, and full of themſelves, there needs no Averment in ſuch a Caſe; which, without without ſuch Pregnancy; would be neceſſary, and if not done the Action would fail. As in that Caſe that was cited by Mr. Attorney of Sir Miles Fleetwood; if it had been that the Words were, Sir Miles Fleetwood has deceived the King, it would not have born an Action, unleſs it had been averr'd to have been ſpoken of him as of couzening the King in his Office: Becauſe generally to ſay a Man has couzen'd the King will not bear an Action, it is ſo looſe. But when he ſays Mr. Deceiver; the Ironicalneſs of that ſhall not excuſe him, but rather demonſtrate both who and what he meant; that it ſhall be apply'd to him as doing it in his Office. And, being ſo, it muſt neceſſarily be underſtood to be a very great Slander, and then it needs no Averment. So ſays the Book.

So that where Words are plain and full, even in an Action on the Caſe, there requires no Averment: But in Indictments, they being for Offences againſt the Government, the very ancient Forms uſed will govern the Caſe; as well as the Reaſon and Nature of the thing; that no one can be meant, by ſuch ſort of Words, but the King and the Government: And for that I rely upon the Precedents that have been cited, that the Forms were always thus. The Precedents (with humble Submiſſion) where the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment is by Words ſpoken, that it is ſaid, dixit de Domino Rege, &c. there is not one that does ever carry it ſo, but the Forms are conſtantly in the ſame Manner with this that is now before your Lordſhip, without ſuch Averment, as carrying plain Surpluſage, to averr that which the Words neceſſarily import.

To ſay, my Lord, in this Caſe (as we hear it objected on the other Side,) That theſe Forms paſs'd ſub Silentio, and no ſuch Objection was ever made: I ſay that is no Objection to our Indictment; for the Argument ſure turns the other way; becauſe the Forms have been conſtantly in this Manner that ours is, therefore it is aſſign'd that what they offer is no Objection at all; for, doubtleſs, in ſo long a tract of time, when ſo many learned Men ſate on the Bench; and ſo many learned of the King's Council attended the King's Courts, and ſo many Perſons have been indicted, try'd, and ſuffer'd upon ſuch Indictments, who would have ſaved their Lives (no doubt) if they could, by making ſuch Advantage of ſuch an Exception; that is a ſtrong Argument that it was never thought an Exception. So that, beſides the Reaſon of the thing, the Precedents are all with us, which hath always been accounted a good Argument.

My Lord, a great many of us remember the Indictments of latter Times; particularly that of Colonel Sidney: Tho' there is another Overt-Act laid in that Indictment too, yet that is nothing to this Caſe. If there be but one Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, it muſt be proved by two Witneſſes; but if there be ſeveral Overt-acts laid in the Indictment, and one is proved by one Witneſs, and the other by another Witneſs, that is ſufficient to maintain the Indictment. In Mr. Sidney's Caſe there was to one Fact but one Witneſs; and therefore it was neceſſary to lay another Overt-Act, which was proved by other Witneſſes. And one Overt-Act comes to this point that's now in Queſtion before your Lordſhip. It is in this Form directly, without any Averment that the Words were ſpoke or written de Rege or de Regimine; but that the Book contain'd ſo and ſo: And the Thing it ſelf ſpeaks it ſelf of whom it was meant. If therefore the Words in that Caſe, being proved, were neceſſarily to be apply'd to the Government of England, there need no Averment: No more does there here.

My Lord, not to trouble your Lordſhip further in ſo plain a Caſe; the Precedents being thus, and it being known to be the conſtant Practice in point of Form; I would fain know what they would have had us done. The Witneſſes ſwear theſe are the Words, and there are no more; how then can we frame a better Indictment than upon the Words that they ſwear were ſpoken? My Lord, we pray your Judgment for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done on both Sides?

Mr. Attorny. Yes, my Lord,

L. C. J. Truly for my part, I think this is a Caſe of great Conſequence on the one ſide; and on the other. I hear it's ſaid there are abundance of Precedents in the Caſe; ſome have been mention'd; and it is neceſſary we ſhould look upon theſe Precedents before we deliver any abſolute Opinion. But truly I muſt ſay, Mr. Attorney's Precedents have with me very little weight. And I muſt differ from Mr. Attorny in another Thing: For if in Caſe the laſt Words were out of the Caſe, of ſtanding to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies, Do you think, that becauſe it is ſaid in the fore part of the Indictment, that he intended the Death of the King, and to raiſe Rebellion, and therefore ſaid, there were two wicked Kings who ſuffer'd Popery under their Noſes, and were to be liken'd to Jeroboam; that that would be a good Indictment for High Treaſon? Then it were plain the Act of Parliament, 13 Car. 2. was made to no Purpoſe. For tho' I doubt not in the leaſt, words may be an Overt-Act of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King, upon the Stat. of 25 Ed. 3. I make no difficulty in the World of that: So was my Lord Cobham's Caſe; and ſo were the Caſes in Harry the Eighth's Time, 'We will drive the King out of England, or any thing of that Nature: I ſay that would be an Overt-Act ſufficient to bring a Man within the Compaſs of the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. becauſe thoſe are expreſs words tending to the death and deſtruction of the King, the depoſing him and depriving him; and they call him the King. But if a Man comes and ſays, That ſuch a one with a Purpoſe and Intent to deſtroy the King, ſaid theſe words, That the King could not cure the King's Evil; that's not ſuch an Overt Act, as to make good an Indictment of High Treaſon. And to ſay that the King introduces Popery under his Noſe into the Kingdom; why it's a very high Crime; but it is preſcribed by the Act of Parliament to be proſecuted only as a Miſdemeanour, and puniſhed by Præmunire. If you look into that Statute, you will find which way the words ſhall have a Tendency that are to convict a Man of Treaſon; that is, that tend to the Impriſonment, bodily harm, death or deſtruction of the King; or raiſing Inſurrection and Rebellion; or levying War within the Kingdom, that is High Treaſon. But words that do not neceſſarily tend to any ſuch thing; as to ſay the King is a Papiſt, introduces Popery, is Popiſhly affected; Phraſes that ſome People delight in; that has a peculiar Puniſhment appointed to it by this Act. And this is all taken care of, to ſhew the Judges how they ſhould proceed, being careful of leaving it looſe in ſo great a Caſe as High Treaſon. And the Parliament ſeems to be the more careful in it; becauſe they make the treaſonable words ſuch an Offence during the King's Life only. Now as Mr. Sollicitor puts the Caſe by way of Illuſtration in other words; I make no difficulty, but to bid Men prepare Arms, and go to White-hall, and kill the King, would be rank down right Treaſon. Would any Man in the World doubt to averr, that that were an Overt Act? No Man living would. But if I will ſay, that to compaſs and imagine the King's Death, he bid them riſe up and go to White-hall and they ſhould overcome their Enemies, does that import the King? There's no neceſſity of that. The King cannot be ſaid to be an Enemy, unleſs it be plainly declar'd by the Party himſelf who he meant. And then to ſay, how could it be made better? No doubt of it, it might eaſily be made better if it had been conſider'd of. For if you had come and averr'd, that theſe Words were ſpoken concerning the King, and the People of England, cetainly it would have made it more certain. I don't bind my ſelf now in my Opinion, by what I now tell you; but I am only breaking the matter. If you had ſaid, that he ſaid, if we will ſtand to our Principles, we ſhall deſtroy them, I think it had made the Caſe ſtronger ten times; but you have not ſo done. Indeed I am not ſo fond in my Imagination as the Council for the Priſoner ſeem to be; That we have had two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come under their Noſes; that therefore we muſt run it up to King Ethelbert, and I don't know who; no, that plainly in common Engliſh ſpeaking, means two Kings ſucceſſively; and it muſt be made a ſtrange, forc'd Conſtruction, if we ſhould interpret it that he did not ſpeak theſe Words of the late bleſſed Martyr and his preſent Majeſty. And becauſe Enemies is in the Plural Number therefore to make it Nonſenſe, becauſe one is deſtroy'd, (if the words had been well laid as they might) therefore it could have no relation to him that was left, (I ſay) would make a ſtrange forc'd Conſtruction. That might be well enough if the words had been properly laid. But when you come to ſpeak of Enemies, innuendo the King and his Subjects; how can that poſſibly be? For you had talk'd of no body before that they are ſaid to have a Diſpleaſure to; and therefore without ſaying that the King is an Enemy to ſay, Stand to your Principles, and you ſhall deſtroy your Enemies, Innuendo, The King, is I doubt to ſtretch it a little too far. But whereas I have put the words how I think they ſhould have been laid; ſays Mr. Sollicitor the Truth is, they were not ſo ſpoken as you would have them laid; but they are laid as they were ſpoken, and as they were ſworn; and that's a Point of Fact to be left to the Jury, whether they aim'd at the King and Government, or not. Do you think that an Anſwer? for it would be the ſame Argument in an Action of the Caſe for Words? Where it's plain it muſt be dixit de quærente, you do ſo, and ſo. My Declaration muſt averr it, and I muſt prove it too. If I do not ſay it, tho' I prove it, that won't maintain the Action; if I do ſay it, and not prove it, it will not maintain the Declaration; all's naught: and what is there more in this Caſe? If you had ſaid it, that would have directed the Jury plainly upon finding the words as laid in the Indictment, to have found what was the Intention of the Party by theſe Words. Theſe are things (I muſt confeſs) that wonderfully weigh with me. It is in a Caſe of a capital Offence, where the Life of a Man is concern'd. If the Precedents have all gone ſo, there is ſome weight in that: But if the Precedents be only ſuch as you have ſpoken of, Words directly telling who is meant; they have no manner of likeneſs to the words in this Indictment; becauſe there they could never import any thing elſe.

In the next place, I am ſtumbled at another thing, Mr. Attorny; and that is, the difference of the Perſons in one part of the Words, and t'other. You have begun in the firſt Perſon Plural; We have had two wicked Kings together; and as the Latin Words are, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in ſimul; but afterwards you ſay, and if they, Ipſi, will ſtand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they ſhould overcome their Enemies. It had been beſt to have laid them, as (certainly in common underſtanding) they muſt be believed to be ſpoken; if you or we, will ſtand to our Principles; and then the very Innuendo would have been more ſenſible and applicable.

Mr. Soll. Gen. But my Lord, it was ſworn ſo by the Witneſſes, that he ſaid, if they.

L. C. J. The words ſay he preached, We have had, that is he, and the Congregation aſſembled; and then it is afterwards turn'd to they. I make no difficulty in the World, but that we have had two wicked Kings together, was intended of the late King and this; and if it had been alledg'd, That afterwards he had ſaid, We ſhall overcome them, and a Jury had found that theſe words were ſpoken with ſuch an Intention as is laid in the Indictment, it would have been Treaſon. But both in Grammar and Reaſon, when you come to ſay, and ſi ipſi, &c. Pray to whom ſhould that relate? What's the Engliſh of ipſi? Is it we or they? If it be they, in the third Perſon, there are no third Perſons ſpoken of, but the two Kings; and they are the laſt Antecedent. For my part, it does ſtumble me, it is a thing of great Conſideration. I ſpeak not, as I ſaid, to bind my ſelf in Opinion; but I think if ye had put the words Nos inſtead of Ipſi, it had come nearer to the Underſtanding of Men, both in Grammar and Senſe. For I exclude my ſelf, and them I ſpeak to, if I put it in the third Perſon; and your Innuendo (I ſaid) can no way help it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not think, that that did reſt upon your Lordſhip at all as any Objection.

L. C. J. It does reſt, I aſſure you, Mr. Attorny.

Mr. Sol. Gen If we had done otherways, we ſhould not have laid it as the Truth is; and the Latin does not alter the Caſe; for the word ſpoken was they.

L. C. J. Ay; but certainly he ſaid (no doubt) You or We; if you will ſtand to your Principles; it's Nonſenſe elſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I take that to be well enough; for here are three Sentences. The firſt is, That the People make a flocking to the King, &c.

Quod

Quod Populus, &c. The next is, Quod nos habuimus &c. And then the third is, Quod ſi ipſi. Now Quod governs the particular Sentence; and it being a particular Sentence by it ſelf (with humble Submiſſion) it is good in Grammar and in Senſe too.

L. C. J. Suppoſe you were to ſpeak it in Engliſh. Mr. Sollicitor, ſuppoſe you were to ſpeak it, Now we have had two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come in under their Noſes, (meaning the late King and this) there perhaps the Innuendo is ſenſible, and no doubt of it, then he muſt mean them: But to ſay, If they will ſtand to their Principles, they ſhall overcome their Enemies; Pray to whom does that they relate?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, with humble Submiſſion, you put the Caſe of an entire Speech, made in the Perſon of the Preacher and the Congregation; and as the Words were ſpoken all at one time. I would make it an entire Speech too; but it ſeems to be ſeveral Sentences, and therefore that differs the Caſe. For taking it that theſe are three diſtinct Sentences, they might be ſpoken in a ſeveral manner by varying the Perſon, and ſo they were Sworn. And ſuppoſe he had only ſpoke the laſt Words; an Indictment for this in the third Perſon had been a good Indictment: And if it had been charged in that Caſe Quod dixit & aſſeruit quod ſi ipſi, &c. and then in Evidence come and prove theſe Words; would not that have been good?

L. C. J. Truly, I think, Mr. Sollicitor, if the Indictment for theſe laſt Words alone, had been in the third Perſon, it is a Queſtion whether that might have been a good Indictment, if you had come in Evidence, and proved, that he had ſaid of the King and Government, If you will ſtand to your Principles, you ſhall overcome your Enemies. Though I deliver no abſolute Opinion of that; becauſe there ought (I think) to have been an Averment, that they were ſpoken of the King and the People.

Mr. Soll. Gen. In an entire Speech, (my Lord) there the Relative muſt be apply'd to the laſt Antecedent, according to Grammar.

L. C. J. And I think it muſt be taken to be an entire Speech; and you lay it in the Indictment to be ſo; and then the Relative muſt go to the laſt Antecedent; or elſe Dr. Busby (that ſo long rul'd in Weſtminſter School) taught me quite wrong; and who had try'd moſt of the Grammars extant; and uſed to lay down that as a poſitive Rule in Grammar, that the Relative muſt refer to the next Antecedent.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Sollicitor, If you make it ſeveral Speeches, then it's ten times worſe; for then the latter Part is ſo uncertain without an Averment of whom the Words were ſpoken, that ſure it can never be made good.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppoſe it had been Ulterius dixit; would that have made it a diſtinct Sentence? If it would, our Proof it may be was, that it was an entire Speech; but yet conſiſting of ſeveral Sentences, and muſt have the common underſtanding as to their relation one to another.

Mr. Att. Gen This Objection of quod ipſi &c. was not moved by the Priſoner at the Bar; and therefore we did not expect to ſpeak to it.

L. C. J. It is ſtarted here now by the Council. And it is a Queſtion truly with me, whether this can be any way ſenſibly apply'd, as you would have it. Surely the Innuendo can never make it good.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I ſay fling all the Innuendo's out of Doors; the Words in themſelves will do it.

L. C. J. Why then we muſt ſee whether it be a good Indictment in point of Form, or rather in Point of Subſtance, as you have laid theſe Words; without ſaying they were ſpoken de Rege. It is a Queſtion of great Weight and Concernment, both to the King and to the Priſoner; and therefore we muſt take good time to conſider of it before we deliver a ſettled Opinion. But, Mr. Sollicitor, you very well remember that Staley's Caſe was otherways. For, tho' the Words were, the King of England is a Tyrant, &c. yet there it is ſaid, and expreſly averr'd that he ſpoke the Words de Rege.

Mr. Att. Gen. Could Colonel Sidney have moved in Arreſt of Judgment, this that the Priſoner now ſtarts? No, he could not ſure. He might have moved for a new Tryal——

L. C. J. Certainly (Mr. Attorney General) that Caſe comes not up to this. Where the Words import in themſelves that the King is meant; or any way circumſtantially; it does neceſſarily imply they could be meant of no one elſe; and that would be good without the Averment: Which was the Caſe of Colonel Sidney, where the Matter declar'd in the Libel was plainly down-right relating to the Government, that if he did ſo and ſo he muſt renounce his Crown, and the like. How can that be apply'd to any but the King? The People of England have committed the Kingdom to his Power, &c. Why, how can it be interpreted that any Body elſe is meant?

Mr. Att. Gen. When will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give Judgment?

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will conſider of it. It is uſual, in Caſes of leſs Difficulty than this, to take time of Conſideration. I do not ſay, but that looking upon the Precedents perhaps I may alter my Opinion; and therefore do not ſpeak this to bind my ſelf: But we will conſider of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I look upon it that the Government is greatly concern'd in this Matter; more than ten ſuch as the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. C. J. It is true (Mr. Attorney) the Government is greatly concern'd; and the Priſoner is greatly concern'd, for his All is at Stake. I do ſay a good Indictment might have been made, I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the beſt we could make; for we had no Proof to make out any Averment, becauſe theſe were all the Words he ſaid.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Jury have found the Words as laid in the Indictment, was it ever ask'd of a Jury; Theſe Words were ſpoken of the King, or they were not; but you have not ſaid that they are ſpoken of the King, for it is not laid in the Indictment? Would that ever vitiate the Verdict?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, Pray, would you have us give Judgment, That the Jury could not find that the Words were ſpoken of the King?

Mr. Pollexfen. The Jury have not found that that they were ſpoken of the King; for there is no ſuch thing averr'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor they have not found them to be not ſpoken of the King: But they have found them to be ſpoken to ſtir up Sedition.

Mr. Sollicitor. We are never bound by Law to aver that that we cannot prove. And therefore I put all upon that Dilemma: Either the Words im-import of themſelves to be ſpoken of the King, or they do not. If they do not; if we had ſaid, dixit de Domino Rege, it muſt have been proved; and that would have been to have left it to the Jury whom he did mean. And if they be not ſelf-evident, God forbid the Jury ſhould be charged to find out ſuch a Meaning; but if they are ſelf-evident, they need no Averment.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Truly, we think it may be good Evidence to a Jury; and it is every Day done in Caſes of Actions for Words. It is left to the Jury to conſider whether he meant the Plaintiff, John a-Stiles, or any other: And the Evidence is help'd by this or that Circumſtance, where the Words do not naturally import it.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. I do think that the Averment that theſe Words were ſpoken of the King, is a Point of Fact that ought to be averr'd, and proved. Might not the Jury, in this Caſe, have found that they were not ſpoken of the King? If they had found that, why, they would have acquitted him; if they had found they were, and you had not alledg'd it, why then they had found more than the Indictment would lead them to.

L. C. J. Well, this is only by way of Diſcourſe; not that we bind our ſelves by our preſent Opinion We muſt look upon it. We will not give our Judgment ſuddenly in a Caſe of this Nature.

Mr. North. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me one Word?

L. C. J. Ay, Sir; let every Man be heard, in God's Name.

Mr. North. My Lord, as to this Objection; quod ipſi relates to the two wicked Kings ſpoken of juſt before; that cannot be: For you take Notice that theſe Words of the two wicked Kings relate to the late King, and to the preſent, as the Indictment ſays. One of the Kings is dead; ſo that you cannot underſtand it to be of the two Kings, that ſhould overcome their Enemies; and therefore it muſt be the People. This Populus being a Noun of Multitude, and taken in the Plural Number, Ipſi will very well relate to it.

L. C. J. Mr. North, The Argument turns both Ways upon that; and certainly he did not expreſs himſelf after that rate. It is ſo looſe a hung-together Indictment as truly I have ſcarce ſeen. For my Part, I would know how it come to paſs, that we ſhould not have as much Certainty in Indictments, as we have in Actions upon the Caſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, there muſt be Certainty in all Caſes; and we think there is Certainty enough in this for your Lordſhip to give Judgment upon.

Lord Ch. Juſt. Mr. Attorney, I believe if you ſate in our Places you would not think ſo. All our Books require greater Certainties in Indictments than in Actions on the Caſe: Nay, in Cauſes of this Nature, we are bound, by our Law-Books, to be of Council for the Priſoner; which we are not in Civil Cauſes, where the Priſoner may chuſe his own Council. And we have not one Act of Parliament to help the defect of forming Indictments, as we have in Civil Actions; but ſtill in all the Statutes made in Feofeils, there is an Exception of capital Offences, to ſhew that our Anceſtors would not help Uncertainties or Inſufficiencies in Form, where the Life of a Man was concern'd. This ſeems to carry a great Conſideration with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I was very willing and deſirous your Lordſhip ſhould aſſign the Priſoner this Learned Council; becauſe we did ſuppoſe they would have produced ſome Precedents of a better Form than this: But they have cited none.

L. C. J. And you have cited never ſuch a Caſe as this Mr. Attorney. And if we can find no other like Caſe, we muſt be govern'd by the Reaſon of the thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we hope you will expedite it, for the ſake of the Government.

L. C. J. Certainly, I think, it is very uncertain who are meant by Enemies; it may be Mr. Sollicitor; Mr. Attorney; it may be the Court; no Body knows who it is: For every Body knows, that to Preachers in Conventicles, and to thoſe that meet there, the Judges, and all that are for the Support of the Laws, may be reckon'd to them as Enemies. But when it is ſo uncertain who are meant, how can we ſupply it by ſuch an Innuendo? That there might have been a good Indictment fram'd upon ſuch Words as theſe, as he in all Probability ſpoke them; and he juſtly found guilty, is no Queſtion with me at all. And (as I ſaid the other Day, for the ſake of the Auditory) if he be guilty of ſpeaking ſuch Words, and of Treaſon in ſpeaking them; what will they be guilty of that were preſent, and heard the Words ſpoken? They may thank God that we have a gracious King, that does not take all the Advantages the Law gives him againſt thoſe that break his Laws.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to mention Staley's Caſe to me. As I do remember it, it is not as your Lordſhip ſays: But it is, That he, to perfect his wicked Treaſon, (ſpeaking of the King) ſaid ſo and ſo. Now, if an Averment be neceſſary, this is a naughty Averment; for it is not poſitively averr'd that he did ſpeak of the King.

L. C. J. Well, we will look upon it. And I would ask you, Mr. Sollicitor, Whether if he ſaid, (as it is moſt likely he did,) If you will ſtand to your Principles; and you put it in ſi Ipſi, whether that would be good?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we put it in as the Witneſſes ſwore it.

L. C. J. They did ſwear the Words according to their Apprehenſion; but, no doubt of it, in common Form he muſt ſpeak them as I ſay.

Mr. Att. Gen. They ſwore the Words ſo; and we could lay them no otherways.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney, will you move any thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then we will conſider of it. And take you back the Priſoner; and you ſhall have a Rule of Court to bring him, when the Court is ready for Judgment.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to the King's-Bench; and no Judgment was given that Term: But the next Term Mr. Roſewell pleaded the King's Pardon at the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench; and was Diſcharged.

A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL'S Innocency. To which are prefix'd two Letters upon the Subject of his Lordship's Tryal. By Sir ROBERT ATKYNS, Knight of the Bath.

[N. B. This should have been printed before The Magistracy and Government of England vindicated, pag. 174.]

First LETTER concerning my Lord RUSSEL'S TRYAL.

'SIR,

'I AM not without the Apprehensions of Danger that may arise by advising in, or so much as discoursing of Publick Affairs; yet no fear of Danger shall hinder me from performing that Duty we owe to one another, to counsel those that need our Advice, how to make their just Defence when they are called in question for their Lives; especially if they are Persons that have by their general Carriage and Conversation appeared to be Men of Worth, and Lovers of their King and Country, and of the Religion establish'd among us. I will follow the Method you use, and answer what you ask in the Order I find in your own Letters.

'I cannot see any disadvantage or hazard by pleading the general Plea of Not Guilty: If it fall out upon the Proofs that the Crime is only Misprision of Treason, and not the very Crime of Treason, the Jury must then find the Prisoner not guilty of Treason, and cannot upon an Indictment of Treason find the Party guilty of Misprision, because he is not indicted for the Offence of Misprision, and Treason and Misprision of Treason are Offences that the Law hath distinguished the one from the other, and the one is not included in the other; and therefore if the Proofs reach no farther than to prove a Misprision, and amount not to Treason, the Prisoner may urge it for himself, and say that the Proofs do not reach to the Crime charged in the Indictment: and if the Truth be so, the Court ought so to direct the Jury, not to find it.

'Now being present in Company with others, where those others do consult and conspire to do some Treasonable Act, does not make a Man guilty of Treason, unless by some Words and Actions he signify his Consent to it, and Approbation of it: but his being privy to it, and not discovering it, makes him guilty of Misprision of Treason, which consists in the concealing it, but it makes him not guilty of Treason. And if the same Person be present a second time, or oftner, this neither does not make him guilty of Treason; only it raises a strong suspicion that he likes it, and consents to it, and approves of it, or else he would have forborne after his having been once amongst them. But the strongest Suspicion does not sufficiently prove a Guilt in Treason, nor can it go for any Evidence: And that upon two Accounts.

'First, The Proofs in case of Treason must be plain, and clear, and positive, and not by Inference, or Argument, or the strongest Suspicion imaginable: Thus says Sir Edward Coke in many places in his third Institutes, in the Chapter of High Treason.

'Secondly, In an Indictment of High Treason, there must not only be a general Charge of Treason, nor is it enough to set forth of what sort or species the Treason is, as killing the King, or levying War against him, or Coining Mony, or the like; but the Law requires that in the Indictment there must be also set forth some Overt or Open-Act, as the Statute of the 25*th* of Edw. the 3*d* calls it, or some instance given by the Party or Offender, whereby it may appear he did consent to it, and consult it, and approve of it. And if the bare being present should be taken and construed to be a sufficient Overt or Open-Act, or Instance, then there is no difference between Treason and Misprision of Treason; for the being present without consenting makes no more than Misprision, therefore there must be something more than being barely present, to make a Man guilty of Treason, especially since the Law requires an Overt, or Open-Act, to be proved against the Prisoner accused. See Sir Edward Coke's third Institutes, fol. 12. upon those Words of the Statute, (per overt fact) and that there ought to be direct and manifest Proofs, and not bare Suspicions and Presumptions, be they never so strong and violent: see the same fol. in the upper part of it upon the word (Proveablement.) And the Statute of the 5*th* of Edw. 6. Chap. 11. requires that there should be two Witnesses to prove the Crime: o that if there be but one Witness, let him be never so credible a Person, and never so positive; yet if there be no other Proof, the Party ought to be found Not Guilty: and those two Witnesses must prove the Person guilty of the same sort or species

'ſpecies of Treaſon. As for Example, if the 'Indictment be for that Species of Treaſon of 'conſpiring the King's Death; both Witneſſes 'muſt prove ſome Fact or Words tending to 'that very ſort of Treaſon: but if there be two 'Witneſſes, and one proves the Priſoner con-'ſpired the Death of the King, and the other 'Witneſs proves the conſpiring to do ſome other 'ſort of Treaſon; this comes not home to prove 'the Priſoner guilty upon that Indictment: for 'the Law will not take away a Man's Life in 'Treaſon upon the Teſtimony and Credit of one 'Witneſs, it is ſo tender of a Man's Life, the 'Crime, and the Forfeitures are ſo great and 'heavy.

'And as there muſt be two Witneſſes, ſo by the 'Statute made in the 13*th* Year of his now Ma-'jeſty, Chap. the 1*ſt*, (intitled, For the Safety of 'his Majeſty's Perſon) thoſe two Witneſſes muſt 'not only be lawful, but alſo credible Perſons: 'See that Statute in the 5*th* Paragraph. And the 'Priſoner muſt be allowed to object againſt the 'Credit of all, or any of the Witneſſes; and if 'there be but one Witneſs of clear and good 'Credit, and the reſt not credible, then the Teſti-'mony of thoſe that are not credible muſt go for 'nothing, by the Words and Meaning of this Sta-'tute: See the Statute. Now were I a Jury-Man, 'I ſhould think no ſuch Witneſs a credible Wit-'neſs, as ſhould appear either by his own Teſti-'mony, or upon proof made by others againſt 'him, to have been Particeps Criminis; for that 'proves him to be a bad, and conſequently not 'ſo credible a Man; eſpecially if it can appear 'the Witneſs has trapann'd the Priſoner into the 'committing of the Crime: Then the Witneſs 'will appear to be guilty of a far higher Crime 'than the Priſoner, and therefore ought not to 'be believed as a credible Witneſs againſt the 'Priſoner; for he is a credible Witneſs that has 'the Credit of being a good and honeſt Man, 'which a Trapanner cannot have; and this Tra-'panning proves withal, that the Trapanner did 'bear a Spite and Malice againſt the Perſon 'trapann'd, and intended to do him a Miſchief, 'and deſigned to take away his Life. Shall ſuch 'a one be a credible Witneſs, and be believed a-'gainſt him? God forbid!

'Then again; It cannot but be believed, that 'ſuch Perſons as have been guilty of the ſame 'Crime, will out of a natural Self-love be very 'forward and willing to ſwear heartily and to 'the purpoſe, in order to the Convicting of 'others, that they may by this Service merit their 'Pardon, and ſave their own Lives: And for this 'Reaſon are not ſo credible Witneſſes, ſuch as the 'Statute of the 13*th* of Car. 2. does require. 'Read over the whole Chapters of Sir Edward 'Coke of High Treaſon, and of Petty Treaſon; 'for in this latter of Petty Treaſon, there is much 'Matter that concerns High Treaſon.

'I wiſh with all my Soul, and I humbly and 'heartily pray to Almighty God, that theſe Gentle-'men that have given ſo great Proof of their 'Love to the true Religion, and of the juſt Rights 'and Liberties of their Country, and of their 'Zeal againſt Popery, may upon their Tryal ap-'pear innocent. I am ſo ſatisfy'd of their great 'Worth, that I cannot eaſily believe them guilty 'of ſo horrid a Crime. I pray God to ſtand by 'them in the time of their diſtreſs.

'I wiſh I might have the liberty fairly to give 'them the beſt aſſiſtance I could, in that wherein 'I might be any way capable of doing it. I be-'ſeech Almighty God to heal our Diviſions, and 'eſtabliſh us upon the ſure Foundations of Peace 'and Righteouſneſs. I thank you for the Favour 'you have done me, by imparting ſome publick 'Affairs which might perhaps have been unknown 'to me, or not known till after a long time, for 'I keep no correſpondence.

'When there is an occaſion, pray oblige me by 'a further account, eſpecially what concerns theſe 'Gentlemen: And tho I have written nothing 'here but what is innocent and juſtifiable, yet 'that I may be the ſurer againſt any diſadvantage 'or miſconſtruction, pray take the pains to tran-'ſcribe what Notes you think fit out of this large 'Paper; but ſend me this Paper back again incloſed 'in another, by the ſame hand that brings it.

'There is nor ought to be no ſuch thing as 'conſtructive Treaſon, this defeats the very Scope 'and Deſign of the Statute of the 25*th* of Edw. 3. 'which is to make a plain Declaration, what ſhall 'be adjudged Treaſon by the Ordinary Courts of 'Juſtice: the conſpiring any thing againſt the 'King's Perſon, is moſt juſtly taken to be to con-'ſpire againſt his Life.

'But conſpiring to levy War, or to ſeize the 'Guards, is not conſpiring againſt the King's 'Life. For theſe are Treaſons of a different 'Species.'

Friend and Servant,

The Second LETTER.

SIR,

'I Thank you for the unexpected Account you 'gave me by your firſt Letter; but this exact 'Narrative you have now ſent me of the Tryal 'of that Honourable Excellent Perſon my Lord 'Ruſſel, has exceedingly obliged me. It was a 'thing I much deſired, but I knew not from what 'hand to gain it; for I was a little impatient to 'hear what could be prov'd of ſo foul a nature 'as High Treaſon againſt a Perſon of whom I 'had ever entertained a very high eſteem: and 'tho I had a very ſmall and ſhort Acquaintance 'with him, yet no Man that has known any 'thing of the Publick Affairs, or of our late 'Tranſactions, could be a mere Stranger to his 'great Worth. He had as great a Name for a 'true and honeſt Engliſh Gentleman, and for 'good Temper, and Prudence, and Moderation, 'as ever I knew any Man have, and was generally 'belov'd by all that love our Religion and Coun-'try. I preſume your Relation of the Proofs at 'his Tryal is certainly true in every part, and 'in the very words, and it is a thing that might 'be had by many hands, the Proceedings being ſo 'publick, and I ſuppoſe deliberate: Preſuming it 'to be true, this I will affirm, that upon this Evi-'dence,

'dence, both that againſt him, and for him, '(might I have been permitted to have made 'his Defence for him at his Tryal after the 'Evidence given) I could eaſily have ſatisfy'd any 'equal and underſtanding judicious Man, that my 'Lord ought to have been acquitted; and had I been 'one of the Jury that try'd him, I make no doubt 'I could clearly have convinced all my Fellows '(if they were honeſt and indifferent) that they 'ought not to have found him Guilty. The Spe-'cies or Sort of High Treaſon that the Wit-'neſſes inclin'd to prove againſt him, was a Con-'ſpiracy with others to levy War againſt the 'King.

'The two firſt Witneſſes, viz. Rumſey and Sheppard, tho what they ſay may raiſe a ſtrong 'Suſpicion upon my Lord, and make it probable 'that he was guilty, yet neither of them do come 'home and cloſe to the Perſon of my Lord Ruſſel; 'as they do (I confeſs) againſt the Earl of Shafteſ-'bury, Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Ferguſon.

'The firſt does not affirm, that the Lord Ruſſel 'did join in the Diſcourſe, or agree to any thing 'in the Conſult, but only ſays, he was preſent; 'which extends no further than to make a Miſ-'priſion of Treaſon, and this too not directly 'and poſitively, as legal Proof ought to be, to 'convict a Man of Treaſon: the latter (Shep-'pard) when he applies what he ſwore to the 'Perſon of the Lord Ruſſel, only ſays, He be-'lieves the Lord Ruſſel was there at that time 'when the Diſcourſe he ſpeaks of was uſed; which 'is a very imperfect uncertain Proof, and not 'poſitive enough: ſo that neither of theſe were 'full Witneſſes. As to the Evidence given by the 'Lord Howard againſt my Lord Ruſſel, it is 'ſtrange to me, (as the Evidence is ſtated) that 'any Credit ſhould be given to it; that he ſhould 'be believed againſt thoſe Execrations, that (it 'ſeems) he had ſo ſolemnly, and ſo lately uſed to 'the contrary of his Evidence; eſpecially when 'by giving this Evidence, he muſt merit his own 'Pardon, and ſave his own Life, which extremely 'takes off from the Credit and Weight of his 'Evidence.

'What Mr. Weſt ſays, in reference to my Lord 'Ruſſel, was but bare Opinion and Hear-ſay, and is 'no proof at all in Law; ſo that inſtead of two 'plain, direct, manifeſt, and poſitive, and two 'credible Witneſſes, as the Law requires in Trea-'ſon, here is not, in my opinion, ſo much as one 'poſitive credible Witneſs. The Lord Howard '(as your Caſe and Narrative ſtates it) is not 'credible, tho direct and poſitive; none of the 'other three are poſitive, tho more credible. In 'the Statute of the 25*th* of Edward the Third, 'of Treaſons, the word (Proveablement) as Sir 'Edward Coke obſerves upon it, in his Third In-'ſtitutes, fol. 12. imports direct and manifeſt 'Proofs, not Preſumptions and Conjectures, and '(as may be added) not Probabilities: and ſo 'the words (per overt fact) do (as he obſerves) 'ſtrengthen that Senſe of the word (Proveable-'ment;) and the Act of Treaſons made ſince this 'King's Time, requires there ſhould be two cre-'dible Witneſſes. Now, tho the Lord Howard 'was not, by the Evidence offer'd againſt him by 'the Lord Ruſſel, utterly diſabled from being a 'Witneſs; yet I will be bold to ſay, it made 'him no credible Witneſs in this Caſe. That the 'Lord Ruſſel made no uſe of theſe Things in his 'Defence, tho a Man of Parts, is no wonder to 'me; the ableſt Man under that Terror, and 'upon ſo ſpeedy a Proceeding, and where it is 'impoſſible to be ſo compoſed and free from 'diſtraction, may eaſily paſs by many juſt Ad-'vantages, which a Stander-by, with leſs Abilities, 'might quickly have apprehended. I am far from 'reflecting upon the Court that try'd him; this 'matter that I obſerved, reſted principally upon 'the Jury. And he is found Guilty and Con-'demn'd, and it may be before this comes to your 'hand, put to death too: If it hath ſo happen'd '(as poſſible it may) that the Earl of Bedford, and 'his other great Relations, have prevail'd with 'the King for a Reſpit of the Execution, I wiſh, 'and heartily beg of Almighty God, that theſe 'Conſiderations may yet be made uſe of to the 'King, (with whom it then reſts) as Tabula poſt 'Naufragium, to ſave the Life of this Noble Lord. 'Much more than this may be ſaid, were there 'ſuch an Opportunity before the King, (and I ſo 'intend it, and no otherwiſe) and if I might be 'any ways ſerviceable in it, I would come up to 'London bare-foot, rather than neglect ſo good an 'Office. And I ever thought it a Severity in our 'Law, that a Priſoner for his Life is not allowed 'the Aſſiſtance of a grave and prudent Lawyer, 'or ſome other Friend, to make his Defence for 'him, even as to Matter of Fact, as well as to 'Law. I know 'tis ſaid, the Court is of Counſel 'for the Priſoner; but for my part, I ſhould never 'deſire to depend upon that only. I know what 'this is by Experience. If the Caſe be in any part 'of it miſtaken, I have loſt all my Obſervations, 'and beg your pardon for all this trouble; it is 'out of the great Honour and Zeal I have for 'that good Lord: but the Narrative you give is 'very ably and well compoſed, and in very good 'Method; and, I think, could not have been bet-'ter done, which inclines me to think it very true 'alſo. I could be contented the Earl of Bedford '(to whom I am known) might have the view of 'this Letter, if it come not too late, and may be 'thought of any uſe; I heartily thank you for 'your Favour, which obliges me to be

Your faithful

July 21. 1683. Friend and Servant,

R. A.

A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL's Innocency: By way of Anſwer or Confutation of a Libellous Pamphlet, entitled, An Antidote againſt Poiſon.

1. THE Pamphlet ſtiles it ſelf, An Antidote againſt Poiſon; but it is ſo far from deſerving that Title, that it may be truly ſaid, That the Antidote it ſelf is the rankeſt Poiſon.

We read in Hiſtory, That the Noble Emperor, called Henry of Luxenburgh, was poiſoned in the Sacrament; and Pope Victor was poiſoned in receiving of the Chalice. Who could have ſuſpected ſuch horrid Villany in the Adminiſtration of ſuch ſacred and ſolemn Rites? Who could without Horror and Amazement contrive the mingling of a deadly Poiſon with the Bread and Water of Life? To make thoſe conſecrated Elements (which ought to be the Savour of Life unto Life) to be the dreadful Meſſengers of ſudden Death? Surely had thoſe outward Signs been changed into the very Body and Blood of the Lord of Life, (as they that acted in thoſe execrable Villanies profeſs'd to believe) there muſt needs have been a Miracle wrought in altering likewiſe the Subſtance and malignant Nature of thoſe Poiſons, that they ſhould not have wrought thoſe direful Effects; which yet they did. There appears the like wicked Policy in the Author of this Pamphlet; who, under pretence of preſcribing an Antidote againſt Poiſon, under the Vizor and Diſguiſe of preventing Miſchief, does moſt deceitfully infuſe the worſt of Poiſons, and labours to intoxicate a whole Nation. This Author would have the World believe that the Noble Lord, in the compoſing of his Speech, was wholly govern'd by his Confeſſor; and that the Compiler of it was infected with thoſe Doctrines, that the Northern Climate has of late furniſhed us with. The very Language and Spirit of Coleman! Sure the Soul of Coleman is by Tranſmigration enter'd into this Author: It is eaſy to gueſs at his Religion. He ſuppoſes all that were preſent at my Lord's Tryal, muſt needs be ſurprized to find the Truth of the Caſe ſo untruly and unfaithfully ſet down in my Lord's Speech. But whoever will take the pains to read the Tryals, publiſh'd by Authority, (which no Man will ſuſpect of Partiality towards the Perſon tried) will receive abundant Satisfaction in the Truth of what was ſaid by the Lord Ruſſel, and diſcover the ſhameleſs Impudence of this malicious Author.

The Indictment (as we find it printed at large in the Tryal, fol. 29.) charges the Priſoner, That he intending to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to move War and Rebellion againſt the King, and to ſubvert the Government, and to depoſe, or put down, and deprive the King from his Title and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and ſo bring and put the King to Death and Deſtruction; 2 Novem. 34 Car. 2. and at other Times, maliciouſly and traitorouſly, with divers others, did Conſpire, Compaſs, Imagine, and Intend,

1. To deprive the King of his Title and Government.

2. And to kill the King, and to ſubvert the Government.

3. And to move Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the King.

And to fulfil and perfect theſe Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings and Imaginations, the ſaid William Ruſſel did meet together with divers other Traytors, and Conſult, Agree, and Conclude,

1. To move and ſtir up Inſurrection and Rebellion. And,

2. To ſeize and deſtroy the King's Guards.

The Operative and Emphatical Words of this Indictment are the Intending, Conſpiring, and Concluding.

The Things intended and conſpired were,

1. To move and ſtir up War and Rebellion againſt the King.

2. To depoſe the King.

3. To kill the King. And in order to the accompliſhing of theſe horrid Crimes,

The Things concluded on were,

1. To move and ſtir up Inſurrection and Rebellion.

2. To ſeize and deſtroy the Guards. This is the very Sum and true Method of the Indictment, if it be truly printed in the Tryals.

Note, Here is no open Act or Deed charged to be done by the Lord Ruſſel, unleſs his meeting together with others be meant to be an open Act or Deed: But then, again, that Act of Meeting terminates merely in Conſulting, Agreeing, and Concluding. They met only to conſult, agree, and conclude; but they acted nothing in purſuance of that Conſulting, Agreeing, and Concluding, for any thing that appears in the Indictment: So that the Meeting properly hath not the Nature of an Acting or Action, or of a Thing done. But the Effect of the Indictment is, That the Lord Ruſſel and others did conſult, agree, and conclude to do ſomething; but the Indictment ſtops there, and goes no further, for it ſets not forth any thing done at all. So that here is no Overt-Act or Deed, and therefore the Indictment is void; for there is no Act charged but meeting, and that was merely in order to conſult and agree: And they did agree upon a Thing to be done; but it is not ſaid they did it, or did any thing towards it. I repeat this the oftner, that it may be the better underſtood and minded, being very material. Read the Indictment.

The Indictment is grounded upon the Statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 2. (the old Statute of Treaſons.) So the Attorney-General declares himſelf, fol. 49. of the Tryal.

Now let us ſee how far this Charge in the Indictment will make my Lord guilty of any Treaſon within that Statute.

The Body of that Statute of 25 Ed. 3. of Treaſons, is printed together with the Tryal; (ſee the Tryal, fol. 50.) ſo that it need not be repeated here, though there are ſome other Clauſes in that Statute not printed in the Tryal.

The

The occaſion of making that Statute, appears to be the Variety of Opinions that then were, what ſhould be accounted Treaſon, and what not; which was very miſchievous to the Subjects, and gave too great a Liberty to the Judges of the ordinary Courts.

To cure this mighty Miſchief, and to prevent that arbitrary Power of Judges, this excellent Statute makes a Declaration what ſhall be adjudged Treaſon by the ordinary Courts of Juſtice. Not but that there might be like Caſes, or other Facts amounting to Treaſon, beſides thoſe there enumerated; but thoſe other Facts or Treaſons muſt not be adjudg'd by thoſe ordinary ſtanding Courts, (ſuch as the Goal-Delivery of Newgate, and the Court of the King's-Bench at Weſtminſter it ſelf are:) But in ſuch Caſes thoſe Courts muſt forbear proceeding, and the Caſe muſt be reſerved for the Determination of the King and Parliament. See that Statute in the printed Statutes at large.

So that the Court of Goal-Delivery at Newgate muſt judge only, and proceed upon no other Treaſons but what are there enumerated and ſpecified.

Now the Treaſons in that Statute enumerated and ſpecified (for the Word Specified is the very Word uſed by that Statute) are theſe:

1. Compaſſing or imagining the Death of the King, Queen, or Prince.

2. Violating, or carnally knowing the Queen, King's eldeſt Daughter unmarried, Prince's Wife.

3. Levying War againſt the King. Not a compaſſing or imagining to levy War, but an actual levying War: It muſt be a War begun. And ſeveral other Sorts of Treaſons are there ſpecified, not to our purpoſe to be recited.

The Statute further requires, That the Perſon indicted be provably attainted of ſome one of theſe Treaſons by Overt Deed, that is, ſome open manifeſt Act or Deed done, which muſt of neceſſity alſo be expreſly ſet down in the Indictment, and fully and clearly proved at the Tryal by two Witneſſes.

See Sir Edward Coke's Third Inſtitutes, in his Chapter of High Treaſon, fol. 12. in his Expoſition of the Words of that Statute, (per Overt Fait) and there, fol. 5. upon the Words (Fait Compaſſer) he tells you the Nature of that Open Deed that the Statute intends. It muſt be a Deed, and not mere Words: It muſt be a Deed tending to the Execution of the Treaſon imagined. That Deed muſt be an open Deed, that is, it muſt be fully proved, and made open and manifeſt at the Tryal by clear Proof.

So that if the Indictment fail of ſetting forth one of thoſe Treaſons that are there enumerated, it is not a good Indictment upon that Statute.

If it do ſet forth one of thoſe Treaſons, yet if it do not ſet forth ſome open Deed done by the Party indicted, that is, ſuch a Deed as does properly and naturally tend to Execution of that ſort of Treaſon ſet forth in that Indictment; in ſuch caſe alſo the Indictment is not good.

If both theſe, viz. the Treaſon intended, and a proper ſuitable open Deed, be well ſet forth in the Indictment, (which makes a good Indictment) yet if that very ſort of Treaſon intended, and that open Deed or Fact, ſo ſet forth in the Indictment, be not alſo fully, clearly, and manifeſtly proved upon the Tryal againſt the Priſoner, he ought to be acquitted.

It will not ſuffice either to prove it by one Witneſs, or to prove any other ſort of Treaſon, (not charged in the Indictment, nor any other Over-Deed) other than what is ſo ſet forth in that Indictment, tho it be by never ſo full a Proof; but upon that Indictment the Priſoner ought to be acquitted, if that ſpecial Treaſon, and that ſpecial Overt or Open Deed, ſet forth and expreſſed in that very Indictment, be not fully proved.

Now let us examine the Indictment in this Caſe againſt the Lord Ruſſel, and the Proofs againſt him, as they are publiſhed by Authority, and obſerve how they agree with the Statute, and how the Indictment and Proofs agree the one with the other.

It may be admitted that here is in the Indictment againſt the Lord Ruſſel, a Treaſon ſufficiently charged and ſet forth, viz. one of the Treaſons ſpecified in that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. namely, That the Lord Ruſſel did compaſs and imagine the Death of the King. This is not denied, but it is duly charged in the Indictment. For thoſe other Charges in the Indictment, viz. His intending to depoſe the King, and his intending to move or levy War and Rebellion againſt the King; theſe are inſerted into the Indictment as Aggravations of that horrid Crime of intending to kill the King, or as open Acts of the other; but of themſelves alone, they are no diſtinct ſubſtantial Charges, nor are they any of the Treaſons ſpecified in this Act, upon which Act this Indictment is ſolely grounded. For tho by the Act of 13 of this King that now is, cap. 1. entitled, An Act for the Safety and Preſervation of the King's Perſon, it is made High Treaſon (during the now King's Life only) to compaſs or imagine to depoſe the King, or to compaſs or imagine to levy War againſt the King, if ſuch Compaſſing or Imagination be expreſſed by ſpeaking or writing, (altho without any open Deed) yet the Lord Ruſſel was not indicted upon that Statute, (as the Attorney-General himſelf acknowledged openly at the Tryal) but only upon the old Statute of 25 Ed. 3. So that thoſe late-made Treaſons are not to our purpoſe.

So that the only Treaſon charged in the Indictment, as a ſubſtantial Charge, is that of imagining to kill the King. And ſo the Lord Chief Juſtice agrees in his Direction to the Jury. See the Tryal, fol. 61.

But where is that other Requiſite, that other moſt material part of the Indictment, of the Open Deed or Act? without which the reſt ſerves for nothing: For it is not enough by this Statute to make a Man guilty of conſpiring or imagining the Death of the King, unleſs the Party indicted have expreſſed that Imagination by ſome open Deed; and that muſt be plainly ſet down in the Indictment too, or elſe the Indictment (as was ſaid before) is no good Indictment. And it muſt appear to the Court upon the Indictment not only to be an open Deed, but ſuch a Deed as has a natural Aptitude and Tendency to the Execution of that very Treaſon ſo imagined. And there is no ſuch ſet forth in this Indictment; and therefore the Indictment it ſelf was inſufficient and void.

And that which ſeems to have a colour of an Overt-Fact, or open Deed, ſet forth in this Indictment, was not fully and ſufficiently proved neither: And then, tho the Indictment had been ſufficient, yet for want of due Proof, the Party indicted ought to have been acquitted.

To theſe two Points or Matters ſhall the enſuing Diſcourſe confine it ſelf. And if this Undertaking be made good, the Antidote will appear to be a rank Poiſon, the Lord Ruſſel's Speech juſtified, and his Innocency and Loyalty cleared, and his Honour vindicated.

The Overt-Fait, or open Deed, ſet forth in the Indictment, (if there be any) are the Things ſaid to be conſulted of, agreed and concluded on; viz. 1. To move and ſtir up Inſurrection and Rebellion. 2. To ſeize and deſtroy the Guards. (Peruſe the Indictment carefully.)

Now neither of theſe are Open Deeds, in the Nature of them.

The Firſt, which is to ſtir up Inſurrection and Rebellion: This is a diſtinct Species of Treaſon it ſelf; it is the ſame with a Levying of War, (ſpecified in this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which is the only Statute we have to do with in this Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel;) and if it had been ſet forth in the Indictment as a Deed done, or Thing acted, that is, if it had been laid in the Indictment that the War was actually levied, or the Inſurrection or Rebellion actually raiſed or ſtirred up, (as it is not, for it is only mentioned as a Thing agreed and concluded on, and not done) yet it had not been a ſufficient proper Overt Fait, or Open Act, to make it a good Indictment: becauſe (as is ſaid before) levying of War is a diſtinct Species from that of compaſſing to kill the King; and therefore cannot be made an Overt Fait, or Open Deed, to manifeſt an Imagination of killing the King: For that one Species of Treaſon cannot be a proper Open Act to another Species of Treaſon, as will be proved hereafter.

Sir Edward Coke in his third Inſtitutes, fol. 14. in the third Clauſe or Paragraph of that Folio, tells us, That the Connexion of the Words is to be obſerv'd, viz. [thereof be attainted by Overt or Open Deed.] This, ſays Sir Edward Coke, relateth to the ſeveral and diſtinct Treaſons before expreſſed; whereof that of imagining to kill the King, and that of leying War againſt the King, are two diſtinct Species of High Treaſon. And therefore, ſays Sir Edward Coke, the one of them cannot be an Overt-Act for another, that is, levying of War cannot be an Overt-Act for that ſort of Treaſon in imagining to kill the King, much leſs when the Indictment does not charge it as a War actually levied, but only an Agreement or Concluſion for levying a War. Such Agreement can be no Open Deed to manifeſt an Intent or Imagination of killing the King. This is the main Queſtion between us.

The other only Colour or Pretence to an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, muſt be that of ſeizing or deſtroying the King's Guard: For no other but theſe two are ſet forth in the Indictment, or look any thing like Overt or Open-Acts.

And this latter is nothing like to an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, in the Nature of it; for it is not ſaid to be done, but only agreed on, and concluded on to be done. If it had been but alledged in the Indictment, That in purſuance of this Agreement or Concluſion of the Conſpirators, a View was accordingly taken of thoſe Guards, and reported to the reſt (whereof the Lord Ruſſel was one) that it was feaſible, (whereof there is ſome Colour or Proof againſt ſome of them) this had been more to the purpoſe: But being laid ſo imperfectly as it is, the Indictment it ſelf muſt needs be inſufficient, for the Reaſons before given.

But, alas! the Noble Lord is gone; and he is gone from whence he would not be recall'd, a Place of infinite Bliſs and Glory, out of a ſpiteful malicious World: It is we, it is the King and Kingdom, it is the whole Proteſtant Part of the World that ſuffers the ineſtimable Loſs of him: Not to ſpeak of the unſpeakable Grief of his dear and diſconſolate Widow, and other Noble Relations; Factum infectum fieri nequit. So that we may ſeem to labour in vain, and it comes too late. But ſomething may be done for the Benefit of his hopeful Poſterity, and ſome ſmall Satisfaction may be made to his Noble Family, by a Writ of Error for reverſing of this Attainder, and the avoiding of the Record; for the Statute of 29 Eliz. cap. 2. extends only to ſuch Attainders for High Treaſon as then had been before the making of that Statute, and does not hinder a Writ of Error in this Caſe, if the King will ſign a Petition for it.

But to examine this laſt Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, a little further;

Viz. To ſeize and deſtroy the King's Guards.

The Guards! What Guards? What or whom does the Law underſtand or allow to be the King's Guards, for the Preſervation of his Perſon? Whom ſhall the Court that tried this Noble Lord, whom ſhall the Judges of the Law that were then preſent, and upon their Oaths, whom ſhall they judge or legally underſtand by theſe Guards? They never read of them in all their Law-Books: There is not any Statute-Law that makes the leaſt mention of any Guards. The Law of England takes no notice of any ſuch Guards; and therefore the Indictment is uncertain and void.

The King is guarded by the ſpecial Protection of Almighty God, by whom he reigns, and whoſe Vicegerent he is: He has an inviſible Guard, a Guard of glorious Angels.

Non eget Mauri jaculis nec arcu;
Nec venenatis gravida ſagittis,
Crede, Pharetra.

The King is guarded by the Love of his Subjects:

The next under God, and the ſureſt Guard.

He is guarded by the Law and Courts of Juſtice.

The Militia and the Trained-Bands are his legal Guard, and the whole Kingdom's Guard.

The very Judges that tried this Noble Lord were the King's Guards, and the Kingdom's Guard, and this Lord Ruſſel's Guard againſt all erroneous and imperfect Indictments, from all falſe Evidence and Proof, from all Strains of Wit and Oratory miſapplied and abus'd by Counſel.

What other Guards are there? We know of no Law for more. King Henry the Seventh of this Kingdom (as Hiſtory tells us) was the firſt that ſet up the Band of Penſioners. Since this the Yeomen of the Guard; ſince them certain Armed Bands, commonly, now a-days, (after the French Mode) called the King's Life-Guard, ride about and appear with naked Swords, to the Terror of the Nation: But where is the Law? where is the Authority for them?

It had been fit for the Court that tried this Noble Lord on this Indictment to have ſatisfied themſelves, from the King's Counſel, what was meant by theſe Guards; for the alledging and ſetting forth an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, in an Indictment of Treaſon, muſt be of ſomething that is intelligible by Law, whereof Judges may take notice by Law. And herein too the Indictment fails, and is imperfect.

But admit the ſeizing and deſtroying of thoſe who are now called the King's Life-Guard, had been the Guard intended within this Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed; yet the Indictment ſhould have ſet forth that de Facto the King had choſen a certain Number of Men to attend upon and guard his Perſon, and ſet forth where they did attend, as at Whitehall, or the Meuſe, or the Savoy, &c. and that theſe were the Guard intended, by the Indictment, to be ſeized and deſtroyed: That by this ſetting forth the Court might have taken notice judicially what and who were meant. But to ſeize and deſtroy the King's Guards, and not ſhew who, and what is meant, makes the Indictment very inſufficient.

So much as to the Indictment it ſelf.

In the next place, let us look into the Proofs, as they are at large ſet forth and owned in the printed Tryal; and let us conſider how far thoſe Proofs do make out the Charge of the Indictment, viz. the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and how far they make out that Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, (ſuch as it is) of ſeizing or deſtroying the King's Guards, in order to the effecting of that Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King. And it muſt appear by Proof to be in truth ſo intended by the Conſpirators, and levelled to that end; for if it were done, yet if it were done quite to another Intent and Purpoſe, and not to that of Compaſſing the King's Death, it does not come home to this Indictment.

There are but three Witneſſes that can be thought to bring the Matter home, and to fix any thing upon the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Romſey, Mr. Sheppard, and the Lord Howard.

It is true, two of the three, that is, Col. Romſey, and the Lord Howard, poſitively prove a traitorous Deſign, or a Diſcourſe at leaſt, by ſome of the Company, of making an Inſurrection or Rebellion, or (to ſpeak it in the Language and Phraſe of this Statute of 25 E. 3.) of levying a War againſt the King, (for all theſe ſignify one and the ſame thing) and they prove the Lord Ruſſel was ſometimes preſent at thoſe Meetings: But is that enough? Admit he were preſent, and heard the Debate of it, (which yet is not fully and directly proved) yet if he did not join in the Debate, and expreſs and ſome way ſignify his Approbation of it, and conſent to it, it makes him not at all criminous. It is true, his After-concealing of it might have made him guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon; but that is a Crime of another Nature, and is another diſtinct Genus of Crimes, of which he was not indicted.

Col. Romſey, as to the Overt-Fait, (as they would make it) ſays, There was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in: And being asked by one of the Jury, By whom the Diſcourſe was? he anſwers, By all the Company that was there, (whereof, as he ſaid before, the Lord Ruſſel was one.) So that my Lord Ruſſel may (I agree) be underſtood to be one that diſcourſed about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in. Nay, the Colonel ſays, All the Company did debate it: And he ſays further, The Lord Ruſſel was there when ſome of the Company undertook to take the View of thoſe Guards. And being asked by the Attorney-General to what purpoſe the View was to be? the Colonel anſwers, It was to ſurprize our Guards, if the Riſing had gone on.

The Chief Juſtice obſerving to the Witneſs, that he ought not to deliver a doubtful Evidence, and to ſpeak it with Limitations, that made it not ſo poſitive; as by ſaying, I apprehend ſo and ſo: then the Colonel grows more poſitive, and ſays further, That a Riſing was intended; but afterwards he ſays, There was no debate of the Riſing. At laſt the Witneſs being asked by Sir George Jefferies, whether the Priſoner were preſent at the Debate concerning the Meſſage from the Lord Shaftesbury to the Company then met, and the Anſwer return'd to it; he flatly ſays, The Priſoner was preſent at that Debate, (which Debate did indeed concern the Riſing.) Being ask'd by the ſame Perſon, whether my Lord was averſe to it, or agreeing to it; he anſwers like an Echo, Agreeing to it. Nay, then he ſays, my Lord Ruſſel did ſpeak, and that about the Riſing of Taunton, and that he did diſcourſe of the Riſing: but what were his Words? Being queſtion'd again by the Chief Juſtice, whether my Lord did give any Conſent to the Riſing, he anſwers ſtill like an Echo, My Lord did. And this laſt Anſwer is the weighty Part of his Evidence, if there be any weight at all.

Now mind the Defect of the Witneſs's Memory in ſome other moſt material Paſſages. He thinks the Lord Grey did ſay ſomething to the ſame purpoſe, with the Anſwer deliver'd by Ferguſon to the Lord Shaftesbury's Meſſage.

He does not know (ſays he) how often he himſelf (the Witneſs) was at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe where this Debate was. He ſays he was there more than once, or elſe I heard (ſays he) Mr. Ferguſon make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shafteſbury. And then he ſays, That this was all at that time that he remembred; and before this he had ſaid no more againſt the Lord Ruſſel, but that he was preſent; and after this upon much interrogating of him, he proceeds to tell a great deal more, indeed all the reſt that has been before obſerv'd to proceed from him. And after all, he ſays he thinks he was not there above a quarter of an Hour. He ſays he was not certain whether he did hear ſomething about a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguſon did report it to my Lord Shaftesbury, that they had debated it. And the Witneſs ſpeaking of a View to be taken of the Guards, to ſurprize them; the Lord Chief Juſtice ſeems to be ſurpriz'd at that Word: The Guards! he never met it in all his Books. What Guards? why you know it is mention'd in the Indictment; but he might yet very well ask what Guards: And the Colonel anſwers, The Guards at the Savoy and the Meuſe.

The Colonel ſays, He thinks the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, were the Perſons that undertook to view the Guards. And he thinks, Sir Thomas Armſtrong began it, and Mr. Ferguſon. And he ſays, further Direction was given to take a view of the Guards, if the Riſing had gone on, (as it never did) and then he mentions the very Day that had been appointed for the Riſing, viz. the 19th of November; and that the Meſſage from the Lord Shaftesbury was, he thinks, a matter of a Fortnight before that Day, or ſomething more; for he thinks it was concluded Sunday fortnight after my Lord Grey met. The mention of my Lord Ruſſel's Conſent to this Riſing, ſing, comes in at the laſt, and after many Queſtions ask'd him, and not till that very particular Queſtion was put to him; and he anſwers in the very ſame Words as the Queſtion was ask'd. The Chief Juſtice ask'd him in theſe Words, Did my Lord give any conſent to the Riſing? The Colonel's Anſwer was, Yes, my Lord, he did. But how did my Lord Ruſſel ſignify that Conſent? What Words did he uſe that may clearly expreſs it? For this is the pinching Proof, if it had been certain and clear'd by remembring the manner of his Conſenting, or how it did appear. Why was not this put home to the Witneſs? This is the material Part of his Evidence, without which the reſt had not come home to the Priſoner: And why did not the Witneſs deliver this of himſelf, and before his giving this home Evidence he had ſaid, That was all at that Time that he remember'd? And this was at the ſame Time with that of the Meſſage, and of the Diſcourſe about viewing the Guards. He afterwards doubts whether he was any more than once there with that Company, or whether he heard Mr. Ferguſon report things to the Lord Shaftesbury; which ſhews a wild kind of Memory in a Witneſs, and the Colonel is no Fool, nor Baby; ſo that there is but one Time poſitively ſpoken of by this Witneſs. How ſtrangely uncertain is he in the Matter of the Declaration, to which he was examined? A moſt noted Thing, and he cannot tell whether he heard any thing of it there, or whether Mr. Ferguſon told him of it. It is to be ſuſpected too, that what he has delivered poſitively at laſt ſo late in his Evidence, and after ſo much interrogating of him, was but mere hearſay too, and then it would not have been any Evidence. He has not, it ſeems, a good diſtinguiſhing Head or Memory, as a Witneſs ought to have in caſe of Life, and a Life of ſo high a Value as this of that Noble Lord.

And many other material Paſſages this Witneſs delivers under that Limitation, as he thinks.

The Riſing was intended, but never took effect; and the View was no more than appointed and undertaken: but the Seizing of the Guards, as this Witneſs ſays, was not to be unleſs the Riſing had gone on; which it never did. He ſpeaks nothing of any View made of the Guards, or any Report upon it: but he ſwears my Lord Ruſſel conſented to the Riſing. That is his ſtabbing Evidence; but by what Words, or how he ſignify'd his Conſent, not a Word, tho mighty material.

But what is this Conſpiracy for a Riſing? and a Conſpiracy to ſeize the Guards? (in caſe the Riſing had gone on:) What are theſe to the Crime charged in the Indictment againſt the Lord Ruſſel, for conſpiring the Death of the King?

Here is not a word of any ſuch Matter, nor of ſeizing the Guards in order to it, no not one Word.

And that is the only material Part of the Indictment (as ſhall appear more plainly hereafter.)

The ſecond Witneſs, Mr. Sheppard, mentions the meeting (at his Houſe) of the Duke of Monmouth, and among the reſt, the Lord Ruſſel, and they diſcours'd of ſurprizing the Guards; and that the Duke, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, (as he remembers) went one Night to view the Guards, and the next Day at his Houſe they ſaid it was very feaſible, if they had ſtrength to do it. And then he ſays there was two Meetings there, and, as he remembers, my Lord Ruſſel was both times there. Being ask'd by the Attorney-General, beſides the ſeizing of the Guards, if there were any diſcourſe of a Riſing; he anſwers, He did not remember any further Diſcourſe, for he was often gone out of the Room: And this is the effect of that he ſays.

If any thing of this comes near my Lord Ruſſel, it is thoſe Words, firſt giving an Account of who they were that were met, and that my Lord Ruſſel was one of them; he ſays the Subſtance of their Diſcourſe was how to ſurprize the King's Guards. This may be true, if one or two of the Company only diſcourſes it; for it does not neceſſarily affirm, that every one did ſpeak in that Diſcourſe. He does not mention one Word ſpoken by my Lord Ruſſel, nor that he approv'd of, or conſented to any thing. At the worſt, for any thing that he ſays, it can be but Miſpriſion: He can ſay nothing as to the intended Riſing. Now Colonel Romſey's Evidence is altogether of that Riſing, and the ſeizing of the Guards was to have been if the Riſing had gone on; and this was at the ſame time that Mr. Sheppard ſpeaks to: and yet Mr. Sheppard being ask'd if there was any Diſcourſe of a Riſing, he anſwers, he did not remember any further Diſcourſe.

Nor does Colonel Romſey certainly remember any thing of a Declaration read amongſt them, whether he heard it there, or whether by Mr. Ferguſon's Report of it to my Lord Shaftesbury; which is one of the principal things that Mr. Sheppard ſpeaks to, (beſides that of ſeizing the Guards.) And as to the Declaration, Mr. Sheppard ſays, he cannot ſay my Lord Ruſſel was there when that Declaration was read

So they agree in nothing but in the Diſcourſe of ſeizing the Guards, and that my Lord Ruſſel was then preſent.

So that as yet the Sum of the Proof by Colonel Romſey is, that my Lord Ruſſel conſented to the Riſing, which is too general; and the Sum of the Proof by Mr. Sheppard is, that my Lord Ruſſel was preſent in Company when the Company diſcours'd of ſeizing the Guards, but he knows nothing of the Riſing.

The third Witneſs (the Lord Howard) diſcourſes much about a Conſpiracy to riſe, but he ſpeaks moſt (of what he ſays) by report from the Earl of Shaftesbury, and from the Duke; ſo it goes for no Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, and the Chief Juſtice did the Priſoner that Right, as to declare as much to the Jury: and the Lord Howard clears the Duke from any ſuch horrid Act as the killing the King, the Duke ſaid he would not ſuffer it; and if the Duke be innocent in that, it is probable that my Lord Ruſſel, and the reſt of the Company that met, had no diſcourſe about killing the King, nor any Thought that way; which yet is the great and only ſubſtantial Charge of this Indictment, which muſt ſtill be minded and obſerv'd.

My Lord Howard does indeed prove two ſeveral Conſults, one at Mr. Hampden the younger's, the other at my Lord Ruſſel's about the middle of January laſt, and after, and that my Lord Ruſſel was at both; and theſe Conſults were of an Inſurrection, and where to begin it, and of providing Arms and Money, and of ſending into Scotland to ſettle an Underſtanding with the Lord of

Argyle

Argyle: and being asked what my Lord did ſay, he anſwers thus, viz. Every one (ſays he) knows my Lord Ruſſel is a Perſon of great Judgment, and not very laviſh in Diſcourſe. But did he conſent? was a Queſtion ask'd by Sir George Jefferies: the Lord Howard anſwered, We did not put it to the Vote, but it went without Contradiction, and I took it that all there gave their Conſent. That my Lord Ruſſel join'd in the Council of Six, that he approv'd of his being choſen for one, that he ſaid one Word in theſe two Conſults, there is not any Proof by the Lord Howard; only he ſays, He took it that all there conſented. Is that enough? O ſtrange Evidence!

I will not here take notice, or examine how far the Lord Howard is a credible Witneſs in this Caſe, but refer the Reader to the Teſtimony of my Lord of Angleſey, Mr. Howard, and Dr. Burnet: or how far any of the three Witneſſes are to be believ'd, having all three upon their own Teſtimony been Participes Criminis, and it is ſuppos'd have their Pardons, or are promis'd Pardons: Not that this is offer'd to diſable them quite from being Witneſſes, but ſurely, all things conſider'd, it much leſſens their Credit in this Caſe; nor does it make them the more Credible, becauſe no other Witneſſes can be had. But then conſider that moſt Excellent Character given of the Priſoner by Perſons of Honour, and of the higheſt Eſteem for Ability and Integrity, and ſuch as contradicts, and is inconſiſtent with the Charge of the Indictment, and whatever is of weight in the Evidence againſt him; and eſpecially if you give any Credit to the Lord Howard himſelf, who upon his Oath does declare, as in the Preſence of God and Man, That he did not believe that either the Duke of Monmouth, or my Lord Ruſſel, had any deſign to murder the King; which is the only effectual Charge of this Indictment. Theſe things conſider'd, it ſeems very ſtrange to me, how the Lord Ruſſel could be found guilty of a compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; for ſo is the Verdict.

This anſwers moſt of the Obſervations made by the Author of the Antidote upon my Lord Ruſſel's Speech, reſtraining the Expreſſion, as he ſays, of his Innocency to the Deſign upon the King's Life, and to killing of the King, and of his omitting to mention the general Riſing; which, as this Author boldly affirms, was fully proved upon him; and that my Lord's Profeſſions of his Innocency, as to any Plot upon the King's Life, or to kill the King, or his knowing any thing thereof, theſe (ſays the Author) are no plain Declarations of his Innocency, as to the Crime charged and proved upon him, of conſpiring and conſulting to raiſe an Inſurrection. Nor was there any need of my Lord's anſwering that, for it was little [illegible].

How uncertain, how diſagreeing, how inapplicable to the Charge of the Indictment [illegible] Proofs are, has been fully obſerv'd already, and the Author groſly miſtakes in his Judgment, when he takes the conſpiring and conſulting to raiſe an Inſurrection, to be the Crime charged in the Indictment; for (as was obſerv'd before) the Charge of the Indictment is, the compaſſing and imagining to kill the King; and that of a Conſpiracy to raiſe an Inſurrection, or to levy War, is none of the Crimes or Treaſons enumerated or ſpecified in the Act of 25 Edw. 3. and therefore could not be the Crime charged in the Indictment, which is grounded only upon that Act of 25 Edw. 3. (as the Attorney-General acknowledges) for it is an actual levying of War, and not a conſpiring only to levy War, or raiſe an Inſurrection, that is the Treaſon ſpecified in that Act of 25 Edw. 3. And therefore the mention of other things are but by way of Aggravation, for the more ample ſetting forth of the Crime charged, which is of compaſſing the King's Death: and that the conſpiring to make an Inſurrection, cannot be an open Deed to prove a compaſſing the King's Death, has been already ſpoken to, and ſhall be yet more fully.

Nor is the Author more miſtaken in his Obſervations upon the Matter of Fact, and his unwarranted Concluſions and Inferences raiſed from thence, than he is in his Determinations of Matters in Law ariſing from that Fact.

The Death of the King (ſays the Author) in that Law of 25 Edw. 3. is not reſtrained to killing of his natural Perſon, but extends as well to his civil Death as natural: As to conſpire to depoſe the King, to impriſon him, or laying any force or reſtraint upon him; theſe (ſays the Author) are all High-Treaſon, for compaſſing his Death, natural or civil. If ſo, why then we are at never the more certainty for this excellent Law of 25 Edw. 3.

I agree, that conſpiring to depoſe the King, to impriſon him, are Treaſons; but it is not ſo plain that they are Treaſons within this Law of 25 E. 3. upon which this Indictment is grounded. It is true, they are made Treaſon by the late Act of 13 of the now King, and have by ſeveral temporary Acts (ſuch as this of 13 Car. 2. is) been made Treaſon: but this proves that they were not judged by thoſe Parliaments, that paſs'd thoſe temporary Acts, to be Treaſons within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For why then were theſe temporary Acts made? What need was there of them? Sir Edward Coke, 3 Inſt. fol. 9. in the laſt Paragraph but one of that fol. ſays, A Conſpiracy to levy War is no Treaſon; he means within the Act of 25 Edw. 3. but it has been made Treaſon ſince Sir Edward Coke's time, viz. by 13 Car. 2. And let it be remembred, that the great End of making this excellent Law of 25 Edw. 3. (as appears by the Preamble) was to avoid Uncertainty, and Variety of Opinions, and to prevent the Arbitrarineſs of Judges, in the ordinary Courts; and the Act takes care, that doubtful Caſes, ſuch as are not plainly within the enumeration of the Act, are to be reſerv'd for the Judgment of the King and Parliament. And herein conſiſts the Excellency of this Law: Quoad fieri poſſit, quam plurima Legibus ipſis defineantur: Quam pauciſſima Judicis arbitrio relinquantur. And as the learned Lord Bacon in his Advancement of Learning, fol. 447. ſays, That is the beſt Law, which gives leaſt Liberty to the Judge; he the beſt Judge that takes leaſt Liberty to himſelf: Miſera eſt ſervitus, ubi Jus eſt vagum. And this Law is a Declaration of Law, and therefore ought not to be extended to like Caſes in the Conſtruction of it: And it is made in the Puniſhment of the greateſt Offences, and is as penal as a Law can be; and therefore ought not to be expounded by Equity, that is, to be extended to like Caſes.

It is true, the Opinion of the Judges hath been, That conſpiring to depoſe or impriſon the King, is a compaſſing or imagining the Death of the King. And if a Man declares by Overt-Act, that he will depoſe or impriſon the King; this, ſays Sir Edward Coke, 3 Inſt. fol. 6. upon the Word (Mort) is a ſufficient Overt-Act, for the Intent of killing the King. Mind him well, he does not ſay, that conſpiring to depoſe or to impriſon the King, is an Overt-Act, to prove the conſpiring the King's Death; which is the Opinion the Antidoter maintains, and for which he cites all his Caſes afterwards cited. But Sir Edward Coke ſays, That conſpiring to depoſe or impriſon the King, being declar'd by Overt-act, this Overt-Act is alſo a ſufficient Overt-Act for the Intent of killing the King.

It is one thing to conſpire to depoſe the King,

And another thing to declare, that Conſpiring by ſome Open-Act: They differ as much as thinking does from acting. Now in this Caſe of the Lord Ruſſel, the Author of this Antidote, and ſome others (as appears by the printed Tryals) would have us believe that very conſpiring to levy War, is an Overt-Act to prove the compaſſing and imagining the King's Death: For which there is not the leaſt ground from Sir Edward Coke. Firſt they are different Species, as Sir Edward Coke obſerves in his third Inſtitutes, fol. 14. the third Paragraph; and therefore (ſays he) the one of them cannot be an Overt-Act for another. That is, Conſpiring to levy War, nay the actual levying of War too, which is one Species of Treaſon, cannot be an Overt-Act for the compaſſing the Death of the King, which is another Species of Treaſon. But this is that the Antidoter labours; only ſays Sir Edward Coke, the Overt-Act of the one, may be an Overt-Act for another Sort or Species of Treaſon.

And I agree it, if the Overt-Act in the one ſort of Treaſon, may as fitly and as properly in its own nature, and as equally be alſo an Overt-Act in the other ſort, and had a Tendency to the Execution of that other ſort. And it alſo does appear by the Proofs, to be ſo intended by the Conſpirators: As for example; Actual ſeizing of the King's Guards (not a Conſpiring to ſeize the King's Guards, and ſuch Guards as are not plainly ſet forth in the Indictment what they are) may in its nature be an Overt-Act, to make manifeſt the compaſſing of the King's Death, and is an Act proper enough, and has in its nature a Tendency towards the Execution of the Conſpiracy to kill the King: But then it muſt be proved to be ſo intended and deſigned, that is, in order to the killing of the King. But if it appear otherwiſe upon the Proof (as here it did) that it was not ſo intended, but deſign'd merely in order to a Rebellion, and levying of War (for which alſo it is as apt, and proper in its nature, and has as great a Tendency that way;) then it cannot be applied nor made uſe of as an Overt-Act, to prove the compaſſing the King's Death, (as in this Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel's it was:) For this (as Sir Edward Coke well ſays, fol. 14. the latter part of the third Paragraph of that Folio) would be to confound the ſeveral Claſſes or Species of Treaſon: And the Confuſion of Species is abominable in Nature.

And where Sir Edward Coke ſeems to comply with the Opinion and Practice of ſome Judges, that the Overt-Act of Depoſing may be a good Overt-Act of Killing, (which, with the Diſtinction that I have offered, is juſt enough) yet he has ſome Heſitation; for he concludes that Opinion of his with theſe Words, fol. 6. in his third Inſtitutes, upon the Word [Mort:] But (ſays he) peruſe adviſedly the Statutes of 13 Eliz. cap. 1. And why thoſe Statutes? Becauſe by thoſe Statutes conſpiring to depoſe the Queen is made Treaſon; which needed not, (as has been obſerv'd already) if it was Treaſon, within that Clauſe of Compaſſing the King's Death, within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. The like may be obſerved in many other ſuch temporary Laws, as that of 25 H. 8. cap. 22. 26 H. 8. cap. 13. 28 H. 8. cap. 7. 1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. and 5 & 6 Edw. 6. cap. 11.

And it is worthy Obſervation, tho by way of a ſhort Digreſſion, that in many, if not in every one of theſe temporary Laws of Treaſon, there is an expreſs Clauſe and Proviſion ſtill, that Concealment, or keeping ſecret of any High Treaſon, ſhould be adjudged Miſpriſion of Treaſon: As if there were great need of that Caution, leſt the Judges might judge concealing of Treaſon for High Treaſon.

Now to ſhew the Tenderneſs that the Judges heretofore ſhewed in the expounding of this Statute of Treaſons of 25 Edw. 3. and how cautious they were in extending it beyond the ſtrict Senſe and Letter of the Statute, read the Caſe in Mich. 19 Hen. 6. fol. 47. Caſe 102. A Man was indicted in the King's-Bench of Petty-Treaſon (which is declared too by the ſame Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2.) for killing his Miſtreſs, whom he ſerved. And becauſe the Words of this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. declares it Petty-Treaſon where the Servant kills the Maſter, they were in doubt whether it ought to be extended to the Miſtreſs, or not. And there the Judges of the King's-Bench (before whom the Caſe was) ſent to the Judges of the Court of Common-Pleas, then ſitting, and to the Serjeants there, to know their Opinion of the Caſe. And by Advice of all the Judges of both Courts, it was adjudged Petty Treaſon for the Servant to kill the Miſtreſs, not only within the Meaning, but within the very Words of that Statute; for Maſter and Miſtreſs are in effect but one and the ſame Word, they differing only in Gender.

Sir Edward Coke ſays, 3 Inſtit. fol. 20, & 22. The Judges ſhall not judge à ſimili, or by Equity, by Argument, or by Inference of any Treaſon; but new or like Caſes were to have been referred to the Determination of the next Parliament: Ubi terminatæ ſunt dubitationes Judiciorum, ſays Bracton.

Let us in the next place examine the Authorities in Law, and Book-Caſes, cited by this Author of the Antidote, and ſee how far they make good his Opinion, That meeting and conſulting to make an Inſurrection againſt the King, or raiſe a Rebellion, (which is the ſame with levying War, within the Words of 25 Edw. 3.) tho the Rebellion be not actually raiſed, is High Treaſon within this Law of 25 Edw. 3. For ſo he propoſes the Queſtion, Fol. 5. of his Book. And if he does not confine his Argument to that Statute, he ſays nothing to the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe.

To prove the Meeting and Conſulting to make an Inſurrection againſt the King, or raiſe a Rebellion within the Kingdom, (tho the Rebellion is not actually raiſed) is High Treaſon within the Statute

Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. (which, put all together, is the Poſition the Antidote maintains:) He cites the Caſe of Conſtable, mentioned in Calvin's Caſe, Sir Edward Coke's 7th Rep. fol. 10. b. and thence infers, That whatſoever tended to the depoſing of Queen Mary was adjudged Treaſon for compaſſing her Death.

And this no Man denies; and it agrees with the Judgment of Sir Edward Coke, in his Chapter of Treaſon, fol. 6. upon the Word [Mort,] where he ſays, He that declareth by Overt-Act to depoſe the King, does an Overt-Act of compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: And ſo ſays Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown, fol. 11. towards the latter end. But what is this to the Point in hand, which merely concerns a Meeting and Conſulting to make an Inſurrection, or raiſing a Rebellion, which is the ſame thing with Conſpiring to levy War? Conſpiring to depoſe the King, and conſpiring to levy War, are different Things; as conſpiring to levy War is clearly held to be a diſtinct Treaſon from conſpiring the Death of the King: And therefore the former of theſe (as hath been before obſerved) cannot by Law be an Overt-Act of the latter, as appears by the ſaid Treatiſe of the Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13. towards the latter end. Nor was conſpiring to levy War, without an actual levying of it, any Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. upon which Statute only the Indictment of the Lord Ruſſel is grounded, as is acknowledged by the Attorney-General. And therefore to ſupply that Defect, the Statute of 13 Car. 2. does expreſly make it to be Treaſon. But the Lord Ruſſel was not indicted upon that Statute of 13 Car. 2. and for this Reaſon he ought to have been acquitted upon this Indictment grounded only upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3.

And if practiſing with a foreign Prince to make an Invaſion, (when no Invaſion followed, as the Caſe of Doctor Story was) Dyer 298. be all one with conſpiring to levy War, when indeed no War is raiſed; it is out of all diſpute that ſuch Practiſing and ſuch Conſpiring cannot be Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. tho it be Treaſon within the Statute of 13 Car. 2.

In the Caſe of the Lord Cobham, 1 Jacobi, there was more in the Caſe than conſpiring to make an Inſurrection, (which is all that the Author of the Antidote takes notice of:) There was alſo an actual Rebellion raiſed, as appears by the ſaid little Treatiſe, ſtiled, The Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13. for the People were there aſſembled to take the King into their Power, as that Book puts the Caſe of the Lord Cobham.

And ſo it is in the Caſe of the Lord Grey: For there they had not only conſpired to make an Inſurrection, but, further, to ſeize the King, and get him into their power; which is a direct Conſpiring againſt his Perſon, which naturally tends to the Deſtruction of his Perſon, and is the ſame with conſpiring his Death, as hath been uſually expounded: But 'tis otherwiſe merely to conſpire to make an Inſurrection, which can be no more than conſpiring to levy War. The Caſe of Sir Henry Vane and Plunket had many other Ingredients to mount them up to Treaſon, which difference them from my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe.

As to the Point of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, with which the Author of the Antidote concludes, I have fully declared my Opinion already in the former part of this Diſcourſe; and, I think, plainly evinced, That tho the Noble Lord might be preſent while others might between themſelves privately debate Matters, and conclude upon them, yet it did not clearly appear by any Proofs that this Noble Lord ever gave the leaſt Conſent to what was ſo concluded; without which Conſent it could not amount to Treaſon, but at the moſt be a Miſpriſion only. Nor muſt any Man's Life be taken from him upon Preſumption or probable Arguments, but by plain, direct, and manifeſt downright Proofs. But a more ſtrong, and indeed a violent Preſumption lay quite the other way, that this Noble, Prudent, and Pious Lord, could never be guilty of ſuch a Crime, as to conſpire the Death of King Charles the Second: It was extremely againſt his Intereſt ſo to do; for the Life of that King, ſo long as it continued, by the Bleſſing of God was the great Security, both he and all good Proteſtants had againſt the greater Danger that might happen by the Change ariſing by the Death of that King, of loſing our Religion, and all our Civil and Religious Rights, as the Experience we have lately had, hath ſadly taught us. And if any thing were conſulted between this Excellent Lord, and thoſe with whom he met, as is more than probable, it was how to ſecure themſelves againſt thoſe Dangers they ſaw ſo near approaching, if the Life of King Charles the Second ſhould fail; there was ſo great a Cauſe to fear them, conſidering who was like to ſucceed in the Throne.

The End of the Third Volume.
